> The United States shall guarantee to every State in this Union a republican form of government, and shall protect each of them against invasion, and on application of the Legislature, or of the executive, (when the Legislature cannot be convened,) against domestic violence.—Article 4, section 4.

This is too plain to be misunderstood. Domestic violence is broken peace. How, then, can the Federal Government keep the peace or assist even at keeping the peace in a State except in compliance with the application of the Legislature or the governor thereof. Therefore all attempts by the United States to keep the peace in a State is an indisputable violation of the Constitution, and such violation is most grossly aggravated when its officers or soldiers invade the most sacred of its precincts, the polls of a State, when the people thereof are in the act of exercising their highest right and most important duty, the election of their representatives in the United States Government, which by the presence of its soldiers and civil officers is attempting to usurp the rights of the State. So careful were the members of the Second Congress, 1792, many of them members of the convention which framed the Constitution, that this application by the Legislature or governor should not be covertly made, or the power of the General Government covertly exercised, they provided that before the power could be exercised proclamation should be made whereby the people of the State, as well as those who broke its peace, should have notice of the application for and of the intended exercise of this power by the Federal Government. For these reasons I demand the repeal of these laws.

NO EXCLUSIVE JURISDICTION IN A STATE.

This law pretends to clothe the United States Government with exclusive jurisdiction within the several States in cases not provided for in the Constitution, and therefore ought to be repealed. The Constitution provides the manner in which the United States may obtain the power to exercise exclusive jurisdiction over territory within a State as follows:

> The Congress shall have power * * * to exercise exclusive legislation in all cases whatsoever, over such district (not exceeding ten miles square) as may, by cession of particular States, and the acceptance of Congress, become the seat of the Government of the United States, and to exercise like authority over all places purchased by the consent of the Legislature of the State in which the same shall be, for the erection of forts, magazines, arsenals, dock-yards, and other needful buildings.—Section 8, article 1, clause 17.

It is hardly necessary to say that the statutes of the United States and the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States are in accord with this provision of the Constitution and treat legislation and jurisdiction as synonymous terms. No such exclusive jurisdiction can be had for a single instant of time or over an atom of the soil of any State except by formal cession by the State and formal acceptance by the United States, or by formal condemnation and payment for private property taken for public use. I presume that no one will pretend that these places of registration or polls of election over which jurisdiction is claimed under this law have been acquired either by purchase or condemnation; and therefore this claim to exclusive jurisdiction is entirely without foundation in law.

AUTHORITY OF SUPERVISORS AND MARSHALS.

Having established beyond dispute that the United States has not authority to keep the peace in a State and that it cannot have exclusive jurisdiction within a State except as provided in the Constitution, I propose to show further in what manner this law violates the Constitution. Section 2022 provides that "the marshal and his general deputies, and such special deputies, shall keep the peace;" and that "the supervisors of elections shall, in the absence of the marshal's deputies, * * * have the same duties and powers as deputy marshals."

Section 5522 provides as follows:

> SEC. 5522. Every person, whether with or without any authority, power, or process, or pretended authority, power, or process, of any State, Territory, or municipality, who obstructs, hinders, assaults, or by bribery, solicitation, or otherwise, interferes with or prevents the supervisors of election, or either of them, or the marshal or his general or special deputies, or either of them, in the performance of any duty required of them, or either of them, or which he or they, or either of them, may be authorized to perform by any law of the United States, in the execution of process or otherwise, or who by any of the means before mentioned hinders or prevents the free attendance and presence at such places of registration or at such polls of election, or full and free access and egress to and from any such place of registration or poll of election, or in going to and from any such place of registration or poll of election, or to and from any room, where any such registration or election or canvass of votes, or of making any returns or certificates thereof, may be had, or who molests, interferes with, removes or rejects from any such place of registration or poll of election, or of canvassing votes cast thereat, or of making returns or certificates thereof, any supervisor of election, the marshal, or his general or special deputies, or either of them; or who threatens, or attempts, or offers so to do, or refuses or neglects to aid and assist any supervisor of election, or the marshal, or his general or special deputies, or either of them, in the performance of his or their duties, when required by him or them, or either of them, to give such aid and assistance, shall be liable to instant arrest without process, and shall be punished by imprisonment not more than two years, or by a fine of not more than $3,000, or by both such fine and imprisonment, and shall pay the costs of the prosecution.

AUTHORITY OF MARSHALS AND SUPERVISORS.

This law provides for invasion of the States and the exercise of exclusive jurisdiction therein in violation of the Constitution in the manner following:

1. This law directs the judge of the United States circuit court (Judge Bond, for instance) to appoint supervisors with authority to exercise all the duties of marshals, and directs the marshal of the district to appoint deputy marshals, without limit as to numbers, without requirements as to character, without security as to transgressions of their duty under the law.

2. It clothes these supervisors and marshals with authority over places of registration and polls of election without any such description of such places of registration and polls of election as to define the territory over which their authority or pretended authority extends. This authority may be extended over a perch, a rood, an acre, a mile or miles, as these supervisors and marshals interpret the law.

3. It clothes these supervisors and marshals with authority not only to enforce the execution of the provisions of this law as to registration and voting, whereby upon the slightest pretense a voter may be arrested and deprived of the right to vote, but with the general authority to keep the peace and to employ the whole posse or power of the judicial district to keep the peace according to such interpretation as these supervisors and marshals may place upon the law, whereby the liberty and lives of the residents of the States may be endangered or lost either by resistance or obedience to their command.

4. It clothes these supervisors and marshals with power to make instant arrests with or without process, and forbids every person, with or without authority or process of any State or municipality, to hinder them in the exercise of these enormous and extraordinary powers, or in going to and from the places of registration and polls of election, under penalty of fine or imprisonment or both.

5. Under color of this law these supervisors and marshals and deputy marshals may disfranchise any voter, and may arrest, imprison, and take the life of any person who in the opinion of these supervisors and marshals hinders or obstructs or threatens or attempts or offers to do so, or refuses or neglects to aid and assist them in the exercise of these enormous powers, if such hinderance or refusal in their opinion extends to a breach of the peace, whether at the places of registration or polls of election or in going to or from such places of registration and polls of election, without regard to the time consumed or to the indirectness of the route by which they may choose to go to their homes, even though such time and route be availed of to escape beyond seas. And if under color of this law these supervisors or marshals commit violations of the law of a State, no matter how heinous, rising even to the degree of murder, and in the presence of any number of the citizens of that State, no one of those citizens, from its highest to its lowest, with or without authority or process, may hinder, obstruct, or arrest them in the act. And if after the return of these supervisors and marshals to their homes the State attempts to vindicate its broken laws they may plead the authority of the United States and cause removal of the trial to the courts of the United States where these very marshals summon the juries composed of the most ignorant and corrupt persons, by reason of the test oaths, which exclude every other element from the jury-box, and where the judges who appoint these supervisors and marshals warp the laws as the necessities of the republican party may demand. Thus under color of this law, in a period of profound peace, the Federal Government is enabled to invade the rights of the States, New York or California, Maine or Texas, by setting up the right to an exclusive jurisdiction therein in violation of the Constitution, and for the purpose of maintaining the ill-gotten power of the republican party by making the judiciary of the United States the degraded instrument of partisan usurpation.

THE INDEPENDENCE OF THE REPRESENTATIVE DESTROYED.

This law, by enabling Federal authority to interfere with the election of the Representatives of the people of the States, subjects these representatives to the influence of the Federal Government, in opposition to the plain intent of the framers of the Constitution, and is therefore in violation of the spirit of that sacred instrument.

The first care of the convention which framed the Constitution was to establish the legislative department of the Government, and to describe the elements of which that department should consist in language so clear and distinct that no one whose mind is not warped by partisan feeling can mistake its meaning. It is in these words:

The House of Representatives shall be composed of members chosen every second year by the people of the several States, and the electors in each State shall have the qualifications requisite for the electors of the most numerous branch of the State Legislature.—Section 2, article 1.

Thus this second section of this first article of the Constitution establishes as the intention of its framers that the members of the House of Representatives should be the Representatives of the people of the several States, and not the Representatives of the people of the United States; and that this intention might not be misinterpreted it established in the States the right to fix the qualifications of the persons who are to vote for these Representatives of the people thereof. No one, I think, will deny that this article of the Constitution makes the election of these Representatives of the people a subject purely of State concern. Confirmatory of this intention the framers of the Constitution made section 4, article 1, to read as follows:

The times, places, and manner of holding elections for Senators and Representatives shall be prescribed in each State by the Legislature thereof; but the Congress may at any time by law make or alter such regulations, except as to the places of choosing Senators.

This section 4 makes it the duty of the Legislatures of the several States to prescribe the times, places, and manner of holding elections for these representatives of the people of the States. No language could have made the intention of imposing this duty upon the Legislatures of the several States clearer or more imperative.

"The times, places, and manner of holding elections for Senators and Representatives shall be prescribed in each State by the Legislature thereof." Shall be prescribed. Could the intention be expressed more clearly or more imperatively? And further, it imposes this duty primarily on the States solely and exclusively. And then, lest the Legislatures of the several States should refuse or neglect to perform this duty, and by such refusal or neglect by the Legislatures the people of the States might be deprived of the means of electing their Representatives in the Congress of the United States, and thus defeat the Union intended to be formed under the Constitution they had framed, they added to section 4 this clause: "but the Congress may at any time by law make or alter such regulations, except as to the places for choosing Senators." This added clause was a measure of precaution suggested by the frequent absence of members from the continental congress both before and after the confederation—some of the States being without Representatives, notably the State of Rhode Island, as long as six months in succession—and by the known repugnance to a Union having larger powers than those committed to the confederation felt by a large proportion of the able and influential citizens of the several States.

It was to prevent a recurrence of this failure on the part of any or of a majority of the States to provide times, places, and manner of holding the election for Representatives of the people of the several States and thereby depriving the people of Representatives in the new Congress that mainly induced the convention to add this clause, because by this means the Union could have been dissolved without even an avowal of the purpose. The best commentators agree as to this. History demonstrates that the precaution was wisely taken. In the cases of the purchase of Louisiana and the annexation of Texas distinguished members of the Massachusetts Legislature declared in favor of a dissolution of the Union. If disunion had been attempted would not failure to provide for election of Representatives in Congress been the first step in that direction? During the darkest hours of the war of 1812 the Hartford convention, claiming to represent New England, assembled to consider the policy of dissolution of the Union. Does any one doubt that refusal to elect delegates to Congress would have been the first step taken? During the campaign of 1856, with Frémont as its candidate, the free-soil party, aggressive and powerful, reared its banner of fifteen States and declared against a union with slave-owners. How else could they have effected their purpose except by refusing to provide the times, places, and manner of holding elections for Representatives in Congress? When, in 1861, the Southern States attempted to secede their first action was to withdraw their Representatives from Congress and then fail to provide for future elections. This added clause was a means of self-defense by which it was intended to afford to the people of the several States a means of maintaining the legislative department of the Government of the United States. It is true there were other reasons, notably these: the necessity for fixing the time for holding these elections so that there should not be vacancies in a called session of Congress as is now the case with California; the good policy of regulating the representation so that there should be uniformity as to elections by districts or by general ticket, all of which reasons have been assigned as of weight in inserting this additional clause. But nowhere does it appear that this clause was intended to cover the enactment of these laws by which the States are to be policed by the Federal Government by its Army or its civil officers, with power to summon the posse of their district, whereby the people of the States are to be overawed and coerced while in the act of electing their Re presentatives, and this, too, under color of law which, under pretense of authority to keep the peace at the polls, usurps exclusive jurisdiction. The wise statesmen who have been made immortal by constructing this greatest of all organic laws, the Constitution of the United States, could not have committed the fatal blunder of incorporating in that instrument the certain means of destroying its vital principle, free ballot by a free people, nor could they have failed to foresee that power in the Federal Government to influence the election of the Representatives of the people of the States would destroy the checks and balances by which they so sedulously sought to adjust the Constitution. They were too wise not to know that the only security for the liberty which the Constitution was intended to establish and preserve was to be found in the independence of the several departments of the Government, and therefore they placed not only the election of the Representatives beyond the control of the Federal Government but they also placed the House of Representatives beyond that control in a manner not to be misconstrued, as will be seen by article 1, section 5:

Each House shall be the judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its own members. * * * Each House may determine the rules of its proceedings, punish its members for disorderly behavior, and, with the concurrence of two-thirds, expel a member.

And by article 1, section 6:

The Senators and Representatives * * * shall in all cases except treason, felony and breach of the peace, be privileged from arrest during their attendance at the session of their respective Houses, and in going to and returning from the same; and for any speech or debate in either House, they shall not be questioned in any other place.

The only exceptions of this nature to be found in the Constitution. And for the purpose of further securing these Representatives of the people of the States against the influence of the Federal Government the framers provided in article 1, section 6, as follows:

No Senator or Representative shall, during the time for which he was elected, be appointed to any civil office under the authority of the United States, which shall have been created, or the emoluments whereof shall have been increased during such time; and no person holding any office under the United States, shall be a member of either House during his continuance in office.

This provision, intended to preserve the independence of the members of the House, stringent as it is, did not, in the opinion of many of the framers of the Constitution, go far enough. The wisest among them proposed that no member of Congress should be eligible to appointment to office under the Federal Government until one year after the term for which such member was elected had expired.

Now, sir, I ask if in the presence of all these provisions of the Constitution, so clearly and strongly expressing the intention of the framers to hedge around, defend, and maintain the independence of the individual Representative of the people against the power and influence of the Federal Government, is it possible for any sane man to believe that the framers of that immortal instrument could have intended to render all these provisions utterly void and of no effect by subjecting the election and thereby the independence of these Representatives of the people of the States to the dominating power of the Federal Government by clothing that Government with the most dangerous of all its powers, the right to be present at the polls with soldiers of the standing Army or with civil officers having authority to summon the posse, with exclusive jurisdiction over the liberty and lives of the voters there in the act of choosing these Representatives. No man fit to represent the people in this House, who entertains a decent respect for the opinion of his fellow-citizens, will dare upon cool reflection to declare such belief.

Statesmen wise as were the framers of the Constitution, versed in the history of the all-instructing past, and particularly in the history of England, its slow but steady progress toward peaceful, constitutional liberty, could not have failed to recognize in the Commons the creator and defender of the English constitution. Guided by the precedents of that long and arduous struggle they formed the House of Representatives on the model of the House of Commons improved by adapting it to the demands of a democratic, liberty-loving people, unencumbered in their new existence by the aristocratic accumulations of ages. As in the House of Commons these wise men placed in the House of Representatives absolute control of the purse and sword of the people and to maintain that House free of all influence of the Federal Government in whatever sense they established its independence as absolute as its control. How else could those great and wise men have effected their great and wise purpose of committing to the House of Representatives the highest of all governmental trusts, the protection of the liberties of the people? This law is so clearly in violation of the intent of the framers, as to make its unconstitutionality apparent to the dullest minds. It is so clearly partisan that no man can mistake its purpose and so oppressive as to be intolerable. For these reasons an indignant people demand its repeal.

THE RIGHT OF THE PEOPLE TO CHOOSE THE PRESIDENT AND VICE-PRESIDENT ANNULLED.

Under color of this law, without even pretense of authority, the right of the people to choose the President and Vice-President is abrogated. It will not be denied that the presence of United States soldiers at the election polls of the States with authority or pretended authority to keep the peace, or United States officers with authority or pretended authority to keep the peace clothed with power to summon the posse, and with the further authority or pretended authority to arrest any one whose right to vote these officers may choose to doubt, destroys all semblance of a free election; the foundation on which the Government of the United States stands. If denied, let the experience of the last fourteen years in a period of undisturbed peace, attested by thousands of witnesses, refute the denial. It will not be affirmed by any man whose self-respect has not fallen below the level of contempt that there is the slighest semblance of authority for applying this law to election of President and Vice-President, and yet in every State where the election of Representatives and of President and Vice-President occur on the same day, this law is made to apply to election of President and Vice-President as effectively as it applies to the election of Representatives. And that there shall not be any escape from this oppressive usurpation, the Federal law has provided that the election of Representatives, President, and Vice-President shall take place on the same day in every State where the constitution of that State has not otherwise provided. Nor does the effect of this bold usurpation stop at this partisan control of the election of these Federal officers, but it enters into, affects, and controls the election of every officer elected by every State, county, city, and town which elects its officers on the same day on which the Representatives are elected.

It is no answer to say that the election of President and State and other officers may be held at other places. Apart from considerations of convenience and economy, the causes which could compel such a severance of the places of election would be as effectual in restraining the liberties of the people as though these soldiers and servants, the insignia and instruments of Federal power and usurpation, were present at these second polls. Was there ever a contrivance so subtle, all-pervading, and penetrating as this for the enslavement of a people under so plausible a pretense—the defense of the freedom of elections? A thousand times better the defiant usurper who vaults from his saddle to a throne, because the thunder of his artillery proclaims his purpose and summons the nation to resistance. Cowardice undermines, courage assaults the liberties of the people.

THE MAJORITY BY WHICH THIS LAW WAS PASSED WAS LESS THAN THE NUMBER OF MEMBERS APPOINTED BY THE SOLDIERS AT THE POLLS.

Under color of this law, sustained by a partisan judiciary and defended by the veto, the President may control the elections and delay its repeal indefinitely. A very small minority of the voters, advantageously located, the essence of whose political creed is distrust of the people, backed by the power of the Federal Government, its army of soldiers and more effective army of office-holders, and supported by the great monetary interests whose safety these interests are persuaded falsely to believe consist in restraining the masses, may under the provisions of this law sustain a party until the people maddened by tyranny may acquire by force what force and fraud withholds. Burdens may become too heavy—wrongs too grievous to be borne.

Sir, this very state of things has existed for the last ten years. The majority in the Congress which passed this law was not elected by the people of the States, but was appointed by the President of the United States by military interference. The Army at the polls elected the pretended majority in the House of Representatives. The Army at the polls elected the pretended majority in the Legislatures which elected the pretended majority in the Senate. The Army, the supervisors, and the marshals elected and counted in the last of these men who now holds a seat in the Senate, and that man introduced this supervisory law. The Army, the supervisors, and marshals made the electors in South Carolina, Florida, and Louisiana, who counted in Rutherford B. Hayes as President of the United States. The Army enforced his inauguration. By the Army he proposes to elect his successor if he vetoes this bill. That veto, if sustained by the people of the United States, is to destroy their liberty. In little more than one hundred years a nation, born and baptized in blood, achieved the most perfect freedom, accomplished the highest prosperity, and died a most ignoble death. If thus it dies, it dies without a struggle, and dies unhonored and unmourned. It is suicide, such as no history records. Sir, this cannot be. The people will scorn the veto, and crush the man who makes it. I bide the result with unfaltering confidence.

When, sir, on Tuesday last Hon. GEORGE M. ROBESON, Secretary of the Navy during nearly eight years of President Grant's administration and now a Representative of New Jersey on this floor, made an argument in defense of this law, I recognized him the only man who had the courage to follow its provisions to their logical conclusions. No doubt, no hesitation, no disguise weakened his utterances. A better cause would have been honored by the manliness of his defense. His courage had its force in the long exercise of the powers he maintained. He declared with unmistakable precision that the Federal Government had the right, and that it was its duty to exercise that right, to execute the provisions of this law, not only at the election for Representatives by the people at the polls, but also at the election of Senators by the Legislatures of the States; and that for the execution of this law it ought, if necessary, to employ all the force it could command; that if at the time and place of electing United States Senators by the Legislature of a State a riot should occur, it was the right and duty of the Federal Government to suppress that riot by the use of the Army, even in the legislative halls of a State. Startling as was the announcement, it was the unavoidable conclusion of an honest defense of this law, and it well became a member of President Grant's Cabinet to avow and defend the law. It was enacted by a Congress in which were members appointed by the Army sufficient to constitute its majority, and signed by President Grant, who executed it with remorseless energy. The country owes the Representative from New Jersey, Hon. GEORGE M. ROBESON, a debt of gratitude for stripping the velvet glove from the iron hand that clutches the throat of public liberty. That speech was a defiant justification of the past, an insulting proclamation for the future—a military despotism sustaining the use of all the means which ingenuity can devise as necessary to enforce all the powers which a latitudinarian construction can deduce from the Constitution.

In clarion tones he sounded the advance of the bannered hosts which his chief, in triumph advancing, hopes to lead to victory in 1880. Slaves, stretch forth your arms to receive the manacles prepared by your masters. The will of a monarch is the law of the land. That representative is Grant; Grant inaugurated Hayes, and Hayes preserves the machinery for inaugurating Grant.

THE MANNER OF REPEALING THIS LAW NO CAUSE FOR VETO.

Much stress has been laid on the manner in which it pleased the House of Representatives to present this law to the President for his signature, a matter of very grave objection—very. I know it has been denied that this House has been threatened with a veto. But, sir, it will not be denied that declaration has been made again and again on this floor that this bill cannot become law, although there is a majority in this House of twenty-six and in the Senate of eight. How can it fail to become law if not by the veto? The threat would have been more manly if more openly made. The denial was not courageous. Heretofore Presidents considered the substance, not the manner, of a bill. Does the present incumbent of the presidential office demand that the representatives of the people conform their bills to the humors of his caprice? Would he have his ever-faithful commons present on bended knee their humble petition to his most sacred majesty? Sir, the representatives of the people cannot so descend. They prefer rather to follow the precedent set by their sturdy fathers, who in the First Congress, 1790, presented the first appropriation bill passed under the Constitution of the United States, with general legislation incorporated therein, to George Washington, "first in war, first in peace, and first in the hearts of his countrymen," and by the free ballots of a free people unanimously elected first President of these United States; and, sir, he freely signed that bill. Nor did any one threaten a veto for lack of reverence in the form. This form has been followed from that time to this whenever convenient, expedient, or necessary; nor has lack of reverence been urged as just cause for veto. This House chooses to follow these precedents. Nevertheless, sir, this House may be contumacious. Things have become much altered of late. It may be that a President elected by the free ballot of a free people is not so much an object of reverence as a person who occupies that position by other means, even though not exactly in accord with a constitutional proceeding. However this may be, I have not learned that the fathers considered lack of reverence constitutional ground upon which to base a veto. The reasoning of the message may exhibit this. It is suggested that the Secretary of War entertains some such theory, prompted, it may be, by his higher breeding. Who knows?

THE VETO AS A LEGISLATIVE POWER—REPUBLICAN DOCTRINE.

Another objection is the coercive power of this bill, and therefore it cannot become a law, which is another covert threat of the veto power. This charge of coercion may or may not be well founded. It depends very much upon the definition of what is a proper use of the veto power.

The inference from the declarations and conduct of the republican side of this House is that the veto may be used for improper purposes, for the reason that the President differs from the House as to the expediency of a proposed law. According to this definition the veto may be properly used to estop legislation on the most important or most unimportant question or for mere party purposes, even against the spirit of the Constitution, as it has been intimated the veto will be applied in the case of the bill now under discussion. This definition converts the veto into a co-ordinate branch of the legislative department, and a very dangerous branch of that department it is, as in the present case. Here it sets up the will of one man, who at the election for President nearly three years ago was rejected by a majority of three hundred thousand of all the voters of the United States, and by a majority of nearly one million of the most intelligent portion of those voters, the voters of the Northern States, in opposition to the deliberately expressed will of the representatives of the people in two successive Congresses, and against the will of the representatives of the States through their Legislatures in the Senate. Converted into a co-ordinate branch of the legislative department, the power of the President as a legislator is equal only to the power of either of the branches of that department—no more; and certainly his influence in shaping legislation ought to be much less, not more, than the influence of one man is to the influence of three hundred and sixty-nine men, they possessing, as he cannot possess, information as to the varied opinions of the one hundred and twenty-seven thousand people in each of their several districts and of the States which they respectively represent.

The Constitution confers on the House of Representatives the power to originate, discuss, amend, pass, and adhere to any bill. It confers on the Senate like power, except as to money bills, which the House only can originate. It confers on the President the power to suggest legislation to both the House and the Senate and to recommend the same by such unlimited and uninterrupted reasoning as he may choose to employ and to refuse to sign any bill presented to him, and may in his veto in like manner assign the reasons for this refusal. The President, like the House and Senate, may adhere to his negative vote, the veto. From this adherence to its vote by either House or by the President there is no appeal except to the people at the ballot-box, before whom these disagreeing legislators may appear for final judgment. Is disagreement coercion? Is adherence coercion? The Constitution confers the right to disagree and the right to adhere on each of these three co-ordinate branches of the legislative department, the House, the Senate, and the President, each independently of the other. They are equals. How can an equal coerce an equal? This, it seems to me, is the republican definition of the veto power, and according to that definition the charge of coercion fails—absolutely fails. It is a disagreement and adherence between the House, which represents the people, and the Senate, which represents the States on the side of liberty, and the President, who according to the Constitution does not represent any, on the side of despotism. The people will judge between them.

THE VETO AS INTENDED BY THE CONSTITUTION.

The doctrine on this side of the House is that the veto was conferred on the President for the purpose of checking hasty and immature legislation and of preventing unconstitutional legislation. It will not be pretended that the bill now under consideration can be classed under either of these descriptions. The law sought to be repealed by this bill is one of a series of laws passed for the purpose of perpetuating the power of the republican party long after the object for which it was created had ceased to exist. That object was the restriction of slavery within the States where slavery existed. Subsequent events added to this object the entire abolition of slavery. The war for secession which these purposes evoked gave powers to the republican party not originally conceived. The safety of the Union was proclaimed as the first duty of the Government, and even wise and patriotic men consented to what was claimed to be a necessary suspension of the Constitution. When the safety of the Union was assured by the surrender at Appomattox, wise and patriotic men demanded that the Constitution be restored. This demand was refused. This demand found formal expression in the Senate, in 1865, in the laws proposed by Mr. Powell, a democratic Senator from Kentucky, whereby he intended to restore the Constitution by restricting the Federal authority in the use of soldiers, as had been the practice under the plea of military necessity. This demand was formally refused in the amendment proposed by a republican Senator from Kansas, Mr. Pomeroy, and adopted by the republican Senate, which provided "except to keep the peace at the polls." These eight words were the formal refusal by the republican Senate to restore the Constitution. These eight words did more than refuse to restore the Constitution; they legalized the tyrannous practice under the plea of military necessity. These eight words converted the free institutions of the United States into a military despotism. The carpet-baggers who, from that time to the meeting of this Congress, constituted the republican majority in either House of Congress, were under the power concentrated in these eight words appointed by the President of the United States through military interference. After seven years of perfect peace the American people would not tolerate this open interference by the soldiery at the polls. Hardened as were these republican leaders by the long exercise of despotic powers, they dared not resist the indignation they had aroused. They saw they must yield, or seem to yield. Yield they would not; that was death to their power; but they would seem to yield. They would disguise the use of troops under a law which provides for supervisors and marshals, with power to call for troops if necessary—an army of politicians, backed by an army of soldiers, commanded by John Smith, deputy marshal, instead of Tecumseh Sherman, General of the Army. For this purpose a man, made a Senator for Louisiana by military appointment under the law of 1865, introduced this supervisory law in 1872. It was passed by a majority of Senators made so by military appointment, and that Senator now holds his Senatorship a second time by military appointment under the law he introduced. Thus for thirteen years, during a period of profound peace, the people of the United States have, under the semblance of free institutions, been governed by military power, whether under the law of 1865 or the law of 1872.

It is useless now to recall these usurpations by the military and civil officers of the Government as administered by the republican party during the long and dreary period of the continuance of these laws. These wrongs are melancholy memories. They are a disgrace to the republican party, dishonor to the American Government, and an indelible stain on the character of free institutions. Patiently have the people borne this wrong, firmly have they insisted on the right. By slow but steady approach they have gained the House of Representatives. By slower but steadier approach they have gained the Senate. Just as certainly will they recover the Presidency of which they were defrauded in 1876. Not the democratic party, but the people. In times of great danger the people know no party. As in 1776, as in 1812, as in 1861 the people in steady, enduring power marched to the battle-field, so will they march to the polls in 1880, and no power, supervisors, marshals, soldiers, may stay their will. They mean to be free, and when free they will settle their minor political differences as their fathers settled their differences, by a free ballot by a free people. No other people could have made the same progress under like difficulties. Their power lies in the calmness of conscious strength. From 1865 to this day every vote cast by every democrat, a large and steadily increasing majority of the American people, is a solemn protest against these usurpations, and especially against these laws which they seek to repeal.

The repeal of this class of legislation has been voted for, petitioned for, prayed for, during fourteen long and dreary years by a large majority of the American people, and therefore cannot be classed as hasty or immature legislation. Even if doubt as to the constitutionality of this law did not exist, its repeal could not be classed as unconstitutional legislation. The Government lived more than eighty years before it was enacted, and therefore it cannot be necessary. The repeal is not resisted because of encroachment on the prerogatives of the Executive. The repeal is not an infringement of the honor, dignity, or independence of the judiciary. If this repeal be not hasty, immature, inexpedient, not an encroachment on the prerogative, on the rights of the Executive, not an infringement on the honor, dignity, or independence of the judiciary, then wherefore the exercise of the veto power? But if, contrary to all reasonable expectation, the President applies the veto upon frivolous or party pretenses to secure a party triumph or to defeat wholesome restraint, then the people will mete out to him and his advisers that condemnation which an aroused sense of public justice never fails to apply. The Representatives of the people may await with confidence the expression of the people's will.

THE RIGHT TO WITHHOLD APPROPRIATIONS A CONSTITUTIONAL MEANS FOR REDRESS OF GRIEVANCE.

The right to refuse supplies is a constitutional means for redress of grievance; or, in other words, the right to withhold appropriations is a means within the Constitution to enforce repeal of unconstitutional and oppressive laws.

When public servants, honored by the highest trusts, avail themselves of the opportunity which possession of power affords to abuse the confidence reposed in them by their fellow-countrymen, by attempts to restrain them in the exercise of their constitutional rights, and most especially that most important of all rights, the right to remove such unfaithful servants, and when it is attempted to make such restraint perpetual by the enactment of laws not to be repealed which subject the ballot to the power of these unfaithful servants, whereby a Government intended to be free is converted into an irresponsible oligarchy, subverting the Constitution by destroying its vital principle, free choice by a free people, the highest duty demands the fullest exercise of all the powers known to the Constitution to resist the consummation of this most grievous wrong.

Under the Constitution there are three means for redress of grievance—the courts; the ballot; repeal, voluntary or enforced.

Redress through the courts is slow and uncertain, too slow, for the reason that the consummation is too imminent to admit of the law's delay. Before decision can be had another pretended election of President will have occurred and another usurper placed in the chair of Washington; or if decision could be had the partisan character of a majority of the courts forbids the hope of non-partisan decision.

Redress through the ballot is utterly unavailable, for the reason that no general election occurs before the next presidential election, and even that election takes place under this very law, whereby free ballot is denied by force. Redress through repeal is the only recourse of the people.

Redress through voluntary repeal, we are told, cannot be had, although a majority of twenty-six in the House of Representatives and a majority of eight in the Senate, representing nearly three hundred thousand majority of the popular vote, demand redress through repeal.

Redress through involuntary repeal is, therefore, the last means known to the Constitution. This last means the imminent danger to the liberties of the people commands the Representatives of the people to employ. In obedience to that command appropriations are made dependent on repeal of this oppressive and unconstitutional law.

This means for redress of grievance, the withholding of appropriations, known to the English constitution as refusal to vote supplies, has been exercised by all constitutional governments erected on the ruins of the Roman Empire. France, Spain, England have each defended their liberties by the exercise of this indubitable right.

In England it has been resorted to from the time whereof the memory of man runneth not to the contrary. Plantagenets, Tudors, Stuarts, William of Orange, all princes of high resolve, manly courage, and stubborn will, bent before the sturdy manhood of the liberty-loving Commons of England. Charles Stuart promised, pre-varicated, lied. The Parliament of England closed its purse and drew its sword; and Cromwell's Ironsides redressed the grievance of the people at Marston Moor and Naseby's fight. The head of England's King was forfeit for outrage on England's constitution. Refusal of supplies, the Tower, the headsman's ax, dethronement, change of succession, exile, has ever been the penalty for non-compliance. The revolntion of 1688 was simply the successful reassertion of the principles of English liberty and the re-establishment of the will of the Commons as the supreme law of the land, so that since then a vote of want of confidence, which obviates the necessity for refusal to vote supplies, has compelled the resignation of the ministry in every case but one, and that exception was a personal struggle between Fox and Pitt on an India bill, in which no grievance was alleged. As late as 1864, during the reign of the present Queen, in the case of Holstein-Schleswig, when information was withheld by the ministry, the information was immediately furnished upon intimation of intention to refuse supplies. It is true supplies have not been refused since the case of the Irish forfeitures in 1700, but for the plain reason that the King dared not disobey the will of the Commons. I call the attention of the Representative from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] to this explanation of his statement "that supplies had not been refused for nearly two hundred years."

This right to withhold supplies lies at the very foundation of the English constitution. It is inherent, inalienable, and indefeasible. It was not given and cannot be taken away. It was established by custom, is approved by experience, and sanctioned by time. Struggle for the enforcement of this custom again and again involved England in civil strife and drove to the American wilderness the liberty-loving manhood of the land. Conviction that this right is indestructible was the great overmastering element in their minds. They remembered the maxim that redress of grievance brought supplies to the King; that refusal to redress brought the King to the block. They expressed it as the right of Englishmen. They fought, bled, and died to establish it as the right of Americans. Throughout their long struggle with the mother country, before the thought of independence was conceived, they maintained with the firmness of the deepest conviction that no power could rightfully take of their substance without their consent or appropriate their money against their will. What was this but the assertion, maintenance, and defense of the right to withhold supplies. When the mother country attempted by indirection to obtain supplies from the colonies against their will, by laying duties on the goods which the colonists were accustomed to import, these stern defenders of this ancient right resisted the attempt by entering into a solemn covenant to refuse to import all goods on which such duties were imposed and when the covenant was violated they destroyed the merchandise.

This right to withhold supplies runs throughout the entire history of the government of the American colonies, whether as colonial or as State governments, or as members of leagues for defense against Indians or the French, or as members of the continental congress or of the Confederation for defense of this right to withhold supplies.

Everywhere, under all conditions, the right to withhold supplies has been effectually, if silently, maintained. For the maintenance of that right the war of Independence was undertaken. The successful issue of that war was the triumphant establishment of that right, otherwise that war was fought in vain. The statesmen who framed the Constitution were the same men who guided the colonies, the States, the continental congress, and the Confederation through that war for the right to withhold supplies, and they incorporated that right, though silently, in the Constitution they framed, else why did they confer on the House of Representatives the power exclusively to originate bills for raising revenue, the identical power exercised exclusively by the House of Commons, exactly in the same manner and for exactly the same purpose as the House of Representatives is exercising that power now, for the protection of the liberties of the people against encroachments by the executive power? This power of originating all bills for raising revenue is conferred on the House of Representatives by article 1, section 7, in these words:

> All bills for raising revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives.

No man can misinterpret this. So simple, so strong, the words so few. It is the greatest power conferred by the Constitution. It is the power over the purse and the sword. The House of Representatives in the exercise of this power have no lawful superiors. They are responsible only to the people of the States who elect them. Concurrent with this great power is another power in the House of Representatives. It is the power to originate all bills of appropriation. This power is next in degree to the power of originating bills for raising revenue. It is this combination of powers which makes the House of Representatives in all matters of revenue and expenditures supreme. And yet the Constitution expresses not one word as to the power of the House of Representatives to originate bills of appropriation. The Constitution is as silent as to the power of the House of Representatives to originate bills of appropriation as it is as to the right of that House to withhold supplies. The right to originate appropriations and the right to withhold appropriations are based on custom equally ancient, equally venerable, and equally effective. For hundreds of years these concurrent powers have been exercised exclusively by the House of Commons in England and have been exercised exclusively by the House of Representatives here from the adoption of the Constitution to this day without a single exception. This power in the House of Commons and the use of this power by that house was well known and perfectly understood by the framers of the Constitution. They knew that the power to withhold supplies was the creator, promoter, and defense of English liberty, and therefore they incorporated it in the American Constitution as the defense of American liberty. This purpose they made more distinct and emphatic by the restriction they placed on the power of Congress to appropriate money for the support of the Army. They provided as follows, article 1, section 8, clause 12:

> To raise and support armies, but no appropriation of money to that use shall be for a longer term than two years.

The purpose of this restriction is also self-evident. They intended that appropriations for the support of the Army should not be placed beyond the control of the people by a corrupt, pliant, or servile House of Representatives. As a further security for obedience to this provision of the Constitution they made the term of the members of the House of Representatives coexistent with the term for which such appropriation could be made, so that the people might pass upon the conduct of their Representatives. By this means the people, through their Representatives, could dissolve the Army whenever in their judgment the Army threatened their liberties.

This provision embodies in substance another custom of the House of Commons by which that house may dissolve the army. The English army exists by reason of the mutiny act. That act is passed for one year only. Refusal to pass that act dissolves the army. The House of Commons trusts the army for one year only. The House of Representatives may trust the Army for two years, but no longer. Executive encroachment on the liberties of the people, enforced by an army, was ever the constant dread of the framers of the Constitution. This dread is apparent throughout the history of the colonies, of the struggle for independence, and of the period of the formation of the Constitution, in the debates in the convention which framed the Constitution, in the Constitution itself, in the State conventions which adopted it, and in the amendments which the States required should be made to the Constitution. These provisions express that dread of executive encroachment, and if bravely executed will restrain such encroachment. That this law is the worst form of such encroachment as was dreaded by the fathers cannot be denied. Refusal to repeal this law is declaration of deliberate purpose to maintain and defend such encroachments. The perfect machinery which this law provides is the most dangerous form which such encroachments could be made to assume, because it wears the specious pretense of defending the freedom of elections. Under this false pretense this law enables the President to employ the whole power and machinery of the Government, its Army, Navy, officials, contractors, its judiciary, its treasury, and all whose interests are in any way dependent on it, to intimidate, imprison, impoverish, or kill, before, at, or after the election, any man or men who refuse to aid him in securing the election of any one whom he may choose to order to be elected.

It is the most penetrating, far-reaching, all-pervading, and irresistible form which executive encroachment can take on. Great as was the dread of the fathers they could not have foreseen anything as effective as this. This encroachment under this law utterly annihilates free ballots by a free people—the fundamental principle that underlies, pervades, and sustains the Constitution. It is the most grievous wrong which can be inflicted on a free people. If the President, by the exercise of the veto, forbids the repeal of this law, the redress of this most grievous wrong, he overthrows the Constitution and usurps monarchical power as effectually as though by armed soldiers he had dispersed the House of Representatives. If the President forbids the repeal of this law he as effectually prevents the meeting of an independent House of Representatives as did the English Kings when they refused to summon a new Parliament because they knew it would resist their encroachments. Better, far better, than a servile House is no House at all. A servile House would but register the presidential decrees with empty show of constitutional form. No House at all would startle the people by exposure of the naked despotism.

It was to protect the liberties of the people from encroachment like this that the fathers who framed the Constitution created an independent House of Representatives. For this they conferred on it supreme control over the purse and the sword of the people. For this they left it free to withhold supplies. With these powers intrusted to the House of Representatives, elected by the people of the States and responsible to them alone, they believed that men who inherited liberty would transmit it unimpaired. Instructed by the experience of a thousand years they builded a constitution intended to endure forever. Did they build in vain? Answer as ye are brave men or cowards.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. Mr. Chairman, within the limits of the time allotted me by the courtesy of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HAYES] I have time barely to state a few propositions relating chiefly to the right of Congress to regulate the suffrage in the States at Federal elections.

The right to vote for Representatives is provided for in section 2 of article 1 of the Constitution. The section provides that "the people" shall choose the Representatives, and it provides the qualifications of the voter. I quote the section:

The House of Representatives shall be composed of members chosen every second year by the people of the several States, and the electors in each State shall have the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the State Legislature.

The people are to choose the Representatives, and the qualifications of the elector are made identical with those requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the State Legislature. No State can alter or in any way modify this qualification. If the Constitution had recited the particular qualifications of electors of the most numerous branch of each State Legislature, it could not have been more explicit. If it had said that in the State of New York the elector should be of the age of twenty-one years, should have resided in the State a year, four months in the county, and thirty days in the election district in which he offers his vote, then no one would doubt that the qualifications were fixed by the Constitution, and the statement would then be no different in legal effect from what it is. The two expressions are each the equivalent of the other.

No State can say who shall or who shall not vote for Representatives. It is a matter controlled by the Federal Constitution. If a State should attempt to fix a different qualification from that defined in the Constitution, its act would be utterly void. It does not alter the case that the qualifications of the elector may vary somewhat in different States. The people who made the Constitution had the power and thought it wise to make the variance. They conceded something to the different conditions and laws existing in the different States. They established a rule, however, that should operate uniformly and equitably everywhere. They nowhere conceded to the States the right to make qualifications for electors of Representatives. They placed those qualifications unalterably in the United States Constitution.

The fourteenth amendment, in my judgment, has fixed the right to vote of citizens of the United States in the Constitution.

Before that amendment, such an entity as a United States citizen was unknown to the Constitution. By that amendment a new departure was taken by this Government. It was settled and determined that there should be a United States citizenship, which should be paramount to State citizenship. I read the first section of that amendment:

All persons born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States and of the State wherein they reside. No State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States; nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law; nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.

By the thirteenth amendment four millions of slaves were emancipated. By the fourteenth amendment the freedmen had the franchise conferred upon them. They were made voters, not by the thirteenth amendment, nor by the fifteenth. They had the right before the fifteenth amendment was established. They did not have it prior to the enactment of the fourteenth amendment. They got the right to vote out of the fourteenth amendment and they got it nowhere else. By that amendment they were made United States citizens, and one of the "privileges and immunities" of a citizen is the right to vote. The freedmen were not named in this amendment. One United States citizen possesses under that amendment the same rights as any other; a white citizen the same as a colored citizen. But this we know, that before that amendment freedmen had no right to the elective franchise. We also know that since the enactment of that amendment they have the right to vote.

The fourteenth amendment has been construed by the highest authority known in this country. The people construed it when they established the fifteenth amendment. They say in the fifteenth amendment that the right to vote is an existing right, possessed by the citizens of the United States. The fifteenth amendment enacts nothing. It is a prohibition. It does not confer the suffrage on anybody. It asserts that citizens possess the right to vote, and citizenship had been established by the fourteenth amendment. I read the first section of the fifteenth amendment:

The right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude.

The "right of citizens of the United States to vote" is here expressly recognized in language that seems to be very plain—too plain to be misunderstood. The qualifications of the right, whatever they may be, it is not necessary now to inquire into. It is enough that the right exists.

It is one of the fundamental rules in construing constitutional provisions that the words used must be accorded their natural and obvious meaning. A constitution should be so plain that the people can read it and understand it. It is not subject to be interpreted away by the courts. You cannot go outside of it to find out its meaning. Arguments ab inconvenienti are never allowed in construing constitutions. A constitution is not made to meet the exigency of an occasion. It is made for all time. It is made for all changes of circumstances. You must therefore look to its language, and to its language alone, to ascertain its meaning. It means the same to-day that it will mean a hundred years hence, when, perhaps, very many of the conditions which exist to-day have passed away and been forgotten. It means the same thing under all changes and for all times.

Taking for a premise the fact which I deem must be conceded, that the freedmen get the right to vote from the fourteenth amendment and out of the fact of United States citizenship, it follows as a necessary conclusion that all citizens of the United States have the same right secured to them by the same amendment and in the same manner.

This right is one of "the privileges and immunities" of a citizen.

The expression "privileges and immunities" is used in section 2 of article 4 of the Constitution, and as so used has received judicial construction:

The citizens of each State shall be entitled to all the privileges and immunities of citizens in the several States.

In Corfield vs. Coryell, (4 Wash. C. C. Rep., 380,) Mr. Justice Washington, speaking of the "privileges and immunities" of the citizen of a State, after enumerating certain personal rights as embraced by those terms, says "to which may be added the elective franchise, as regulated and established by the laws or constitution of the State in which it is to be exercised."

This learned justice recognizes the "elective franchise" as among the "privileges and immunities" secured to the citizens of every State by the provisions of the Constitution last referred to. The right to exercise the elective franchise, or, in other words, the right to vote, is secured to every United States citizen, and the States by the fourteenth amendment are absolutely prohibited from abridging the privileges of the citizen.

Chancellor Kent and Judge Story both refer to the opinion of Mr. Justice Washington with approbation.

Bouvier defines the word citizen as "one who under the Constitution and laws of the United States has a right to vote for Representatives in Congress and other public officers, and who is qualified to fill offices in the gift of the people."

Worcester defines a citizen to be "an inhabitant of a republic who enjoys the rights of a freeman, and has a right to vote for public officers."

Webster's definition is:

In the United States a person, native or naturalized, who has the privilege of exercising the elective franchise, or the qualifications which enable him to vote for rulers, and to purchase and hold real estate.

Mr. Richard Grant White, in his work on Words and their Uses, says of the word "citizen:"

A citizen is a person who has certain political rights, and the word is properly used only to imply or suggest the possession of those rights.

A citizen of the United States is of course a member of the nation, but it is a beggarly use of the word to say that it implies simply that and nothing more. The right of United States citizens to vote, therefore, being fixed in the fourteenth amendment, Congress is expressly authorized by section 5 of that amendment to enforce the provisions of that article by appropriate legislation. The laws now sought to be repealed are appropriate legislation to enforce those provisions.

I quote the language of Chief-Justice Waite from 2 Otto:

Rights and immunities created by or dependent upon the Constitution of the United States can be protected by Congress. The form and manner of the protection may be such as Congress, in the legitimate exercise of its legislative discretion, shall provide.

I now notice section 4 of article 1 of the Constitution, which provides for the manner of holding elections. It has been often quoted, and will bear quoting again.

The times, places, and manner of holding elections for Senators and Representatives shall be prescribed in each State by the Legislatures thereof; but the Congress may at any time by law make or alter such regulations, except as to the places of choosing Senators.

The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CARLISLE] seems to get closer to the questions involved here and to treat them with more candor than any other gentleman who has discussed them on that side of the Chamber. He discards the construction given to this section by George Ticknor Curtis, and which has so often been repeated by gentlemen on that side of the House.

Mr. Curtis construes this section to mean that Congress has no power to make regulations when the State has acted and has made regulations. His exact language is:

If a State has legislated on all these matters, the power requisite to be exercised in order to secure the representation called for is exhausted, and nothing remains to be done by Congress unless it be to exercise the power provided in the last clause of the sentence.

This learned democratic jurist held that the power here given to Congress is in subordination to the delegation of power to the State Legislatures.

The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CARLISLE] is unable to agree with Mr. Curtis and his school upon this point. He says in his speech reported in the RECORD of Wednesday, in speaking of this provision of the Constitution:

If the language of the instrument were really ambiguous we would be authorized, and it would be necessary, to go back and examine the debates and proceedings in the Federal convention and in the State conventions for the purpose of determining its actual meaning. But the language appears to be free from all ambiguity. The words "at any time" would seem necessarily to confer upon Congress the right to decide for itself when and under what circumstances it should interpose by legislation to make regulations or alter the regulations previously made by the States.

I am willing to assume, for the purpose of this argument at least, that Congress has the power, at any time and under all circumstances, whether the States have legislated or not, and although they may have adopted reasonable, wise, and just regulations upon this subject, to make or alter regulations as to the time, place, and manner of holding elections.

With such a concession from an adversary who occupies and is justly entitled to occupy the position of a leader of his party, and from a lawyer who is the peer of Mr. Curtis, I am content to pass from that point to the one the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CARLISLE] makes his stand upon. He contends for a very narrow construction of the word "manner." He claims that this amounts to nothing more or very little more than the form of the ballot. The word "manner" is a very comprehensive word. Congress may provide that the election shall be held in an orderly and not in a disorderly manner, in a peaceable and not in a bulldozing manner, in an honest and not in a fraudulent manner. In whatever manner it is desirable to have the elections held, Congress may so provide by law. Manner means the mode in which a thing is done, the method by which it is done, the way of doing it. The thing to do is to hold an election. Congress may fix the time; that is plain. It may name or designate the place; that is plain also. What is left? Nothing but the "manner" of conducting the election; the mode, method, or way of conducting the election. Whatever there is of an election besides the time and place of holding it is included in the word "manner." It includes the entire right to regulate the suffrage in all elections for Representatives.

The election laws now sought to be repealed were enacted for a wise and just purpose. They were intended to afford to every lawful elector the right to approach the polls and cast his vote peaceably and without molestation. They were enacted in the interest of honest voting and honest counting of the votes. They make fraud and bulldozing at the polls a crime. They are the bane of repeaters and of ballot-box stuffers. They discountenance the use of tissue-paper ballots and forged and fraudulent naturalization papers. They are for the punishment of all crimes against the ballot-box wherever and whenever the United States has jurisdiction over the subject-matter of the offense and the person of the offender.

It is a patent fact that the election laws of the several States which provide penalties for offenses against the ballot-box are a dead letter. The case is a rare one in which a fraudulent voter has been punished for his offense under the laws of his State. Not so with the United States election laws. Hundreds of crimes have been proven and the perpetrators punished under these laws. The United States courts are the only courts which the repeater and the fraudulent voter fear. Repeal these laws and we substantially do away with all law at the polls. In the rural districts of the Northern States the respect for law generally entertained by men of all parties practically insures fair elections. But it is not so in the large cities. There violent men and law-breakers must be restrained. There peace must be kept at the polls by the officers of the law, or there will be no peace at the polls. In the Southern States it needs no prophet to foretell what will be the fate of the colored voter if by a repeal of these laws he is turned over to the tender mercies of the ruffian and the bulldozer. If the United States cannot keep the peace at the polls in those States there will be no peace kept except on condition that colored citizens and republican voters either keep away from the polls or vote the democratic ticket.

If it be true that some officer has overstepped his duties in his zeal to enforce the law, that is no argument against the law itself. Most of the charges on that head come from partisan sources, and are untrue. The attempt of John I. Davenport to prevent the use of fraudulent naturalization papers ought to be commended, and not denounced. No political party can uphold the forgeries and frauds in the matter of naturalizations committed in the city of New York in the year 1868. Naturalization papers were issued by the wholesale by corrupt courts and officials, and peddled about the city. The attempt on the part of Davenport to suppress those papers was in the interest of good morals and good order.

No honest man can advocate the use of forged naturalization papers at the polls. John I. Davenport would not be feared if he was a law-breaker. He is feared because he fearlessly and vigorously uses his official power to prevent law-breaking and to punish violators of the law. John I. Davenport holds that forty men ought not to be permitted to vote from a house where only one man resides. In this he seems to be opposed by the leaders of the democratic party. John I. Davenport holds that to entitle a foreign-born citizen to vote he should comply with the naturalization laws of the country. In this also he seems to be opposed by the leaders of the democracy. The more the Davenport argument against the election laws is scanned the more it will appear that there is nothing in it adverse to those laws beyond a hue and cry.

The argument against the constitutionality of the election laws, and against the power of Congress in the premises, is the old one of State rights. One phase of that argument, at least—the right of secession and the right of the United States to coerce a State to remain in the Union—has been settled by the arbitrament of war. It has been settled that we are a nation, and not a confederation. It has been settled that in some things, at any rate, the United States is the supreme power. It is a government with laws which its Congress has enacted, and with a peace to be preserved.

It has been asserted with great emphasis on this floor that there is no such thing as the peace of the United States which that power can maintain and preserve within the States, and that there cannot be a breach of the peace of the United States. What is the peace of a State? It is good order and obedience to law. To keep the peace is to keep order and maintain obedience to the laws. Wherever a law is violated there is a breach of the peace. If a law of Congress is broken the peace of the United States is broken. Every person who commits any of the numerous crimes enumerated in the six chapters on crimes in the Revised Statutes commits a breach of the peace of the United States. Among those crimes are murder, arson, burglary, counterfeiting, forgery, perjury, and offenses against the ballot-box. The commission of any one of the offenses mentioned in the long category of crimes against the United States is a breach of the peace of the United States. If the United States can punish for a breach of the peace after it has been committed, it can take measures beforehand to prevent the commission of the offense. It can place watchmen at the Treasury to prevent its vaults from being broken as well as it can punish the burglar after he has succeeded in breaking into the vault. It can place an officer at the polls to prevent the commission of crimes there as well as it can punish the crime after it has been committed.

Mr. SHERWIN. Mr. Chairman, I have not the vanity to think that I can at this late day add anything in the way of argument to what has already been said in this great debate. My reason for trespassing at all upon the attention of the committee is to give some utterance, however faint, to the voice of my constituents, that it may not be thought that they are careless observers of the momentous and far-reaching legislation that is about to be consummated by this House.

It has been declared by nearly every speaker upon the questions before us that he is in favor of a pure, free ballot-box. So far we are in happy accord. We only disagree as to the method by which that freedom shall be secured and that purity maintained and preserved. It would seem that, being here for purposes of deliberation and not to advance our party interests except as the advancement of our country's interests advance them, we ought in reason to come to some agreement as to how to best promote our common design. So soon as we begin to discuss the mode of proceeding, however, we at once come upon a principle of constitutional interpretation which opens a chasm between us which no argument so far has been able to bridge. We at once meet questions that are as old as the Constitution itself, reaching far beyond the issue of to-day, to the very existence of the Government—questions which have been discussed by our greatest statesmen and publicists at different times with great eloquence and power—I mean those questions which bear upon the relations of the National Government to the States. Thus ever do the great concerns of humanity, society, government recur. What has been is; what is shall be.

The matter of this discussion relates to the rights, powers, duties, and limitations of the General Government in the regulation and control of elections of members of this House. The question is at once raised whether the Government has any power at all over such elections; whether they are not matters solely of State jurisdiction. You, as democrats, take the position that a member of the House of Representatives is a State officer, and that his election should be controlled by State laws; while we, as republicans, hold that he is an officer of the United States, and therefore the Government can and should control and regulate such elections in case the State refuses or neglects that duty. Believing that such a right existed in and such a duty was imposed upon the Government of the United States, a republican Congress enacted those laws regulating elections which you now seek to repeal. I do not now pause to speak of the specific reasons which caused their enactment, nor to discuss whether they are the best that might have been enacted, or whether they should or should not be modified at the present or some future time. I am discussing the question as to whether the Government has the right to enact laws regulating the election of members of Congress.

As has been stated many times upon this floor during this discussion, we claim that that right is given by the fourth section of article 1 of the Constitution. If the words of that section be taken in their natural, plain meaning, it would seem clear that they give to Congress the power to make such regulations as to the manner of holding said elections as it deems best at any time it may choose to exercise that power, provided other principles of the Constitution are not contravened.

The opinions of the great men who helped to frame and to adopt the Constitution fortify this view of the question. The section in question received as much and as earnest discussion as almost any other one question did. The State conventions of seven different States, New Hampshire, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, New York, Virginia, North Carolina, and South Carolina, recommended at the time they adopted the Constitution that that section should be amended, so "that," in the language of the New York convention, "the Congress shall not make or alter any regulation in any State respecting the times, places, and manner of holding elections for Senators and Representatives, unless the Legislature of such State shall neglect or refuse to make laws or regulations for the purpose, or from any circumstance be incapable of making the same, and then only until the Legislature of such State shall make provision in the premises."

Notwithstanding those recommendations, no such amendment was ever made or proposed to be made, and it stands now as it did originally. Not only did those State conventions think that Congress had the power to regulate elections given to it by that section, but the leading men of that time are recorded as expressing themselves strongly upon that point. Luther Martin, of Maryland, inveighed against it as a "provision expressly looking to, and I have no doubt designed for, the utter extinction and abolition of all State governments." Mr. Bishop, of Massachusetts, said that the great difficulty with him was that the power given by the fourth section was "unlimited." Mr. Parsons, also of Massachusetts, contended for the section "not only as those powers were necessary for preserving the Union, but also for securing to the people their equal rights of election." John Jay gave as a reason for its adoption "that every government was imperfect unless it had the power of preserving itself." Mr. Iredell, of North Carolina, said:

An occasion may arise when the exercise of this ultimate power in Congress may be necessary. * * * And it seems natural and proper that every government shall have in itself the means of its own preservation.

Mr. Wilson, in his admirable argument, said:

If the Congress had it not in their power to make regulations, what might be the consequences? Some States might make no regulations at all upon the subject. And shall the existence of the House of Representatives, the immediate representative of the people in Congress, depend upon the will and pleasure of the State governments? * * * It is possible, also, that they may make improper regulations. * * * We find on examining this paragraph that it contains nothing more than the maxims of self-preservation so abundantly secured by this Constitution to the individual States.

It will thus be seen that those who were opposed to the section as well as those who were in favor of it agreed that it gave to Congress full and unlimited power over the matter as a means of self-preservation; a power to be assumed whenever Congress might see fit to assume it; an undoubted, original, and unlimited power over the whole matter, except the qualifications of voters, which were to be fixed by the laws of the States.

We also have the opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States in Gibbon vs. Ogden, 9 Wheaton, in which they declare the principle that "the power to regulate implies in its nature full power over the thing to be regulated."

It would seem that there could be no reasonable doubt that Congress had the right and the power to enact and enforce the election laws which you are seeking to repeal, and that when the occasion should arise it would be its duty to enact and enforce them.

I wish also to state a little history. So good and pure a democrat as General John M. Palmer, the leading man of that party in the State of Illinois, once issued an order for the use of troops at the polls. It was in Kentucky, and you may be sure that General Palmer would not have issued it had it not been necessary. It was as follows:

[General Orders No. 51.]

HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF KENTUCKY,
Louisville, Kentucky, July 26, 1865.

The near approach of an important election, to be held in all the counties of the State and Military Department of Kentucky, renders it proper, in the judgment of the general commanding, to require all officers commanding troops to give to the officers of the State charged by the law with the duty of conducting elections and to the legal voters of the State the most complete protection. Martial law prevails in the Department of Kentucky, and certain classes of persons are especially under military surveillance and control.

Here follows a description of such classes.

All persons of the class aforesaid are required to abstain from all interference with elections, and will, if they shall in any manner interfere therein, by voting or attempting to vote, or by persuading any other person to vote, or by appearing at the polls, be at once arrested and held for military trial.

Aid will be given to the civil authorities to enforce the laws and preserve the peace. Any person who shall counsel, advise, or encourage any judge of any election or any other person to disregard or disobey the law as declared in the proclamation of the governor of the State, will be at once arrested. The peace of the country can be secured only by obedience to the laws.

By command of Major-General John M. Palmer:

E. B. HARLAN,
Captain and Assistant Adjutant-General.

This order was issued more than three months after Lee's surrender. Kentucky had never been in insurrection, and there was not an armed rebel in the United States. Under this order of a democratic general two of the members now upon the floor of this House representing the State of Kentucky would have been at once arrested and held for military trial if they had attempted to vote or had even appeared at the polls. This, too, at an election of State officers only.

Another thing is noticeable in regard to the early discussions upon the section of the Constitution I have referred to. Much was said about securing to every man his right to vote, but nothing whatever was said about preventing those from voting who were not qualified to vote or preventing men from voting more than once. Their vision had not penetrated to that golden era in their country's history when in its chief city a man who was to become the candidate of one of the great parties for the Presidency should deliberately connive at repeating, and thus in the act of performing the highest civil right of a freeman rob honest voters of their rights. Their eyes had not been vouchsafed to see the day when thousands of men who had the most unquestioned right to vote should by means of lawlessness and murder be restrained from casting their ballots, while others should stuff the ballot-box until it should be made to speak what they desired it to. Their ears had not heard eloquent speeches of men in praise of a free, untrammeled ballot and in condemnation of tyranny who had mounted into power by reason of stupendous frauds upon the very ballot-box whose purity they extolled. Those sights and sounds were reserved for our century, to that time when men who had fought for long years to destroy the Constitution had come back again into power through the grace of their conquerors and, with an apparent consciousness of superiority in public morality and political wisdom, were instructing the men who had defended and preserved it from their bloody assaults as to its true meaning and intent, and were traducing the character and maligning the motives of its defenders. This sublimity of political self-assertion, this climax of political assumption, this arrogance of political insolence, was not to be forecast by any speculations, however deep, and could only be understood and believed after it had been witnessed in the flesh.

Sir, it is known to every member of this House that at the time of the passage of this act elections in New York and in some other large cities were a farce. The ballot-box was a vast sewer, into which emptied the vile contents of the alleys and the slums, in whose mephitic atmosphere honest men were stifled and nothing pure could live. This was known to be so by the leading men of both parties, but nothing was done to prevent it. And yet badges of office fished out of this festering, reeking reservoir were worn with apparent satisfaction by men who aspired to the highest offices in the land.

In order to give a hint as to how voters were made and elections were carried in New York at that time, I will read from the testimony of John I. Davenport, given before the Committee on the Judiciary of this House last February. This recital of Mr. Davenport is sickening to any true patriot, and would cause any one not blinded by partisan zeal to almost despair of republican government:

Question. I would like you to state as briefly as you can, and somewhat historically as you go along in order, the results of all your investigations into these frauds of 1868.

Answer. Well, sir, as I say, I learned, first, that the applications on file nowhere near approached the number of certificates that had been issued. I learned that there was a very large and extensive issue of certificates in blank—signed and sealed in blank. I also learned that there was an issue of several thousand certificates to fictitious persons, and for which there were applications made, but which are not now on the files of the courts. I also learned that a very large number of the certificates which were issued in the names of fictitious persons as applicants were on file, which applications were false and forged. I also learned that as to the applications on file for real persons, persons existing, those applications were forged as to the names of the witnesses signed to them; that many of the witnesses whose names appeared in an exceedingly fine handwriting cannot write to this day. I also learned that in the neighborhood of eighty ostensible persons appeared as witnesses for about nine thousand applicants; that in truth and in fact many of these eighty were not in existence and the names were fictitious, as for instance a man named Collins signed and appeared under his own name as witness for various persons, and then signed the name of Michael Morrel, and then appeared under that name as a witness for various persons. I also learned that the rule in the superior and supreme court was that applicants were not admitted to the court. Judge Barnard was the only judge who naturalized, beginning on the 6th day of October and closing on the 23d. On the 6th he naturalized six persons only, on the 7th he naturalized eight, on the other fourteen days he naturalized ten thousand and seventy.

I learned also that these certificates were sold openly and publicly, signed and sealed in blank in quantities; that contracts were made for their delivery in adjoining counties and in adjoining States at prices ranging from fifty cents each to $2.50. I learned that persons in other States and in this city and in other portions of this State were in the constant practice of bringing to the court long lists simply of names of persons and residences; that the court, upon those lists—none of the applicants being here and none of them frequently being in the State—issued certificates. I learned that at various places throughout the city, in almost every ward, there were headquarters and club-houses where certificates were given out—where men went and gave their names and in fifteen minutes received certificates, without any judge or court or witness or application or any other proceeding being gone through with. I also learned of the organization of mock courts, which met at various places in the city, chiefly in the room formerly used by the sheriff, known as room 12, in the old city hall. Applicants there generally had an oath administered to them, which oath was that they would support the Constitution of the United States and vote for John T. Hoffman for governor. That was one form. Another was that they would support the Constitution of the United States and vote the democratic ticket. * * *

A large number of these certificates were delivered in Bridgeport, Connecticut, under contract, and from there sent to different portions of the State. There was a large quantity delivered in bulk in Jersey City; a considerable quantity in Brooklyn—one thousand in one lot that I know of. To the best of my knowledge some ten thousand of them were delivered in blank to Mr. James Fisk or his representative for use along the Erie road.

This year the bureau of elections in San Francisco sent their representatives here and consulted my records, &c., with regard to a number of those certificates which were used there, and upon which some members of the constitutional convention had been elected. One of them was forced to resign from evidence obtained to that effect, as I was informed. * * * There were ninety thousand applications ordered in the month of October alone, and sixty thousand certificates.

These were the stupendous frauds that were referred to by Horace Greeley in his well-known letter to Mr. Tilden, in which he said, speaking of only four wards of New York:

There are not twelve thousand legal voters living in those wards to-day, though they gave Hoffman 17,443 majority. Had the day been of average length it would doubtless have been swelled to twenty thousand. There was nothing but time needed to make it one hundred thousand if so many had been wanted and paid for. * * * Probably a good part of the fifty thousand supplied last fall with bogus naturalization certificates will offer to register and to vote. * * * Prosecutors, magistrates, municipal authorities are all in the pool; we have nothing to hope from the ministers of justice, and the villains have no fear of the terrors of the law.

This letter was written in 1869 and before Mr. Davenport had made his investigation, and before the passage of the election law. This investigation by Mr. Davenport reveals the organization of the machine by which the great city of New York, with its million of inhabitants, could be declared to be for any ticket the election officers or a democratic caucus might wish it to be declared for; not only that, it could furnish all the votes which were necessary to carry the State; not only that, but Connecticut being doubtful, they could spare enough to carry that State; not only that, but New Jersey could be aided; not only that, but ten thousand of them could be scattered out through Pennsylvania and New York. There was no boundary so distant but that they found their way thither, and we hear of their appearing in San Francisco and actually being the means of carrying an election there. They are a subtle poison pervading our whole electoral system, for one of those certificates upon its face would be good if presented at any voting place in the country. There is more danger to the institutions of our country from this subtle, constant menace than from all the soldiers in the land.

Since this law has been in operation the United States supervisor of elections in New York has prevented much illegal voting, and at the last election there probably prevented more than ten thousand illegal votes from being cast; and if the law can be kept upon the statute-books and enforced it will be but a few years before the national elections in our large cities will be nearly free from fraud, and that, too, without the aid of a soldier. Now, gentlemen, why do you wish to repeal this law? Are you in favor of fraud? Do you wish to repeal it in order to promote the purity of the ballot-box? Will you, gentlemen, in the presence of this overshadowing cloud of evil which threatens to stifle the true voice of the people at the polls, this real, ever-present evil which is before you and around you and upon you, remove every barrier to its frightful progress?

I have not time to mention with any detail at all the horrible, disgraceful affairs by which the voice of the people was suppressed in two or three of the Southern States. It is perfectly familiar to the country. The investigations of the Senate committee appointed last December reveal the burning disgrace entailed upon the American people in the attempt of the "wealth and intelligence" of the people to secure an election to Congress. The flight of large bodies of loyal though poor people from that land to one where the cost of citizenship is less dear, where they will not be vexed by the uncontrolled bailiffs of an irresponsible and hostile society, is a rebuke humiliating but well deserved to that powerful Government which has failed to protect them in their dearest constitutional rights.

According to the report of that committee—

The democrats declared through the press and otherwise their determination to carry the election. They organized a rifle company and cavalry companies, claiming that such organizations were necessary for the protection of the white people. * * * From the time tickets were in the field, armed bodies of white men appeared from neighboring parishes, raiding through the country, committing outrages on the colored people. Some were whipped, some were shot, and some were hung. Some of those raiding forces were under the deputy sheriff, and some were under the command of J. Floyd King, the democratic candidate for Congress. * * * A tragedy that results in the death of fifteen men in one county and eight in another ought certainly to call for an investigation in a civilized country; but no investigation has been made by either local or State authorities to determine where the blame rightfully belongs.

The same committee reports that in South Carolina, in Charleston County alone, more than five thousand democratic tissue tickets were voted, and one hundred and fifty-eight republican tissue tickets.

No prosecutions have been instituted by the States of Louisiana or South Carolina against the violators of their laws, and no efforts made to punish the men who have thus wantonly murdered or outraged their citizens; and when the United States courts have been resorted to for the purpose of punishing these outrages on the ballot, the complainant has been in nearly every instance arrested, clearly in violation of law, by the State authorities, on charges of perjury, libel, disturbing the peace, or some similar charge, and committed to jail unless he gave bail. Citizens are threatened that if they attempt to punish the offenders in the United States courts, the witnesses will be punished in the State courts; and thus the State declines to punish these criminals, but refuses to allow it to be done in the United States courts.

Now, gentlemen of the other side, here are wicked outrages proved in three of the great States of this Union, one in the North and the others in the South. You say that you are in favor of a free ballot-box and of unawed, unterrified voters. These are noble sayings of yours; they sound well and they read well. We say the same and we think the same. We therefore invite your enthusiastic co-operation in enforcing the laws against fraud and violence. It would seem as though we ought to join hands for so noble a purpose. Will you join with us? Bills are now pending before Congress for purposes of inquiring into the sewerage of this city and for the purpose of so improving and regulating it as that the inhabitants here may be saved from disease and death from such causes. It is a worthy object and one upon which party lines are not drawn. A bill has also been recently passed whose object is to stay the ravages of the scourge of yellow fever which so sadly smote the citizens of two or three States last year. Legislation upon that subject is prompt if not effective. Congress, without reference to party lines, proposes to do the best it can in the premises, and the nation rejoices.

Can we do less, gentlemen, than to do all we can, all we know how to do, to stay the great scourges of fraud and violence upon the ballot-box; to extirpate this dire disease upon the body-politic which threatens the overthrow, destruction, yea, death of free representative government? Can you find a higher duty, can you conceive a loftier aim than to make laws for such a purpose and furnish power for their enforcement? But you say that those duties belong to the States, not to the National Government. In reply, I say, that the States have neglected to make proper regulations, or if they have made such regulations have entirely failed to enforce them. There is no power to-day anywhere in those States which attempts to uphold the integrity of the ballot-box, except the power of the United States Government. And the democratic administrations of Louisiana and South Carolina and the leading democratic politicians of New York are throwing every obstacle in the way of the enforcement of the laws of the Government which they have at their command. Not only that, not one democrat upon this floor or at the other end of the Capitol has yet uttered a single word in condemnation of these frauds and outrages, but on the other hand you stand here a solid body demanding in the most objectionable manner the entire repeal of the United States statutes upon the subject.

It cannot be objected to these laws that they are "war measures," "born of the passions incident to civil strife and looking alone to the abridgment of the liberty of the citizen." They were passed long after the war had ceased. They are in the interest of the true liberty of the citizen, and are aimed at no section of the country but apply alike to all sections.

You shall not obscure this issue. The people shall understand that while you talk so grandly of freedom at the polls you are bending all your energies to trample out that freedom. It shall be seen that now, in the light of all the testimony as to the overwhelming frauds in the large cities of the North and in several of the Southern States, you gentlemen wish to repeal those laws or to so emasculate them that they retain no power whatever to discover or punish the perpetrators of the crimes, and while you are endeavoring to remove this last bulwark against fraud and violence and the only safeguard that is in existence for the real protection of the great body of the people, you declaim with dramatic unction about the liberty of the people, impending despotism, imperialism, and bayonet rule. Gentlemen may deceive themselves, but they cannot deceive the people by this false cry. The whole enormity of the crimes that are being committed against the people through the ballot-box by your party (and some other day, if permitted to become a recognized agency of political contests, might be committed by any other party) is at last seen and understood by the people of this country.

Popular government may be destroyed as effectually by fraud as by the sword. You could not destroy it by the sword, you shall not destroy it by fraud. The republican party will never consent to the repeal of these laws unless it can get something better in their stead. You cannot repeal them unless, indeed, the President shall approve your bill. The conscience of the people is being aroused; their sense of justice awaked. From this time forth you will see a public opinion that shall grow in constancy and unanimity, and gathering force and strength shall sweep with resistless power over all the land, until it shall pervade the hearts of the people of every quarter and of every precinct throughout our broad domain; a public opinion that shall demand the utmost freedom and the highest purity at elections, and shall, if necessary, bring to bear the entire power of this imperial Republic to enforce its purpose. Then shall the ballot-box express the honest, authentic voice of the people; and our laws, issuing from unpolluted fountains, shall be the stainless reflection of the people's will.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin, addressed the committee. [His remarks will appear in the Appendix.]

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Chairman, the nation is listening with anxiety to the discussion now proceeding in this House, and watching with eagle eye the action of its members.

The course of debate upon the pending bill has been unusually kaleidoscopic in its character, embracing, as it does, every subject within the range of human knowledge. Much has been said upon real points at issue, while much more throws no light whatever upon the subject.

Our fiat greenback friends have attempted to tinge the waters of the seething, boiling political ocean with their favorite color. The importers' friends have shrieked for "free trade and sailors' rights." The protective-tariff men have held the House entranced while they have dilated upon their darling specialty. Confederate brigadiers have yelled and howled with rage, and sawed the air and wept over the lifeless form of what they call in death State rights, but which in other days was called secession, while their northern allies, with sycophantic smiles, chant pæans to the South's chivalrous (?) sons.

A decent regard for the rights, the constitutional rights, of the Executive would have prevented a discussion on the floor of this House of the probable action of the President when this and the Army appropriation bill shall have been submitted to him; but the insatiate appetite of the majority, their boundless and ungovernable desire to obtain absolute control of all the departments of the Government has frenzied their brain and caused them to ignore the rights of others and tread roughshod with impious feet upon the constitutional domain of one of the co-ordinate branches of the Government.

The charge so flippantly made by some and so gravely made by other distinguished gentlemen on the other side that these sections of the statutes are unconstitutional comes with bad grace from democrats, in view of the able arguments made in their defense by distinguished democratic Senators on the floor of the Senate prior to their adoption, and in view of the fact that upon the passage of the bill of which the two so-called odious sections were a part every democrat in the Senate voting, and every democrat in the House voting, voted for this bill. But now it has been discovered that these laws prevent "bulldozers," "white-liners," and "white-leaguers" from intimidating honest voters, and so the democrats in this House wake up and discover for the first time that the laws are unconstitutional.

But your course on this floor, taken and followed at the dictation of a democratic caucus, shows how inconsistent and insincere you are. If these laws are unconstitutional, and you really and truly desire their repeal, why did you, when the distinguished gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] moved their absolute and unqualified repeal as an amendment to the Army appropriation bill, vote solidly against their repeal? An inspection of the record shows that every republican voting voted for the repeal of these laws, while every democrat voting voted against their repeal. Why say to this House and to the country that you are the chosen champions of a free ballot-box and opposed to bayonet rule at elections, and then come here and vote solidly for the retention of these laws?

O consistency, thou art a jewel!

An unconstitutional law in no way affects or abridges the rights of a citizen. If these laws are unconstitutional, is it not strange that that fact has only been discovered within the last few months? The courts of the country, within the constitutional province of which the question of the constitutionality or unconstitutionality of laws lawfully comes, have ever been open to the citizen since the enactment of these laws. Why not take them there and demonstrate their unconstitutionality, if such is the case, instead of wasting the people's precious time and money by senseless and unavailing discussion on this floor?

Gentlemen on the other side of this House claim that this proposed legislation is meritorious, that it is demanded by the country, and that they feel entirely confident of indorsement by their sovereign, the people. If these things be true, why the necessity of this extraordinary session of Congress with its attendant prodigal and criminal expenditure and wasting of the people's money?

The issue between the two great parties was squarely made in the last Congress. If you have confidence in the justice of your cause, why not go before the people on that issue? But no, gentlemen, the southern chivalric element of the democratic party represented on this floor and in the Senate by late confederate brigadiers has come to the front, and thinks to inaugurate the manners and customs which obtained here before the war, and ride rough-shod over the Executive and the people. But, gentlemen, we know you; and knowing, have no fears for the future. Your threat to starve the Government to death is an idle threat, and carries no fear or consternation to the hearts of the people.

You may refuse the enactment of necessary and salutary laws; you may refuse to appropriate the money paid into the Treasury by the people for the support of the Government; you may attempt to wipe from the statute-books all the laws made necessary by the war and the changed condition of affairs as you have threatened to do. But, Mr. Chairman, all this will not avail you. The loyal States and the loyal people of this land, without regard to their present party affiliations, stand ready to succor, sustain, and again defend if necessary this glorious Government of ours. In the Hall of the House of Representatives of this nation your challenge has been published and the gage of battle delivered; your chosen leader has announced that "he who dallies is a dastard, and he who doubts is damned." These notes of warning have fallen upon the ears of the people like the hiss and rattle of the deadly serpent, and the loyal millions of the North and the South, those stalwart defenders of free government and equal legal and political rights to all, are crowded upon the watch-towers and ramparts of the nation eagerly watching for your first invasion of their blood-bought liberties and rights and ready in the twinkling of an eye to hurl you, like the rebellious angels of old, over the ramparts of the nation down to that darkest pit of hell, the fit abode of traitors and the damned.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Chairman, I regard the questions presented to this Congress in the Army bill, which has already passed this House, and in the bill now before us, as among the most important and vital questions that have come before the National Legislature for many years. Viewed in their true and most comprehensive bearings, these questions relate not merely to the making of an appropriation of $27,000,000 for the support of the Army and $18,000,000 for the support of the executive, judicial, and legislative departments of the Government; not merely to limiting the power of the President as Commander-in-Chief of the Army; not merely to the constitutionality or unconstitutionality of certain laws which now stand upon our statute-book; not merely as to whether the democrats or republicans shall be victorious in the present struggle; but they are questions which are higher, deeper, and broader than all these, and which affect the dearest and most sacred rights of American citizenship. They are questions which pertain to the right of every American elector to cast his ballot on election day as he sees fit, without molestation or interference, thus reaching down and affecting the very foundation principle upon which our Government rests.

I am aware, sir, that much has been said during this discussion about the unconstitutionality of the laws which the Army bill and the bill now before us propose to repeal. But upon what grounds do gentlemen on the other side base their assertions that these laws are unconstitutional? What is our Constitution worth if the individual citizen cannot claim protection under it when his most sacred rights are invaded? If its provisions are not broad enough to secure to every citizen his full rights, the sooner we know it the better. If that instrument is powerless in protecting every elector in his right to cast a free and untrammeled ballot, we had better proceed at once to remodel it and enlarge its provisions. I do not believe, Mr. Chairman, that our Constitution is as weak and powerless as these gentlemen assert. I hold to the idea that that instrument confers upon the General Government all the power necessary to enable it to protect every elector in his right to vote. I care not who that elector is, whether he be high or low, rich or poor, whether he lives in Maine or South Carolina, California or Illinois, the Government, under the Constitution, not only has the power to protect him in this right but fails in its duty if it does not exercise that power.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not propose to discuss the constitutionality of these laws. That has already been done by abler men than myself. But I do desire to say that I believe them to be constitutional. It seems rather strange to me that after a century of national life we have just discovered that our Constitution is powerless to protect the individual citizen in his dearest rights. It is a strange doctrine to be proclaimed upon this floor that ruffians and bulldozers are superior to the General Government and in their work of intimidation, fraud, and murder can bid defiance to that Government. It is a strange doctrine to advocate, that when these ruffians and bulldozers band together to prevent the individual citizen from voting, that citizen cannot appeal to his Government for protection against this unlawful combination. I do not believe in any such doctrine. On the contrary, I believe that our Constitution is broad enough and our Government has power enough to guard the ballot-box against fraud and protect the citizen in his right to vote.

We have heard much said during this discussion by gentlemen on the other side about the danger there is to our liberties in permitting marshals and armed soldiers at the polls. But I wish to say to these gentlemen that there are some things which are far more dangerous to the liberties of our people than the presence of a few armed men at the polls on election day, especially when they are there, as they always have been when there at all, to preserve the peace and to protect citizens in their rights. Once establish the principle that might makes right and that bulldozers and ruffians can control elections, letting only such persons vote as will vote to suit them, and what will the liberty that we now prize so highly be worth to us? No, Mr. Chairman, I do not share the fears which these gentlemen have in regard to this matter. I believe in the constitutional power of this Government to protect its citizens in their rights, and I can see no danger in its employing armed force when necessary to do this. The danger would be if it did not employ such force. Thinking thus, and believing also in the constitutionality of the laws which the majority in this Congress are seeking to repeal, I not only want these laws left as they are, but I want to have them enforced with the most rigid firmness at every voting place in the country where national officers are voted for. And this, sir, is the position taken not only by myself and my republican colleagues on this floor but by the entire republican party of the country.

I am aware, sir, that we who favor these laws are charged with favoring centralization, despotism, imperialism, and every other thing of a tyrannical nature. Gentlemen on the other side have taken delight in iterating and reiterating the assertion that the republican party has been laboring, and is to-day laboring, to destroy free government in this country and build upon its ruins a government in which the few should rule and the many obey. But nothing ever was or ever can be more false. In standing by these laws we do it simply and solely in the interest of fair and honest elections. We hold to the doctrine that every citizen who is entitled to vote shall be made secure in this right by the strong arm of law, and, if necessary, by military power. We want no restraint, intimidation, or interference in regard to the freedom of the ballot. This is all the republican party demands, and with nothing less will it be satisfied. Search the history of that party from the day it came into power in 1861 down to the present time, and you will find this to be the objective point of all its endeavors in the matter of elections. We have always taken firm and decided ground in favor of the purity of the ballot-box and freedom of the ballot, and this ground we have maintained persistently and to the best of our ability. We have opposed with all the legitimate power we had every effort made by the democracy to debauch the ballot-box, and we shall continue so to do to the bitter end. If democrats, in their defiance of law and their zeal for party success, combine to prevent electors from casting a free ballot, they must expect to encounter the firm and determined opposition of the entire republican party.

The republicans on this floor, Mr. Chairman, and I may say of the whole country, regret as much as any set of men can do the necessity that has now and then existed in the past for sending United States marshals and armed men to the polls to preserve order and protect voters. But who, sir, has created this necessity? What set of men are responsible for the fact that any United States officer or soldier has ever been present at a voting place? I make the assertion, and I make it boldly, that democrats, and democrats alone, have created this necessity by their unlawful and disgraceful efforts to prevent the individual citizen from voting as he desired, to debauch the ballot-box, and to make our elections a fraud instead of a free and correct expression of public sentiment. Had there been no democratic kuklux, no democratic white-liners, no democratic red-shirts, no democratic dead-beats, bullies, and repeaters in the land, there would never have been a marshal or an armed soldier near the polls on election day in his official or military capacity. Had the great democratic party of the country stood up with unbroken front and demanded that every elector should be protected in his right to vote once, and only once, on election day, and to have his vote honestly counted, there would never have been any demand for these laws which the majority in this Congress are now seeking to repeal. These are facts which democrats will do well to consider.

It is true that gentlemen on the other side talk loudly about free and fair elections. They seem to be greatly troubled for fear that, under our laws as they now exist, some one is going to be deprived of his right to vote. This may all be very well. It is right and proper to be sensitive in regard to this matter. But what, I ask, have these gentlemen or the party which they represent ever done to show that they are in favor of free and honest elections? If they are as sensitive in regard to this matter as they profess to be, why is it that they have never labored to secure such elections? Why have they not at least entered their protest against the high-handed outrages of the rifle clubs, red-shirts, white-liners, and bulldozers of the South who have so often and so defiantly trampled upon the law, broken the peace, struck down the rights of the individual citizen, driven voters from the polls or murdered them in cold blood, taken forcible possession of the ballot-box, and controlled elections in the interest of fraud, rascality, and the democratic party? Why did they not put a stop to the wholesale frauds which for so many years under democratic rule disgraced the elections in the city of New York? These are not only pertinent but practical questions; and when democrats on this floor set themselves up as the especial advocates of a free ballot and of honest elections, I ask them why they do not put forth some effort to make their actions harmonize with their words?

The fact is, Mr. Chairman, the democracy are thoroughly and reliably inconsistent in this thing, as they are in almost everything else. They preach one thing while they practice another. They talk about the purity of the ballot-box while they attempt to debauch it at every election. They are not only willing but determined that any and every democrat shall vote, no matter if he is obliged to violate law in so doing; but they are unwilling that republicans should vote, even when they have the right to do so under the laws of the land. They are horrified at the idea of a marshal or an armed soldier being sent to the polls for the sole purpose of protecting the citizen in his rights and of keeping the peace; but they organize and arm white-liners, red-shirts, and bulldozers, and send them to the polls for the sole purpose of violating law, preventing citizens from exercising their right to vote, exciting riot, and shooting down innocent men. It would seem, if these men are so strongly opposed to the presence of marshals and soldiers at the polls for a good purpose, that they ought to be as strongly opposed, at least, to the presence of white-liners and rifle clubs, who are at the polls only for an evil purpose. I wish to say to the gentlemen on the other side that if they will take firm and determined ground in favor of free and fair elections, in deed as well as in word, and will labor honestly and energetically to secure such elections, they will not be troubled with either troops or marshals at the polls. But until they do this they will find that we republicans will stand firm by the position we have already taken, that the purity and freedom of the ballot-box must be maintained, even if it requires marshals and troops to maintain them.

But, sir, I said a moment ago that the democracy have never done anything to show that they favor free and honest elections. Look at the history of their party and see if this is not so. We have never had a party in this country which has been so utterly unscrupulous in the means employed to gain power. Its history shows that there has been no scheme too vile, no policy too corrupt, and no course of proceeding too rascally and base for the party to adopt, if by so doing it could gain votes and bolster up its fortunes. Every one remembers how the great campaign for "Tilden and reform" was carried on in 1876. Beginning with the Saint Louis convention, where Mr. Tilden was nominated, down to the day of the election, the democracy did not hesitate to resort to all kinds of trickery, rascality, fraud, bulldozing, and murder in order to make certain the election of their candidate.

In prosecuting the campaign the great cry of "Tilden and reform" was raised, taken up by every democrat in the country and shouted with the utmost vigor. And yet facts show that the party trusted for success more in Tilden's barrel than in the humbug cry of reform. Mr. Tilden surrounded himself with a set of political tricksters such as would disgrace any man or any party, and these men, loaded down with money, were sent out all over the country to work up his interests and to make success at the polls a certainty. The States of Indiana and Wisconsin were flooded with money which democratic "reformers" freely used in manufacturing votes for their great leader. The attempt to secure a presidential elector from Oregon for Tilden by the use of money is a matter of history which no man of ordinary intelligence and honor will deny. In South Carolina and Florida also the democracy attempted to purchase an elector for Tilden by offering an immense sum of money. But these cases all sink into insignificance when compared with the case in Louisiana. Here is a case where a republican elector, after the election was over, was approached by Mr. Tilden's friends and offered $100,000 if he would turn traitor to his party and cast his vote for "Tilden and reform." I affirm that never in the history of our country was a political campaign conducted in such a shameful and grossly corrupt manner as was the campaign of 1876 on the part of the democracy, and it is greatly to the credit of the American people that a party which resorted to such corrupt means to carry an election was defeated at the polls.

But not only was money employed but every other base means which democratic ingenuity could invent was resorted to in order to make success certain. The history of the democratic campaign of 1876 in the South is but the history of one of the most gigantic schemes of intimidation, fraud, and murder that ever disgraced a party. There is not a single Southern State in which there was anything like a free and fair election. Armed democratic organizations held full sway in every locality in that section, and by ballot-box stuffing, coercion, terrorism, and murder managed to carry all but three of the Southern States. Some of the congressional districts which are republican by from 6,000 to 10,000 majority were handed over to the democracy by these organizations with the democratic vote largely ahead. The shot-gun policy which worked so well during that campaign has been continued ever since, and to-day we see every Southern State in the hands of the democracy, while the republican party is virtually wiped out. Now, it is a well-known fact that many of the Southern States are republican. Give us a fair and honest vote and our party would carry Louisiana, Alabama, Mississippi, both the Carolinas, and Florida.

Now, sir, it has always been our boast in this Republic that the majority rule. But in the South to-day this principle is reversed. In almost every State in that section the minority, having by intimidation and murder brought the majority into subjection, alone bear rule and have everything their own way. I am aware, sir, that our democratic friends claim that the negroes have experienced a change in their political faith—that they have abandoned the republican party and taken refuge in the camp of the democracy; but no one of intelligence believes this. The fact is, the great democratic party of the South, which puts on such a fair exterior, wraps itself about with such a spotless mantle of purity and proclaims its honesty in such high-sounding phrases, has by fraud, intimidation, and murder crushed out the republican majorities and given the minority control. I charge that the democracy have secured the ascendency in the South not by honesty and fairness but by violating law, overriding justice, and resorting to a wholesale system of rascality and fraud. I charge that the democracy were enabled to secure control of this House only by means of frauds perpetrated at the ballot-box by democrats. I am convinced from the facts that have come to my knowledge that district after district was carried in the South at the election in 1878 by means that ought to damn forever, in a political sense, the party that resorted to them. Had every voter been allowed to vote as he desired once and only once, and had his vote been honestly counted, enough republicans would have been sent to this House from the South to give the republicans control of this body. In view of these facts, is it not decidedly out of place for democratic leaders to rise on this floor and denounce the republican party simply because we favor laws that will protect every citizen in his right to vote and will hold in check fraud-perpetrating and ballot-box-stuffing democrats?

The laws which these gentlemen want repealed, Mr. Chairman, interfere with no man's rights. Like all just laws they are a terror only to evil-doers. I defy gentlemen on the other side to point to a single instance where any man who had a right to vote has had that right interfered with under the operation of these laws; but there are hundreds of instances where the enforcement of these laws has secured the voter in his right to vote, when otherwise this right would have been denied him. It is true that these laws act as a restraint upon democratic bulldozers, repeaters, and fraud perpetrators, and it is because of this, and because they have for their object the securing of free and fair elections, that we republicans object to their repeal. Republicans believe in honesty and fairness at the polls the same as elsewhere. The doctrine of our party has been and is that every citizen in the land should be the equal of every other before the law. We have always held to the idea that the protecting arms of the Government should be stretched out to all classes of our people, guarding the interests and rights of the poor as well as the rich, the weak as well as the strong, and securing every citizen in every right guaranteed to every other citizen. By these broad, just, and humane doctrines we stand to-day, and demand, as we have often done before, that they be carried out both in the life and practice of the nation. Especially do we demand at this time that the republican majorities in the Southern States shall not be disfranchised. We stand by these election laws which the democratic majority in this Congress are seeking to repeal, and insist that they not only be allowed to remain as they are but that they be most rigidly enforced in the interest of honest and fair elections in every portion of the land.

But, once more. The question has been asked during this discussion, by gentlemen on the other side, why we republicans persist in reviving the issues of the past—in calling up matters which every one supposed had been settled years ago? The question is easily answered. It is because we see a disposition manifested on the part of the gentlemen on the other side to wipe out the legislation by which the results of the late war were secured to the country, and to so change the laws of the land that there will be nothing in our statute-book to indicate that treason is a crime, or that those who took part in the war of the rebellion did anything wrong. In this is to be found our answer, and I trust it will prove abundantly satisfactory to the gentlemen who have asked the question. These gentlemen must expect us to talk about the war and matters pertaining thereto, and to talk, too, with some degree of energy and force, so long as they continue in the course which they have taken for the past few years and are taking to-day. Having sacrificed so much in treasure and blood, we do not propose to sit quiet while those who fought to destroy the Government tear from the statute-book every law that we put there to secure to us the fruits of our sacrifices.

If the majority on this floor do not want us to call to their remembrance the issues of the past, they must stop forcing upon us propositions which show that they regard these issues as still unsettled. What are some of these propositions? You come forward with your rebel claims and demand that the Government pay them, knowing that if you can get the Government to do this you get a recognition from the Government that it regards the treason of a rebel claimant worthy of as much consideration as the loyalty of a loyal claimant, and that the one is just as much entitled to receive pay on his claim as the other. You lay your hands upon the law which we enacted, providing that no rebel soldier shall ever be pensioned by the Government, and seek to tear it from the statute-book, knowing that if you can do this you open the way for pensioning rebel soldiers, thus placing them upon a platform of perfect equality with the Union soldiers, and declaring to the world that their treason is not a crime. In fact, you declare both by your actions and your words that you propose to wipe out every law enacted since 1861 which makes any distinction between loyalty and treason. In his speech on the Army bill a few days ago the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. BLACKBURN,] speaking for the majority in this Congress, used these words:

We do not intend to stop until we have stricken the last vestige of your war measures from the statute-book.

This is the feast to which we who stood by the Government during the rebellion are invited. This is the pronunciamento made by authority in behalf of the great democratic party. The gentleman's language is clear and unmistakable in its meaning. There is to be no half-way work in this matter, but "the last vestige of your war measures" must go. Such language, taken in connection with the utterances of other gentlemen on the other side of this House and in connection with the action of the majority here, has a wonderful significance. It shows that the war did not end, as we had supposed, with the surrender at Appomattox, but that it is to be fought out in the halls of the National Legislature. It proves beyond the possibility of a doubt that the rebels of the South are determined to secure by legislation what they failed to secure at the point of the bayonet. It shows that these men are resolved to render the fruits of the war worthless to the country and of no avail in securing its future peace, unity, and prosperity. These things being so, why should you men complain if now and then we revert to the scenes of the past and remind you of the part you played therein. I would say to you that you have this whole matter in your own hands. We republicans are willing to let bygones be bygones just as soon as you will take your hands off from the legislation which secures to the country the results of the war and give us some assurance that you will let it alone. As soon as you will do this, I can assure you that this ghost of the past which rises to trouble you so frequently and so much will down forever. But it will never down so long as you persist in attempting to carry out the programme laid down by the gentleman from Kentucky.

But there is another utterance of the gentleman from Kentucky to which I desire to call attention. Speaking for the democrats on this floor, and with reference to the fact that the democrats to-day have control of both Houses of Congress, he says that his party has come back to its "birthright of power." I suppose, Mr. Chairman, that no republican will dispute the fact that the democracy are in full control of both Houses of Congress. In fact, we have it impressed upon our minds every day that they have, in the language of the Okolona (Mississippi) Southern States, "captured the Capitol." We are fully aware, sir, that those who sought to take the life of the nation a few years ago are in full command in this building, and we, on this side of the House, were made more fully aware of it than ever before, if such a thing were possible, when, the other day, in response to some remark of the gentleman from Mississippi, [Mr. CHALMERS,] we heard that old rebel yell ring out from the galleries with all the force and significance which characterized it during the war. Yes, gentlemen, you are here in full force, and no doubt you intend to remain, but let me tell you that your stay here will be brief unless you make up your minds to keep hands off and let the "war measures" alone, which the gentleman from Kentucky declares you are going to wipe out.

It may be all right for the democracy to boast of their "birthright of power" in this country. I do not know, sir, how thoroughly the gentleman from Kentucky had studied that expression before he uttered it, but, sir, in view of the past record of the democratic party, and in view of the present attitude of that party in Congress, the expression has a wonderful significance. The action of the democratic party for the past half century speaks louder than does the gentleman from Kentucky, proclaiming this assumed doctrine of the democracy that they are the only party in the country which has sufficient ability to run the Government—that they have, in fact, a sort of God-given right to rule. Acting upon this assumption, the democracy have always been determined to hold the reins of government, and whenever any other party has had the courage to step forward and oppose them, they have endeavored by every means in their power, whether fair or foul, to put that party down. Their motto has always been to rule or ruin, and they were ready at all times to trample the national flag under their feet, tear the Constitution to tatters, and destroy the Government, if they could not have their own way in managing the affairs of the Government.

In 1860 they were mad because they could not get votes enough to elevate their candidate to the Presidency, and they have been mad ever since it was known that they did not elect their presidential candidate in 1876. In 1860 they plotted revolution, and in the winter of 1876–'77 they plotted revolution again when they were concocting plans to put Mr. Tilden into an office to which he was not elected. In 1860–'61 they made war upon our Army and weakened it in every possible way, so that it could not be relied upon to prevent them from carrying out their revolutionary schemes, and for the past four years they have been making a like war upon our Army, crippling it here, cutting it down there, and seeking to make it weak and inefficient everywhere, so that when they attempted to revolutionize the Government again the Army would not be used as a power against them. And to-day they show both by action and word that they have not changed for the better, but are actuated by the same spirit which actuated them in 1860. They declare to-day that they must have their own way or the Government must stop. They say to the President, you must yield your constitutional rights and let us do as we please or we will withhold the appropriations and let the Government starve. This is the attitude of the great democratic party to-day, determined to break down the Government unless they are allowed to run it according to their own wishes.

Now, Mr. Chairman, let me beg gentlemen on the other side to pause and reflect a moment upon the evils that must necessarily result from persistence in such a course. Let them in all seriousness ask themselves if such a course will pay either them or the country. Let me urge them in this hour of danger to rise above party, plant themselves upon the high platform of enlightened, wise, and patriotic statesmanship, and act for the common good of the whole country. Let me ask them to labor not to destroy the sovereignty of the people, but to establish it upon a firmer foundation, if possible, than it now has. The ballot is the great weapon placed in the hands of the American citizen with which to maintain his rights, while the ballot-box is the great medium through which he gives expression to his individual political sentiments. Let the majority in this House remember this, and let them labor to preserve the purity of the ballot-box and to protect the citizen in his right to cast a free and unrestrained ballot. Every protection we can give the one, and every safeguard we can throw around the other will be so much toward maintaining the liberties of our people and securing the perpetuity of our free institutions. Let us, then, both republicans and democrats, unite our efforts and labor, not to destroy, but to preserve the free and full sovereignty of the people. Let us take a firm and decided stand for popular right and liberty, and thus do what we can to maintain the majesty of American citizenship and the glory of our Republic.

Mr. Chairman, on the 25th of last February I made some remarks upon the bill now before us, which was then before the House, and as those remarks bear particularly upon the provisions of the bill now under discussion I wish to submit them as a part of my remarks on this occasion:

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Chairman, I have thus far abstained from participating in the discussion of the bill now under consideration for the reason that I have been anxious to see the bill disposed of with as little delay as possible, and hence have been unwilling to take up the time of the House with remarks which might perhaps just as well remain unsaid. I realize the fact that what we do in the way of legislation must be done quickly, for we have but a few days left us in which to complete the work of the Forty-fifth Congress. Yet, sir, as the majority in this body seem determined to impede legislation by attempting to attach to this appropriation bill amendments which are entirely foreign to the bill and have no relation to it whatever, I feel called upon to say a few words at this time. It it scarcely necessary to remark that I am most decidedly opposed to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. SOUTHARD,] and hope to see it voted down by an overwhelming majority. The reasons upon which I base my opposition are two: first, because I believe it to be bad policy to legislate in regard to general matters in an appropriation bill; and, second, because I heartily approve those portions of our law which this amendment proposes to repeal, and am in favor of letting them remain as they now are upon our statute-book.

It is, perhaps, unnecessary for me to say anything in regard to the first of these two reasons, as the point covered by it has been most fully and ably discussed by other gentlemen who have already participated in this debate. Yet, sir, I will add a few words to what these gentlemen have said. I hold to the idea that an appropriation bill should be an appropriation bill and nothing else, unencumbered by anything of a foreign or irrelevant nature. This, evidently, was the idea of those who drafted the rules by which this House professes to be governed, and I am fully persuaded that if these rules had been interpreted according to either their letter or spirit this amendment would have been declared out of order. A careful reading of these rules will be sufficient to convince any fair-minded man that this amendment is in direct violation both of Rule 48 and Rule 120. This being the case, why should such an amendment be declared in order? My idea is that if we have rules to govern us in our deliberations we ought to live up to them, and not be so ready to violate them whenever some little partisan advantage can be gained by so doing. If our rules are not what we want, let us proceed to amend them and get them to suit us. But so long as we have them and profess to be governed by them, let them be enforced.

But, sir, in the second place, I am opposed to this amendment because I desire to preserve the law which it proposes to destroy. What is this law, let me ask, or rather what are its provisions? The law simply provides that in certain cases the United States court shall appoint persons to act as supervisors of elections, and makes it the duty of United States marshals under certain circumstances to assist these supervisors in the discharge of their duties. The sole object of the law is to prevent fraud at the ballot-box and secure free, fair, and honest elections. This being so, why is it that the gentlemen on the other side are so hostile to it? Are they not in favor of fair and honest elections—of preserving the purity of the ballot-box? It would certainly seem not, if we are to judge from the bitter war they are making against this law. I am free to confess, sir, that I cannot see what objection any honest man can urge against the law as it now stands. I cannot see why any one who is anxious to have fair and honest elections in this country should ask for its repeal.

The fact is, the war against this law is waged not so much by men who want fair and honest elections as by mere politicians who hope by wiping out this law to advance the interests of the democratic party, and thus help forward their own ambitious schemes. There is method in what these men are doing, and it will be well for us before we give our votes in favor of this amendment to pause and consider the meaning of the demand for its passage, to pause and consider what peculiar significance attaches to this cry that comes up from a democratic caucus, asking that this law be repealed. Why, sir, this cry is nothing but a note of alarm, a signal of distress. The democratic party is in trouble, and this House is called upon to help it out. The future looks dark for that party unles some relief is furnished at once.

The enforcement of this law by President Hayes has sent terror to democratic leaders everywhere. As the law goes forth and does its work, they see the immense democratic majorities in such cities as New York almost entirely wiped out. They see their friends and supporters in South Carolina, Louisiana, Florida, Maryland, and New York arrested, tried, convicted, and sent to the penitentiary. These facts lead them to fear for the future of their party. They know that if this law is suffered to remain upon the statute-book and is enforced, our penitentiaries will soon be filled with democratic voters. They know, too. that this law, honestly and fearlessly executed, would wipe out the heavy democratic majorities in many localities, both North and South. They understand fully that while this law is in the interest of honest elections and good government, it is not in the interest of the democratic party, and hence they have resolved to blot it out.

Now, sir, I do not blame the democratic leaders much for being alarmed at the situation. The signs of the times are ominous. This law is cutting down democratic majorities fearfully. Already hosts of democratic voters have fallen beneath its unsparing hand. No less than two stalwart democrats who claim to be elected to the Forty-sixth Congress are already indicted for election frauds, and may be landed in the penitentiary any day. Why, sir, if this thing is allowed to go on much longer, the democrats may find themselves in a hopeless minority in the next House. But this is only a part of the danger that threatens our democratic friends. If this law continues in force until 1880, and under its operation we can get a fair and honest election, not only will the democrats not be able to elect their candidate for President but many of our democratic friends on this floor will be retired to the ranks of private life.

Here is where the shoe pinches, Mr. Chairman. It is the fear of what the future has in store for them under the present order of things that troubles the democratic mind to-day. Hence they demand a repeal of this law in order that ballot-box stuffing and fraud may have full sway. There is certainly nothing either in this law itself or in its administration to alarm any one who is in favor of honest elections. Like all just laws it is a terror only to evil-doers. The democracy themselves would not find any fault with it if they were really anxious for fair elections. But the trouble is they do not want fair elections. They know that fair elections would bring defeat and ruin to their party. Hence, at the dictation of their caucus, the democratic majority come in here and demand the repeal of this law which stands directly across the path of democratic frauds and holds in check the hordes of democratic bullies and repeaters in their attempted raids upon the ballot-box.

This is the secret of the democratic hatred of this law. The fact is the democratic leaders have determined upon success at the next presidential election, and as this law stands in their way they have resolved to get rid of it. They propose to repeat in 1880 the frauds and dishonest trickery of their party in 1876, only upon a more extensive scale. They say that in order to carry the State of New York for the democracy the bummers, dead-beats, and plug-uglies of New York City must be allowed to vote half a dozen times apiece instead of only once, as they can do under this law. They say that the white-liners and rifle-club men must be permitted to intimidate republican voters, drive them from the polls, and vote tissue ballots to their hearts' content, or the Southern States will all go republican. The repeal of this law will be an act solely in the interest of the democratic party, and not in the interest of the country. It will simply mean the opening of the flood-gates of iniquity, ballot-box stuffing, intimidation, and fraud, in order to make democratic success certain in 1880. It will only give the democracy more complete control in those localities where they are in the majority, and thus enable them with impunity to perpetrate such frauds upon the ballot-box as will give them a victory.

To one unacquainted with democratic tactics and history such a proceeding as this would seem exceedingly strange, but to those who understand the democracy nothing could be more characteristic. In demanding the repeal of this law we see just the same spirit manifested that has characterized democratic action and democratic legislation for the past quarter of a century. It is a notorious fact that the great democratic party has had but one leading principle of action for the past twenty-five years, and that is, to gain power and hold it after they had gained it. For this they have been willing to sacrifice everything that ennobles and dignifies a party. For this they have violated the Constitution, torn down solemn compromises, attempted to force slavery upon a free Territory at the point of the bayonet, and plunged the nation into a cruel and bloody war. They have shown themselves ready and willing to tear down any and every thing that stood between them and power, no matter how sacred it was or how necessary to the safety and welfare of the people. And to-day we find them actuated by the same motives and controlled by the same spirit. We see them to-day at their old tricks again, and we cannot but feel that they are as hostile to the common good as ever. In demanding the repeal of this law they show that they are as ready as ever to resort to any means, however questionable, to achieve success. They want a President in 1880, and they are determined to so "fix things" that there will be no possibility of defeat. That is the meaning of all this planning and scheming, this special legislation in appropriation bills.

And I say again that I am not surprised at this action on the part of our democratic friends. It is only a continuation of the course entered upon four years ago and kept up from that time to the present. Knowing what I do of their actions in the past, I am not surprised now at anything they may do. A party that will go to work deliberately to buy the Presidency and to bulldoze Congress into counting in to the presidential office a man who was not elected thereto, that will resort to the most infamous frauds to carry elections, that will turn out of seats in this House republicans who were honestly and fairly elected to their seats and put democrats into them who had no shadow of right to them—a party, I say, that will commit such high-handed outrages as these I am not surprised to see come forward now and demand the repeal of this law.

The fact is, these gentlemen are determined to have the next President, if possible, no matter at what cost. They hope by repealing this law to make fraud at the ballot-box free all over the country and to give the democratic repeaters in our large cities a chance to vote as many times as they please. The whole thing is a grand scheme to advance the interest of the democratic party, and by means of it they expect to carry not only a "solid South" but New York, Connecticut, New Jersey, Ohio, Indiana, and perhaps Illinois, in the North.

With such a grand scheme for opening the flood-gates of fraud and ballot-box stuffing as this, the majority on this floor must not wonder if the republicans here stand solid against them. They must expect the gentlemen on this side to be firm and united to resist the consummation of such an infamous piece of legislation. Mr. Chairman, it would be well for the majority to pause and consider for a moment what they are going to gain by the attempt to force through such legislation as this. The democratic majority in the Forty-fourth Congress forced an extra session of the present Congress by their determination to attach partisan legislation to an appropriation bill, and the course the majority have entered upon may force an extra session of the Forty-sixth Congress.

Will an extra session of the Forty-sixth Congress pay the democratic party? I do not imagine that an extra session of the present Congress helped them any, and I do not believe an extra session of the Forty-sixth Congress would assist them to any great extent in the campaign of 1880. However, they are to be the judges; but I tell them here that, if an extra session comes, upon their shoulders must rest the entire responsibility. The present session is one extending over three full months. During all that time we have had nothing to do but to pass the appropriation bills. If these bills fail, there is and can be no excuse given for the failure. If they are not passed, it will be simply because the majority in this House will it otherwise. The responsibility for the failure will be theirs, and the people of the country will so regard it.

Mr. RICHARDSON, of South Carolina. I did not occupy all of my time while addressing the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has forty-five minutes of his hour still undisposed of.

Mr. RICHARDSON, of South Carolina. I yield that time to the gentleman from Mississippi, [Mr. HOOKER.]

Mr. HOOKER. Mr. Chairman, the proposition before the Committee of the Whole is a simple proposition to amend the existing statutes of the country so far as they refer to the presence of supervisors and marshals at elections. It is as simple as was the amendment that was offered to the Army appropriation bill, which had for its purpose and office the keeping of troops away from the polls. Yet, sir, had a stranger to our laws and institutions walked into this Hall at any time during the debate, from its inception, when the honorable gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] commenced his discussion with gloves on, up to the time when the last gentleman who has just addressed the committee [Mr. HAYES] spoke with gloves off, they would have supposed that instead of being a proposition to change existing laws by the majority of the two Houses of Congress, it was a question as to whether or not the southern people were liable to be indicted for murder, arson, robbery, and every other crime known in the catalogue of crimes.

I shall endeavor to make good what I say by reference to the speeches made by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. FRYE] and the gentleman from Ohio. [Mr. GARFIELD,] by the gentleman from Wisconsin, [Mr. WILLIAMS,] and others. It has been asserted by the gentleman who has just taken his seat, [Mr. HAYES,] and whom I have not the pleasure to know, that the necessity for troops at the polls was never produced except by the action of the democratic party. Sir, the gentleman, if familiar with the history of Southern States since the war, might well have said that, from 1865, when the war closed, to 1875, a period of ten years, in every single Southern State you had men marching to the polls with their leaders with drawn swords on their shoulders, and their followers armed to the teeth.

For five long years in the capital of my own State after the war was closed, and at the precinct in the county where I live, I have seen the serried files of colored men, with their leaders with drawn swords on their shoulders and every colored voter armed, march up to the polls at the opening hour in the morning and hold them until the closing of the day. And you republicans, when you saw this being done, did not feel that there was any necessity for protecting the purity of the ballot-box. You could see the colored race of the South just manumitted, intrusted with the ballot against the advice of the most distinguished men of the republican party, among them the late Senator Morton, of Indiana, who said they ought to undergo a period of preparation for the exercise of this right. You refused any time for preparation, and insisted that they should be invested at once with the ballot. They were invested with it, and under the lead of the carpet-bagger and the scalawag of the South, whom your party set up there, you allowed the negro, with drawn swords in the hands of their leaders and arms in the hands of their followers, to take possession of the ballot-box in Mississippi. You held them for ten years, and never thought that it was any invasion of the right of the people to go to the ballot-box. You banded the negroes together, and drove them to the polls like sheep to the shambles, and voted them in the interest of the republican party and the maintenance of your power.

You had negroes in the North, enlightened and educated negroes. Yet though in Massachusetts in 1780 you had manumitted fourteen thousand of them, you never sent one to Congress to represent Massachusetts. About the same time you manumitted negroes in Maine, but you never sent one from Maine to represent you in Congress. And when I put the pertinent inquiry to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. FRYE] when he turned around with dolorous countenance and melodramatic hypocrisy and expressed his regret that the six southern colored men who formerly were Representatives in Congress were no longer here, when I put to him the query why the love for the negro had never found expresion in his State by sending one of that race to this Hall, he replied: "You will have to ask the people of Maine; I cannot tell."

I say, therefore, that this pretense of regard for the purity of the ballot-box is but hypocrisy; this pretension of the right of free ballot for the colored people is but a sham. I assert here to-day that in the capital of my own State, in the counties of my own district, and in numerous counties throughout the State of Mississippi armed bands of colored men have taken possession of and held the polls for years, and I have never heard one word of complaint or commiseration for the white race from the republican party.

You sent carpet-baggers and scalawags to wield this power which you had created in the interest of the republican party. You put them there with their feet upon the neck of your Anglo-Saxon and Caucasian people, blood of your blood, bone of your bone, with the same great lineage of constitutional liberty and with the right to protection, and yet you have never lifted a finger to protect them. And why? Because they were what the gentleman who has just taken his seat said they were—because they were red-shirted white democrats, who were powerless to cast a ballot, much less able to prevent anybody else from doing so. When I say this, Mr. Chairman, I speak of that which I know, for I have stood myself near the polls and never voted for six long years after the war had closed.

I say therefore, sir, this is but a pretense on the part of those who say now they are in the interests of free ballot and desire to keep troops at the voting polls because they believe the colored man does not exercise it. I know it and assert it that in Mississippi in the last two elections there was not a single colored man in the whole limits of the State who was not absolutely free to cast his ballot if he wished to do so.

This discussion, sir, was opened by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. GARFIELD,] as I have already said, in somewhat milder terms than some of his colleagues have seen fit to speak since. He uses this expression in the opening part of the speech which he made on the 29th day of March last; when speaking on a subject like this he says:

> But I mean to say the consequence of the programme just adopted, if persisted in, is nothing less than the total subversion of this Government.

It was a simple proposition, Mr. Chairman, to repeal a law standing upon the statute-book, a law which the gentleman from Ohio himself said he was opposed to, a law which he asserted he would vote to repeal himself if the proposition for repeal stood separate and disconnected from an appropriation bill. And yet it was a law which was passed connected with an appropriation bill! Now, sir, it is gravely asserted that a proposition to repeal this enactment is revolutionary. The distinguished gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] who spoke the other day on this subject said that the threat on the part of a majority of this House and on the part of a majority of the Senate to repeal this law was revolutionary in its character. He said that the effort on the part of the majority of Congress to repeal it was revolutionary—and why? Because the President might veto it or the minority on that side might not concur with a sufficient number of the majority on this side to make up the requisite two-thirds to override the veto of the President.

Now, sir, the proposition is made, gravely made, that a democratic majority in both branches of the National Legislature shall fold their arms in quietude and peace and withhold all attempt to repeal obnoxious laws which for the last seventeen years have blurred and blotted the statute-books of the country, and which gentlemen on the other side of the House themselves say they are opposed to if it comes to a vote on their repeal independent and separate from the general appropriation bills.

But I desire to read still further from the speech of the gentleman from Ohio. In the same speech referred to he says:

> Up to this hour our sovereign has never failed us. There has never been such a refusal to exercise those primary functions of sovereignty as either to endanger or cripple the Government; nor have the majority of the representatives of that sovereign in either House of Congress ever before announced their purpose to use their voluntary powers for its destruction. And now, for the first time in our history, and I will add for the first time for at least two centuries in the history of any English-speaking nation, it is proposed and insisted upon that these voluntary powers shall be used for the destruction of the Government. I want it distinctly understood that the proposition which I read at the beginning of my remarks, and which is the programme announced to the American people to-day, is this: that if this House cannot have its own way in certain matters, not connected with appropriations, it will so use, or refrain from using, its voluntary powers as to destroy the Government.

What is the Government, sir? Shall this House refrain from the exercise of its voluntary powers to repeal obnoxious laws now standing upon the statute-book; shall the Senate refrain from the exercise of its powers; shall the democratic majority in the two Houses of Congress refrain from the exercise of their constitutional powers because the acts which they may pass repealing obnoxious laws may not be approved by the Executive? Such an argument is at once an estoppel of the Government itself, which is the people and the representatives of the people.

I read still further, however, before commenting upon the remarks of the gentleman from Ohio. He says further in this same speech of March 29, "Notwithstanding your utmost efforts to destroy it, the Government was not destroyed." Alluding to the result of the war, he says:

> Then your leaders, though holding a majority in the other branch of Congress, were heroic enough to withdraw from their seats and fling down the gage of mortal battle. We called it rebellion; but we recognized it as courageous and manly to avow your purpose, take all the risks, and fight it out in the open field. Notwithstanding your utmost efforts to destroy it, the Government was saved. Year by year since the war ended those who resisted you have come to believe that you have finally renounced your purpose to destroy, and are willing to maintain the Government. In that belief you have been permitted to return to power in the two Houses.

In that belief you, the democratic party, have been permitted to return to power in the two Houses. This is a most wonderful and gracious thing coming from a republican. He says we have been "permitted" as if the permission had come from the republican party of the country. He says, "You have been permitted to return to power in the two Houses." Now, I suppose, if we would humbly ask the President of the United States as to the sort of laws we should pass and whether His Excellency would approve them or not, then we would be permitted to stay in the majority, and if we would ask the minority in Congress as to the propriety of repealing laws passed during the last nineteen years, when the republicans were in power, we should be permitted to remain here. But I tell you, Mr. Chairman, that we are here by the omnipotent power of the people now with strong hand shaking the republican party from the strongholds of power which they have so long abused. You have abused your power to such an extent that you have not only enabled the colored man by the aid of the carpet-bagger and the scalawag to put his foot upon your Caucasian brother in the South, but you have abused the powers of the Government to such an extent that in the language of the distinguished gentleman from Philadelphia [Mr. KELLEY] in the Forty-fourth Congress, "There are to-day a million and a half of laboring-men in the North whose labor is worth $1.50 a day, but who are not able to earn the bread that may keep starvation from their doors."

Mr. PRICE. Will the gentleman allow me a moment?

Mr. HOOKER. I will yield for a question; I do not wish the gentleman to interject a speech into mine.

Mr. PRICE. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER] is very fair, and as the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] is not now here to reply, the gentleman from Mississippi ought certainly to give the republican party credit for this: that when we had a majority of two-thirds in both Houses of Congress we removed the political disabilities of gentlemen in the South who are now come back here, although we had the power in our hands to prevent it. The gentleman ought at least give us credit for that. That, I presume, is what the gentleman from Ohio referred to.

Mr. HOOKER. I give you credit for doing simply what was your duty, and if you had carried out the terms of surrender as made by your officers in the spirit and temper in which that surrender was made you would have passed those laws long before you did.

Mr. PRICE. My friend will agree with me that we had the power to do differently.

Mr. HOOKER. Oh, yes.

Mr. PRICE. We did voluntarily open the door and allow gentlemen from the South to come in here on this floor as equals.

Mr. HOOKER. To a certain extent you did. The gentleman will remember that for years his party had a "solid South" in the interest of the republican party; and they never objected so long as its solidity was of that political complexion. It was only after ten years of submission to the rule of the republican party in the South, that had impoverished every Southern State, that had loaded us with heavy debts, that had spread over our statute-book laws which were unjust and unequal—it was only after ten years of submission to such rule, inaugurated by the republican party through the instrumentality of the colored race, that we rose in opposition to it. Allow me to say that if we had sent emissaries from the South to the city of Boston or the State of Maine, who had proclaimed to the laboring people "The capitalists are oppressing you, and we want you to meet us in some public hall for the purpose of combining against the capitalists of the country and compelling them to give you fair wages"—if we had gone there and attempted thus to disturb the relations between capital and labor, if we had interfered in that way with the internal affairs of any city or State of the North, we would soon have been ornamenting some of your handsome lamp-posts. In Maine, or Massachusetts, or Iowa you would not have stood for twenty-four hours what the South stood for ten long years.

Mr. PRICE. But the gentleman must agree that he is mistaken in one of the statements he has just made. These political disabilities were removed, the doors were thrown wide open voluntarily long before ten years had passed; it was done within four or five years after the surrender. And let me remind the gentleman that the surrender at Appomattox was not a voluntary matter. Our action was a voluntary matter.

Mr. HOOKER. I cannot permit the gentleman to make a speech in my time. I only yielded for a question. I understand all that the gentleman states; but when you did pass these laws, when you did restore the right of suffrage and the right of representation to the southern people, did you do it with a condition? Did you hold out the amnesty with one hand and say, "It is yours, provided you use it in the interest of the republican party."

The gentleman from Maine [Mr. FRYE] said the other day, in substance, "We sent down into the South a few companies of blue coats and blue pantaloons, and they were able to keep order and secure justice and right in that region of country; we took them away, and we soon had a solid democratic South." Why so? Simply because you gave to the people of that country the right to vote. For ten years you held that section under radical rule, under the control of scalawags and carpet-baggers, and you never felt any sympathy for your Caucasian brethren there. You saw them driven from the polls, you saw them made the creatures of the absolute will of those in power, and you never regarded it at all. For ten years this was borne in the South as it never would have been borne in the North, in Maine or Massachusetts.

Mr. STEELE. Or in Iowa either.

Mr. HOOKER. But I pass to the consideration of other matters. I merely alluded to the language of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr.

GARFIELD] because it was the language of a master to servants; it was the language of a superior to an inferior; it was language which no man has a right to use toward the free representatives of the people on this side of the House. We are here, thank God, not by your permission, but in spite of you. We are here, thank God, not by any mercy or clemency of the republican party, but by the omnipotent power of the people at the ballot-box, and we do not come here for the purpose of asking your permission or consent as to what laws shall be passed.

We intend to sweep the laws from the statute-books that we believe impede free elections and prevent free ballots and a free expression of the voice of the people. That is all; and whether that is done by troops at the polls or whether it is done by the order of the Department of Justice in sending in swarms over the States in the South their deputy marshals to control the elections; in whatever form you have spread upon the statute-books this effort to override the people, to oversee the people, to dictate to the people, to interfere with their free ballots, we do intend to sweep it away. There is no concealment about it. Our action is open and free and candid.

But I pass from the consideration of the speech of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] to the speeches of some others who have spoken upon this subject. I shall refer first to the speech which was made by the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. BURROWS,] in which, among other things, he says this:

> Pardon me, I say, if I express my honest convictions that with all your professions you want neither peace nor purity at the polls. Your chiefest desire is the election of a democratic President in 1880.

Further on he said:

> It has been stated that your conduct in 1861 was honorable and heroic, meaning I suppose as contrasted with what is now proposed, but I am prepared to characterize the rebellion of 1861 as treason, and your purposes of to-day but little else, and, so far as the South is concerned, an exhibition of the basest ingratitude.

Did the gentleman express his honest sentiments when he used that language? Did he represent the people for whom he speaks when he uttered that sentiment? Does he really believe that a proposition to repeal a law on the statute-book amounts to treason against the Government; that because the democratic party has tendered these bills for consideration to the House of Representatives and to the Senate, holding a majority in both branches, they are guilty of base ingratitude? Ah! Does he come under the category of the gentlemen who interrupted me a few moments ago and said, "We gave you the right to vote; we restored you the power to vote; but we expect you always to vote as we think proper?"

Mr. PRICE. Oh, not at all.

Mr. HOOKER. That is the English of it; you cannot get out of it.

Mr. PRICE. We only want you to let others vote.

Mr. HOOKER. It is a sort of irrepressible logic which you cannot evade, as the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] sought to do in his metaphysical search after the voluntary powers of the Government.

Again, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] uses this expression:

> Time, which reveals the purposes of men, has dispelled all doubt, and to-day there is no question of your purpose. To-day you stand arraigned before the country at the bar of public judgment, on your own plea of guilty, self-convicted conspirators against the life of the nation.

And that sentiment received the applause of the opposite side of the Chamber. A majority of this House proposing the repeal of an enactment upon the statute-book which looks to supervising elections in States, arraigned upon the charge of a conspiracy against the Government, upon which they plead guilty because they offer such a law!

Why, sir, I have been startled by the doctrine which has been enunciated by many of the gentlemen on the other side of this Chamber. They speak of the elections to the House as if they were elections by the Federal Government. They never have been so regarded. If that proposition had been uttered in the convention of 1789, when the representatives of the various States were debating the adoption of the Federal Constitution, it would have startled and alarmed the most extreme Federalist of that body. These are elections held by States, the polls created by State law, the registration created by State law, the votes deposited under State law, the elections held, if a vacancy occurs, by order of the governor of the State; all are State elections, to fill an office which simply has Federal functions to be performed; nothing more, nothing less. And the startling doctrine that the Federal Government can supervise the States was never heard of until you passed the supervisors law and the marshals law, after the war. But now, it is said, when you are driven from every foothold of defense of those laws, when your ablest champions concede the fact that they are of doubtful constitutionality, or that their enactment was not politic and not necessary; when driven from every position you occupied, you fly to the refuge of saying you are the valiant defenders of the colored race in the South, and that you want them to vote freely. That is the pretext on which the law is founded and you base your opposition to its repeal.

I will refer to one more observation made by the distinguished gentleman from Wisconsin, [Mr. WILLIAMS.] In the course of some remarks which he submitted to the House on the 2d of April, he used this language:

> The one government on earth which has come nearer to it than all others is this self-same Government of ours—the Government of the United States. I know of no bayonet rule here except, first, to win independence and maintain God-given rights; and, second, to put down one of the most cruel and causeless rebellions that ever cursed the earth; and lastly—> to prevent our southern friends from indulging in the delectable pastime of shooting negroes on sight.

And I call the attention of the committee to this closing clause of his sentence—

Did the gentleman express his honest sentiments when he said that? Did he represent his constituency whom he is sent here to represent? Does he believe the gentlemen who sit on this side of the Chamber from the South represent constituencies such as he has here characterized? I assert, so far as the South is concerned, that we are the best friends that the colored man ever had. Oh, yes, I see the gentleman from Wisconsin smiles with some little incredulity. I will send to the Clerk's desk and have read a statement in connection with the exodus of the colored people to Kansas, which shows what the people in your own section do with those whom they hold so dear at a distance. They are like the lady in the novel who was always knitting stockings for the children of Timbuctoo Islands, while her own children had no stockings or shoes either. I want to show how these colored people, so dearly loved at a distance, are treated when they come to you.

The Clerk read as follows:

A protest of the people of Wyandotte, Kansas, concerning the negro immigration.

To the people of the United States:

Within the past two weeks over a thousand negroes direct from the South have been landed at Wyandotte. None of them have money to carry them further west or to purchase the wherewithal to supply their most urgent necessities for food or shelter. But few of them are sufficiently protected from the inclemency of the weather, and on account of exposure, want of proper food, care, and medicine, they suffer severely, and a terrible mortality affects them. Large numbers have died, and at least 5 per cent. of the whole number are sick with pneumonia and kindred complaints. In a word, over a thousand paupers have within a brief space of time been thrown into a town of about five thousand people, who are unable to properly provide for their wants.

These people are possessed of the most visionary ideas concerning what they must confront by coming to Kansas. Their sole idea seems to be to get West where Government land can be occupied, but they are wholly destitute of means to improve it or to sustain themselves until they can cultivate a crop. Go where they will in Kansas, they must be provided and cared for or they will perish. We have reliable information that thousands more are coming. If so, the situation will soon be a very serious one for the deluded, helpless, and ignorant negroes who are thus blindly rushing to Kansas, and a mighty burden will be thrown upon our people. There is not sufficient demand for farm labor to give employment to such a mass of people. They must become virtually a public charge upon the communities where they may happen to be cast.

In view of this state of facts we, the undersigned, citizens of Wyandotte, Kansas, denounce those who are encouraging these people to come to Kansas as really their worst enemies, whatever their intentions may be. We call upon humane and reflecting people everywhere to use their best efforts to check this most disastrous movement on the part of the negro population of the Southwest, and to correct the utterly baseless and visionary ideas concerning what is before the negro immigrant in Kansas, which seems to have taken hold on the minds of the thousands who are leaving their southern homes. We further say that the sentiments of this protest and memorial are those of the people of Kansas without regard to party; and we request papers throughout the country to publish this, our protest and warning.

J. S. Stockton, mayor of Wyandotte; Ant. Kuhls, Catholic priest; V. J. Lane; R. E. Cabe, probate judge; N. Cree, attorney; James S. Gibson, county attorney; William Albright, deputy county treasurer; S. Perkins, county commissioner; Perley Pike, county commissioner; E. R. Emmons, county clerk; W. H. Ryus, sheriff; G. H. Miller, superintendent institution for blind; J. S. Clark, register of deeds; H. M. Northrup, banker; George W. Betts, clerk of district court; J. A. Hale, city attorney; R. B. Armstrong, member of Kansas Legislature; E. L. Buesche, merchant; S. F. Mather, druggist; B. Judd, ex-senator; I. B. Sharp, attorney; F. B. Anderson, justice of the peace; J. M. C. Louther; W. P. Brush, school teacher; H. L. Alden, attorney; E. Sprague; Byron Sherry, attorney; H. J Armstrong, route agent; C. Hains, ex-mayor; O. D. Burt, jeweler; G. P. Nelson, ex-senator; L. Cook, councilman; H. H. Sawyer; Gottlieb Knipfer; D. S. Young, farmer; A. Caley, Times reporter; A. G. Walcott, lumber merchant; G. W. Bishop, merchant.

Mr. HOOKER. In this connection I desire to add to my remarks the following quotation from the Times of Kansas City, which has been kindly furnished me by my friend, Mr. CLARK, of Missouri:

> Matters at Wyandotte are approaching a serious crisis. At a meeting of the relief committee yesterday there was an open and free discussion of the immigration question and a generally expressed determination that no more paupers shall be landed at that point. Agreeably to this conclusion, Mayor Stockton, at the close of the meeting, issued a proclamation, addressed to the owners of steamboats and transportation companies, forbidding the landing of any more destitute persons, and stating that all boats, officers, or agents disobeying the proclamation would be held legally responsible, which implies a fine of from $1 to $500 under the city ordinance. We are assured that the extreme penalty will be enforced against any steamboat company violating the ordinance, and the boat will be seized and held until the fine is paid.

Mr. HASKELL. What is the name of that paper?

Mr. HOOKER. It is one of your own papers.

Mr. HASKELL. What paper is it?

Mr. HOOKER. I do not remember. It is signed by your judges, your mayor, your district attorney, and a great many of your leading citizens; and there is no question about its authenticity. You claim that your object in opposing the repeal of these laws is to enforce the right of the colored man to vote. I desire to say that while you have the negro at a safe distance and he is not a charge on you you are his friend; when he comes to you in want and distress you "protest." The other day you had actually a meeting in Philadelphia to raise means to support those negroes who had migrated to Kansas; and I am told that Hon. Mr. BRUCE, a Senator from Mississippi of the colored race, (and by the by the only one of that race save his predecessor who ever sat in that body during the long reign of the negro-loving radical party,) when applied to to subscribe in aid of the emigrants, replied that he had rather wait awhile, as in all probability he should have to subscribe to carry them back.

A large portion of these people have gone from a region of country where the negro is as free to cast his ballot as in any portion of the country, as he is in Maine or Massachusetts or Iowa. The distinguished gentleman from Maine, [Mr. FRYE,] whose sympathies go out so much toward the colored members of the last Congress and who wishes that they were still here that he might associate with them, uses the following language:

What then? There were kuklux, there were white leagues, there were white-liners, and you slaughtered in cold blood hundreds, ay, thousands, of these same poor black men—men whom, when you were in the war, when you were away from your plantations, you left your families with, and who never betrayed the trust; men who worked in the fields and raised supplies, while you men who could carry the musket and the sword and the bayonet were permitted to fight the battles, as you said, of your country.

I say that the history has been written. No man can contradict it. There is piled up in this Capitol by the ton evidence which is uncontradicted; and history has been written with a pen of iron; and if you men do not know it, your children when they read it will put their faces in their hands and their hands in the dust. You murdered these men by the thousand. What then? A few troops were sent into the South, not numbering over twelve hundred, south of Mason and Dixon's line; a score or so in a great country in a voting precinct, in charge of a lieutenant, not within two miles of a polling place. I had occasion to investigate this with a great deal of care in Louisiana, and the investigation did not show one single instance where a soldier had been at a polling place interfering with the voters; on the contrary, their orders were not to move from their quarters without orders from the officer in command, and then only to keep the peace.

* * * * * * *

You have the Senate, I am aware of that, but thank God you have not the Executive yet. [Applause.] My judgment is, gentlemen, when you think you will have him by threatening you are making a profound mistake. You may have begged, as the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. MULDROW] said, on bended knee, of him the withdrawal of the troops from the South, but do not presume too much. Do not presume because you succeeded in that you can go to him, with a pistol in your hand, demanding what you wish, with hope of success. [Loud cries of "Oh!" "Oh!" and laughter on the democratic side of the House.] A beggar may succeed and a highwayman fail.

The gentleman spoke particularly about persons who belonged to the democratic party, and he said they were democratic red-shirts. Has he forgotten the fact that in Mississippi the very first blood of colored men that was shed was shed at the mandate of your republican governor, not in the interest of right and justice and truth, but in the interest of the republican party.

I had occasion to say in the first speech which I made in the Forty-fourth Congress that the first proposition to take the ballot away from the negro would come from the republican party, and some time subsequently a message from the then President came here proposing to take the ballot from all who could not read and write in 1890. In that Congress I had occasion to say, in reply to Mr. HOAR, of Massachusetts, that the first blood of negroes shed in Mississippi was shed at the order of the radical governor whom you sent there from Massachusetts to rule over us. I allude to Mr. Ames. The State attorney-general, Mr. Harris, was asked, "Are you not afraid that it will lead to bloodshed?" That question was asked of Mr. Harris, the attorney-general. What was the reply? He had no sympathy with the negro, no holy horror of shedding negro blood, but on the contrary he said "that the blood of twenty-five or thirty colored men would be of use to the republican party just now." Under this advice, on the the 7th of December, 1874, the colored people marched upon the city of Vicksburgh, absolutely carrying with them baggage-wagons to bring away the spoils, and your republican governor said that "the blood of about thirty colored men would be of service to the republican party just then."

In support of your argument that the negro is not treated right, you refer to the exodus now going on of the colored people from Mississippi and Georgia to the Northwest.

I want to say further that much of the migration now proceeding is from my own region of country. It was gotten up in this way. Circulars were sent throughout the States of Mississippi and Louisiana, with instructions to the colored man not to show them to a white man, proffering large grants of public lands and support and maintenance until they could support themselves; and, instead of this, the poor deluded creatures find disease and starvation staring them in the face in this land of wondrous promise.

I have seen the colored man bring up his wagon and mules and little household goods under the belief that he was to be furnished with a hundred acres of land in Kansas. He sold them for a song, and now that he has emigrated he is absolutely raising a rebellion in Kansas, because the much-loved negro has emigrated to this land of promise and is met by his pretended friends with a protest "that he is a pauper, and cannot come in."

The people of Wyandotte in council assembled had before them a letter from an intelligent colored man, in which he wrote to his mother saying, "For God's sake send me money to buy a ticket to get home, and this is all I will ever ask of you." They have gone to their pretended friends and their friends do not want them.

In confirmation of what I have said I ask leave to insert in my remarks two letters from two of the victims to the deceit and fraud practiced on the credulous colored men, taken from the Madison Journal, as follows:

SAINT LOUIS, March 13, 1879.

DEAR SIR: I write to let you know that there are about thirty or thirty-five families of us colored people here in Saint Louis, without homes and some without money. We have been induced to leave home and break up all our home comforts by the lies and false promises of some white men, who lately went through our country and induced us by telling us if we went out to Kansas and help build a railroad we would get $100 in money and one hundred acres of land, and the Government would give us every assistance to raise a crop; we would have schools for our children, and in a few years we would be rich and independent. It was on promises such as these we left home and sold out what we had. We had to pay the steamboat $4 each to get here, and now that we are here we do not know what to do, and nothing but misery and starvation stares most of them in the face. We have no shelter at night, but some of the charitable people here are doing all they can to assist us. As there are a great many more coming up on different boats God only knows what will become of them unless they can get back home again. So I write you this letter in order that you may warn the colored people in our section of country to stay at home, and put in their crops and live happy and contented where they were born and raised, and where they can always make a living, and not come here to a climate that won't agree with them to raise crops that they don't know anything about. If you want to benefit our people warn them to stay at home, and when such villains come in their neighborhood with such stories, to pay no attention to them. I hope I may be able to get back home again, and I promise you I will stick close to my cotton patch and let others build railroa s who know all about them. If I can prevent any of my colored friends from being sold as I have, I will feel happy for writing this letter.

Your friend,

ISAAC COURSEY.

Mr. CURTIS POLLARD,
Stubbs Tract, near Delta.

SAINT LOUIS, March 13, 1879.

MY DEAR BROTHER BYNUM: I am here in Saint Louis with my family of ten persons, and will give you my experience since I left home as a warning to my friends and those of our people who may be inclined to break up as I have done. I am here among strangers, the victim of the most outrageous and lying misrepresentations; here without friends and out of money, having spent what I had in traveling in search of the promised land. Some time ago a white man, one of those so-called friends of our race, went through our country, as the most of our brethren around Delta will remember, and promised to all who would go out to Kansas and help build a railroad they would get $100 in money and one hundred acres of land, and the Government would give them every help in raising crops and making a farm, and in time we all would be rich and free and have schools for our children. On these high hopes and promises you all know I left home with my family and sold out what little I had in the world, which was a great deal to me, as I had a start and a home; I sold my horse and mules for almost nothing, and my fine Calhoun plows, that cost me $7 apiece last spring, for the sum of $1.25 each; and in that way I broke up a home where I was happy and comfortable to go where I am now a stranger without a home in a strange land and doing all I can to get back home again. I will tell you some of my experience: I paid the boat $28 to bring us to Saint Louis, and when I got here I went to Kansas City at a cost of $36, and when I got there I found no land or any one to give me land; every one had land to sell, and at a high price. I was told if I went farther, at a cost of $3 apiece, I could settle on some railroad lands, but they are so far away, if I was to go out there and pay out what little money I had left, I would be in a very sad state, without money to get back on.

Even should I have gone out there I had no money to buy stock for a farm or make a crop with if I had the land; so I turned back, seeing nothing before me in going further west but starvation and death in a cold country. It would take some time for a colored man to learn to raise wheat and the other crops that are raised in this country. Now, my experience is that our race had better stay in the country they know something about and where there is no starvation or begging as long as you are in health. I find in this city thousands of white men out of work and for colored people to stay or come here would be only filling the poor-house and may be the jail. There are here now about twenty-five or thirty families of us together in Saint Louis, who have been the victims of this white man's villainy and lies, and I hear that a great many more are coming up on the different boats. In the name of God, if you care for the welfare and happiness of our people, and those who live in your neighborhood and congregation, read this letter to them and warn them to stay at home and make their crops, and live contented and happy where they were born and raised. If they want to move anywhere in large numbers with their families let them do as the white man, send five or six of the best men or members of the church, and have them inspect the place where they intend going to, and then they know how to act with wisdom, for they can report from what they see and learn what is best to be done, but in God's name stop those that intend coming here, for nothing but disappointment, want, and misery will come to them if they move away from home on the false promises that are made to them. I think I have given you enough of my experience, and I write you this letter for the sake of stopping others from being imposed on as I have been, and I hope you will mention these facts to every one that is inclined to listen to those who would have them break up their homes and go in search of something that is only a picture.

Your friend and brother,

DAVID SMITH.

Elder HENDERSON BYNUM,
Monticello Church, near Delta, Louisiana.

Mr. BURROWS. I desire to ask the gentleman one question.

Mr. HOOKER. I will yield for a question, but not for a speech.

Mr. BURROWS. Will the gentleman explain how it happens that the republican vote in his district in 1876 was 8,646 and last fall it was only 686?

Mr. HOOKER. I will answer that question at once. The republican vote in 1876 was very large, but if the gentleman had been as industrious in hunting up the democratic vote as he was in hunting up the republican vote he would have seen that in consequence of the prevalence of yellow fever there were very few votes cast in my district last fall by either party.

In my own district, when I was absent from the State, when I was hundreds of miles away, the vote was very much diminished from what it was in 1876 or 1875 for the reasons which I have suggested. You found the republican vote diminishing, and as it diminished your sympathies for the negro began to rise. He was going away from you; you were losing control of him, because he had become convinced of the fact that you had hypocritically pretended to a friendship for him which you really and honestly did not feel; because he had become convinced that if the white people in Mississippi could make a cheap government for white men they would also make a cheap government for colored men. They had become convinced that your rule had impoverished the laborers of your own States, and they would no longer ally themselves with the party that had reduced the country to bankruptcy.

Mr. BURROWS. Will the gentleman pardon me if I ask him to explain how it happened that the yellow fever affected the republican vote so much more than it did the democratic vote?

Mr. HOOKER. I am not aware that it did, and if it did it did not affect it enough to make it successful. In my own district, when I was hundreds of miles away, I was elected by a majority of thousands against a man who came out in a secret circular and when I was not aware that I had any contestant. I desire to say that it was on that account that the vote of last year was different from the vote of former years. But I am not to be driven by interrogatories of gentlemen from the charge I make upon you, that so far from being the true friend of the colored man you have enacted in Northern States, where you manumitted him, more onerous laws against him than were ever enacted in the State of Mississippi. In Massachusetts you would not allow him to vote because he might not be able to read. But that is all right in Massachusetts and all right in Maine.

The trouble is you never had any use for the negro unless you could run him in the interest of the republican party. The moment you lost control of him, the moment the shackles of party were struck from him and he voted as he wanted to, then you had no further use for him. In the capital of my own State, where were Federal judges and marshals, and armed men upon my own homestead, we carried the county of Hinds in 1875 by twenty-six hundred majority. And now you say the colored man does not vote freely because he votes the democratic ticket.

I say that this is all a simulation of interest in the negro. When the distinguished gentleman on the other side of the Chamber, [Mr. GARFIELD,] with magnificent and Jupiter-like nod, announced the sentiment that this was revolution, and when the distinguished gentleman from Maine, whom I see sitting on this side of the House now, [Mr. FRYE,] reiterated the sentiment and talked about the destruction of thousands of people; when that sentiment was revamped by the gentleman from Wisconsin, [Mr. WILLIAMS,] I could hardly think that they themselves believed the statement that they made. Why, sir, we have sent our money to Georgia, Alabama, South Carolina, and all the other States to bring these colored people to Mississippi, Louisiana, and the more fertile lands of the Mississippi Valley. Now, will you be able to convince the people of the North that we have sent money for the purpose of bringing these colored people to our States in order that we may have the delectable pleasure of killing them? Even if we had not humanity, even if gentlemen forget that we are their brethren of the same blood, even if they do not give us credit for anything of humanity or Christianity, in God's name give us credit for some of the pocket virtue which is said to be possessed by people in certain regions of the country, and do not accuse our people of investing money to bring negroes to our States for the purpose of maltreating and killing them.

When I heard these distinguished gentlemen speaking so positively upon this subject, with so much ardor, with so much wisdom, with so much learning; as I saw their violent gestures, their earnest faces, I was reminded of what was said of a distinguished jurist in England on one occasion when he was delivering an opinion. A lawyer said of him that he was a hypocrite; and when his neighbor asked him why he made that statement he replied that it was impossible that any one man could be as wise as that man looked. So I think it is impossible for any set of men on the other side of the Chamber to hold these views and be sincere and honest.

I have two other letters here which I desire to embody in my remarks. With reference to this particular measure I desire to say that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] asserted the doctrine that it would be necessary to apply to the President to know what his views were upon certain questions. The doctrine has been asserted that it was revolutionary for this House to pass any bill unless we had the assurance that it would receive the sanction of the President. Has it come to this that we in this House, the majority, must go to the Executive and say: "Will it please Your Excellency to approve this bill? If not, the democratic majority in the House will fold their arms and be quiet."

Shall we let the dignified Senate say, "May it please Your Excellency, will you approve this bill? If not, this Senate will fold its arms in quiet." Shall it be said we are "starving the Government" because the majority in Congress choose to exercise their power? Who dares say what the President will do? Let him take the responsibility of doing what he deems proper with the view of protecting the Constitution and preventing hasty and inconsiderate legislation; but let it not be said that the hands of the majority in both Houses of Congress shall be tied and that action upon any measure shall be prevented simply because the Executive may choose not to approve it and because there may not be two-thirds in either branch to pass the measure over his veto.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HASKELL. Just one word of explanation; just one word by way of refutation is all that I desire. My State has been alluded to on this floor as hostile to colored immigration. I deny it. My State is not hostile to colored immigration; on the contrary, we welcome such immigrants and will do our utmost to provide for them comfortable homes. But simply in the interest of humanity it is not deemed wise that hundreds and thousands of poor people, white or black, should be landed at any one point in my State or any other State, destitute and homeless, to depend entirely upon the charity of the residents in that locality.

This is all that is meant by any letter which has been written or any expression which has been made, merely that immigrants when they do come should come prepared to take care of themselves for the few days needed to secure a suitable location. We have taken care of hundreds of such people; we can take care of hundreds and thousands more; and we are willing to do so. We are entirely willing that these people should come; we want them to come; but we do not want them to come in such a way that the hands of our benevolence and philanthropy will be taxed beyond the possibility of providing for them.

Mr. HOOKER. Will the gentleman allow me to have read in reply to what he has just said a paragraph from one of the papers published in his State?

Mr. HASKELL. The gentleman had read a few moments ago a paragraph from a paper not published in my State.

Mr. HOOKER. This is from a paper published in the gentleman's State.

Mr. STEVENSON. As the hour of twelve o'clock is at hand I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BLACKBURN reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the bill (H. R. No. 2) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to, and accordingly (at eleven o'clock and fifty-eight minutes a. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions, &c., were presented at the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as stated:

By Mr. BROWNE: The petition of 200 citizens of Wayne County, Indiana, against granting any renewal of the Birdsell clover-huller patent—to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. DIBRELL: The petition of Henry B. Tyler, jr., first lieutenant United States Marine Corps, that his name be placed on the rolls of the Marine Corps and Naval Register in the rank to which he claims he is entitled by law—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. DICKEY: The petition of T. Worthington, for a pension—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HENDERSON: Papers relating to the claim of Sabin Trowbridge, postmaster at Lee Centre, Illinois, for relief from loss of postage-stamps stolen by burglars—to the Committee of Claims.

By Mr. HURD: The petition of T. P. Bierly and others, for an increase of the pension of Charles Heath—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. McKINLEY: The petition of W. C. Boffinger and 603 citizens of Ashland, Ohio, against the extension of the Birdsell clover-huller patent—to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. MILES: Papers relating to the petition of John Tweedy, for relief from loss of postage-stamps stolen by burglars—to the Committee of Claims.

By Mr. YOUNG, of Ohio: The petition of Vann & Adair, for the payment of a debt due them from the Osage Nation of Indians—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee: The petition of George W. Payne & Co., of Memphis, Tennessee, for an extension of a patent known as the eclipse cotton-gin—to the Committee on Patents.

IN SENATE.

FRIDAY, April 25, 1879.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. J. BULLOCK, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President, I present concurrent resolutions of the senate and assembly of the State of New York, which I ask may be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolutions will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

STATE OF NEW YORK, IN SENATE,
Albany, April 9, 1879.

Resolved, (if the assembly concur,) That the refusal by a partisan majority in Congress to appropriate for the support of the National Government the moneys raised by the people for that purpose, except upon condition of the repeal or amendment of existing laws, is a dangerous violation of the Constitution, amounting practically to revolution, which should be at all times resisted by the Executive by all constitutional means, and especially in the present crisis, when an attempt is being made to prostrate just laws heretofore enacted for the protection and purity of the elective franchise, under threat of withholding the means for carrying on the Government which the Constitution enjoins.

Resolved, (if the assembly concur,) That a copy of this resolution be sent to each Senator and Representative from this State in the Congress of the United States.

STATE OF NEW YORK, IN SENATE,
April 9, 1879.

The foregoing resolutions were duly passed.
By order:

JOHN W. VROOMAN, Clerk.

IN ASSEMBLY, April 21, 1879.

Concurred in without amendments.
By order of Assembly:

EDWARD M. JOHNSON, Clerk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. What disposition does the Senator from New York desire shall be made of these resolutions.

Mr. CONKLING. I move that they be printed and lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. FERRY presented a concurrent resolution of the Legislature of Michigan, in favor of the passage of a law by Congress authorizing the building of a bridge across the Detroit River at or near Detroit, in that State; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of Michigan, in favor of such legislation by Congress as will secure due protection to settlers under the homestead law in the counties of Oceana, Mason, Charlevoix, and Emmet, in that State; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania, presented the petition of Jacob S. Upp and others, citizens of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, praying for the passage of a law repealing the stamp tax on matches; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. TELLER presented the petition of Wolff & Brown, praying for the passage of a law granting them compensation for property taken and appropriated to the use of the Government in Jefferson County, Colorado, in the year 1865; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. JOHNSTON presented the petition of Sallie Yerger, Maggie J. Miller, and others, praying that their claim for compensation for property taken by the Government in the late war be referred to the Court of Claims; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented the petition of Alexander Donnon, of Petersburgh, Virginia, administrator of David Dunlap, deceased, praying for the passage of a law granting him compensation for certain property taken by the Government during the late war; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented the petition of Mrs. Virginia Taylor, of Petersburgh, Virginia, executrix of Joseph Taylor, deceased, praying that her claim for compensation for certain property taken by the Government during the late war be referred to the Court of Claims; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented the petition of David B. Tennant, of Petersburgh, Virginia, praying for the passage of a law granting him compensation for certain property taken by the United States Government during the late war; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented the petition of Watson McGill & Co., of Petersburgh, Virginia, praying for the passage of a law granting them compensation for certain property taken by the United States Government during the late war; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. HARRIS. The select committee to investigate and report the best means of preventing the introduction and spread of epidemic diseases, to which was referred the bill (S. No. 108) to prevent the introduction of contagious or infectious diseases into the United States, instruct me to report a substitute for the bill. I desire to give notice that as soon as the Army appropriation bill is disposed of, if the substitute that I now report shall have been printed by that time, I shall ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill that I now report.

Mr. CONKLING. What is the bill?

Mr. HARRIS. It is a bill clothing the National Board of Health with certain powers, and imposing upon it certain duties, looking to a national quarantine.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. SAUNDERS asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 494) to authorize the President to restore Charles Brewster to his former rank in the Army; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. KERNAN (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 495) to reinstate Thomas H. Lawrence as a third lieutenant in the United States Revenue Marine; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. WITHERS asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 496) providing for the examination and adjudication of pension claims; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. WALLACE asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 497) granting a pension to J. Clinton De Witt; which was read twice by its title, and, with the papers on file relating to the case, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. EATON asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 498) changing the time of holding the November term of the United States district court in the district of Connecticut; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. ALLISON asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 499) granting a pension to Lee R. Seaton; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. GROVER asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 500) for the relief of William L. Adams; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. MORGAN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 501) to amend section 5440 of the Revised Statutes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. VOORHEES asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. No. 23) authorizing the purchase of the pictures known as the portraits of Webster and Ashburton, painted by Healy while the Ashburton treaty was being negotiated; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Library.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. GROVER, it was Ordered, That the papers in the case of William L. Adams be taken from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Claims.

On motion of Mr. MORGAN, it was Ordered, That the petition and exhibits of Henry F. Lines be taken from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Ordered, That the papers in the case of Adilicia Cheatham be taken from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Claims.

APPOINTMENT AND REMOVAL OF SENATE EMPLOYÉS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there are no "concurrent or other resolutions" to be offered, the next business in order is the resolution offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALLACE] on the 17th instant to amend the standing order of the Senate in regard to the appointment and removal of the employés of the Senate, the pending question on which is the amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. EDMUNDS,] to be added to the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. PENDLETON,] which was adopted as an addition to the original amendment of the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. EDMUNDS.] The amendment to the amendment will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add to the amendment the following:

But no officer or employé of the Senate who served in the forces of the United States in suppressing the late rebellion shall be removed except for cause stated in writing to the President of the Senate and approved by him in writing.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On this question the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HEREFORD, (when the name of Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia, was called.) I desire to state that my colleague [Mr. DAVIS] is paired with the Senator from Minnesota, [Mr. WINDOM.] If my colleague were present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. EATON, (when his name was called.) I should like my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] to tell me whether he regards me as paired with his colleague, [Mr. HOAR.]

Mr. DAWES. I supposed the pair with my colleague had been transferred to the Senator from New Jersey, [Mr. MCPHERSON.]

Mr. EATON. Then I vote "nay."

Mr. DAWES, (when Mr. HOAR'S name was called.) My colleague, [Mr. HOAR,] as I stated yesterday, is still necessarily absent from the city, and is paired upon all political questions with the Senator from New Jersey, [Mr. MCPHERSON.] If my colleague were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. MCMILLAN, (when Mr. WINDOM'S name was called.) My colleague [Mr. WINDOM] is absent from the Senate and is paired with the Senator from West Virginia, [Mr. DAVIS.] If my colleague were here, he would vote "yea."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. ALLISON. On political questions I am paired with the Senator from Maryland, [Mr. WHYTE.] This seems to take that turn, and I therefore refrain from voting.

The result was announced—yeas 25, nays 31; as follows:

YEAS—25.

Anthony,	Conkling,	Kellogg,	Plumb,
Bell,	Dawes,	Kirkwood,	Rollins,
Burnside,	Edmunds,	Logan,	Saunders,
Cameron of Pa.,	Ferry,	McMillan,	Teller.
Cameron of Wis.,	Hill of Colorado,	Morrill,
Carpenter,	Ingalls,	Paddock,
Chandler,	Jones of Nevada,	Platt,

NAYS—31.

Bailey,	Grover,	McDonald,	Thurman,
Beck,	Harris,	Maxey,	Vance,
Butler,	Hereford,	Morgan,	Vest,
Cockrell,	Hill of Georgia,	Pendleton,	Voorhees,
Coke,	Houston,	Randolph,	Walker,
Eaton,	Johnston,	Ransom,	Wallace,
Garland,	Jonas,	Saulsbury,	Withers.
Gordon,	Kernan,	Slater,

ABSENT—20.

Allison,	Call,	Hamlin,	McPherson,
Bayard,	Davis of Illinois,	Hampton,	Sharon,
Blaine,	Davis of W. Va.,	Hoar,	Whyte,
Booth,	Farley,	Jones of Florida,	Williams,
Bruce,	Groome,	Lamar,	Windom.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is, shall the original amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] as amended on the motion of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. PENDLETON] be substituted for the resolution offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania, [Mr. WALLACE.] On the amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont, the yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chair supposes that that order requires the yeas and nays to be taken on the whole substitute as it now stands.

Mr. EDMUNDS. May I ask the Chair if I correctly understand the question? Do I understand the Chair to state that the question now is on agreeing to the original amendment that I had the honor to offer, as it was changed by the Senate on the motion of the Senator from Ohio, so as to substitute for the original resolution this matter as it now stands?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That the Chair understands to be the question. The Secretary will call the roll.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Perhaps the time of the Senate can be saved, if nobody desires the yeas and nays, by having the demand for the yeas and nays on this question withdrawn. There is practically now no difference whatever between the original resolution and the form in which the Senate has put the amendment. Therefore, if there be no objection I will withdraw my request for the yeas and nays and ask for the yeas and nays on adopting the resolution after this amendment is disposed of.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to withdrawing the order for the yeas and nays?

Mr. CONKLING. I do not know that I shall object, but I wish the Senator from Vermont for my benefit would state how this stands now. I have lost the run of it a little.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont offered an amendment as a substitute for the original resolution. On the motion of the Senator from Ohio additions were made to the substitute offered by the Senator from Vermont. Now the question is, shall the amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont, as amended on the motion of the Senator from Ohio, be substituted for the original resolution? On the original amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont the yeas and nays were ordered. The Senator from Vermont now suggests that that order be rescinded. Is there objection to rescinding the order for the yeas and nays? The Chair hears none, and the order is rescinded.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I will now state just how the question stands, so that the Senate can see which of the two propositions, if either, it desires to adopt. The original resolution is in these words:

Resolved, That the standing order of the Senate regulating the appointment and removal of clerks and other employés of the Senate be, and it is hereby, amended by striking out of the same all after the word "respectively," in the third line, so that the same shall read as follows:

"Resolved, That the several officers and others in the departments of the Secretary of the Senate and of the Sergeant-at-Arms shall be appointed and removed from office by those officers respectively."

The pending amendment to that, as it is now perfected (speaking parliamentarily) by the vote of the Senate, is to strike out all after "Resolved," and insert these words:

That in the opinion of the Senate the correct and safe transaction of the business of the Senate is materially dependent on retaining in its service a corps of experienced, well-trained, and diligent officers; and this can only be done by security in their respective positions so long as they continue faithful in the discharge of their duties and acceptable to a majority of the Senators.

And inasmuch as the appointment of the subordinates and the power of dismissal should remain with those officers respectively, who must be responsible for all the service committed to their charge: Therefore,

Resolved, That the standing order of the Senate regulating the appointment and removal of clerks and other employés of the Senate be, and it is hereby, amended by striking out of the same all after the word "respectively," in the third line, so that the same shall read as follows:

"Resolved, That the several officers and others in the departments of the Secretary of the Senate and of the Sergeant-at-Arms shall be appointed and removed from office by those officers respectively."

The question is on agreeing to what I proposed with the addition that has been made by the Senate, that they not only be faithful, well-trained, and diligent, and are to have security in their respective positions so long as they continue in that way to discharge the duties, but they are also to be "acceptable to a majority of the Senators." And inasmuch as the appointment of these subordinates and the power of dismissal ought to remain with those officers respectively, who must be responsible for their services: Therefore, Resolved, That they be put at their mercy.

I rather think I am in favor of it on the whole.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the substitute as amended.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is, shall the resolution as amended be adopted.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. CARPENTER. I wish to offer an amendment. I move to add at the end of the resolution the following:

But no office or employment made vacant by the removal or dismissal of a person who served in the forces of the Union during the late war shall be filled or supplied by the appointment or employment of any person who served in the confederate army at any time during said war.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. CARPENTER. On that I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. PENDLETON. May I ask to have the amendment reported again?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be again read.

The Secretary read the amendment of Mr. CARPENTER.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is the Senate ready for the question?

The Secretary called the roll.

Mr. McMILLAN. My colleague [Mr. WINDOM] is absent, and is paired with the Senator from West Virginia, [Mr. DAVIS.] If my colleague were here, he would vote "yea."

Mr. HEREFORD. I desire to say that my colleague [Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia] is paired on this resolution and all the amendments to it with the Senator from Minnesota, [Mr. WINDOM.] If my colleague were here, he would vote "nay" on the pending question.

Mr. ALLISON. I will only repeat that I am paired with the Senator from Maryland, [Mr. WHYTE.] If he were here, I should vote "yea."

Mr. DAWES. I desire to repeat the pair of my colleague, [Mr. HOAR.] If he were here, he would vote "yea" on this amendment.

The result was announced—yeas 26, nays 34; as follows:

YEAS—26.

Anthony,	Conkling,	Jones of Nevada,	Platt,
Bell,	Dawes,	Kellogg,	Plumb,
Burnside,	Edmunds,	Kirkwood,	Rollins,
Cameron of Pa.,	Ferry,	Logan,	Saunders,
Cameron of Wis.,	Hamlin,	McMillan,	Teller.
Carpenter,	Hill of Colorado,	Morrill,
Chandler,	Ingalls,	Paddock,

NAYS—34.

Bailey,	Garland,	Kernan,	Thurman,
Bayard,	Gordon,	McDonald,	Vance,
Beck,	Grover,	Maxey,	Vest,
Butler,	Harris,	Morgan,	Voorhees,
Call,	Hereford,	Pendleton,	Walker,
Cockrell,	Hill of Georgia,	Randolph,	Wallace,
Coke,	Houston,	Ransom,	Withers.
Eaton,	Johnston,	Saulsbury,
Farley,	Jonas,	Slater,

ABSENT—16.

Allison,	Davis of Illinois,	Hoar,	Sharon,
Blaine,	Davis of West Va.,	Jones of Florida,	Whyte,
Booth,	Groome,	Lamar,	Williams,
Bruce,	Hampton,	McPherson,	Windom.

So the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the resolution as amended, on which the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] demanded the yeas and nays, but there was no second. Does the Senator still wish the question taken by yeas and nays?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes, sir; give us the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HEREFORD, (when the name of Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia, was called.) My colleague [Mr. DAVIS] is paired as I stated before, with the Senator from Minnesota, [Mr. WINDOM.] If my colleague were here, he would vote "yea."

The Secretary resumed and concluded the call of the roll.

Mr. McMILLAN. I desire to announce again that my colleague [Mr. WINDOM] is paired with the Senator from West Virginia, [Mr. DAVIS.] If my colleague were here, he would vote "nay."

Mr. ALLISON. I am paired, as before stated, with the Senator from Maryland, [Mr. WHYTE.] If he were here, I would vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 33, nays 26; as follows:

YEAS—33.

Bailey,	Grover,	Lamar,	Vance,
Beck,	Harris,	McDonald,	Vest,
Butler,	Hereford,	Maxey,	Voorhees,
Call,	Hill of Georgia,	Morgan,	Walker,
Cockrell,	Houston,	Randolph,	Wallace,
Coke,	Johnston,	Ransom,	Withers.
Farley,	Jonas,	Saulsbury,
Garland,	Jones of Florida,	Slater,
Gordon,	Kernan,	Thurman,

NAYS—26.

Anthony,	Conkling,	Jones of Nevada,	Platt,
Bell,	Dawes,	Kellogg,	Plumb,
Burnside,	Edmunds,	Kirkwood,	Rollins,
Cameron of Pa.,	Ferry,	Logan,	Saunders,
Cameron of Wis.,	Hamlin,	McMillan,	Teller.
Carpenter,	Hill of Colorado,	Morrill,
Chandler,	Ingalls,	Paddock,

ABSENT—17.

Allison,	Davis of Illinois,	Hoar,	Williams,
Bayard,	Davis of W. Va.,	McPherson,	Windom.
Blaine,	Eaton,	Pendleton,
Booth,	Groome,	Sharon,
Bruce,	Hampton,	Whyte,

So the resolution, as amended, was agreed to.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. EATON. Mr. President, I ask for one moment the attention of the Senate to a matter somewhat personal. It is not often, in fact never before perhaps, that I have taken any notice of what newspapers may have said with regard to my action; but manifest injustice by a certain portion of the press is now being done to a distinguished citizen of the United States who is abroad, and likewise to a committee of this body of which I have the honor to be chairman.

It has been stated in several newspapers that the Committee on Foreign Relations of which, as stated, "Mr. EATON, of Connecticut, is chairman," have under investigation the amount of moneys, &c., which have been expended by the United States in furthering the voyages of a distinguished citizen, General Grant, abroad.

I only desire to say here that I never have heard in my position as a Senator or as a gentleman one word with regard to this matter; and if there was any investigation of that or any other subject before the committee of which I am chairman it would be known to the Senate of the United States and to the country as early as to myself.

I felt it my duty to say this much not on my own account as much as on account of the distinguished citizen who is now abroad.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 1) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending question is on the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska, [Mr. PADDOCK,] on which he is entitled to the floor.

Mr. PADDOCK. I call for the reading of the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. The amendment is, after line 16 of section 6 to insert the following:

That the provisions of the fifteenth section of an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1879, and for other purposes," approved June 18, 1878, shall not be construed so as to prevent the employment of the Army in the government and control of the Indians in any of the States or Territories, whether on or off an Indian reservation, or to prevent such employment in the enforcement of the intercourse laws, or laws affecting the government or control of Indian reservations, or as applying to, or be enforced against, the Army or any part thereof, employed in the protection of life and property in the States of Nebraska, Oregon, Nevada, Kansas, and Colorado, and the Territories subject to Indian incursions.

Mr. PADDOCK. Mr. President, this amendment is not offered in any partisan spirit, nor with the view of securing for any citizen anywhere greater political privileges in any respect whatever than he now enjoys or will enjoy if the bill under consideration shall pass exactly as presented to the Senate. It is offered in the interest of no party and with no intention nor desire to obstruct or delay the legislation here contemplated. Indeed I frankly admit, speaking for myself alone, that I am prepared to accept the inevitable in regard to this whole subject here and now. But, sir, I offer this amendment from a sense of duty, knowing as I well do that the action proposed is imperatively demanded by imperiled interests in a great section of this country in which from the circumstances of its situation the presence, and sometimes the active aid of the Army is essential to the enforcement of law and the maintenance of order. But, sir, an army that cannot be used because bound hand and foot by legal restrictions, as is the case with ours under existing laws, can render very little assistance in Indian affairs or for frontier protection. To be effective there, it should be free and ready to strike at crime upon the demand of the civil authorities when otherwise no civil process can be enforced against the offenders, who combine for domestic violence and set at defiance the necessarily feeble defenses erected by society for the protection of life and property on the border.

The adoption of the section in the Army appropriation bill for the present fiscal year which I propose to modify has cost our State alone many lives, and probably not less than $1,000,000 from theft and the destruction of property, while the indirect damage to us has been far more serious than the direct loss thus sustained. A reign of terror characterized by murder and arson has existed during the past year upon the northwestern border. It has extended into and dominated an area within the limits of our State of greater territorial extent than that of the entire State of Maryland. And yet that district of country is so remote from the center of authority and power in our broad State that no relief whatever could be extended from that source, and the newly organized counties bounding this region on the east, from whose courts civil process must issue against the lawbreakers in this unorganized country beyond, are so sparsely settled, so weak financially and otherwise, as to be wholly unable to afford protection therein. The great Sioux reservation forms its northern boundary, and the Territory of Wyoming, among whose mountains white outlaws and roving bands of Indians under the present order of things hold almost undisputed sway, forms its western boundary.

This western section of Nebraska is one of the finest pasture-fields on the face of the earth. It is within bounds to say that not less than a quarter of a million head of cattle are to-day grazing upon the nutritious natural grasses of that vast region. The pioneer tiller of the soil—the homesteader—is also there. Unfortunately these two interests conflict; and therefrom bitter antagonisms have sprung which have helped to increase the complications. It is true there are two or three small military posts along the western line of the State, but these are almost of no account in preserving the peace between the homesteader and "the cow-boy," who dispute with each other for the occupancy of that fertile country; between the Indian and the white outlaw who steal from each other; between all these and the capitalists who have millions of dollars in herds of cattle and horses scattered widely over that country upon which the Indian, whose ponies have been stolen by the white outlaw, makes reprisals, upon which the outlaw, disguised perhaps as an Indian, makes raids, or for the general protection of these great interests which are otherwise imperiled through the antagonisms between the classes to which I have referred. Our Army cannot, as the law now stands, give aid to a sheriff or other civil officer anywhere, for any purpose whatever. Indeed, as for any service the United States troops can render they might as well be armed with Quaker guns, for no musket can be lawfully fired, and each and every officer and soldier who transgresses in this regard is liable under this section—the modification of which I ask—to a fine "not exceeding $10,000 or imprisonment not exceeding two years, or by both such fine and imprisonment." I quote the exact words of the statute. And so it has happened that at least one of the most important interests of the whole country, which under the policy that had theretofore obtained of giving military support to the civil authority when needed for the protection of frontier interests generally had developed into vast proportions, has during the past year, because of the withholding of such aid, been nearly smothered out and ruined. And what is true of Northwestern Nebraska is in some degree true of this interest in Wyoming, Idaho, Montana, Eastern Oregon, Dakota, Kansas, and Colorado. It may be true of the States and Territories further south in respect of the cattle or other interests.

It will not do, Mr. President, to attempt to dismiss this subject with the answer that the country thus affected is new, sparsely settled, without political power, and on all the counts worth considering at this time of little or no consequence in comparison with the importance of these very laws to a great party, which through and by their aid in other States expects soon to come into full control of the National Government. Let me remind Senators that the country on behalf of which I make this appeal possesses an area larger than that of all the States of the South combined, even if the great State of Texas shall be added thereto. Remember, moreover, that it embraces within its limits the mines whence are to be drawn the gold and silver with which our national debt shall be ultimately discharged, and wherewith our whole people shall be enriched beyond the wealth of all other nations of ancient or modern times. From this vast country are also to come the wheat and the cattle that shall supply the flour-consuming and the beef-eating peoples of Europe as well as of the American continent. And, sir, when you strike at these great interests, remember there is not a voter anywhere in all this broad land whom you do not hit.

Tell me how shall you explain this unwise policy to the great States of Ohio and Indiana, Illinois and Wisconsin, which of all the States have contributed most largely of their sons and daughters to do the pioneer work in that almost limitless field of development, whose capital is there in the mines, in the farms, in the cattle on a thousand hills, whose manufactories are employed by the various industries that are constantly multiplying beyond the Missouri and causing a daily increasing demand from that section for their goods and wares, their labor-saving implements in agriculture and in mining? What answer will you make to the great cities of Chicago, Saint Louis, and Cincinnati, New York, Baltimore, Philadelphia, and Boston, whose commerce you are assailing by these methods? What will you say to the capitalists of New England, whose millions are there in railroads, in insurance risks, in mortgages, State, territorial, county, and individual; or to the people of the non-wheat-growing, non-beef-producing States of the East and the South, when you shall have given that great country over to the Indian and the outlaw of the frontier? These are pertinent questions; but, sir, there are many others that the people of this entire country will be ready to put to you when the consequences of this obstructive legislation shall come to be fully understood.

Remember a day is rapidly approaching—ay, sir, it is almost here—when the great country beyond the Mississippi is to become the seat of empire. Therefore, trifle not with its interests! Attempt not by these cheap methods, which for the moment may tickle the fancy of the voters in the narrow States hereabouts, to possess yourselves of the magic wand of authority and power, lest even while you reach for it—as a thing seemingly so easy to you that you may toy and dally with before you grasp it—an unseen hand from the farther West shall seize upon it, and it shall be lost to you ever more.

But, Mr. President, we are told by some—I refer to no one here—who for a possible political advantage in other States, and, as I believe, with no other motive under heaven, desire to retain this section, and who think that its modification in the manner indicated would be an argument in favor of its unconditional repeal, that there is sufficient authority already under section 4 of article 4 of the Constitution, and existing acts passed in pursuance thereof, to afford all the protection required for the frontier country. Let us see how this is. Under the law as it stands to-day, not a gun can be fired under national authority anywhere in a frontier State, not an ounce of force in any form can be employed until the Legislature or the governor thereof shall have formally notified the President that there is an insurrection characterized by "domestic violence" in such State which he is powerless to control; then the President in his discretion, considering the facts so certified to him, may issue his proclamation commanding the insurgents to disperse, and afterward, if they refuse to do so, all these things having been done with the most careful observance of all the red-tape requirements, the troops at a military post two thousand or more miles away on the frontier may be ordered to assist the State authorities, if by that time there shall be anything left of them to assist.

Now, as for any assistance the Army can render in Indian affairs, in quelling disturbances of the public peace by unruly Indians—either on or off the reservations—by white outlaws on the border, or by both Indians and white outlaws, combining for the destruction of life and property, if no broader authority than this can be given for its use it might as well not be there at all. Before authority can be given to act under this law the whole frontier country may be laid waste. Two weeks or more might be required to get official consent for action, whereas if, as was formerly the rule, the Secretary of War or the commanding general of a department under him could have the proper discretion in and upon the borders of the Indian country, the troops would be always ready to act in the interest of peace and order. Undoubtedly if the military posts were sufficiently numerous, and those who make the trouble on the frontier were ignorant of the law, the moral influence of their presence would be worth something. But, unfortunately, as I have before said, it has come to be understood by these people that the troops cannot be used except in the manner I have stated, and the restraining influence heretofore so valuable resulting from the presence of troops at military posts in that region has been almost lost. At the last session of Congress I introduced a bill, substantially the same as this, which passed the Senate. It went to the House—I shall of course be permitted to speak of this because it relates entirely to the action, or rather the non-action, of the House of Representatives of a former Congress. I say it went to the House, and although there was no end of importunity, although I myself went personally to many of those who control politically and otherwise the action of that House, and urged upon them its immediate consideration, and although there was abundant proof of the existence of a semi-state of war, so to speak, along that frontier, showing that lives were being sacrificed and property stolen and destroyed, there seemed to be a political necessity to smother the bill, and it did finally go down, buried deep beneath the débris of dead measures that fell with that Congress.

I was moved to the introduction of that bill then by an appeal from citizens of my State, nearly all of whom are democrats, and quite all of whom are among the most wealthy and respected of our people. I submitted their communication, which related to the condition of things on the Nebraska frontier particularly, and to the peril in which vast interests of their own as well as of others were placed by the enforced non-action of the troops stationed there, to the General of the Army, and he made answer thereto. I have this correspondence here and will ask my good friend, the Senator from Wisconsin, who sits by me [Mr. CAMERON] to kindly read it, as he is a better reader either than the Clerk or myself.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, read as follows:

OMAHA, December 2, 1878.

DEAR SIR: We beg to call your attention to the present condition of Indian affairs in the northern and western portions of our State. Within the last ten or fifteen days the agency Indians from Spotted Tail, and possibly from Red Cloud, camp have commenced depredations on the stock interests, and are stealing and running off the horses from the cattle ranges, and they have already taken quite a large number of horses from various parties, and have also in some instances killed cattle, and several herders have been wounded. We are, as we believe, reliably informed that demands have been made at the agency for stolen stock held by Indians, but they refused to surrender the same, and unless this state of things is remedied at an early date it must lead to serious complications and ultimately to very great loss if not total destruction to our stock-raising interest, which is fast becoming one of the most important interests of this State as well as of the West generally. We would therefore suggest that it would be greatly to the interest of all this western country if the law prohibiting the military authorities from interfering with civil cases could be suspended, as we have a large district of very sparsely settled country occupied mainly by cattle interests, and throughout this portion of the country are scattered very many desperate characters who prey on both whites and Indians and cause much disturbance, and the civil authorities are too weak or too remote to cope with them; hence the necessity of giving the military authorities power to deal with them where civil authorities are not at hand, and we hope you will make an effort to have the law modified as indicated.

Very truly yours,

W. A. SHARP.
W. A. PAXTON.
B. A. SHEIDLEY & BROS.
JAMES CREIGHTON.
JOHN A. CREIGHTON.
COE & CARTER.
KOUNTZE, YATES & CO.

Hon. A. S. PADDOCK.

HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C., December 12, 1878.

MY DEAR SIR: I beg to acknowledge receipt from you of what amounts to a petition to Congress to repeal the fifteenth section of the act of Congress approved June 18, 1878. I recognize the great importance of protecting and encouraging the growing and most valuable cattle interest in Nebraska; but with the most profound respect for yourself and for Congress, do not see how soldiers can do impossibilities with both hands and feet tied. Should Indians or white desperadoes come into Nebraska from the Indian country north, you make it a fine of $10,000 and imprisonment for two years if the soldiers help your sheriff. Now our officers do not usually have $10,000 handy about them, nor do I feel disposed to advise them to spend a couple of years in your penitentiary by trying to help your sheriff to arrest and punish these horse and cattle thieves. On the other hand, in the Indian country the soldiers can only act on the application of the Indian agents, and these Indian agents think that your constituents steal the ponies and cattle of their Indians; so we soldiers occupy a most unpleasant position, and I prefer to sign my name to the petition itself, for I sympathize sincerely and deeply with Messrs. Sharp, Creighton, and others who desire to add to the wealth and prosperity of our nation; but must frankly say that the law takes away from the Army the only legitimate way of helping them, by supplying the sheriffs of the border counties the necessary posse comitatus to make arrests.

* * * * * * *

With respect,

W. T. SHERMAN, General.

Hon. A. S. PADDOCK,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

Mr. PADDOCK. This correspondence was presented to the Senate; it was printed in the RECORD; it was brought to the notice of the Speaker, to the attention of the chairmen and other members of the Military and Judiciary Committees of the House of Representatives of the last Congress; but nothing could be done. I do not mean by this to charge any party or individual in that Congress with intentional unfriendliness to northwestern interests. I do complain, nevertheless, that a poor, miserable political expedient was at that time—not here, but in the other Chamber—allowed to be placed in front, was permitted to choke the way of and crowd out a measure which a great and pressing exigency demanded. No one will deny that if there had not been a political consideration or interest thrust in its way this bill could at any moment of almost any day have been taken from the Speaker's table under a suspension of the rules of that House and on a proper presentation of the facts in the case passed without a dissenting vote. About that time a crime was committed in that unorganized portion of our State, by men who were not our own citizens, however, which shocked the moral sense of the whole country. Two men were taken from a sheriff and lynched, and their bodies burned while suspended from the tree which formed their gallows. This was done in retaliation for an assault resulting in the murder by the the parties afterward lynched of a sheriff who was about to arrest these men for cattle-stealing. Our whole State was aroused. From every community came a demand for the apprehension and punishment of these men.

The feeling was more intense because at that time it was reported and believed that the victims of this violence had been first tortured by burning and then hung; but the proofs afterward, as I am informed, satisfied the public mind that this was not true; on the contrary, that the burning was accidental, and occurred after the men were dead. These offenders were finally arrested, but more than once after their arrest were they in danger themselves of being lynched by the angry populace, and more than once was their capture from the State authorities threatened by their Texas allies. But, sir, at length the majesty of the law has been vindicated; these men have been tried, convicted, and sentenced.

Now, sir, it is my firm belief that if the troops could have been used on that frontier during the past year as formerly there would have been no such crimes committed; and no such troubles, no such demoralization nor dishonor would have befallen our State. With the usual Army restraints in the border country, the steps in the direction of disorder and lawlessness that led naturally up to these grave offenses against the law could not have been taken. The spirit of outlawry would long before have been stamped out, and order would have been everywhere maintained. My State, whose people are essentially peace-loving and law-abiding, has suffered terribly from this condition of things. They who have principally made this trouble are not our citizens; they are the natural outlaws who hang always upon the borders of the Indian country and the cattle-herders who have come into the great ranges in the extreme western part of the State from the southwestern border, whose life is nomadic, who reside permanently nowhere. And yet these infamies have been charged up against our whole State. Crimes and acts of lawlessness in other States very many years older than Nebraska, possessing a territorial area in extent perhaps not one-third that embraced within our State limits to guard, with courts everywhere accessible, in populous counties, have been attempted to be justified by comparison with these outrages to which I have referred, committed by non-citizens hundreds of miles distant from our capital in an unorganized country having a sparse population and contiguous to the great Sioux Indian country which lies along all the northern and a part of the western border of the State. This will not do.

A State scarcely twelve years old, with a population of four hundred thousand distributed sparsely over seventy-five thousand square miles of territory, seven-eighths of whom are engaged in agricultural pursuits, possessing six hundred churches, three thousand or more district schools at which more than one hundred and twenty thousand children attend, with more than $2,000,000 invested in common-school houses and school property; a State in which the sentiment of temperance is so strong that a bill to prohibit the sale of all spirituous liquors lacked only one vote of its passage in its last Legislature; a State that gives anywhere from ten thousand to twenty thousand republican majority, is not the natural abiding place of law-breakers and desperadoes. The bare statement of these facts is a sufficient answer to the reflections from which we have suffered on account of these border troubles, and for the removal of which we demand a change of this law enacted in the interest of politics elsewhere, as we think without reason and without a due regard for the interests of the whole country. Recollect that these border settlements of ours are the outposts along our common frontier. Beyond is the country belonging to and occupied by the great Sioux nation, more than forty thousand strong. Millions of acres of the domain of the United States are there to be settled and to be defended.

It is your duty and not ours to protect it, because it is an interest common to all the people of the country. The westward wave of immigration, representing in its constituent elements many States of the Union and many different foreign nationalities, moves onward unceasingly. It is estimated that at least one thousand souls every day pass beyond the turbid waters of the Missouri up into the fertile valleys, out upon the beautiful prairies and plateaus of Nebraska, seeking homes upon her broad acres. The line of permanent settlement is each day advancing, and very soon the frontier itself will have disappeared from us and from you all forever. So that in helping us you are helping your own people everywhere as well. Considering these things, I have no patience with this political strategizing which, under a false pretense of protecting the liberties of the people, places the most important interests of my section in jeopardy.

Mr. President, our friends in the South tell us that they do not want the Federal soldiers in their States. They are not needed there. They are dangerous. They may be used to interfere with elections, and through such interference somebody may be deprived of his God-given right to vote. It is very commendable for the people of our country, in whatever State or section they reside, to be jealous and watchful of any method or effort threatening this great privilege. Indeed, it is one of the first duties of citizenship to guard it with religious care, to the end that no citizen, however humble, may have occasion to complain of its abridgment. But, sir, permit me to say I do not believe this sacred boon has been in the smallest degree interfered with by the Federal troops anywhere, at any time, except when rebellion was abroad in the land. Undoubtedly there have been times when the presence of Federal soldiers in the vicinage, operating only as a moral support, would have assisted in securing a pure election; whereas without such restraining influence there could be no election at all, because an actual majority at the polls through intimidation refrained altogether from exercising this inestimable right of citizenship. Our southern friends certainly, in these days of peace and pacification, would not object to the use of troops for such a purpose provided that no other power is able and willing to afford protection to the citizen who seeks to express his political opinions through the ballot-box by his vote for a member of the National Legislature?

At all events let us hope that those of our friends here who so vehemently protest against the Army in the interest of a pure election will always hereafter, if they may not have heretofore, demand for a certain class of voters who in large numbers dwell among them, and yet do never complain of these laws, nor of the presence of the soldiers of the Union, but for some reason do not vote, the same immunity in respect of the use at elections of armed men under local authority as our friends demand for themselves in respect of the use of the national forces on such occasions. And as an assurance in that direction, I urge them to support the amendment offered by the distinguished Senator from Maine. We have no fear of the soldier in our State. We respect and love and give our fullest confidence to the Army of the United States. A nobler, a more gallent set of men does not live in or out of uniform anywhere on God's green earth. We can never forget the great service they have rendered us in defense of our exposed border. We know the hardships they have endured, the sacrifices they have made, the dangers they have braved in that most trying, most laborious, most important service. Many instances of heroism, of unparalleled endurance, of suffering and death on the frontier by the brave soldiers of the regular Army are fresh in our memory, and will there remain so long as we live.

I do well remember, sir, that every house in our State was a house of mourning a few years since when the sad intelligence reached us that five or six companies of cavalry—the very flower of the Army of the United States—commanded by the gallant Custer, had been utterly annihilated in an encounter with the fierce and barbarous Sioux. These brave soldiers, carrying with them the flag and bearing the great name of our country, went to that distant frontier to attempt there, after all peaceful means long employed had failed, to establish the authority of the Government, which had hitherto been set at defiance by the savages who did maraud and murder, and for many years had held undisputed sway throughout that vast region of country.

This little band, under the leadership of their intrepid commander, after a long and most fatiguing march, suddenly rode into the very "jaws of death"—into the very gates of an Indian hell. Of all who followed the immortal Custer in that memorable charge not one remained to tell the story of their gallant deeds and of their untimely death. Not one of all was left to bear for his comrades the last words of affection, the last sad token of remembrance to their families and friends. All we do certainly know, sir, is that they bravely died in the service of their country, and that their mutilated bodies were buried, all in one common grave, in that far-off wilderness, remote from their homes, their kindred, their friends. But, Mr. President, I must not indulge myself nor consume the time of the Senate in expressions of sorrow for the brave unfortunates who fell at that Thermopylæ. There have indeed, sir, been many military events in our history of vastly greater importance than this in respect of the numbers engaged, the remarkable character of the combinations formed, the skillful movement of forces, and the great achievements resulting therefrom, but there has been none which, from the painful nature of the service rendered and the terrible catastrophe which marked its termination, will live longer in the memory of the people of this country.

It is easy for an army to be faithful, gallant, and brave in a great war like that against the recent rebellion, when the eyes of all the world are upon it and the rewards for great achievements are always ready, but in this frontier service, where glory awaits not the tedious daily routine of guard duty, nor the march to death at the hands of skulking savages, and in which promotions are necessarily slow, (it is proposed by this bill that they shall be utterly refused,) the ordinary incentives of ambition do not exist, and the manliest of manly qualities are demanded in the personnel of the army so employed.

This service has shown our Army to possess in a greater degree than any other on the face of the earth these very qualities. Such an army cannot be made a partisan auxiliary. In its constitution it is essentially non-partisan, and necessarily so, because in its composition all parties are represented. It cannot be used for oppression, or the abridgment of the constitutional rights and privileges of citizens anywhere at the behest of any party or cabal, because the Army understands full well that under our system such an abuse of power in the interest of any party temporarily controlling the Government would bring upon it swiftly and surely the same condemnation which would befall the party itself in whose interest it should thus act, and that its speedy destruction through legislation by the representatives of the people would be inevitable. The Army is eminently conservative, and this conservatism in times of great excitement is a restraining influence both upon its own action and upon that of the civil power. Moreover, it is absurd to assume that any political party would be sufficiently fool-hardy to attempt at any time anywhere to employ the Army against a pure ballot. The people are sovereign in this country; and the sovereign is not only intelligent and patriotic, but just, and jealous above all things of military intervention in civil affairs. We have inherited a prejudice in this regard which will last so long as the Republic shall stand. No party can afford, no party dare, make up a record to submit to the people seeking justification and indorsement for the use of our Army to curtail in the least degree any constitutional right or privilege of a faithful citizen of the United States. On the other hand, sir, no political party can live long in this country after the great masses of the people come to understand that these same rights and privileges of citizenship are being trampled in the dust, because the laws that party has caused to be enacted preclude the use even of the Army itself when it may happen to be the only instrumentality wherewith these rights can be protected.

But, Mr. President, there are other matters to be considered here. The people of the great North do not forget that only a few years since, without reason, without cause, the people of another great section of the Union sought its overthrow. That section, through the powerful party that represented it, had control then of this branch of the National Legislature. The peculiar views of its people were held by a majority of the Supreme Court of the United States, so that no legislation trenching upon their rights within their own States would be possible. Moreover, they were assured by the platforms of the successful party, by the frank and positive declarations of Mr. Lincoln and those chosen to aid him in his administration of the Government, that every State of that section should have as full and complete protection as the other States in the Union, as to life, liberty, and property; but nothing would satisfy them. They retired from the benches of the highest courts of the land; they withdrew from the halls of the National Legislature; they left their places at the heads of brigades, regiments, battalions, and companies of the Army, for which honorable service they had been educated at the expense of the whole nation; they went back to their States and organized a government within the jurisdiction and in defiance of the authority of the United States, and behind that government they gathered great armies for the destruction of the Union. More than this: they seized the forts and arsenals and the munitions of war at the military and naval stations in the South, to which they had been carefully distributed by a democratic administration; they seized the custom-houses and mints and post-offices and the moneys and properties of the United States found therein, and with all these they made war upon and undertook to overthrow our Government. More even than this: whatever there was of our little Army and Navy had been scattered to remote stations whence they could not readily be gathered together for the immediate defense of the Union against the impending blow, and as a proper climax for all they had so managed the finances of the Government that there was not a dollar left in the Treasury, nor any credit upon which to rely for loans for its suppport and its protection in that hour of trial and danger.

And now the people who saved the Union see within fifteen years from the close of that memorable struggle, the cost of which in blood and treasure was so enormous that no figures are equal to its measurement, that they who labored and suffered and made such sacrifices as men rarely ever before had done, to destroy the Republic, are in undisputed possession of both branches of its National Legislature, with the nation's purse and the nation's sword under their control. They see that only they who were among the most conspicuous of their leaders in the cabinet and in the field are thought to be fit and qualified for seats in these halls. They hear their advent to power signalized by declarations from some of these former leaders in rebellion, these representatives of southern sentiment, that all the measures of protection and safety made necessary by the acts of the southern people, for whom here they do stand, are to be blotted out, and, naturally enough, they who fought for the Union are now a little suspicious that this new-born zeal for anti-military legislation on the part of those who fought against the Union does not mean what is pretended, the placing of additional restrictions upon the use of the Army because loyal citizenship is anywhere in peril, but because these laws are in the way of party, and possibly of sectional ambitions—in the way of certain theories of State rights and State power, which once brought the nation nigh unto death, theories yet cherished by our friends of the South, who only a little time ago imperiled all in asserting and defending them, and which, whatever they may now think, whatever they may now say, it is not in human nature for them so soon to surrender. And I tell them in all kindness they are committing a grievous blunder; it is too soon for them to undertake these things, it is too soon for them to employ such methods as in this session have been adopted by them. Loyal people nowhere in this country are alarmed about our insignificant little Army, nor about these laws, but they are alarmed by this exhibition of a determination here, through these unfortunate methods, to force the repeal of these acts.

Mr. President, there has been no end of references here to Roman, to English, and other history to prove that a great peril hangs over us—a new-born danger threatens our institutions from the presence upon our statute-books of these laws, even if they shall only remain for a few months longer; and this although for many years they have been there, and the Republic has endured, growing stronger each year, and although so far as the execution of these laws has gone it has been for the sole purpose of giving protection to life and property, altogether in the interest of pure elections, and to enable citizenship everywhere to assert itself, to be supreme in its sphere in respect of the rights and privileges thereunto belonging. No precedent, no authority has been cited by our friends on the other side which is in the slightest degree applicable to our situation. Recollect, sir, we are not called upon to cast out these statutes because anybody has been oppressed, but at the imperious demand of a powerful majority here, made up largely of those who only a little time since sought to cast out the very Constitution itself, and who now, sir, in contravention both of the letter and the spirit of that charter of our liberties, at the commencement of a session, when there is abundant time to deliberate, make their repeal a condition of voting the supplies for the maintenance of Government at all under that Constitution. When our friends will find a parallel for this case anywhere in the history of ancient or modern times—remembering what was very recently done or attempted to be done in this country, with all of which most of those who now make this demand were intimately connected, and considering their present exalted relationship by its generous consent to the very Government which within a space of time so short that it counts not more than a day in history they labored to destroy—it will be time enough to talk of Roman and of English precedents to justify this legislation on behalf of our institutions which we are told are thus imperiled.

Mr. President, I very much dislike to say these things. There is no Senator on the other side of this Chamber toward whom I do not entertain the warmest sentiments of personal regard. I have as a rule refrained from political discussion here, but I have thought it to be my duty at this time to speak frankly and freely the words that the great majority of my constituency are now thinking and speaking at home about these very matters, and this I have sought to do with moderation and courtesy, but plainly and positively.

Mr. President, there have been soldiers near the city of Omaha and at other points in our State at every election for ten or fifteen years. No one ever heard of a voter being intimidated there. But, sir, if our native-born citizens, or if the Germans or Irish or Scandinavians, of which foreign nationalities there are many in that city and State, should either of them take up arms to prevent either of the other nationalities from voting at an election for members of Congress, or if either or all of them combined should turn out to intimidate the three or four hundred negro voters there from casting their honest ballots at such an election, there is not a citizen of that State of any party who would not thank God for the presence of United States troops and for a law governing their movement that would permit their use in protecting the weaker against the stronger class of voters, when no other force could be commanded to perform such duty; and no man of any sense in that State would be afraid of the abuse of such a law. They who mean to do exactly right themselves in these matters need have no fear of the United States soldiery.

There are no people in our State, as I believe, who have any dread of their presence or of the laws as they have stood for many years, except the outlaw on the border hundreds of miles away from our main settlements. It is only the outlaw and the Indian in the neighborhood of our distant frontier communities whom we fear, and we do insist that no such restrictive measures as this which I seek to amend, or as those that our democratic friends are now urging, shall be forced upon us whose States and Territories border upon the Indian country. In the interest of peace, for the enforcement of the laws, for the protection of life and property, for the purpose of insuring to every citizen of every nationality, whatever may be his religious faith, whatever his political opinions, whatever the color of his skin, whatever his occupation, whether he be rich or poor, high or low, citizen or stranger, although he may be found in the remotest corner of our State, the same privileges and immunities that may be enjoyed by any other citizen anywhere in this broad land of ours, we ask you to remove these restrictions so far as they may operate to render the Army employed upon the frontier useless.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. DAWES in the chair.) The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska, [Mr. PADDOCK.]

Mr. PLUMB. Mr. President, I desire to call the attention of the Senate to a portion of section 9. I would not venture to do this if it was at all political; but as it is not, I venture to make a suggestion to the Senator who has charge of the bill, that a distinction in regard to promotions has been provided for in this section which I think unwise and unjust, and I feel that he will appreciate the objection. I am bound to assume that this distinction has crept in without due consideration, and that it will be the pleasure of a majority of the Senate to see that it is removed.

I refer to that portion of the section which forbids promotions or appointments in the Army above the rank of captain, except in the Corps of Engineers. I can very well see why the committee or why Congress might desire to limit promotions to vacancies occurring below the rank of captain; but I cannot at all see why that limit should not apply as well to the Corps of Engineers as to any other portion of the Army. My idea of an army has been an organization created for the purpose of fighting; and as incident to that, for the purpose of aiding it in developing the fighting functions, there are certain staff departments; but the essential part of an army after all is that portion which does the field duty. It is the part that we have the hardest work to get into the service. It is the only part, so far as I know, that ever required a draft to be resorted to to raise it. Nobody ever heard of an engineer, or a quartermaster, or a commissary, or a paymaster, or a surgeon having to be drafted. In fact those branches of the Army take care of themselves by free and voluntary enlistment. There has always been, I think, also fairly, a struggle to get into those positions. But when we wanted men to serve in the ranks where fighting duty was to be done, they sometimes have had to be got by other processes than volunteering. It is that part of the Army which we ought, as I think, to take the best care of; it ought to be the best paid; it ought to have the best chance of promotion; it deserves the grateful consideration of the people of the United States. This is not alone true of the Army as it was during the war, it is equally true of the Army as it is now.

There are about twelve or fifteen thousand men guarding a double line of frontier some four or five thousand miles long. They are the sole barrier against the incursions of Indians along that line. They are the protection of the mining and agricultural settlements and of the cattle ranches, and of all that diversity of interest which is growing up along that extended line. They are not in sufficient force to protect them as well as they might or as well as they deserve to be protected; but whatever of protection they have to-day grows out of the fact that the fighting part of the Army is encamped along that line.

I know something by observation of that section of country. The line on the map as it is shown conveys no idea of its actual extent or of the hardships involved in its protection. The men who have marched and fought, who have been vigilant in season and out of season during the last four or five years in the protection of that frontier, deserve as well of their country as any class of men ever did.

Not only have they to protect this frontier against the Indians, but they are the protection to-day of that magnificent empire known as the State of Texas from the incursions of hostile persons for the purpose of robbery and murder and rapine from the Mexican side.

This is the class of persons, this is the part of the Army that is to be cut out from promotion. They are to have no increased pay growing out of their dangerous service. They are to have no increased rank by reason of any casualty. Under no circumstances whatever can they have any promotion. But an exception is made which brings out more strongly the injustice of that by excepting that branch of the Army which is practically to-day the civil branch of the Army, if I may use the term. What are the duties of the engineer? I would not say a word against that branch of the Army in any way, either as individuals or as a corps; but the duties of that corps to-day are purely civil. There is not only no necessity for increasing the Corps of Engineers, but there is no necessity for increasing their rank or increasing their pay. Rank, as it is ordinarily understood, is created primarily for the purpose of command. Such a thing as a command is not known in the Engineer Corps, and never has been, and never will be, because there is nobody to command, in the ordinary sense of that term. Consequently rank is to be given under this bill or is permitted to be continued in that portion of the Army where rank is not needed, and in that portion of the Army, as I said, which has now devolved on it solely civil functions.

But this is not only a discrimination against the men who do the fighting, but it is a discrimination against the other staff corps. The paymasters and the quartermasters and the commissaries, a large portion of them, do field duty. They on occasions take the musket as officers are required to do on that frontier service, where one man has to do the duty of three in watching and in marching and in fighting. The quartermasters and the commissaries and the paymasters frequently take the musket also and go into the ranks and do service as enlisted men. But these corps of the Army are to be cut out from the privileges of promotion as well as the line.

Mr. President, it seems to me entirely incredible that it could have been the intention of anybody that such a distinction should be created by law. I am bound to presume, as I said in the beginning, that this has been a matter purely of inadvertence, and as such I hope there will be no objection to its elimination. These men out on the frontier deserve better of Congress than this provision would seem to indicate that Congress is willing to grant. They are doing a very arduous duty; they are a long way off; they have not the ear of power; they feel under any circumstances the most favorable as though to some extent the avenues of promotion were unjustly closed against them. If Congress were to step in and not only close promotion against them but leave to a more favored corps of the Army, doing no military duty whatever, the only chance for promotion, it would be doing them a very gross injustice.

I hope that there will be no objection whatever, therefore, to limiting promotion to all portions of the Army according to the terms of this bill, striking out that portion relating to the engineers, or else leaving it all open, so that promotions may go on as before.

There has been a great deal said about Army reorganization. I know that that is a pretext whereby at the last Congress promotions were stopped in the Army; but when the subject of reorganization was reported to Congress, Congress evinced no disposition whatever to reorganize the Army. Unless Congress should reorganize affirmatively the Army and put it on a footing which would limit the number of officers and limit the promotions, these men have a right to expect that under the existing establishment created by law, kept up and maintained for the purposes of the Army, they shall have always and on all occasions all the opportunities for promotion that there are.

I shall therefore, at the proper time, move to amend the ninth section, first, by striking out all that portion which relates to promotions whatever, and if that should be voted down I shall move to strike out that part which creates distinctions in favor of the engineers.

I may say further that I think Congress has heretofore not exhibited that regard for the engineers that seems to be implied in this bill. When we came to make a pass at the mouth of the Mississippi River we did not employ the Engineer Corps to do it. We employed a civilian; we contracted with a civilian. At the last Congress there was introduced a bill which, while it did not pass, received consideration and support, and it has been introduced at this session, which practically disorganizes the Engineer Corps. It takes up the chief part of their duties and transfers them to a commission to be largely, if not almost wholly, composed of civilians, and provides for transferring the material, the plans, so to speak, of that entire corps to this commission.

I think this provision must have crept in inadvertently, because there has been no such consideration shown to the Engineer Corps as a necessary part of the military establishment heretofore as would warrant this discrimination in their favor upon the subject of promotion.

Mr. WITHERS. I merely wish to say a word or two in reply to the Senator from Kansas. I concur almost entirely in everything he has said, but I do not concur in the action which he proposes to predicate upon his speech. My sympathies are, as his are, rather with the line than with the staff officers, but it is equally certain that a staff is essentially and indispensably necessary to the efficiency of the line. The reason of the exception made here in favor of the Engineer Corps, as I understand, is one which applies only to that corps. It is that in view of certain expected changes in the head of that corps it is desired by this clause simply to provide that the head of that corps shall be permitted to enjoy the same rank that the head of the other staff departments of the Army now enjoy. That is the whole of it.

Mr. PLUMB. I think the Senator from Virginia is entirely mistaken in that proposition, for he will find that that case is covered by the proviso which is in no way connected with that portion of the section to which I object. The proviso says at the close of the section:

That nothing shall prevent the appointment of a chief of engineers, with the rank of brigadier-general, when a vacancy shall occur, nor shall it prevent the promotion of any captain who has served twenty years in the United States Army.

Consequently, if the words to which I take exception shall be stricken out, still that branch of the Army would have the privilege of being commanded by a brigadier-general equal in rank to the ranking officer in the other staff corps. Therefore, it is not at all necessary that that exception should be continued in regard to all the classes of promotion under the reservation stated by the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. WITHERS. It is a provision to render possible under the operation of the general law the promotion which is proposed; that is all. The same result is obtained in either case.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, I do not desire to discuss this bill any further at length; but having examined it, in connection with what the Senator from Kansas has said, I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Virginia who has the bill in charge to the language of the last section of the bill. I ask him if he will be kind enough to explain to the Senate the meaning of it. Section 9, the last section of the bill, provides:

That from and after the passage of this act, and until it shall be otherwise provided by law, there shall be no promotions or appointments in the Army above the rank of captain, except in the Corps of Engineers; and the actual time of service in the Army or Navy of the United States shall be allowed all officers in computing their pay; and that no officer below the rank of major shall be transferred to the retired list, except upon the report of a duly constituted board of officers, to the effect that such officer is no longer fit for active service; and that any officer hereafter retired by reason of wounds received in action shall be retired upon the highest rank, exclusive of brevet rank, actually held by such officer in the regular or volunteer service before retirement.

There are three propositions in this to which I desire to call the attention of the Senator who has charge of the bill. First, I would ask him how it is that this being an Army appropriation bill, its provisions are applied to the Navy as well as to the Army?

And the actual time of service in the Army or Navy of the United States shall be allowed all officers in computing their pay.

I ask the Senator to explain to the Senate what is meant by that part of this section.

Mr. WITHERS. I do not know that I can explain it more explicitly than the language of the bill.

Mr. LOGAN. Then, if the Senator cannot explain it, I ask him to please read it and state what it means.

Mr. WITHERS. The language is:

And the actual time of service in the Army or Navy of the United States shall be allowed all officers in computing their pay.

I do not see any difficulty in understanding the meaning of it. It means precisely what it says.

Mr. LOGAN. Very well; suppose it does mean what it says. The language there conveys, to my mind at least, the idea that all the time of the service of that officer, either in the Army or the Navy, as private or as officer, shall be computed in allowing him pay as an officer. Is that what it means?

Mr. WITHERS. Yes, sir.

Mr. LOGAN. The meaning of it, then, is that the officer is to have pay allowed him computing all the time of service while in the Army either as a private soldier or as a commissioned officer, in addition to what is called the fogy ration, or longevity ration, allowed by law hereafter, per annum?

Mr. WITHERS. Does the Senator wish a reply?

Mr. LOGAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. WITHERS. I do not know that I can reply any more definitely, as I said, than the language of the bill expresses it, which is that an officer in the Army or Navy in computing his pay shall have allowed him the actual time he has been in service. The Senator knows that the pay or allowances increase in proportion to the length of service.

Mr. LOGAN. Let me call the attention of the Senator to section 7 on page 150 of the statutes of 1877–'78. I read that section of a law already on the statute-book:

That on and after the passage of this act all officers of the Army of the United States who have served as officers in the volunteer forces during the war of the rebellion, or as enlisted men in the armies of the United States, regular or volunteer, shall be, and are hereby, credited with the full time they may have served as such officers and as such enlisted men in computing their service for longevity pay and retirement.

That law being already in the statute-book allowing them all the time as officers or as privates, either in the volunteer or regular service, as longevity in ascertaining their pay, as well in the Army as in the retirement from the Army, I ask the Senator then to tell me what the meaning of this provision is:

And the actual time of service in the Army or Navy of the United States shall be allowed all officers in computing their pay.

There must be some meaning, some reason for it. Now I ask the Senator to explain it. With this law I just now read already on the statute-book, I ask him to explain the meaning of this particular part of the ninth section.

Mr. WITHERS. No doubt it is owing to my confused intellect, because I do not really appreciate the possibility of explaining more fully than I have done the provision on which the Senator desires information. The effect of it, as it seems to me, is simply to provide for what the language expresses, I cannot express it more explicitly, that an officer in the Army or Navy in computing his pay shall have full credit for the actual time of his service. That is as explicit a statement as I am competent to give.

Mr. LOGAN. In other words, it means this: that the Committee on Appropriations that reported this section of the bill in all human probability did not understand exactly what it did mean. Is not that so?

Mr. WITHERS. The Senator is welcome to assume ignorance on the part of the committee——

Mr. LOGAN. I do not assume ignorance on the committee's part.

Mr. WITHERS. It is not for a member of the committee to acknowledge "the soft impeachment."

Mr. LOGAN. No, sir; I did not assume ignorance on the part of the committee; only a want of examination of this particular section, because it does seem to me that if the committee had examined it critically they certainly would understand what it does mean. Now the Senator does not seem to understand the meaning of it; I may not, but the provision already in the law that the time of service shall be computed in the pay of an officer of the Army whether he served as private or officer in the regular or volunteer service is substantially in the same language as this part of the section. There is then no necessity for enacting this particular part of the section except for one purpose; and what is that? To take out of the Naval Committee the examination of the question as to whether the Navy shall be put on the same basis as the Army in reference to the computation of longevity. That is the reason for it. It is that you in this Army bill undertake to provide for the Navy as well as the Army, when you profess that it is merely an act in reference to the Army. That is what it means, and that is what your provision is.

Now, let me go a little further. I call the Senator's attention to this proposition; the particular section that I have read from the statutes of 1878, in the act of June 18, 1878, found its way into an appropriation bill. What does it do? Under the law organizing the Army of the United States, the officers are allowed an increase of pay according to the time they have served in the Army, so much per cent. increase for every five years of service. That increase continues up only until it shall reach 40 per cent. of the regular salary. That is the law. Now, instead of providing that it shall stop at 40 per cent., you, by inference at least, repeal that part of the statute which provides that the time shall be computed in that way, and allow them to receive pay irrespective of cutting it off at 40 per cent.

I have noticed sections of this kind sometimes before slipped into bills. To-day a colonel in the regular Army draws not only his salary, but if he has served many years in the Army, either as a private or an officer, his salary is increased 10 per cent. for every five years of service until that increase shall amount to 40 per cent. of his regular salary, and there it stops. But here you provide, without any stopping whatever, that it shall be computed according to all the time that he has served in the Army, so that when a party has served a sufficient number of years you double his salary instead of stopping at 40 per cent. increase.

If the committee intended that, we understand them; if that is what it means, let us know it. You not only give a longevity pay under this act paying 40 per cent. of the salary, but then under this section you give longevity, it is no matter how much; it may amount to 100 per cent. That is your proposition precisely. If that is what the committee meant, very well; that is what the law means if this shall be enacted into law.

Mr. WITHERS. That is not what the committee meant, and that is not what the section under consideration means.

Mr. LOGAN. Well, if that is not what the committee meant, the committee had better change the language of that section.

Mr. WITHERS. No doubt the suggestion is very judicious in the opinion of the Senator; but the committee think differently, unfortunately, and adhere to the language in its present form. It might possibly occur to the Senator, if he examined the question with the usual acumen which he devotes to such investigations, that the actual time of service in the Army or Navy is a different provision from the one he quotes, which says nothing about service in the Navy. There are officers in the Army who have also served in the Navy during the time of their service. Under the provision of the general law heretofore quoted by the Senator, their time of service in the Navy cannot be computed in fixing the amount of their pay in the Army; and this is simply designed to give them credit for their service in the Navy in computing pay, just as well as for their service in the Army.

In reference to the other of the criticisms of the Senator, that this is a virtual abolition of the provision restricting longevity pay, I will say that it is not designed, nor is it susceptible fairly of any such construction. It only prescribes the mode in which that pay shall be computed, of course subject to the provisions of the general law as to the 40 per cent., but they can compute the length of service in the Navy as well as in the Army to an officer now in the Army.

Mr. LOGAN. Now, in order that we may fairly understand each other, I will read the law in reference to longevity in the Army. I quote from the Revised Statutes:

SEC. 1262. There shall be allowed and paid to each commissioned officer below the rank of brigadier-general, including chaplains and others having assimilated rank or pay, 10 per cent. of their current yearly pay for each term of five years of service.

SEC. 1263. The total amount of such increase for length of service shall in no case exceed 40 per cent. on the yearly pay of the grade as provided by law.

Following these provisions in the Revised Statutes, in 1878, on the appropriation bill for the Army, Congress provided:

That on and after the passage of this act, all officers of the Army of the United States who have served as officers in the volunteer forces during the war of the rebellion, or as enlisted men in the armies of the United States, regular or volunteer, shall be, and are hereby, credited with the full time they may have served as such officers and as such enlisted men in computing their service for longevity pay and retirement.

And in this bill, following that, you provide that the full length of time shall be allowed all officers of the Army and Navy in computing their pay. Now, if all the time is allowed, if you allow all the time they have served in the Army in computing their pay, then I ask where is the restriction? In the statute as it stands the time is only allowed up to 40 per cent. at 10 per cent. for every five years, but in this bill you allow all the time, so that there is no restriction of time of service at all and the time of service may in computation increase the allowance up to 100 per cent. or an amount equal to the salary of the officer in addition to his regular pay. That is your provision, and that is the meaning of it. No other construction can be given to it in my judgment other than that which I have given.

I do not believe that this committee intended any such thing; and that is the reason why I said I feared that they had not probably given as critical examination to this case as it would be well for them to have done.

But then, sir, there is another very serious objection to this section. I do not assert it as a fact; but if the Senator does know who did draft this section I wish he would say to the Senate whether it was drafted by the committee or a member of the committee, or whether it found its way there, as sections sometimes do in appropriation bills, by some outside friend very kindly offering an amendment that is precisely to fit some peculiar case. If the Senator knows who drafted this section, I shall be glad to hear him state.

Mr. WITHERS. So far as my opinion in concerned, if I were aware of the author of the section, I do not think it would be necessary for me to state it. The provision is in the bill as it came from the House, and has been reported back by the Appropriations Committee of the Senate without amendment.

Mr. LOGAN. But is it not in this bill as it was in the last bill?

Mr. WITHERS. It is in this bill as it came from the House.

Mr. LOGAN. I beg the Senator's pardon. If he will make an examination he will probably find some little differences.

Mr. WITHERS. The Senator might, perhaps, without doing any violence to his imagination, suppose that the committee had examined the bill. They have reported the bill as it came to the Senate from the House, without amendment.

Mr. LOGAN. I see that. That is very evident. We all know that.

Mr. WITHERS. I am glad that we agree on one point.

Mr. LOGAN. I will now call attention to another portion of this particular section:

And that no officer below the rank of major shall be transferred to the retired list, except upon the report of a duly constituted board of officers, to the effect that such officer is no longer fit for active service.

I suppose the meaning of that is that no officer below the rank of major shall be put on the retired list except on the order of a board duly constituted deciding and declaring that he is no longer fit for active service. What does that mean? Why should not that apply to all officers of the Army if it is a good thing? Why should a captain or an officer of less rank than a colonel or brigadier-general be placed upon a different basis, so far as retirement from the Army is concerned, than others? Why should a major or a captain be required to be declared unfit for active service when any one above that rank may be retired, after he arrives at a certain age, by order of the President? Why is this distinction made that an officer of the rank of colonel may apply to be retired because of length of service in the Army, and may be retired by order of the President, but if he is below the rank of major he is not entitled to that retirement? I should like to know why this distinction is made. If my honorable friend from Virginia will state, I will give way for him to explain.

Mr. WITHERS. I would prefer that the Senator make his criticisms upon the whole section, and then I will endeavor to give him information. Conversational debate is interminable.

Mr. LOGAN. The reason I ask the information as I go along is because I actually wish to know. The language in this section is surprising to me; I may be mistaken, and I should like very much to hear the explanation from the Senator from Virginia. And further this section provides:

And that any officer hereafter retired by reason of wounds—

Mark the language that I shall now read—

And that any officer hereafter retired by reason of wounds received in action shall be retired upon the highest rank, exclusive of brevet rank, actually held by such officer in the regular or volunteer service before retirement.

Let us see what that means. That means this, if I can understand the English language: a gentleman holding the rank of captain in the Army to-day, who held the rank of major-general in the volunteer service and was wounded in that service, no matter whether wounded as a major-general, as a private, or as a subaltern officer, is now to be retired on the rank of major-general. That is the meaning of that particular provision, is it not? I here assert that in all the laws that have ever been enacted in England, in America, in Prussia, or in any country where armies are organized, such a provision has never found its way into a law regulating an army before. At least if it has, it has escaped my examination. No such law has ever existed from the organization of this Government down to the present time in reference to the retirement of officers of the Army. There was a clause inserted in the Army bill approved July 28, 1866, to this effect:

Officers of the regular Army, entitled to be retired on account of disability occasioned by wounds received in battle, may be retired upon the full rank of the command held by them, whether in the regular or volunteer service at the time such wounds were received.

That was the language of an amendment moved by Senator Fessenden, of Maine, and inserted in an appropriation bill in July, 1866, in that particular section of the law. Quite a number of officers applied for retirement, and some officers outside wanted to be retired with the rank of their command. There has been no such thing known in the Army as rank of command. The "rank" applies to the person. He is a major-general, a brigadier-general, a lieutenant-general, or a general. The rank is to himself, and not to his command. This law was found to be so contrary to every rule that had ever been known in the regulation of armies that a few years ago it was repealed by an act of Congress. I did not wish to advert to the many reasons that perhaps operated on the Senate and the House at the time for passing this clause in 1866, but it is the only time that any such law ever found its way on the statute-book, and that was considered entirely out of all rules that had ever been established in any army, the retirement of a man with the rank of command. It has always been the case that the retirement was with the rank held at the time the party was retired, except in special instances by special legislation. So in this case now you do not retire a man with the rank that he held at the time of receiving the wound. The law that was enacted in 1866 put the retirement with the command held at the time the man received the wound. Now, how do you retire?

And that any officer hereafter retired by reason of wounds received in action shall be retired upon the highest rank, exclusive of brevet rank, actually held by such officer in the regular or volunteer service before retirement.

So that you do not retire him with the rank he held at the time he received the wound or the rank of his command at that time; but if he was a major-general in the Mexican war in the volunteer service and received a wound in the late war as a captain, you retire him as a major-general. That is the effect of your provision.

Now, sir, I want any man, lawyer, judge, or anybody else, to tell me if ever there was such an unheard-of provision in any law either in England or America as this is. The idea of a man who was a major-general of volunteers in the Mexican war receiving a wound in the late war as lieutenant shall be retired with the rank of a major-general! Why, such a thing is unheard of. A person may have been a colonel and may have been mustered out of service holding the rank of major-general in the volunteers, and may now be mustered into the service as a lieutenant for the very purpose of being retired, and then he is retired on what? He goes and asks retirement on account of wounds received in service, no matter whether the wounds prevented him from occupying his position in the Army or not, and he is retired by a board for wounds received in the service and draws a major-general's pay.

I merely call the attention of the Senate to these provisions; and I do say without hesitation that the Committee on Appropriations, if they did consider this section as they propose to put it on the laws of this country, have violated every principle that ever governed any army since the world began that I have ever heard or read of.

If there was a provision in this section that authorized the retirement of a civilian who never held rank in the Army at all, who never served in the Army even as a private soldier, I presume it would be passed just the same as any other. I do not presume that any argument or any statement of the question would affect in the slightest degree the passage of this bill, or would so change the views of any Senator on the other side as to allow the dotting of an "i" or the crossing of a "t." I presume that is true; but I will say to Senators on that side of the Chamber, that the next time they bring a bill into the Senate irrespective of objections to it, irrespective of faults that may be found in it, I hope they will at least consider the bill before they bring it before an intelligent Senate; at least understand what there is in it that they intend to place upon the statute-books of this country.

Why, sir, this provision in this bill would make the Senate of the United States and the Congress of this country, so far as the Army is concerned, a laughing-stock. It will be laughed at by every intelligent soldier from one end of this land to the other, except by some particular person that desires to receive the benefit of the act, who cannot be retired with so high a rank as the law now stands. If you are legislating for the benefit of some particular individual, and in doing that you wish to put the Army in a condition where every officer who held high rank in the volunteer service, who is now of low rank in the Army and was wounded, either as a private soldier or as a lieutenant or a captain, may go and say "I have wounds, and I ask retirement now under this section," I can understand it. No doubt in such a case the officer would be retired. He would say, "Retire me before the next meeting of Congress, for they may repeal this section," so as to give him retirement as a brigadier-general or a major-general. Put him on the retired list, drawing high pay, when he never was entitled to it.

This is all I desire to say with reference to this particular section except that the retired pay of an officer is 75 per cent. of his regular pay; so that the retired pay of a major-general is that which will support a very considerable family and in very good style, too. I could name you, if I chose, quite a number of gentlemen to-day in the Army with a rank less than major who held the rank of brigadier-general in the volunteer service, who bear scars, not such as to seriously injure them, however, but such as would authorize them to be retired under this bill by a board of their friends; and officers never fail to retire for wounds, there are so many seeking places. No man has ever failed yet, that I have heard of, to be retired when he presented himself on account of wounds received in the service. Thus you open the doors of retirement with high pay, for what purpose? God only knows; but it seems to me that this is an inducement held out to officers of the Army to seek retirement, and at the same time that they seek that retirement you provide that the Army shall not be filled up above a certain grade, that no promotions or appointments shall be made above that grade in the Army, and to leave this vast number of vacancies there until you can have an opportunity of providing how they may be filled. In that way the Army may be filled up again, perhaps, by a different class from those who now are the officers in the Army. If that is not the reason, God knows, I cannot fathom it.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I desire to read, by way of explanation, (not to participate in the present debate,) a dispatch which I received from Charleston, South Carolina, yesterday afternoon, but too late to make use of it in the little discussion which went on. It is addressed to myself, but not based on anything that was said yesterday, because it came last evening:

CHARLESTON, S. C., April 24, 1879.

Senator JAMES G. BLAINE, Washington, D. C.:

In the Barnwell case, recently tried in United States court, the defendants were charged with breaking up a republican meeting in Barnwell County. The evidence for the prosecution is correctly stated in a telegram to the Tribune of Saturday. The defendants' counsel asked the court to instruct the jury to bring in a verdict of not guilty, because in the first four counts there was no allegation that the conspiracy as alleged was on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude, and, although the fifth count did so allege, yet there was no proof that the acts charged were committed on account of race or color. The witnesses for the Government having stated that they did not believe that the defendants interfered with their meeting on account of their race or color, but simply because they were republicans, Judge Bond accordingly charged that the right to meet peaceably for consultation in respect to public affairs as charged in the first four counts was neither granted nor guaranteed by the Constitution of the United States, but belonged to the people before the Constitution was adopted; and, under the decision of the Supreme Court in the Cruikshank case, the Federal courts had no jurisdiction to punish its obstruction or hinderance. In reference to the fifth and last count, which charged the defendants with conspiracy to intimidate, injure, and oppress certain persons in the free exercise of the right to vote on account of their race and color, the court charged that there was no proof to show that the parties were injured and oppressed on account of their race and color. In other words, the proof showed that certain parties were interfered with, injured, and oppressed on account of their republicanism, and not on account of their race and color; and through this technicality the defendants were acquitted, notwithstanding the proof was overwhelming that they did all that was charged; but it was impossible to prove that it was because of the race and color of the parties injured.

E. W. M. MACKEY,
Assistant United States Attorney.

This shows in behalf of South Carolina a remarkable degree of impartiality in the oppression of republicans. It is wholly without regard to race, color, or previous condition of servitude.

Mr. CARPENTER. Mr. President——

Mr. BUTLER. Before the Senator from Wisconsin proceeds, inasmuch as the honorable Senator from Maine has read the dispatch, I should like very much to have read the evidence taken for the Government and for the defense in that case, so that the whole case may go into the RECORD. I should like to ask the honorable Senator if he has any information from Mr. E. W. M. Mackey, assistant United States district attorney, of the case of the United States vs. Osceola Gantt, Daniel White, Andrew Bennett and others?

Mr. BLAINE. I have nothing but what I read, and I wanted to add (though I think I guarded it sufficiently yesterday) that I did not intend any reflection on Judge Bond. I disclaimed that yesterday and disclaim it now. I had no intention to say whether there was, what was inferable from the statement in the Evening Star of the previous evening, an arrangement made in South Carolina. I knew nothing more about it than was contained in the Evening Star. That did not in the least degree, in my judgment, implicate Judge Bond, and it is proper that I should entirely disclaim the least intention of so doing.

Mr. CARPENTER. Mr. President——

Mr. BUTLER. If the Senator from Wisconsin will permit me one moment, I should like, inasmuch as that dispatch recites that the testimony was overwhelmingly in favor of the Government, to have the testimony taken on behalf of the defendants read in that connection, as published in the Charleston News and Courier, in full. That is all.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That would require the time to be extended for a couple of hours.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield for the reading of the matter referred to by the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. BUTLER. I ask to be allowed to print it in the RECORD as part of my remarks.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That has never been done in this body and cannot be done with my consent.

Mr. BUTLER. Will not the Senator from Wisconsin yield to me?

Mr. CARPENTER. I do not propose to enter into any political discussion on this bill. I only want to call attention to one or two amendments that I shall move when the time comes, and as I cannot explain them then under our understanding, I ask to do so now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin declines to yield further.

Mr. CARPENTER. In section 9 it is provided:

That from and after the passage of this act, and until it shall be otherwise provided by law, there shall be no promotions or appointments in the Army above the rank of captain, except in the Corps of Engineers.

I shall move to amend that by adding there the words "and in the artillery."

I cannot speak of anything done in executive session, but from the newspapers I learn that nominations have been made for all the promotions which can be made in the cavalry and infantry branches of the service. This would stop all promotions except in the Engineers, when, if those nominations are confirmed, the infantry and the cavalry would have their promotions by these nominations which the newspapers say have been sent to the Senate; and this would open the door to the engineers; but it would produce this practical result: now the ranking lieutenant-colonel in the Army to-day is Lieutenant-Colonel R. B. Ayres, of the Third Artillery, and he is entitled to the first promotion to the rank of colonel; but if these nominations which the newspapers say have been sent to the Senate be confirmed, this bill leaves the door open for promotion in the Corps of Engineers, and would just put the artillery entirely back of all the other corps in the Army, which of course would be a gross injustice to them.

Again, in the fourteenth line of this section, I find the following:

Provided, That nothing shall prevent the appointment of a Chief of Engineers, with the rank of brigadier-general, when a vacancy shall occur, nor shall it—prevent the promotion of any captain who has served twenty years in the United States Army.

Which refers to nothing—

There is, of course, an accidental omission, and I shall move, when the time comes, to perfect it by inserting words so as to make it read "provided that nothing in this act contained shall" do so and so. That was evidently the intention of it, and it was omitted by a mistake. It makes bad grammar of the whole proviso and nonsense of the last part of it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What is the pending question, Mr. President?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska, [Mr. PADDOCK.] The Chair was just going to state that he is a little in doubt whether it is competent or not to take the vote before the hour of three has arrived, because some Senators supposing the vote would not be taken before that may not be here.

Mr. EATON. If my friend from Vermont will allow me, I will move that that amendment lie on the table.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What amendment?

Mr. EATON. I move that the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska lie on the table.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I thought the Chair had recognized me.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont has the floor.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Now may I ask my honorable friend from Connecticut what amendment it is that he proposes to lay on the table?

Mr. EATON. I supposed my friend understood me or I would not have made the motion. I said I would move that the amendment which the Chair had stated as pending lie upon the table.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to have that reported because I am not sure that that is the exact amendment that I wish to speak about.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to that motion?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Not just now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment of Mr. PADDOCK.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think the Chair would have the right to put the question on anything about the bill, except that as a Senator he is bound by the understanding. Of course the understanding of yesterday is not a part of the journals and orders of the Senate, but it is an understanding among Senators. The Chair of course must go on and administer the law of the Senate and put the bill to its passage after we dispose of it in the various ways. If the Senator from Connecticut merely wishes to dispose of this amendment so that it being disposed of I can have the floor to offer one or two amendments that I have, to save time, I have no objection to yielding for that purpose, if I can have the floor afterward to offer an amendment that I have myself.

Mr. EATON. That is all.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then I yield to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. EATON. I simply desire to end that matter, but with no disrespect to my friend from Nebraska. I simply move that this amendment lie on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Connecticut moves that the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska do lie on the table.

Mr. PADDOCK called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DAWES, (when the name of Mr. HOAR was called.) My colleague, [Mr. HOAR,] as I have announced on other votes, is necessarily absent from the city, and is paired with the Senator from New Jersey, [Mr. MCPHERSON.] My colleague would vote "nay," if present.

Mr. WINDOM, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from West Virginia, [Mr. DAVIS.] If he were present, I should vote "nay."

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 40, nays 28; as follows:

YEAS—40.

Bailey,	Gordon,	Jones of Florida,	Slater,
Bayard,	Groome,	Kernan,	Thurman,
Beck,	Grover,	Lamar,	Vance,
Butler,	Hampton,	McDonald,	Vest,
Call,	Harris,	Maxey,	Voorhees,
Cockrell,	Hereford,	Morgan,	Walker,
Coke,	Hill of Georgia,	Pendleton,	Wallace,
Eaton,	Houston,	Randolph,	Whyte,
Farley,	Johnston,	Ransom,	Williams,
Garland,	Jonas,	Saulsbury,	Withers.

NAYS—28.

Allison,	Cameron of Wis.,	Hill of Colorado,	Morrill,
Anthony,	Carpenter,	Ingalls,	Paddock,
Bell,	Chandler,	Jones of Nevada,	Platt,
Blaine,	Dawes,	Kellogg,	Plumb,
Booth,	Edmunds,	Kirkwood,	Rollins,
Burnside,	Ferry,	Logan,	Saunders,
Cameron of Pa.,	Hamlin,	McMillan,	Teller.

ABSENT—8.

Bruce,	Davis of Illinois,	Hoar,	Sharon,
Conkling,	Davis of W. Va.,	McPherson,	Windom.

So the amendment was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to move to amend the bill on page 14, line 16 of section 6. I move to add after the word "section," at the end of the paragraph, the following words:

And nothing in this section contained shall be held or deemed to abridge the power or duty of the President of the United States, existing under the Constitution thereof, or under sections 5298 or 5299 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

I should have been glad to have said something upon the merit of the question that is involved in the sixth section; but having been out of health for a week or two, and there having been a list made of Senators to speak, which I did not wish ungraciously to interfere with, the opportunity has not offered itself; but I think it a duty to offer this amendment to come in at the place I have stated. The proviso to the sixth section is—

That nothing contained in this section, as now amended, shall be held or deemed to abridge or affect the duty or power of the President of the United States, under section 5297 of the Revised Statutes, enacted under and to enable the United States to comply with section 4 of article 4 of the Constitution of the United States on application of the Legislature or executive, as provided for in said section.

That proviso to the prohibitory clause of the use of the Army to keep the peace of the United States,—that is, to prevent forcible and violent obstructions to the execution of its laws,—is inserted in order to allow the peace of the United States, and of the States too, to be kept by military force on election day, if it be on the call of the executive of a State, or of the State Legislature; and that covers not merely a Federal election, as it is called, (I should say a national election,) but it covers State elections proper, with which the United States, except under the guarantee clause and the invasion clause of the Constitution, have nothing whatever to do in the way of exerting power.

Therefore this bill itself, and this proviso sent over from the House of Representatives, recognize in the fullest degree the necessity of providing by law for the presence of the armed power of the United States, which is nothing but the power of the law and of the people, in order to repress illegal violence even, against the rights of the citizens of the States to elect their own State officers. So, I take it, the theory of the bill demonstrates that the presence of armed force in the name of the law, and under the law, and for the law, and for keeping peace at the polls, is recognized as one of the duties not only of the States but of the United States.

The amendment I have offered proposes to declare that in the same way and upon the same constitutional principle of proper necessity—

Whenever, by reason—

And now I read from the Revised Statutes of the United States to which my amendment applies, beginning with the act passed in 1792, in the administration of George Washington, stating in these very words, I believe, certainly substantially so, that—

Whenever, by reason of unlawful obstructions, combinations, or assemblages of persons, or rebellion against the authority of the Government of the United States, it shall become impracticable in the judgment of the President, to enforce, by the ordinary course of judicial proceedings, the laws of the United States, within any State or Territory, it shall be lawful for the President to call forth the militia of any or all the States, and to employ such parts of the land and naval forces of the United States as he may deem necessary to enforce the faithful execution of the laws of the United States, or to suppress—this violence. The act of 1792 said, to suppress obstructions to the execution of the laws of the United States, and to see that they were carried into execution. Therefore, if the election of a member of Congress is a part of the thing to be done by the Constitution of the United States and under its authority, and is to be done pursuant to the laws of the United States, which have provided, as we agree, right or wrong, for a certain supervision and inspection, and security of peace and fair play at the polls, where there is a forcible obstruction to the execution of the laws of the United States, then I say that this bill ought to contain all the provision which has existed since the administration of Washington, that forcible and violent opposition to the execution of the laws of the United States may also be suppressed, as well as opposition to the laws of the States by the forces of the Union.

That is the object of this amendment, and on it I ask for the yeas and nays. The time is up.

Mr. EATON. I move that the amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont lie on the table.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us have the yeas and nays, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Connecticut moves that the amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont do lie on the table, on which motion the Senator from Vermont demands the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered and taken.

Mr. WINDOM. I will announce again, once for all on the unimportant votes, that I am paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. DAVIS] on every vote relating to this bill.

The result was announced—yeas 40, nays 28; as follows:

YEAS—40.

Bailey,	Cockrell,	Garland,	Harris,
Bayard,	Coke,	Gordon,	Hereford,
Beck,	Davis of Illinois,	Groome,	Hill of Georgia,
Butler,	Eaton,	Grover,	Houston,
Call,	Farley,	Hampton,	Johnston,

Jonas,	Morgan,	Slater,	Walker,
Jones of Florida,	Pendleton,	Thurman,	Wallace,
Kernan,	Randolph,	Vance,	Whyte,
McDonald,	Ransom,	Vest,	Williams,
Maxey,	Saulsbury,	Voorhees,	Withers.

NAYS—28.

Allison,	Cameron of Pa.,	Hamlin,	Morrill,
Anthony,	Carpenter,	Hill of Colorado,	Paddock,
Bell,	Chandler,	Ingalls,	Platt,
Blaine,	Conkling,	Jones of Nevada,	Plumb,
Booth,	Dawes,	Kirkwood,	Rollins,
Burnside,	Edmunds,	Logan,	Saunders,
Cameron of Wis.,	Ferry,	McMillan,	Teller.

ABSENT—8.

Bruce,	Hoar,	Lamar,	Sharon,
Davis of W. Va.,	Kellogg,	McPherson,	Windom.

So the amendment was ordered to lie on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of three o'clock having arrived, all debate on this bill ceases. The bill was read and considered by sections up to and including section 6. If there are no further amendments to section 6 to be offered, the Chair suggests that the reading proceed and that amendments be offered to the subsequent sections as they are reached.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not know any rule which provides for the proceeding of the Senate in that way. I suppose the bill is open to amendments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Undoubtedly it is open to amendment. The Chair only suggested that course as a matter of convenience.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Do I understand the Chair to say that it is an order of the Senate that the debate ceases, or is it an understanding such as has always been had heretofore?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The understanding is such as is usually had.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Ah, yes; I shall obey that with equal pleasure; I only wanted to know which it was. I have an amendment to offer.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. To which section?

Mr. EDMUNDS. To section 6.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Then that is a proper amendment to be offered at this time.

Mr. EDMUNDS. On page 14, line 24, which is in section 6, after the word "States," I move to insert:

Or unless such force shall be necessary to be used to execute the laws of the United States contained in sections 5297, 5298, or 5599 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

I ask that the section may be read in connection, so that we may see how it would read if amended as I propose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The whole section?

Mr. EDMUNDS. No, sir; the clause beginning at line 17, to save time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That portion of the section will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

And that section 5528 of the Revised Statutes be amended so as to read as follows:

Every officer of the Army or Navy, or other person in the civil, military, or naval service of the United States, who orders, brings, keeps, or has under his authority or control any troops or armed men at any place where a general or special election is held in any State, unless such force be necessary to repel armed enemies of the United States, or unless such force shall be necessary to be used to execute the laws of the United States contained in sections 5297, 5298, or 5299 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, shall be fined not more than $5,000, and suffer imprisonment at hard labor not less than three months nor more than five years.

Mr. EDMUNDS. On that amendment I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. EATON. I move that the amendment lie on the table.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have a right to have the yeas and nays ordered, on my request, I think, if I can get a fifth of the Senators to do it. Then the Senator can make his motion if he thinks it is within the understanding.

Mr. EATON. I am obliged to the Senator. I certainly did not intend to prevent the Senator from Vermont from securing the ordering of the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont offers an amendment, which has been read, and on that he demands the yeas and nays.

Mr. WITHERS. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Connecticut moves to lay the amendment on the table.

Mr. WITHERS. That is it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry, or whatever it may be. I read from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of to-day the proceedings of yesterday afternoon:

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will once more state the proposition and again ask the Senate whether there is any objection to it. The proposition is, that at three o'clock to-morrow all debate on this bill shall cease, and the Senate shall then proceed to vote upon any pending amendment or amendments that may be offered, and finally on the bill itself, without further debate.

I wish to ask the Chair and gentlemen on the other side whether laying these amendments on the table and not voting upon them as amendments, but laying them aside (for under our rules it is merely laying them aside in the technical sense, although we know it is death now) is within the understanding? The understanding was that we should vote on the amendments, and not dodge a vote on the amendments.

Mr. EATON. There is no dodging about it. A motion to lay on the table is perfectly proper under the understanding. It is a vote on the amendment to place it upon the table, where it belongs, in our opinion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state that there was nothing in the understanding which induced the Chair to suppose for a moment that a motion to lay an amendment on the table would not be in order. The Chair did not suppose that there was anything in the order that intended to make it obligatory upon the Senate to vote directly upon an amendment instead of laying it on the table, especially as this is an appropriation bill, and one of the modes of getting rid of an amendment on an appropriation bill is to lay it on the table.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then I will ask if it is within the understanding of the order that I may ask for the yeas and nays on the motion to lay the amendment on the table? Is that within the understanding?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont demands the yeas and nays on the motion to lay the amendment on the table. Is there a second?

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 40, nays 30; as follows:

YEAS—40.

Bailey,	Garland,	Jonas,	Slater,
Bayard,	Gordon,	Jones of Florida,	Thurman,
Beck,	Groome,	Kernan,	Vance,
Butler,	Grover,	Lamar,	Vest,
Call,	Hampton,	Maxey,	Voorhees,
Cockrell,	Harris,	Morgan,	Walker,
Coke,	Hereford,	Pendleton,	Wallace,
Davis of Illinois,	Hill of Georgia,	Randolph,	Whyte,
Eaton,	Houston,	Ransom,	Williams,
Farley,	Johnston,	Saulsbury,	Withers.

NAYS—30.

Allison,	Cameron of Wis.,	Hill of Colorado,	Paddock,
Anthony,	Carpenter,	Ingalls,	Platt,
Bell,	Chandler,	Jones of Nevada,	Plumb,
Blaine,	Conkling,	Kellogg,	Rollins,
Booth,	Dawes,	Kirkwood,	Saunders,
Bruce,	Edmunds,	Logan,	Teller.
Burnside,	Ferry,	McMillan,
Cameron of Pa.,	Hamlin,	Morrill,

ABSENT—6.

Davis of W. Va.,	McDonald,	Sharon,	Windom.
Hoar,	McPherson,

So the amendment was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. CARPENTER. I move to amend the bill by striking out the ninth section.

Mr. WITHERS. I suggest to the Senator that it would be better to have read the seventh and eighth sections and then reach the ninth section.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the Senator has no objection the seventh and eighth sections will be read.

Mr. CARPENTER. Certainly.

The Chief Clerk read the seventh section of the bill, as follows:

SEC. 7. That the Secretary of War shall be authorized to detail an officer of the Army, not above the rank of captain, for special duty with reference to Indian education.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Has there been any vote upon that section?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. None whatever.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. Mr. President——

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to move an amendment to it.

Mr. CONKLING. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. DAVIS] has an amendment to offer.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I yield to the Senator from Illinois, of course,—the only impartial man in the body.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I thank you, sir, for that compliment, whether meant in jest or earnest.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It was meant in jest.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. Captain Grant of the Army has charge of certain Indians for the purpose of educating them at the Hampton school, at Hampton Roads. He met me the other day and suggested——

Mr. WITHERS. I would suggest to the Senator——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will remind Senators that debate is not in order.

Mr. WITHERS. I only intended to suggest to the Senator from Illinois that any remarks would open the door to debate.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I want to change the section by striking out in line 2 the words "an officer of the Army" and inserting "one or more officers of the Army," and at the end inserting:

And authority is given the Secretary of War to use any unoccupied forts and barracks available for Indian education so long as not required for military purposes.

So as to make the seventh section read:

That the Secretary of War shall be authorized to detail one or more officers of the Army, not above the rank of captain, for special duty with reference to Indian education; and authority is given the Secretary of War to use any barracks available for Indian education so long as not required for military purposes.

I would not have said a word, but I did not know that it would violate the understanding.

Mr. WITHERS. I move that the amendment be laid upon the table.

The motion was agreed to; there being on a division—ayes 34, noes 24.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will report section 8.

The Chief Clerk read the eighth section of the bill, as follows:

Section 8. That section 6 of the act approved June 18, 1878, making appropriations for the support of the Army, be, and is hereby, repealed: Provided, That when the economy of the service requires, the Secretary of War shall direct the establishment of military headquarters at points where suitable buildings are owned by the Government.

The ninth section was read, as follows:

SEC. 9. That from and after the passage of this act, and until it shall be otherwise provided by law, there shall be no promotions or appointments in the Army above the rank of captain, except in the Corps of Engineers; and the actual time of service in the Army or Navy of the United States shall be allowed all officers in computing their pay; and that no officer below the rank of major shall be transferred to the retired list, except upon the report of a duly constituted board of officers, to the effect that such officer is no longer fit for active service; and that any officer hereafter retired by reason of wounds received in action shall be retired upon the highest rank, exclusive of brevet rank, actually held by such officer in the regular or volunteer service before retirement: Provided, That nothing shall prevent the appointment of a Chief of Engineers, with the rank of brigadier-general, when a vacancy shall occur, nor shall it prevent the promotion of any captain who has served twenty years in the United States Army.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. CARPENTER] now moves to strike out the ninth section of the bill.

Mr. ALLISON. Before that motion is made I wish to move to amend the ninth section in line 14.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let the question be first taken on striking out. The Senator can move the amendment afterward.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is not likely to be stricken out.

Mr. CARPENTER. I move to strike out section 9 of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has just stated the motion.

Mr. WITHERS. I move to lay the motion on the table.

Mr. CARPENTER. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. CONKLING. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Does the rule permit a motion to strike out to be laid on the table as an amendment?

Mr. WITHERS. It is in the form of an amendment, and such motions can be generally laid on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Rule 29 declares that—

Any amendment to a general appropriation bill may be laid on the table without prejudice to the bill.

There is no doubt that this is a general appropriation bill, and in the opinion of the Chair a motion to strike out a portion of the bill is an amendment to the bill, and the motion may be laid on the table. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Virginia to lay the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin on the table, on which the yeas and nays are demanded.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ROLLINS, (when his name was called.) On this question I am paired with the Senator from Georgia, [Mr. GORDON,] who is detained from the Chamber. If he were present I should vote "nay."

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 39, nays 28; as follows:

YEAS—39.

Bailey,	Groome,	Kernan,	Thurman,
Bayard,	Grover,	Lamar,	Vance,
Beck,	Hampton,	McDonald,	Vest,
Butler,	Harris,	Maxey,	Voorhees,
Call,	Hereford,	Morgan,	Walker,
Cockrell,	Hill of Georgia,	Pendleton,	Wallace,
Coke,	Houston,	Randolph,	Whyte,
Eaton,	Johnston,	Ransom,	Williams,
Farley,	Jonas,	Saulsbury,	Withers.
Garland,	Jones of Florida,	Slater,

NAYS—28.

Allison,	Cameron of Wis.,	Ferry,	McMillan,
Bell,	Carpenter,	Hamlin,	Morrill,
Blaine,	Chandler,	Hill of Colorado,	Paddock,
Booth,	Conkling,	Ingalls,	Platt,
Bruce,	Davis of Illinois,	Jones of Nevada,	Plumb,
Burnside,	Dawes,	Kirkwood,	Saunders,
Cameron of Pa.,	Edmunds,	Logan,	Teller.

ABSENT—9.

Anthony,	Hoar,	McPherson,	Sharon,
Davis of W. Va.,	Kellogg,	Rollins,	Windom.
Gordon,

So the motion to strike out the ninth section was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. CARPENTER. I move to amend the ninth section by striking out these words:

That from and after the passage of this act, and until it shall be otherwise provided by law, there shall be no promotions or appointments in the Army above the rank of captain, except in the Corps of Engineers; and.

I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

Mr. WITHERS. I move to lay the amendment on the table.

Mr. CARPENTER. Let us see whether we can have the yeas and nays ordered first. I called for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the opinion of the Chair a motion to lay on the table may be made at any time.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Not when a demand for the yeas and nays is pending, Mr. President, I submit with great respect and with great confidence.

Mr. WITHERS. They may be ordered before the motion to lay on the table is made.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But preceding the motion to lay on the table there is a demand for the yeas and nays. Of course, if ordered, the call will be superseded by a motion to lay on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The demand, then, must be considered a part of the motion; but that is not the impression of the Chair. However, the Chair will conform to the opinion of more experienced Senators and entertain the call. Is there a second to the demand for the yeas and nays?

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Now the Senator from Virginia moves to lay the amendment on the table.

Mr. CARPENTER. I ask for the yeas and nays on that motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 40, nays 29; as follows:

YEAS—40.

Bailey,	Gordon,	Jones of Florida,	Slater,
Bayard,	Groome,	Kernan,	Thurman.
Beck,	Grover,	Lamar,	Vance,
Butler,	Hampton,	McDonald,	Vest,
Call,	Harris,	Maxey,	Voorhees
Cockrell,	Hereford,	Morgan,	Walker,
Coke,	Hill of Georgia,	Pendleton,	Wallace,
Eaton,	Houston,	Randolph,	Whyte,
Farley,	Johnston,	Ransom,	Williams,
Garland,	Jonas,	Saulsbury,	Withers.

NAYS—29.

Allison,	Cameron of Wis.,	Hill of Colorado,	Platt,
Anthony,	Carpenter,	Jones of Nevada,	Plumb,
Bell,	Chandler,	Kellogg,	Rollins,
Blaine,	Conkling,	Kirkwood,	Saunders,
Booth,	Dawes,	Logan,	Teller.
Bruce,	Edmunds,	McMillan,
Burnside,	Ferry,	Morrill,
Cameron of Pa.,	Hamlin,	Paddock,

ABSENT—7.

Davis of Illinois,	Hoar,	McPherson,	Windom.
Davis of W. Va.,	Ingalls,	Sharon,

So the amendment was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. CARPENTER. Mr. President, I move to amend the ninth section, in the fourth line, by inserting after the words "except in the Corps of Engineers" the words "and in the artillery."

Mr. WITHERS. I move to lay the amendment on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin moves to insert the words "and in the artillery." The Senator from Virginia moves to lay on the table the motion to amend. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Virginia.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, in the same line, after the word "engineers," I move to insert "and chiefs of the several staff corps."

Mr. WITHERS. I move to lay the amendment on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Virginia moves to lay the amendment on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. I move now to strike out all the words after "captain," in line 4 of section 9, to and including the word "engineers" in line 5, striking out the words "excepting in the Corps of Engineers."

Mr. WITHERS. I move to lay that amendment on the table.

Mr. PLUMB. I ask for the yeas and nays on that motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 39, nays 29; as follows:

YEAS—39.

Bailey,	Gordon,	Kernan,	Thurman,
Bayard,	Groome,	Lamar,	Vance,
Beck,	Hampton,	McDonald,	Vest,
Butler,	Harris,	Maxey,	Voorhees,
Call,	Hereford,	Morgan,	Walker,
Cockrell,	Hill of Georgia,	Pendleton,	Wallace,
Coke,	Houston,	Randolph,	Whyte,
Eaton,	Johnston,	Ransom,	Williams,
Farley,	Jonas,	Saulsbury,	Withers.
Garland,	Jones of Florida,	Slater,

NAYS—29.

Allison,	Cameron of Wis.,	Hill of Colorado,	Platt,
Anthony,	Carpenter,	Ingalls,	Plumb,
Bell,	Chandler,	Kellogg,	Rollins,
Blaine,	Conkling,	Kirkwood,	Saunders,
Booth,	Davis of Illinois,	Logan,	Teller.
Bruce,	Edmunds,	McMillan,
Burnside,	Ferry,	Morrill,
Cameron of Pa.,	Hamlin,	Paddock,

ABSENT—8.

Davis of W. Va.,	Grover,	Jones of Nevada,	Sharon,
Dawes,	Hoar,	McPherson,	Windom.

So it was ordered that the amendment lie on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further amendments, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Amendments are still in order.

Mr. EDMUNDS. On page 14, line 24, after the words "United States," I move to insert the words "or to be used in accordance with the provisions of section 2002 as amended by this act;" so that it will read:

Every officer of the Army or Navy, or other person in the civil, military, or naval service of the United States, who orders, brings, keeps, or has under his authority or control any troops or armed men at any place where a general or special election is held in any State, unless such force be necessary to repel armed enemies of the United States, or to be used in accordance with the provisions of section 2002 as amended by this act, shall be fined not more than $5,000, &c.

In order to make it conform to the preceding proviso as to a call on the President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. WITHERS. I move that the amendment be laid upon the table.

Mr. EDMUNDS. On that motion I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 38, nays 28; as follows:

YEAS—38.

Bayard,	Grover,	Lamar,	Vance,
Beck,	Hampton,	McDonald,	Vest,
Call,	Harris,	Maxey,	Voorhees,
Cockrell,	Hereford,	Morgan,	Walker,
Coke,	Hill of Georgia,	Pendleton,	Wallace,
Eaton,	Houston,	Randolph,	Whyte,
Farley,	Johnston,	Ransom,	Williams,
Garland,	Jonas,	Saulsbury,	Withers.
Gordon,	Jones of Florida,	Slater,
Groome,	Kernan,	Thurman,

NAYS—28.

Allison,	Cameron of Wis.,	Hamlin,	Morrill,
Anthony,	Carpenter,	Hill of Colorado,	Paddock,
Bell,	Chandler,	Ingalls,	Platt,
Blaine,	Conkling,	Jones of Nevada,	Plumb,
Booth,	Dawes,	Kirkwood,	Rollins,
Bruce,	Edmunds,	Logan,	Saunders,
Burnside,	Ferry,	McMillan,	Teller.

ABSENT—10.

Bailey,	Davis of Illinois,	Kellogg,	Windom.
Butler,	Davis of W. Va.,	McPherson,
Cameron of Pa.,	Hoar,	Sharon,

So it was ordered that the amendment lie on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further amendments, the question is, Shall the bill be read the third time?

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and was read the third time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. EDMUNDS. On that I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CARPENTER. Are amendments still in order?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Not after the third reading of the bill.

Mr. CARPENTER. I am sorry, because I wished to offer an amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll on the passage of the bill.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HEREFORD, (when the name of Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia, was called.) My colleague [Mr. DAVIS] is paired with the Senator from Minnesota, [Mr. WINDOM.] If he were here, my colleague would vote "yea."

Mr. WINDOM, (when his name was called.) I desire to say that I am paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. DAVIS] on this question. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. DAWES. I desire to state that on the final passage of the bill, my colleague [Mr. HOAR] being necessarily absent, is paired with the Senator from New Jersey, [Mr. MCPHERSON.] My colleague, if present, would vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 41, nays 30; as follows:

YEAS—41.

Bailey,	Gordon,	Kernan,	Vance,
Bayard,	Groome,	Lamar,	Vest,
Beck,	Grover,	McDonald,	Voorhees,
Butler,	Hampton,	Maxey,	Walker,
Call,	Harris,	Morgan,	Wallace,
Cockrell,	Hereford,	Pendleton,	Whyte,
Coke,	Hill of Georgia,	Randolph,	Williams,
Davis of Illinois,	Houston,	Ransom,	Withers.
Eaton,	Johnston,	Saulsbury,
Farley,	Jonas,	Slater,
Garland,	Jones of Florida,	Thurman,

NAYS—30.

Allison,	Cameron of Wis.,	Hill of Colorado,	Paddock,
Anthony,	Carpenter,	Ingalls,	Platt,
Bell,	Chandler,	Jones of Nevada,	Plumb,
Blaine,	Conkling,	Kellogg,	Rollins,
Booth,	Dawes,	Kirkwood,	Saunders,
Bruce,	Edmunds,	Logan,	Teller.
Burnside,	Ferry,	McMillan,
Cameron of Pa.,	Hamlin,	Morrill,

ABSENT—5.

Davis of W. Va.,	McPherson,	Sharon,	Windom.
Hoar,

So the bill was passed.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. ANTHONY. I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

Mr. WITHERS. I hope not. We have got something to do to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Rhode Island moves that when the Senate adjourns to-day it be to meet on Monday next. The question is on that motion.

Mr. WITHERS. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 41, nays 26; as follows:

YEAS—41.

Allison,	Coke,	Johnston,	Randolph,
Anthony,	Conkling,	Jones of Florida,	Ransom,
Bayard,	Davis of Illinois,	Jones of Nevada,	Saulsbury,
Beck,	Edmunds,	Kellogg,	Saunders,
Blaine,	Farley,	Kirkwood,	Teller,
Booth,	Gordon,	Lamar,	Vest,
Bruce,	Hamlin,	Logan,	Whyte,
Butler,	Hereford,	McMillan,	Williams.
Cameron of Pa.,	Hill of Colorado,	Morrill,
Cameron of Wis.,	Hill of Georgia,	Pendleton,
Chandler,	Ingalls,	Plumb,

NAYS—26.

Bailey,	Garland,	Maxey,	Vance,
Bell,	Grover,	Morgan,	Voorhees,
Burnside,	Hampton,	Paddock,	Walker,
Call,	Harris,	Platt,	Wallace,
Dawes,	Houston,	Rollins,	Withers.
Eaton,	Jonas,	Slater,
Ferry,	Kernan,	Thurman,

ABSENT—9.

Carpenter,	Groome,	McDonald,	Sharon,
Cockrell,	Hoar,	McPherson,	Windom.
Davis of W. Va.,

So the motion was agreed to.

CHANGES OF SUNDRY CIVIL BILL.

Mr. EATON. I move that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution (H. R. No. 1) to repeal certain clauses in the sundry civil appropriation act approved March 3, 1879.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Connecticut moves to take up the resolution he has designated.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is that on the Calendar?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that it is reported by the Committee on Appropriations.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. Now, Mr. President, I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. EATON. I do not care to press the joint resolution to-night. I merely want to have it before the Senate.

Mr. ALLISON. I withdraw the motion to adjourn.

Mr. EATON. I have charge of this resolution from the Committee on Appropriations, and whenever the Senate is ready on Monday next I shall give way to my friend from Ohio, [Mr. PENDLETON,] so that he may submit some remarks on a bill which he has introduced.

COMMITTEE SERVICE.

Mr. LAMAR. I move that the vacancy in the Committee on the Improvement of the Mississippi River and its Tributaries be filled by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to by unanimous consent; and the President pro tempore appointed Mr. BRUCE to fill the vacancy.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. GARLAND. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After fifty-five minutes spent in executive session, the doors were reopened.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. GEORGE M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. No. 1) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

On motion of Mr. WALLACE, the Senate (at five o'clock and thirteen minutes p. m.) adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, April 25, 1879.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. P. HARRISON, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I move that the rules be suspended for the purpose of dispensing with the morning hour.

The motion was agreed to, two-thirds voting in favor thereof.

REPORT OF ENTOMOLOGICAL COMMISSION.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, inclosing a communication from Professor C. V. Riley, chief of the entomological commission, relating to the publication of another edition of the first report of said commission; which was referred to the Committee on Printing.

WATER RENTS IN DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the commissioners of the District of Columbia, relative to water rents in the District; which was referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

By unanimous consent, leave was granted for the withdrawal of papers in the following cases, there having been no adverse report:

To Mr. GOODE, in the case of Anna Perry; and

To Mr. EVINS, in the case of Phœbe Meek.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. WILSON, for three days, on account of sickness in his family.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CLYMER. I move that the rules be suspended and the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of proceeding with the consideration of the legislative appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. BLACKBURN in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 2) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes.

Mr. MANNING. Mr. Chairman, so much ground has been already traversed in this protracted debate, and so many arguments have been submitted and elaborated by gentlemen who have preceded me in this discussion, I shall find it difficult, if not impossible, to make any suggestion that will further elucidate the question at issue.

The single issue worthy of our attention in this discussion is, Shall this Government have the power to place soldiers and civil officers at the polling precincts throughout this country with authority to arrest voters? I shall not discuss the merits of the test oath, as the law imposing that oath has been repealed, and it is admitted is now upon our statute-book by mistake, inadvertence, or fraud on the part of the commissioners charged with the duty of simplifying, arranging, and consolidating the statutes of the United States.

Republicans upon this floor maintain that the laws asserting the right to place soldiers and civil officers at the polls should not be repealed, and we declare that they should. It is unfortunate for the country and also for the members of this Congress that we have not been able in this protracted debate to address ourselves to the consideration of the great subject before us with the greatest calmness and deliberation.

In my judgment, there should be no difference of opinion touching the merits of the proposition to repeal these laws among those who are friendly to the form and genius of this Government, and who desire to maintain and uphold that form in its purity, dignity, and grandeur; but there can be but little hope that our diverse views upon this or any other subject will ever be reconciled, while the "warp and woof" of our speeches are largely made up with passionate appeals that would be more fitting from the leaders of a mob than even from a private citizen without official station and responsibility, and having only a general interest in the welfare of the country.

The greatest reformation that could take place in this land—a reformation whose influence would radiate coextensively with the country—would be for us all to feel and realize in our heart of hearts that duty to ourselves, and to the best interests of the Government, should constantly be our pole-star; that it should be the nucleus around which should center the attributes of our greatness; that it should be an amulet to nerve our arms with new strength, and cheer and invigorate our hearts with a consciousness of its rectitude; that it should occupy our every thought as public men, and then we could expect to pass unsullied and unharmed through the fiery ordeal of the political crucible. A consciousness of duty performed would preserve you unmoved amid the incense of popular adulation on the one hand—or the storms of popular prejudice on the other, and at last entitle your brows to wreaths of purest fame.

I heartily concur that the principle now contended for is the great foundation-stone of republican institutions; that it is the pivotal principle of free government. The right of free election and the absence of troops from the polls comes down to us sanctified and endeared by the experience and good judgment of over twenty generations of the race from whom our laws and liberties have been obtained; and we would prove recreant and faithless to those we now represent, and to those who are to follow us in succeeding Congresses, and also to the generations that are to come after us, if we neglect the opportunity to repeal these unconstitutional and anti-republican laws, and to assert in this substantial manner this time-honored principle. It is trifling with history to declare that the framers of our organic law did not thoroughly consider, understand, and appreciate all the English liberty laws, and did not reproduce them for the people of this country with increased force and grandeur. It will be difficult to find a State constitution that is so crudely drawn as not to have therein the overshadowing doctrine that all elections shall be free. And yet, notwithstanding all this crystallization and reproduction of the right and privilege now demanded, there are gentlemen upon this floor who announce to the country that it is revolutionary to insist upon this doctrine. With the light of history before us it is manifest that the Constitution would never have been ratified if its framers had even intimated that it contained the doctrine now asserted by the republican party. I venture to assert that no other principle that has ever engaged the consideration of the American people, from the foundation of the Government down to this time, has been so overwhelmingly recognized and indorsed throughout the length and breadth of this land as that for which the democratic party now contends. This principle was universally recognized and upheld by all the political parties of this country anterior to the breaking out of the recent war; and then, for well-understood reasons, the republican party declared that the election should be controlled by the General Government.

But for our internecine strife no man would have been found bold enough to advocate such a monstrous doctrine. If the people are not entitled to be free from executive interference, and are not fitted for free elections, let it be boldly announced and maintained. We are called revolutionists and enemies to the peace, quiet, and prosperity of this country because we ask that these measures, born of the passions of the late struggle, shall now be repealed; but the honest, intelligent, and dispassionate voters cannot be deluded with this cry. The people care nothing about the method adopted to secure the recognition of their rights; they only desire us to consider the wisdom of the proposed legislation; but it is a well-known fact that there are numerous precedents for the method now adopted, and that we are in accord with both rule and Constitution. They do not need assistance, I hope, in understanding the true meaning and intent of the resistance which is now so energetically and desperately interposed to the passage of these bills. It is apparent from this discussion that the great object in view is to inflame the passions of the country, for it is not reasonable that the President will veto these measures. All fair-minded men must know that if we fail in our efforts to bring the country back to its original moorings on this all-important question, a direful revolution in the very form of our government will follow, and that it will in time probably result in absolute despotism.

The impartial observer of the history of the republican party must know that its revolutionary and centralizing acts commenced with its very advent into power, and since then it has followed wherever hate, malice, and ambition have suggested. It has waged wicked wars upon the rights of the States, upon the Chief Executive, and upon the court of last resorts, whenever such ruthless steps would tend to the accomplishment of party ends. The utter annihilation of certain State governments, the impeachment and trial of a President for certain alleged high crimes and misdemeanors, and the passage of a law by this House, in 1868, that was obviously intended to prohibit the Supreme Court of the United States from concurring with any United States or circuit judge in the event that such judge should declare such act unconstitutional or invalid, are marked instances of the revolutionary and despotic purposes and temper of the republican party.

The latter act clearly betrays a guilty consciousness that unconstitutional laws had been passed. Perhaps if this progressive party again has control of the law-making branch of this Government it will declare by legislative act that for the purpose of preparing electors and officials for the proper discharge of their respective duties certain mental and physical qualifications shall be possessed; as Plato, Aristotle, and other distinguished men in different ages of the world believed that no republic could be deemed perfect in which gymnasia as a part of their national establishments were neglected; that as the sanior pars populi—the cultivated minds of the nation—will be but ill-fitted to exert any powerful influence on the less enlightened minds of their fellow-countrymen if they are wanting in physical strength and development; as our muscles and nerves must be toughened and invigorated if we hope to possess the power and the needful vigor of mind and body to control men, we will perhaps be gravely asked to support a law to produce these inestimable results. When we have taken that important lesson at the hands of our republican leaders, who would not then be prepared to give in his adhesion to that other kindred doctrine for the improvement of the human family of which Mr. Darwin has so charmingly (?) written? I fancy when that day comes that several at least of the present republican beacon-lights upon this floor, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] and the gentleman from New Jersey, [Mr. ROBESON,] for instance, will stand forth as the champions of the Darwinian theory; but they can hardly hope that some who have not been blessed with such physical vigor as they enjoy, on their own side and some on ours, will be able to judge impartially and unselfishly of a revolution so great as that.

But to be serious, Mr. Chairman, who so wise that he can foretell the extent to which this centralizing doctrine of supervising the ballot with the bayonet and civil officers will go? If it is important to send soldiers and civil officers to watch an elector while he exercises the elective franchise; if that confidence in the integrity and capacity of State officials, and in the efficiency and wisdom of State laws is to be withdrawn, then it is more important to carry your supervising and overseeing forces into the very halls of State and National Legislatures. The members upon this floor each cast but one vote in their respective States; they are no more virtuous and intelligent here than when they cast a single vote at home under the eye of a supervising Federal officer or soldier; yet by our representative system of government we are each empowered, practically, by law to cast here about 30,000 votes, and each Senator casts from 50,000 to 500,000 votes. The Vice-President and Speaker of this House, on occasions when the casting vote is to be by them given, have the authority respectively conferred upon them to speak the final words for about nine millions of electors. Our countrymen would be startled if they thought that we were drifting to this autocratic ground, and yet the advocates of the present election laws could easily and with force reply that we should determine the importance for the supervision of every vote cast by the importance of the vote itself.

It would be as defensible to put your soldiers here on this floor as it was to place them upon the floors of certain State Legislatures; and it would be more defensible for the General of the Army to enter these halls, and settle all contested-election cases now pending here, than it was for General Sheridan to determine who should occupy seats in the Louisiana Legislature, as in that case many were unseated whose election had received the benediction of the immaculate returning board of that State. I call to my support upon this branch of my remarks the utterances of a Cabinet officer while a Senator of the United States, and for the further purpose of showing what is likely to be his counsel to the President when these bills are presented for his action, and my apology for the lengthy extract I make from his speech is because his words are "like apples of gold in pictures of silver" touching the subject in hand:

I must confess that the news that came from Louisiana a few days ago has profoundly alarmed me. A thing has happened which has never happened in this country before, and which nobody, I trust, ever thought possible.

When the Legislature convened—and I repeat, it convened according to law, at the time and in the place fixed by law, called to order by the very officer designated by law—those persons were claimants for seats on the ground of the votes they had; some of them presenting claims so strong on the ground of majorities so large that even such a returning board as Louisiana had did not dare to decide against them; and when they had been seated in the Legislature organized as I have described, United States soldiers with fixed bayonets decided the case against them and took them out of the legislative hall by force. When that had been done the conservative members left that hall in a body with a solemn protest. The United States soldiery kept possession of it; and then, under their protection, the republicans organized the Legislature to suit themselves.

There is another thing which especially the American people hold sacred as the life element of their republican freedom. It is the right to govern and administer their local affairs independently, through the exercise of that self-government which lives and has its being in the organism of the States; and, therefore, we find in the Constitution of the Republic the power of the National Government to interfere in State affairs most scrupulously limited to certain well-defined cases and the observance of certain strictly prescribed forms; and if these limitations be arbitrarily disregarded by the national authority, and if such violation be permitted by the Congress of the United States, we shall surely have reason to say that our system of republican government is in danger.

I cannot, therefore, escape from the deliberate conviction, a conviction conscientiously formed, that the deed done on the 4th of January in the state-house of the State of Louisiana by the military forces of the United States constitutes a gross and manifest violation of the Constitution and the laws of this Republic. We have an act before us indicating a spirit in our Government which either ignores the Constitution and the laws or so interprets them that they cease to be the safeguard of the independence of legislation and of the rights and liberties of our people. And that spirit shows itself in a shape more alarming still in the instrument the Executive has chosen to execute his behests.

On all sides you can hear the question asked, "If this can be done in Louisiana, and if such things be sustained by Congress, how long will it be before it can be done in Massachusetts and in Ohio? How long before the constitutional rights of all the States and the self-government of all the people may be trampled under foot? How long before a general of the Army may sit in the chair you occupy, sir, to decide contested-election cases for the purpose of manufacturing a majority in the Senate? How long before a soldier may stalk into the national House of Representatives, and, pointing to the Speaker's mace, say, 'take away that bauble?'"

* * * * * * * *

The Federal office-holders in the South became the center of partisan intrigue and trickery. The Caseys and Packards carried off State senators in United States revenue cutters and held republican conventions in United States custom-houses, guarded by United States soldiers to prevent other republican factions from interfering. Nay, more than that, Mr. Packard, during the last election campaign in Louisiana, being at the same time United States marshal and chairman of KELLOGG'S campaign committee, managing not only the campaign, but also the movements of the United States dragoons, to enforce the laws and to keep his political opponents from "intimidating" his political friends. More than that, in one State after another in the South we saw enterprising politicians start rival Legislatures and rival governments, much in the way of Mexican pronunciamientos, calculating on the aid to be obtained from the National Government—the Attorney-General of the United States called upon to make or unmake governors of States by the mere wave of his hand, and the Department of Justice almost appearing like the central bureau for the regulation of State elections. And still more than that, we saw a Federal judge in Louisiana, by a midnight order, universally recognized as a gross and most unjustifiable usurpation, virtually making a State government and Legislature, and the National Executive with the Army sustaining that usurpation and Congress permitting it to be done.

And now the culminating glory to-day—I do not know whether it will be the culminating glory to-morrow: Federal soldiers, with fixed bayonets, marching into the legislative hall of a State, and invading the Legislature assembled in the place, and at the time fixed by law, dragging out of the body, by force, men universally recognized as claimants for membership, and having been seated; soldiers deciding contested-election cases and organizing a legislative body; the Lieutenant-General suggesting to the President to outlaw by proclamation a numerous class of people by the wholesale that he may try them by drum-head court-martial, and then the Secretary of War informing the Lieutenant-General by telegraph that "all of us," the whole Government, have full confidence in his judgment and wisdom. And, after all this, the whites of the South gradually driven to look upon the National Government as their implacable and unscrupulous enemy, and the people of the whole country full of alarm and anxiety about the safety of republican institutions and the rights of every man in the land.

He who in a place like ours fails to stop or even justifies a blow at the fundamental laws of the land makes himself the accomplice of those who strike at the life of the Republic and at the liberties of the people.

* * * * * * * *

If you really think that the peace and order of society in this country can no longer be maintained through the self-government of the people under the Constitution and the impartial enforcement of constitutional laws; if you really think that this old machinery of free government can no longer be trusted with its most important functions, and that such transgressions on the part of those in power as now pass before us are right and necessary for the public welfare, then, gentlemen, admit that the Government of the people, for the people, and by the people is a miscarriage. Admit that the hundredth anniversary of this Republic must be the confession of its failure, and make up your minds to change the form as well as the nature of our institutions; for to play at republic longer would then be a cruel mockery. But I entreat you do not delude yourselves and others with the thought that by following the fatal road upon which we are now marching you can still preserve those institutions; for I tell you, and the history of struggling mankind bears me out, where the forms of constitutional government can be violated with impunity, there the spirit of constitutional government will soon be dead.

* * * * * * * *

But still more, the people have begun to understand, and it is indeed high time they should understand, that the means professedly used to prevent and suppress outrages are producing far worse fruit than the outrages themselves; that—and hear what I say—the lawlessness of power is becoming far more dangerous to all than the lawlessness of the mob.

No more appropriate appeal to the republican party could be made at this moment and in this debate than the following, and I earnestly trust that it will be heeded, and that the distinguished gentleman will plead as patriotically with the President, should it be necessary, as he did with republican Senators:

I cry out to you once more, turn back, turn back in your dangerous course while it is yet time. In the name of that inheritance of peace and freedom which you desire to leave to your children, in the name of the pride with which the American lifts up his head among the nations of the world, do not trifle with the Constitution of your country, do not put in jeopardy that which is the dearest glory of the American name, let not the representatives of the people falter and fail in the supreme hour when the liberties of the people are at stake.

Can it be supposed that the author of these timely and patriotic words would be silent if he were to exchange his position as a Cabinet minister for a seat upon this floor? Unless he receded from the manly and statesmanlike ground which he formerly occupied, he would, if here to-day, be found contributing the full vigor of his intellect to the passage of these measures.

The question has been often asked upon the other side of this Hall, When, where, and by whom has it been demanded that these laws shall be repealed? When, where, and by whom condemned? These questions seem to illustrate that great partisan feeling and prejudice have made the propounders of these inquiries oblivious of much that has transpired in the last few years in the politics of this country. I suppose in reply to these oblivious gentlemen I have the right to cite the distinguished Cabinet officer from whom I have just read as one whose condemnation is without qualification; and it is interesting just here to know whether he was not invited by your republican President to the position which he now holds in deference to a large element in the republican party, who likewise condemn the usurpations, the fanaticisms, and unconstitutional laws and practices of that party.

But there is another Cabinet officer, your prime minister, whose judgment of condemnation I confidently invoke, and who even preceded Mr. Schurz in his patriotic speech in regard to the disgraceful invasion of the Louisiana Legislature by Sheridan and De Trobriand. Your Secretary of State, in a speech at Cooper Institute, New York, to a meeting of indignant citizens, used the following language:

Our fellow-citizens of New York have the understanding that patriotism and love of liberty and obedience to the Constitution are not in the possession of any political organization, that there are limits to their political competition and their antagonisms which no political party can safely pass. That when men vote and when their chosen officers meet and when without violence and without demonstration of insurrection they undertake to conduct the affairs of their political governments no soldiers can interfere. [Cheers.]

* * * * * * * *

There are two very distinct firm lines of limitation, which observed, will protect the machinery of the Government for the people, forty millions of people to-day, one hundred millions hereafter, that is, that the sole intervention of the Federal power within State authority shall be to suppress violence, and that their office after that shall not assume to go further unless when invited by the supreme authority of the State. [Cheers.] And that supreme authority of the State is named in the Federal Constitution, and is the Legislatures of the several States, and only in the casual condition when the Legislature is not in session can the governor represent the State, so as to demand Federal intervention in the political affairs of the State, but only on the condition that the Legislature cannot be convened.

Again he said:

Now, the laws of Congress require whenever a state of violence exists in a State to which Federal suppression should be applied that the exercise of that authority must be combined by a proclamation requiring the insurgents to disperse.

* * * * * * * *

What use is it to give the purse and the sword to the House of Commons if the King or the President by military power can determine what shall be the constitution of the House of Commons or the House of Congress? And that is what they fought for in England—the indubitable and ancient rights of Parliament to hold the purse when in danger, from the claims of royal power. For a while the House of Lords assumed the power and right to determine the qualification and membership of the House of Commons, but in 1624 the House of Commons determined that the qualifications of its members was at its own disposal; that the ancient liberties of the House of Commons required it, and no King and no House of Lords has questioned this power of the House of Commons from that day to this. [Applause.] And for this reason the people of the United States are justified in assuming that the supreme civil power shall dominate over the military, and that no merging of them or interference with them shall be permitted.

I suppose that two other Cabinet officers, the Secretary of the Navy and the Postmaster-General, will be found concurring with the Secretaries of State and Interior in their counsel to the President that these bills shall be approved, making four of the seven Cabinet officers who if consistent must stand with us in this contest, and but for the appearance of a recent article over the signature of the Secretary of War upon the subject under discussion I would feel that I was authorized to declare that he, too, was opposed to the use of the Army at the polls, for in his book on elections, page 315, section 418, he says:

An armed force in the neighborhood of the polls is almost of necessity a menace to the voters, and an interference with their freedom and independence, and if such armed force be in the hands of, or under the control of, partisan friends of any particular candidate, or set of candidates, the probability of improper influence becomes still stronger.

But this distinguished law writer has changed his views, like another contributor to judicial science who wrote commentaries upon the laws of England, and then saw fit to expound a different and conflicting doctrine after he became a politician. "Is this the wisdom of a great minister or the ominous vibration of a pendulum?" Junius's criticism of Blackstone in reference to his somersault in the celebrated Luttrell case may justly be made of our present Secretary of War in regard to his inconsistencies on the important question now before us.

It is more pardonable for him to change his views, however, than it is to predicate that change upon the alleged imperfections of the election laws in certain States, that exist only in his own imagination. For instance, on page 457 of the North American Review for May next, he says, "the vicious practice of permitting an elector to vote anywhere in the county of his residence prevails in Arkansas and in Kentucky," when the facts are that the constitutions of these States contain the following provisions respectively.

Article 3, section 1, of the former reads as follows:

> Every male citizen who has resided in the State twelve months and in the county six months and in the voting precinct or ward one month next preceding any election where he may propose to vote shall be entitled to vote, &c. (See Charters and Constitutions, The United States, part 1, page 157.)

And section 8 of article 2 of the constitution of the latter State, which was adopted in 1850, declares that:

> Every white male citizen of the age of twenty-one years who has resided in the State two years, or in the county, town, or city in which he offers to vote one year next preceding the election shall be a voter; but such voter shall have been for sixty days next preceding the election a resident of the precinct in which he offers to vote, &c. (See Charters and Constitutions, The United States, part 1, page 670.)

It seems that this distinguished writer is not aware that the republican constitution of 1868, in Arkansas, upon which he predicates his criticism, was abandoned upon the return to power of the democratic party of that State, and that the "vicious practice" of which he complains was cured by the adoption of the present democratic constitution.

It is a historic fact, I believe, that in every Southern State the republican party at once, upon its advent into power, changed the election laws so as to authorize electors to vote anywhere in the county of their residence, and that this "vicious practice" was promptly condemned, as in the case of Arkansas, as soon as the reins of government were restored to the democratic party.

Mr. Sherman, Secretary of the Treasury, strongly arraigned the democratic party in 1856 upon the charge that the Army was improperly used in the elections in Kansas Territory, and it was reserved for this gentleman at that time to contribute a precedent for the present method by placing a "rider" upon an appropriation bill, which declared that neither the governor, nor the judges of the courts of that Territory, should be paid their salaries until certain prisoners, then in the clutches of the law, were released. It is probable, however, that he has long ago changed his mind about "riders" and also about the use of the Army at the polls, and he may now counsel the President to veto these bills. But if Mr. William H. Seward were now alive he would doubtless be found in this contest on the side of a free and untrammeled ballot, for from his place in the Senate of the United States, in discussing the Kansas troubles in 1856, he declared that

> The time was, and that not long ago, when a proposition to employ the standing Army of the United States as a domestic police would have been universally denounced as a premature revelation of a plot, darkly contrived in the chambers of conspiracy, to subvert the liberties of the people and to overthrow the Republic itself.
>
> * * * * * * *
>
> Civil liberty and a standing army for the purposes of civil police have never yet stood together, and never can stand together. If I am to choose, sir, between upholding laws in any part of this Republic which cannot be maintained without a standing army, or relinquishing the laws themselves, I give up the laws at once, by whomsoever they are made and by whatever authority; for either our system of government is radically wrong, or such laws are unjust, unequal, and pernicious.
>
> * * * * * * *
>
> If the founders of the Constitution had been told that within seventy years from the day on which they laid its solid foundations and raised its majestic columns a standing army would have been found necessary and indispensable merely to execute municipal laws, they would have turned shuddering away from the massive despotism which they had erected.

The reasons for the views expressed by Mr. Seward are abundant and unanswerable, and in his speech he sets them forth in a manner that honored his head and heart alike. In that great speech he was contending for the great underlying principle for which we contend to-day—that the only reliance for the maintenance or preservation for State and General Government, and the execution of our laws, is upon the free and enlightened opinion of the people. It is not only in accord with the organic law but the very genius of our Government to leave to the States the great duty of seeing that equal and exact justice is secured to all the people within their respective borders, and to respond to their duties as citizens of a common country.

But I have somewhat digressed from my purpose to answer the question, "Who have condemned these laws?" I submit that the President himself, on March 4, 1877, condemned them by the following language employed in his inaugural:

> It must not be forgotten that only a local government, which recognizes and maintains inviolate the rights of all, is a true self-government.

His predecessor has been credited with yielding, in the last hours of his administration, to the demand for the withdrawal of troops from the South, and thereby giving practically his assent to the doctrine of local self-government. Mr. Hayes was quick to concur in this policy, and it is an open secret that he was pledged to its observance before he assumed the helm of state. Last year he approved the bill that prevented the Army from being used as a posse comitatus, and so I conclude he would be wholly unwarranted by his own record on this subject to interpose his veto upon the merits of these bills. There can be no doubt that a majority of the chief executives of the States earnestly desire the repeal of these laws. It will be remembered that but a few years ago a republican governor of Illinois (Governor Palmer) severed his connection with your party and left upon record in the office of chief executive of that State a scathing rebuke to his party for its despotic teachings and practices upon this subject. Governors Geary and Hoffman, of Pennsylvania and New York, have also spoken out in official papers in emphatic terms of condemnation. Certainly, the people of the city of New York and the whole country have had cause to be profoundly disgusted with the operations of the election laws under the damning manipulations of John I. Davenport, chief supervisor of elections for that State.

To properly understand and appreciate the outrages perpetrated by Supervisor, Clerk, and Commissioner Davenport, (for it seems that it was necessary for him to hold three offices at one time to make effective the conspiracy that was formed,) it should be known that the testimony recently taken before a congressional committee shows that in May, 1878, his chief clerk made a single affidavit against ninety-three hundred citizens of foreign birth, who had received, ten long years before, from the supreme and superior courts of New York, certificates of naturalization, and by virtue of which they had regularly voted at all elections since the issuance of their certificates. Mr. Davenport, as clerk of the United States court, issued five thousand and four warrants on the affidavit of his clerk, returnable before himself as commissioner of the United States court. Subsequently, when he ascertained that it was illegal for a complaint to contain more than a single name, he ignored the complaint previously made containing the names of the ninety-three hundred victims, and had twenty-eight hundred more affidavits made, and issued warrants thereon. The greatest consternation and alarm, of course, prevailed among these persecuted people, and thirty-four hundred of them, to secure their exemption from further persecution, actually gave up their certificates; but many others were arrested. When the election was at hand, in November, 1878, Davenport's unscrupulous clerk, at the instance of his master, made thirty-two hundred more affidavits, without knowing the facts of any case about which he swore. Warrants upon these affidavits were issued the night before the election, and placed in the hands of the supervisors of the election to be by them handed over to the deputy marshals on the morning of the election, so that the victims of this foul conspiracy might be seized when they presented themselves at the polling places to cast their votes.

The experience of two persons naturalized in 1868 should be also stated to illustrate the turpitude of Davenport's acts. The evidence shows that these two men appeared at the same time, in the same court, in New York City, in the year above stated, and testified for each other in procuring their certificates of naturalization, and that the same record was made in each case. One was a republican; the other a democrat. When the wholesale arrests before referred to were about to be made the republican sent his certificate of naturalization, by a prominent republican politician, to Mr. Davenport with the request that he would inform him whether it would be safe for him to attempt to vote thereon, and received a prompt reply that it would. The other man, being a democrat, was arrested the moment he appeared at the polls, and was thereby prevented from casting any vote upon that day.

In addition to the foregoing, I call attention to the following, which is vouched for by a member of the Forty-fifth Congress, Mr. Eickhoff, which will further enable the voters of this country to form some idea of the enormities of this law, and also the reason why the republican party insist that it shall not be repealed:

> Such a scene as the room of this court presented on that election day has never before been witnessed in this city or in this country, and it is to be hoped never will again. From early morning until after the polls were closed these rooms were packed and jammed with a mass of prisoners and marshals. Not only were they crowded beyond their capacity, but the halls and corridors were thronged with those who were unable to obtain admission; so that the counsel representing the prisoners and the bondsmen who were to be offered to secure their release had the greatest difficulty and were frequently unsuccessful in obtaining entrance. In addition to all this was this delectable iron "pen" on the upper floor, in which men were crowded until it resembled the "black hole of Calcutta," and where they were kept for hours, hungry, thirsty, suffering in every way, until their cases could be reached. With scarcely an exception these men had gone to the polls expecting to be absent but a short time. Many of them were thinly clad. Numbers had sick wives or relatives; some were sick themselves. There were carmen who had left their horses standing in the public streets; men whose situations depended upon their speedy return; men who wished to leave the city on certain trains. Every imaginable vexation, inconvenience, injury, and wrong which the mind can conceive existed in their cases, so that it was painful for the counsel who were endeavoring to secure their release to approach sufficiently near the railing to hear their piteous appeals and witness the distress which they had no power to alleviate. And over all this pushing, struggling, complaining crowd, Mr. Commissioner John I. Davenport sat supreme, with a sort of oriental magnificence, calmly indifferent to everything but the single fact that no man who was arrested was allowed to vote. And after all this tremendous exhibition of the power of this great Government, after this exhibition of what a United States commissioner and chief supervisor of elections can do if he has a mind to, what was the result?
>
> Surely if the offenses which these persons had committed were of so grave a nature as to require these wholesale proceedings; if the morals, the peace, and outraged laws of the community required to be vindicated by the summary arrest of four thousand persons on a single day, it was certainly necessary that the law should be enforced to the end, and that the offenses which were so dangerous as to require this arbitrary action should be punished.

But nothing of the kind was done. As these men were brought up before the three commissioners who sat in judgment they were asked if they had voted. If they had not they were required to promise that they would not do so. If to escape the terrors of Ludlow-street jail they surrendered their rights as American citizens and made the promise thus exacted, as the great majority of necessity did, they were released upon their own recognizance. If they did not, they were held to bail. If they had voted, although if not properly naturalized such vote was an additional offense instead of a palliation for the crime charged against them, they were immediately released. After sundown, when the polls were closed and it was too late for any one to vote, the doors appear to have been thrown open and all set at liberty.

Four thousand citizens of New York city were arrested on corrupt affidavits made by Davenport's clerk on the day of election and imprisoned in an iron den, and many thousands kept away from the polls for fear of arrest at the hands of this desperate republican politician.

Added to all this, and to cap the climax, a Cabinet officer, and now a Senator, in the campaign of 1876 was found holding the position of chairman of the national executive republican committee, devoting much of his time and brain, and that of many of his subordinates to the work of manipulating United States marshals and supervisors of elections, and of electing the republican ticket, presidential and congressional.

If additional evidence were needed to show the adverse judgment of the people of this country to the continuation of these laws, it is to be found in the disappearance of republican majorities in the House of Representatives and Senate of the United States, and in the installation of the democratic party into power in that department of the Government, to say nothing of the fact that in the last presidential election a popular majority of all the voters of this country of over two hundred and fifty thousand, and a full million majority of white men, voted against the present incumbent of the executive chair, the solemn verdict of the immaculate substitution for a court of justice to the contrary notwithstanding.

But let us consider another important feature of this subject. Who should be held responsible for the consequences that will ensue if the President refuses to sign these bills? This is the great unanswered question before the people. It is said upon this floor that the republican party will find vindication before the country in the fact that we have placed "riders" upon the pending bills which repeal these election laws; that this means coercion upon the President, as it is alleged that bills to repeal these laws should have been introduced and passed as independent measures and in the due course of legislation. In answer, we point to precedents almost without number which have from time to time had the sanction of almost all the prominent men of all the political parties in the history of this country for thirty years past. On the 10th of February last, and before any of the bills now pending before the House were even reported from the committee, I had the honor to submit in due course of business a bill repealing sections 820 and 821 and also from sections 2011 to 2031, inclusive, which embody the test oath and the material election laws, and every republican upon this floor voted against it, the vote standing one hundred and twenty-six democrats for, to one hundred and fifteen republicans against the bill. This illustrates the baldness of the objection now presented. If these laws are unconstitutional, and I submit that they are, without going over the oft-repeated arguments presented during this protracted discussion to show their unconstitutionality, then it should be the pleasure of a patriotic President to concur in promptly striking them from the statute-books. It is certainly not unconstitutional to repeal them.

But if I conceded their constitutionality, even then I submit that it is the plain duty of the President to send back these bills with his approval. Let it then be regarded, if you please, as purely a matter of policy, and let us determine, if we can, what the President should do from that stand-point. To arrive at a correct conclusion it is essential that we shall briefly consider the form of our government, and the relations that its co-ordinate departments sustain to each other. It must be borne in mind that the President is not elected directly by the people, that he is elected by a small body of men composing an electoral college who meet for that purpose a short time before the day fixed by law for the inauguration of the President. He represents the patronage of the Government, the consumers, those who empty the Treasury, while this House represents those who fill the Treasury. The Judiciary is but an offshoot of the President, having no connection with the people except to expound the law for them. Senators are elected by the State Legislatures, and are the creatures of the Commonwealths; the House of Representatives is what its very name suggests—representatives of the people. Its members are elected by the people every two years for the purpose of enabling them to enforce obedience to their judgment in matters of magnitude.

For further protection to the people, the Constitution has confided to their Representatives "the sole power of impeachment" and the duty of originating "all bills for raising revenue." Now, upon a question of policy of such magnitude as this, even if we could not fortify our appeal to His Excellency by referring to many facts that have passed into our history showing the judgment of the country, which must therefore be noticed by him, is it not his duty to yield his own adverse views, if you please, to the demand that is voiced to him in a constitutional way by the representatives of the people? We do not threaten coercion, nor do we intend to be coerced, but there is a decent respect which the President is expected to show to the wish of the people, especially when the expression of that wish comes from both branches of Congress. His predecessors generally have exercised the veto power only to prevent unconstitutional laws, and laws that were passed inconsiderately and hastily through Congress. In the event he returns the bills with his veto he will be forced to place his action upon some extraordinary and unprecedented ground, as the proposed legislation is certainly neither unconstitutional nor inconsiderate. While I recognize the fact that the veto power is to be exercised as the President shall determine best under his oath, and that he has practically the right to come upon this floor and make a speech against a measure that has passed Congress, and move to reconsider, which motion must prevail, and that the bill cannot again pass unless two-thirds of both Houses shall assent thereto, yet I do not believe that he will outrage the judgment of this country by any such course. It is to be hoped that he appreciates the fact that he presides for a brief time over the destinies of a great people, and that this is an hour in their history of the supremest importance.

Ours is the grandest country upon the face of the habitable globe, and it should inspire us all to rise to the full height of our duty. Think of it! From its northern borders, where God's perpetual bow of peace ever glorifies the majestic waters of the Niagara, to our sea-girt southern land, whose genial soil and climate make it almost an Eden of fragrance and beauty; from the Atlantic, where the song of the eastern sea begins its morning music to the distant Pacific, whose western waters softly breathe forth their benediction to our land, as the tide upon that golden shore rolls out beneath the setting sun—everywhere and on every hand, from our mountains and our valleys, our brooks, rivulets, and majestic rivers, villages, towns, and cities, and waving fields of grain—from all these we should draw inspiration from our country, and with one voice should devoutly pray—

God bless our native land.

Mr. GOODE. Mr. Chairman, the bill now under consideration, besides making an appropriation for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the next fiscal year, provides for the repeal of certain sections of the Revised Statutes which fix the qualifications of jurors in the Federal courts and define the powers and duties of supervisors and marshals in the conduct of elections. If I can receive the attention of the committee, I will endeavor to confine myself strictly to the merits of the questions involved. I will not undertake to revive those collateral issues which have been made so prominent in this and the prior debate which took place on the bill making an appropriation for the support of the Army.

I will not speak from a partisan stand-point or with any reference whatever to the impending political struggle of 1880. I will not anticipate the action of the President in the event of the passage of this bill by both Houses of Congress, nor will I assume authority to make any threat as to the action of the legislative department of the Government if he should think proper to interpose the executive veto. In my judgment it is unbecoming and unpatriotic for either party to this controversy to indulge in threats. No honest or brave man is ever deterred by such means from the discharge of a conscientious duty. We are here as the Representatives of the people in a grave and important crisis of public affairs to deliberate for the public good, to promote the public interests, and, above all, to preserve, protect, and defend the public liberties. Let us do what we believe to be right before God and the country. Let the President do what he believes to be right, and if, unfortunately, a conflict of opinion should occur and the public interests should thereby suffer, the sovereign people of this land will determine in due time upon whose shoulders the weighty responsibility shall rest. In a free republic like ours, there is no power above that of public opinion, and before that august tribunal Presidents and Representatives must all appear to render their account and yield their obedience.

The practical question which now presents itself is, shall we repeal the obnoxious statutes to which I have referred? Have we the constitutional power to do so? Is it wise and expedient to exercise that power if we have it? I shall waste no time upon the first proposition, because it has already been sufficiently discussed in a prior debate, and I do not feel able to offer any new suggestions. The constitutions of some of the States contain prohibitory clauses against general legislation upon appropriation bills, but there is no such provision in the Federal Constitution. On the contrary, it is expressly declared in that instrument that each House may determine the rules of its proceedings. This House has determined in Committee of the Whole through its chairman that the repealing clauses now under consideration are germane and proper, and gentlemen on the other side are forever estopped from denying the correctness of that conclusion by a long line of precedents, numbering not less than three hundred and eighty-seven, established from 1862 to 1875, while the republican party had undisputed control of both branches of Congress. The great and paramount question in this debate is whether it is wise and expedient to repeal the clauses in the Revised Statutes which are now under consideration.

To the discussion of that question I now address myself, and I invoke the calm and unbiased judgment of this committee. The bill provides that sections 820 and 821 of the Revised Statutes of the United States are hereby repealed, and that all jurors, grand and petit, including those summoned during the session of the court, shall be publicly drawn from a box containing the names of not less than three hundred persons possessing the qualifications prescribed in section 800 of the Revised Statutes, which names shall have been placed therein by the clerk of the court and a commissioner to be appointed by the judge thereof, which commissioner shall be a citizen residing in the district in which such court is held, of good standing and a well-known member of the principal political party opposing that to which the clerk may belong, the clerk and said commissioner each to place one name in said box alternately until the whole number required shall be placed therein. But nothing herein contained shall be construed to prevent any judge in a district in which such is now the practice from ordering the names of jurors to be drawn from the boxes used by the State authorities in selecting jurors in the highest courts of the States. What are the sections in regard to the qualifications and selection of jurors which it is proposed by this bill to repeal? Section 820 reads thus:

The following shall be causes of disqualification and challenge of grand and petit jurors in the courts of the United States, in addition to the causes existing by virtue of section 812, namely: Without duress and coercion to have taken up arms or to have joined any insurrection or rebellion against the United States; to have adhered to any insurrection or rebellion, giving it aid and comfort; to have given, directly or indirectly, any assistance in money, arms, horses, clothes, or anything whatever, to or for the use or benefit of any person whom the giver of such assistance knew to have joined, or to be about to join, any insurrection or rebellion, or to have resisted, or to be about to resist, with force of arms, the execution of the laws of the United States, or whom he had good ground to believe to have joined, or to be about to join, any insurrection or rebellion, or to have resisted, or to be about to resist, with force of arms, the execution of the laws of the United States; or to have counseled or advised any person to join any insurrection or rebellion, or to resist with force of arms the laws of the United States.

Section 821 reads as follows:

At every term of any court of the United States the district attorney, or other person acting on behalf of the United States in said court, may move, and the court, in their discretion, may require the clerk to tender to every person summoned to serve as a grand or petit juror, or veniremen or talesman, in said court, the following oath or affirmation, namely: "You do solemnly swear (or affirm) that you will support the Constitution of the United States of America; that you have not, without duress and constraint, taken up arms or joined any insurrection or rebellion against the United States; that you have not adhered to any insurrection or rebellion, giving it aid and comfort; that you have not, directly or indirectly, given any assistance in money, or any other thing, to any person or persons whom you knew, or had good ground to believe, to have joined, or to be about to join, said insurrection or rebellion, or to have resisted, or to be about to resist, with force of arms, the execution of the laws of the United States; and that you have not counseled or advised any person to join any insurrection or rebellion against, or to resist with force of arms, the laws of the United States." Any person declining to take said oath shall be discharged by the court from serving on the grand or petit jury, or venire, to which he may have been summoned.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it is well known to this committee that nearly all the white people of the South would be compelled to decline that oath or else take a lie upon their lips and stain their souls with perjury. These statutes were enacted in 1862, flagrante bello, while the two sections of the Union stood face to face in hostile array, dissevered and belligerent, and the whole land was convulsed by the throes of a mighty revolution, such as the world never saw before. Fourteen years have now elapsed since the termination of the war. Abundant harvests have been gathered year after year from fields which have been made historic by the tread of contending armies. Year after year the beautiful flowers of spring have been scattered by the hand of affection over the graves of those who bravely encountered each other amid the shock of arms. The bones of the unselfish heroes who wore the "blue and the gray" have long since commingled in one common dust.

Shall these laws which grew out of the war and are a part of the legislation of the war be continued upon the statute-book? Have they not served the purpose for which they were intended, and should they not now be put away amid the other unhappy memories of the war? While they exist are they not a perpetual stigma upon the people of the South, and are they not a standing reproach upon the American statute-book?

The sixth amendment of the Constitution provides that in all criminal prosecutions the accused shall enjoy the right to a speedy and public trial by an impartial jury of the State and district wherein the crime shall have been committed. That is the language of the Constitution, but what is the language of the statute? Section 820 absolutely disqualifies from jury service every man who has given directly or indirectly any assistance in money, arms, horses, clothing, or anything whatever for the use or benefit of any person whom the giver of such assistance knew to have joined, or whom he had good ground to believe to have joined, or to have counseled or advised any person to join, any insurrection or rebellion against the United States. Section 821 authorizes the district attorney to move the court, and the court to require in its discretion the clerk to tender to every person summoned as a juror an oath to the following effect: That he has not adhered to the rebellion or given it aid and comfort; that he has not, directly or indirectly, given any assistance in money or any other thing to any person whom he knew to have joined or to be about to join, or to have counseled or advised any person to join, any rebellion against the United States.

I submit that these two sections are directly antagonistic to the sixth article of the amendments to the Constitution. How can that jury be called impartial which may thus be packed by the order of a judge upon the motion of a district attorney? How can that jury be called impartial from which ninety-nine hundredths of the community who possess any intelligence whatever are excluded by operation of law or the dictum of a judge? It is an historical fact, well known to this House, that during the civil war nearly all the white people of the South capable of bearing arms enlisted in the cause of the southern confederacy. If they were too old or too young to perform military service, they gave aid and comfort and sympathized with those actually engaged in the rebellion, so called. These statutes not only disqualify and exclude from the jury-box every southern man who took up arms against the Government, but even the gray-haired sire, tottering on the verge of the grave, who furnished money, clothing, or anything whatever to the son who was "bone of his bone and flesh of his flesh," or the little boy whose natural instincts prompted him to sympathize with his father, or the good Samaritan whose kindly disposition would not allow him to withhold assistance from the battle-scarred veteran on his weary and toilsome march.

No distinction whatever is made between those who may have been prompted by a spirit of hostility to the Government and those who may have been prompted only by charity or affection, or the tenderest and closest ties which bind man to his fellow-man. All are placed in the same category of proscription and ostracism, and all are visited with the same pains and penalties. Those laws are ex post facto in their operation. They presume the guilt of large classes in the community, and require them to remove that presumption by an expurgatory oath. Nothing could be more subversive of the spirit of our institutions, nothing more repugnant to the genius of the common law, than such an inquisition into the consciences of men. The Supreme Court of the United States has decided, in Cummings vs. The State of Missouri, and in Ex parte Garland, that "deprivation or suspension of any civil rights for past conduct is punishment for such conduct" and that a legislative act which inflicts punishment without a judicial trial is a bill of attainder.

It has also decided in Klein's case and in other cases that the effect of the general pardon and amnesty granted by the President in December, 1868, is to blot out and obliterate forever the offense of those engaged in the rebellion and to make them in contemplation of law innocent and loyal citizens. It says that pardon includes amnesty and that it blots out the offense pardoned and removes all its penal consequences. In view of the plain provisions of the Constitution, in view of the decisions which have been rendered by the highest judicial tribunal in the land, and in view of the manifest hardship and injustice of these statutes, it appears to me to be "strange and passing strange" that any fair-minded man of any party can be found to object to their repeal.

Why continue them as a stigma and reproach upon the statute-book at this late day, fourteen years after the termination of the war? Why require a test oath of a juror which is not required of the Representative who makes the law or the judge who interprets it? There are nearly one hundred gentlemen upon this floor who could not conscientiously take that oath. Nine-tenths of the judges and district attorneys and marshals who enforce Federal laws at the South are unable to take it. One of your cabinet ministers is unable to take it. Several representatives of the Government abroad are unable to take it; and yet you continue in operation a law, enacted in the midst of the excitement and passion engendered by the war, which disqualifies from jury service any and every man who is unable to take it. Can the republicans afford to stand upon such an issue before the country? Can they afford, in a time of peace, to challenge the confidence of the country as the champions of odious and obnoxious test oaths, utterly repugnant to the genius and spirit of our institutions? If the issue shall be forced upon us we are willing to submit it to the grand inquest of the nation, with an abiding faith and unshaken trust in that spirit of fairness and love of justice which characterize the American people.

It is provided further by this bill that sections 2016, 2018, 2020, and all of the succeeding sections of the Revised Statutes down to and including section 2027 and also section 5522 shall be repealed. In other words, Mr. Chairman, the bill proposes to repeal all the sections of the Revised Statutes and all laws and parts of laws which authorize the appointment of chief supervisors and special or general deputy marshals of elections. It does not propose to repeal sections 2011, 2012, 2013, 2014, 2015, 2017 of the Revised Statutes, which authorize the judge of the United States court to appoint supervisors of the election, representing the different political parties at each precinct, who are authorized to attend at all times and places for holding elections of Representatives and Delegates in Congress and witness the counting of the votes cast at such elections.

All the sections of the Revised Statutes authorizing supervisors to attend at the polling places to scrutinize the method of conducting the election and to witness the fairness of the count are permitted to stand unrepealed. What more can gentlemen reasonably demand? At the last session of Congress the majority in this House insisted upon the abolition of all supervisors and of all marshals, general and special, and the repeal of all laws regulating the conduct of elections by Federal officials. The legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill was defeated on account of a disagreement between the two Houses on this subject, and in consquence of that disagreement this extra session of Congress was called by the Executive. Now we come in a spirit of harmony, conciliation, concession, and compromise and tender to the other side the olive branch of peace. We propose to retain the sections which authorize the appointment of Federal supervisors at each precinct to scrutinize the returns and supervise the conduct of the elections, but we demand the abolition of the office of chief supervisor and we demand that Federal marshals, general and special, shall be kept away from the polls.

But how has our overture been met by the other side? Has a corresponding spirit of concession and compromise been manifested by them? On the contrary we have been deliberately fired upon while bearing this flag of truce, and we are told in bold and defiant terms by the minority on this floor that all these odious and obnoxious laws which sprang from the hatred and passions of the war must and shall stand intact and unrepealed or the appropriation bill shall fail and the wheels of Government shall stop. Let me say to the gentlemen on the other side, in all kindness, that they seem to misunderstand entirely the spirit and the motives which animate gentlemen on this side. Earnestly desirous as we are to put an end to this controversy, we have offered to you a fair and liberal compromise. If you think the exigencies of party require you to reject it, then upon your heads must rest all the responsibility for the consequences which may follow. I am one of those who believe that there is no warrant in the Constitution for the enactment of any of these laws now on the statute-book which authorize the appointment of Federal supervisors or Federal marshals to supervise the conduct of elections. It is true the fourth section of the first article of the Constitution provides:

> The times, places, and manner of holding elections for Senators and Representatives shall be prescribed in each State by the Legislature thereof; but the Congress may at any time by law make or alter such regulations, except as to the places of choosing Senators.

It will be observed that as to the State Legislatures in this connection the word "shall" is used, and as to the Congress the word "may" is used. Now what is the plain meaning of this section? In my judgment it intends to declare that the duty is imposed upon the State Legislatures to prescribe the times, places, and manner of holding the elections for Senators and Representatives, but if the State Legislatures shall fail or neglect to perform that duty then Congress is permitted to exercise the power in order to save the structure and perpetuate the existence of the Government. Congress may act if there is a necessity for it on account of the failure or neglect of the States, or if the States shall prescribe regulations which are inadequate or unsuitable to accomplish the end in view; then Congress in its wisdom may alter such regulations; in other words, the manifest purpose of this section is to enable Congress to perpetuate its existence and provide for full representation if the different State governments, from any cause, should neglect the performance of that duty.

Surely, Mr. Chairman, it cannot be contended upon any fair rule of construction that this clause in the Constitution confers upon Congress the power to do anything more than to regulate the times, places, and manner of holding elections for Senators and Representatives. It certainly does not confer upon Congress the power to prescribe who shall and who shall not be entitled to vote. The States, and the States alone, have power to fix the rule of suffrage and to prescribe the qualifications of the voters. That question is settled beyond the possibility of controversy by the second section of article 1 of the Constitution, which provides that "the House of Representatives shall be composed of members chosen every second year by the people of the several States, and the electors in each State shall have the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the State Legislature."

The Federal Government has no power whatever to prescribe the qualifications of the voters in any State. It has been claimed by some that the fifteenth amendment of the Constitution confers that power, but the most cursory examination will show that the claim is altogether unfounded. That amendment provides that "the right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude." If any doubt whatever could be entertained as to the proper construction of this amendment it must be entirely dispelled and removed by a recent decision of the Supreme Court, with which gentlemen are familiar, in which it was held:

> The power of Congress to legislate at all upon the subject of voting at State elections rests upon this amendment and can be exercised by providing a punishment only when the wrongful refusal to receive the vote of a qualified elector at such elections is because of his color, race, or previous condition of servitude.

The General Government cannot confer and never has undertaken to confer upon any citizen the right to vote. None can exercise the right of suffrage except those who possess the qualifications required of the voters for the most numerous branch of the State Legislature. Congress has no power in the premises, except to make or alter the regulations fixing the times, places, and manner of holding elections for Senators and Representatives. It will appear from a closer examination of this subject, that Congress has not undertaken to exercise this power in the enactment of the statutes which it is now sought to repeal. It has not undertaken to prescribe the times, places, and manner of holding the elections for Senators and Representatives. Congress has not undertaken either to make regulations for congressional elections in the several States or to alter the regulations which have been made by the States. Congress has accepted and adopted the regulations made by the States and has undertaken to prescribe punishment for their violation. It appoints supervisors and marshals to supervise and control the action of State officials under State laws and State regulations. It is not made their duty to bring to trial and punishment after the election those who have violated the laws governing elections, but their sole function is to supervise the conduct and interfere with the freedom of the electors before and on the day of the election and to make arrests with or without due process of law.

These statutes authorize the supervisors to attend at all times and places fixed for the registration of voters and to challenge any person offering to register; to personally scrutinize, count, and canvass each ballot cast at the election, whatever may be the indorsement on the ballot, or in whatever box it may have been placed or be found; to make reports to the chief supervisor, who is authorized to summon witnesses, compel their attendance, and administer oaths. It authorizes the chief marshal of any district to appoint as many deputy marshals as he may think proper. It authorizes the chief marshal and his deputies, general and special, to attend at any place of registration or voting, to arrest and take into custody, with or without process, any person who commits or attempts to commit any offense against the laws of the United States. It authorizes the marshal and his deputies, general and special, to summon and call to their aid the bystanders or posse comitatus of the district. Let us see, now, Mr. Chairman, what interpretation has been placed upon these statutes by the law officers of the Government, and how they have been enforced.

On the 14th day of September, 1876, Alphonzo Taft, then Attorney-General of the United States, issued a circular letter of instructions in which he informed his chief marshals that deputies might be appointed to any number whatever according to their discretion. Let me extract a passage or two from that remarkable circular:

> In this connection, I advise that you and each of your deputies, general and special, have a right to summon to your assistance in preventing and quelling disorder every person in the district above fifteen years of age, whatever may be their occupation, whether civilians or not, and including the military of all denominations, militia, soldiers, marines, all of whom are alike bound to obey you. The fact that they are organized as military bodies (whether of the State or of the United States) under the immediate command of their own officers does not in any wise affect their legal character. They are still the posse comitatus.

And again he says:

> There is, as you have virtually been already told, no officer of a State whom you may not by summons embody into your own posse; and any State posse already embodied by a sheriff will, with such sheriff, be obliged, upon your summons, to become part of a United States posse and obey you or your deputy acting virtute officii.

In other words, Mr. Chairman, according to this circular letter of instructions, the marshal may appoint deputies without limit as to number. He may in his discretion appoint every republican voter in the district. The marshal or either of his deputies, general or special, may arrest and take into custody upon suspicion, with or without process, any democratic citizen who offers to vote; and if resistance is made he may summon to his aid every person in the district above fifteen years of age, whatever may be their occupation, whether civilians, militia, United States soldiers, or marines. Every officer of the State or of the United States is bound to obey the commands of the marshal or his deputies.

The governor of the State at the head of his militia or the commander of the Army at the head of his soldiers is liable to be ordered hither and thither by any deputy marshal, however ignorant and insignificant he may be. Such are the provisions of the obnoxious statutes which we desire to repeal, and such is the interpretation which has been placed upon them by the highest law officer of the Government. It is well known to this committee and to the country how these laws have been enforced. Thousands of supervisors and marshals have been appointed, and hundreds of thousands of dollars have been expended. The law has been used as a mere machine for the purposes of party. The money drawn by taxation from the pockets of the people has been expended for the benefit of party. Instead of being the faithful and conscientious officers of Government, these supervisors and marshals have been in many instances nothing more nor less than the paid agents and pliant instruments of party. In the city of New York, at the November election in 1876, four thousand citizens were arrested in a single day upon the affidavit of a single man.

Those who surrendered their rights as American citizens and promised not to vote were released upon their own recognizance. The others were held as prisoners until the close of the polls at sundown, when they were set at liberty. Can any additional argument be necessary to demonstrate the propriety and necessity of repealing statutes which authorize and sanction the perpetration of such wrongs and outrages upon any portion of our countrymen? This is not a sectional question. It does not concern the people of the South alone. It concerns all the people of America. It involves the personal liberty of the citizen. It involves that most sacred and inestimable of all his rights, the right to a free and fair election, the right to cast his ballot unawed and unintimidated by any influence whatever. These obnoxious statutes were born of the passions and prejudices engendered by the war. They are a part and parcel of the legislation resulting from the war. Has not the time now arrived when they should be repealed? Are they not wholly unwarranted by the Constitution, utterly subversive of popular liberty, and clearly repugnant to the genius and spirit of our free institutions? Are they not a standing reproach upon the statute-book, and do they not imply a real distrust of the capacity of the people for self-government?

Have we not had enough and more than enough of war legislation to satisfy the most vindictive and relentless spirit? Fourteen years ago the people of the South relinquished the struggle which they had made and surrendered to the victorious armies of the Union. They acquiesced in the thirteenth, fourteenth, and fifteenth amendments of the Constitution. They accepted in good faith all the consequences of their defeat and all the terms imposed upon them by their conquerors. When that was done and they had returned to their allegiance to the Constitution and the Union they expected, as they had a right to expect, that they would be received as coequals, and that they would be treated with justice if not with magnanimity. In their poverty and distress they have borne uncomplainingly more than their equal proportion of the burdens of government, and have performed faithfully all the duties incumbent upon them as good citizens. Their Representatives upon this floor, when they have protested that their most earnest aspiration was for a lasting and enduring peace, have been treated with derision and contempt, and plainly told that all their professions were hypocritical and insincere. Their State governments at home have been overthrown, their legislative assemblies have been dissolved, and the mandates of their supreme courts have been nullified by the simple edict of a Federal judge. The privilege of the writ of habeas corpus has been suspended, and helpless, unarmed citizens have been subjected to the arbitrary rule of military masters. Their state-houses have been filled with soldiers of the regular Army with fixed bayonets guarding the entrance to the halls of legislation, while the corporal of the guard has inspected and decided upon the credentials of the members.

A few years since an imperial edict was issued by the modern Cæsar forbidding the citizen soldiers of South Carolina to assemble peaceably for the purpose of celebrating the birthday and commemorating the virtues of the Father of his Country; and to-day in the same unhappy State we see the modern Jeffreys prostituting his high office to the base purposes of party, and in the very wantonness of power, through the agency of packed, iron-clad juries, sending to imprisonment and exile good and true men, "the latchets of whose shoes he is not worthy to unloose."

During the progress of this debate it seems to have been the deliberate purpose of many prominent gentlemen on the other side to revive sectional issues which should have been long since forgotten, and to rekindle bitter animosities and hates which should have been long since extinguished. While listening to those gentlemen I would have been disposed almost to despair of the Republic and to conclude that the passions and prejudices engendered by the war would survive this generation and be transmitted to our latest posterity, if I could have believed that they reflected fully and fairly the sentiments and feelings of the great body of the people whom they profess to represent.

But, Mr. Chairman, as an American citizen, proud of my country and hopeful of its future, I prefer to believe that these gentlemen are only acting a part for this particular occasion; that they are simply skirmishing for position in the presidential campaign of 1880; that they have made a mistake in the tactics which they have adopted, and that the feelings of revenge and hate to which they have given utterance here do not find a lodgment in the breasts of my fellow-citizens at the North. Turning away rather in sorrow than in anger from this unseemly spectacle, and unwilling to listen to the voice of crimination and recrimination which has continually vexed the ear of this House and the country ever since we assembled in extra session, I prefer to believe that the people of the North, unlike some of their Representatives here, recognize the fact that the war is over; that its issues have been fought out and decided, and that the rehabilitated States of the South are now coequal sovereigns in our confederated Union.

Instead of the "gorgons, hydras, and chimeras dire," which are daily held up to our contemplation here, I prefer to look upon another picture, which is to me much more pleasing and refreshing. I allude to the fraternal reunions of the real heroes of the war, the survivors who wore the "blue and the gray," and the decorations of the graves of the martyred dead on both sides who had the courage to die for their convictions. Amid the din and tumult of the hour, while carpet-knights are tilting in the forum of debate and waging a relentless war of "words, words, words," I prefer to recall to my recollection and to dwell with satisfaction and pleasure upon another picture which was presented to the people of this country in the summer of 1878.

When the southern section of the Union was afflicted with the scourge of yellow fever and the cry of distress came up from its plague-stricken cities the people of the North, the East, and the West responded with alacrity, and not only exhibited a large-hearted charity by the contribution of money and supplies but sent forward their unselfish men and devoted women who went with their lives in their hands to stand at the post of danger and to minister to the wants of the sick, the destitute, and the dying. Such an exhibition is a complete answer to all the denunciations of politicians. It demonstrates more clearly than words can express that however much we may differ upon questions of governmental policy and however bitter our political antagonisms may sometimes become, we are once more a united people and bound indissolubly together by the ties of a common brotherhood. Let us hope, Mr. Chairman, that the Representatives of the people here assembled may be animated by that spirit, that hereafter they will look more to the future than to the past, and instead of wasting their energies upon the dead issues of the war they will dedicate them to the re-establishment of a lasting peace, to the development of our material resources, the restoration of our ruined commerce, and the revival of our prostrate industries. If they will do this, the just expectations of the people will be fully realized and the long-predicted era of plenty and prosperity will soon dawn upon the land.

Mr. PRICE. When the gentleman talks of the charity and helping hand extended to the South during its affliction last summer from the North, I wish to remind him that every man on this side of the House participated in that act.

Mr. GOODE. And therefore, sir, I prefer to believe as I do that the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. PRICE,] my reverend brother, is only acting a part on this particular occasion; that he is only skirmishing preliminary to the campaign of 1880; that he has made a mistake in the tactics which he has adopted, and that the time will come when the people behind him will say that he has not given utterance to their sentiments upon this floor.

Mr. PRICE. I wish to tell the gentleman from Virginia that the people behind me whom I represent stand up to me for everything that I have done and said; and I have said nothing and done nothing anywhere on any occasion different from that which I have said and done here in this House.

Mr. GOODE. I believe the time has come when the great body of the people of the North will rise up and say, when a gentleman gives utterance here to sentiments of revenge and hate, that he is not a fair representative of northern sentiment.

Mr. PRICE. The very same speech I made here I made over a hundred times in my district. [Laughter.]

Mr. GOODE. I am sorry to find the gentleman is so obdurate, but we are told that—

> While the lamp holds out to burn
> The vilest sinner may return.

[Laughter and applause on the democratic side of the House.]

Mr. PRICE. I can tell the gentleman that that applies exactly and is encouraging to the other side of the House. [Laughter and applause on the republican side of the House.]

Mr. GOODE. I believe that the gentleman from Iowa has not expressed his real sentiments. I believe that he is too kind-hearted, too benevolent a gentleman. I believe that he is engaged in the preliminary skirmish for the campaign of 1880; and while I am not a prophet nor the son of a prophet, and while I do not profess to be gifted with the spirit of prophecy, I undertake to predict that when the gentleman from Iowa goes back to his people they will tell him that the time has come when he as a Representative ought to recognize the fact that the war is over and that its issues have been fought out and decided. [Applause on the democratic side of the House.]

Mr. PRICE. Every time I make that speech to my people it increases my majority. [Laughter.] When, in the last canvass, I quoted to them what the gentleman who is now speaking [Mr. GOODE] said to his people when he went home, that the northern people did not look with much favor on southern claims during the preceding Congress, but that he thought they would when the next Congress met, I made that speech, quoting the remarks of my friend on the other side to my people, and my people increased my majority.

Mr. SPARKS. I wish to suggest to the gentleman from Iowa that in districts near his own the lightning has been striking. [Laughter and applause.] It may strike the gentleman's district.

Mr. PRICE. Oh, no; that district struck by lightning is not near mine, it is much nearer sundown. No danger of that kind of lightning in my district.

Mr. GOODE. All I have to say is this: if the gentleman undertakes to go forth in all time as the champion of the doctrine of revenge and hate, I have such an abiding faith, such an unshaken trust in the love of fairness, in the love of truth which has always characterized the American people, that in such a contest I am willing to submit the issue to the grand inquest of the nation, believing that the verdict will be that they are heartily sick and tired of the war and all its issues, and that their chief aspiration now is for that peace without which there can be no return of prosperity to our common country.

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Chairman, the Forty-fifth Congress adjourned, expired by its constitutional limitation, without making the necessary appropriations to carry on the Government, through the contumacy of its democratic House, and this Congress has been promptly convened by the President; and, democratic in both branches, it refuses the necessary supplies unless certain statutes obnoxious to the democracy are repealed. In the language of a distinguished gentleman upon the other side, they have a grievance to be redressed. If the usual significance is to be given language, and we are to believe gentlemen's purposes are indicated by their speeches, it is the intention of the majority to compass the repeal of certain laws, obnoxious, as I have said, to the democratic party, or destroy the Government. And sitting here to-day with the pending bill before us, we have no assurance even the concession of it will abate the danger.

When this discussion was opened—I say opened, for I regard the debate as continuous upon the same general subject, commencing with the consideration of the Army bill—the gentleman who now presides over this committee, replying to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. GARFIELD,] said:

Ah, Mr. Chairman, let one take the darkened pages of his country's history for the last seventeen long years and read it carefully, and tell me then whether it lies in the mouth of that worthy leader of a once great but waning party to read lectures to anybody, either upon the score of revolutionary legislation or of extraneous introductions into appropriation bills. Better far in the face of the record that they have made, better to listen patiently to the confirmed inebriate as he dilates upon the virtues of temperance, better let the queen of the demi-monde elaborate the beauties of female virtue, or let the devil prate of the scheme of universal redemption, than for homilies upon good morals and lectures upon revolutionary legislation to be delivered from such a source. [Applause.]

He will not complain I quote him incorrectly. And a little further on he said:

We do not intend to stop until we have stricken the last vestige of your war measures from the statute-book, which like these were born of the passions incident to civil strife and looked to the abridgment of the liberty of the citizen.

And supplemented all by the defiant declaration that—

This side of the Chamber, which has demonstrated its power, never means to yield or surrender until this Congress shall have died by virtue of its limitation. [Applause on the democratic side.] We will not yield.

Sir, it is not my purpose to quote here more of your party who, following your example, have tendered the issue,—the President must approve a bill against his judgment and his conscience, surrender his constitutional prerogative, or the nation shall die. I understand it to have been a race upon your side of the Chamber who first would get to your line of battle. I have carefully listened to or read all the speeches made by your friends, and if there have been faltering words they have not reached my ear.

I have said we have no assurance if the pending bill becomes a law the danger to the Government is passed. We of the republican party have been accustomed to look back upon what you term the darkened pages of this "country's history for the past seventeen years" with honest pride and point to a great rebellion crushed, a great nation saved from dismemberment, a national disgrace removed, an enslaved race enfranchised, and the foundations laid broad and deep for national progress, national prosperity, greatness, and the happiness and liberty of the people. And what, sir, is there in the "last seventeen long years" that justifies the rhetorical flourish:

Better far in the face of the record that they [the republicans] have made, better listen patiently to the confirmed inebriate as he dilates upon the virtues of temperance, better let the queen of the demi-monde elaborate the beauties of female virtue, or let the devil prate of the scheme of universal salvation; than for homilies upon good morals, and lectures upon revolutionary legislation from such a source.

The full offense of the republican party during that period is the saving of the nation when you would have destroyed it, and what are the "war measures like these" you menace? Are we to understand it is your purpose to turn back the wheels of time and tear out seventeen years of national history, undo the legislation of seventeen years which, if they have wrought great political changes, have been in the direction of national progress?

We must in discussing this question, it is but fair, keep in view who menace, who lead the assault upon past national legislation, who demand the presidential prerogative, the veto power shall be surrendered or they will destroy the Government, that it is, "the solid South," marshaled and officered as seventeen years ago; and is there one among the host that to-day doubts he was in the right then but that believes the seventeen years of departure from the principles for which he then fought are filled with errors and wrongs, and progress can only be made by turning back?

I say this with no desire to inflame sectional feeling; but where men who have so earnestly and lately given proof of their hostility to our national existence now so loudly threaten it, and yet do it in the name of liberty and progress, we must call the attention of the country to their antecedents, that it may correctly measure their patriotism.

Nothing more certainly indicates the desperate straits of the other side, and possibly their revolutionary purpose, than the continued appeal to the historic fact that the Crown for two centuries has not exercised in England the veto power; justifying therefrom their purpose of compelling its surrender by the President; and the failure to state the dissimilarity between ours and the English government—that in England the legislation practically emanates from the ministry, which is the government, formed in sympathy with and representing a majority of "the Commons," and therefore the veto of an act of Parliament would be a disapproval by the government of its own measure.

Under our Constitution the President is practically as independent a part of the law-making power as this House, but a co-ordinate branch of the Government with Congress, the one entirely independent of the other. Legislation is not shaped by the Executive; "bills" do not emanate therefrom; a majority of neither the Senate nor House must of necessity be in sympathy with the President; on the contrary, by the very method of their creation, they may be, and the Constitution contemplates, I perhaps might say intends, they shall be in political antagonism; and one of the purposes of the veto power is to prevent encroachments by the legislative department and its unconstitutional and inconsiderate action.

In the history of all governments of co-ordinate departments the tendency of the one has been to encroach upon the other, and that this Congress is no exceptional body in this respect is proved by these "riders" upon an appropriation bill. I propose briefly to examine these laws that constitute the grievance of the other side, the "war measures" born of the passions of civil strife, to accomplish the repeal whereof a democratic Congress propose, if necessary, to resort to unconstitutional methods and starve a co-ordinate branch of the Government into submission.

What are the laws that justify gentlemen in citing for their warrant in demanding their repeal English precedents in the great conflict between the Commons and the Crown, and that preceded or followed close on after, the execution of a king, civil war, and the revolution which established English liberty?

The President is not violating the Constitution, is not encroaching upon the privileges and jurisdictions of Congress, is not invading the rights and liberties of the people, is not threatening us with "Cæsarism," the ghost that so often affrights some gentlemen upon the other side of the Chamber. We have certain election laws passed by a previous Congress, approved by a former President, and which have been repeatedly approved by the people by the constitutional method, the ballot-box, and which I assert are to-day approved by the honest voters of the country, and they are the grievances of the other side, the democratic side, and which, it claims, justify these revolutionary assaults upon the Constitution, upon the life of the nation even, for their repeal. There was no offense committed, as I hope to show, by their enactment, against the Constitution, and through them no offense can be committed against honest men by the President or the officers of the law. They were passed by a Congress, I believe and the country believes, animated by as lofty a patriotism, as great a love for the country as this. As has been said before in this discussion there is no popular demand for the repeal, but by party leaders it has been determined upon as a party necessity.

First we have provisions for the appointment by the circuit courts of the United States of two supervisors of election, of different political parties, for each election district in any city of upward of twenty thousand inhabitants, when applied for by two citizens thereof; and in any county, parish, or congressional district, when applied for by ten citizens thereof of good standing. Then follows "a grievance," a "war measure;" section 2016 of the Revised Statutes:

SEC. 2016. The supervisors of election, so appointed, are authorized and required to attend at all times and places fixed for the registration of voters, who, being registered, would be entitled to vote for a Representative or Delegate in Congress, and to challenge any person offering to register; to attend at all times and places when the names of registered voters may be marked for challenge, and to cause such names registered as they may deem proper to be so marked; to make, when required, the lists, or either of them, provided for in section 2026, and verify the same; and upon any occasion, and at any time when in attendance upon the duty herein prescribed, to personally inspect and scrutinize such registry, and for purposes of identification to affix their signature to each page of the original list, and of each copy of any such list of registered voters, at such times, upon each day when any name may be received, entered, or registered, and in such manner as will, in their judgment, detect and expose the improper or wrongful removal therefrom, or addition thereto, of any name.

SEC. 2018. To the end that each candidate for the office of Representative or Delegate in Congress may obtain the benefit of every vote for him cast, the supervisors of election are, and each of them is, required to personally scrutinize, count, and canvass each ballot in their election district or voting precinct cast, whatever may be the indorsement on the ballot, or in whatever box it may have been placed or be found.

The purpose of the provisions is that two officers appointed, not by the President or any of his officers, but by the court, a department of the Government removed from politics, and especially charged with the prevention of crime, two officers, of different political parties, nominated, as they practically have been, by their respective political organizations, may, first, challenge any person who offers to register, and compel, if you please, proper evidence that he is a voter and entitled to registration; second, mark for challenge to the right to vote on election day names of men upon the registration list; third, make copies of the registration lists, to the end that the right of those registered to registration and the ballot may be investigated, that it may be inquired of if they are citizens and residents of the election district, and that it may be investigated if false and fictitious names are upon the lists upon which repeaters may vote; fourth, mark the registration lists for identification so that others may not be substituted for them or false names added; and fifth, see that the ballots are honestly counted at the close of the polls, the manifest intention and full purpose of the laws being to prevent voting by men not entitled to the ballot, to prevent repeating, to prevent ballot-box stuffing, and to insure an honest count.

It will be borne in mind that the provisions cited and the subsequent ones I shall refer to apply only to the elections "of Representatives to Congress," and are in the direction of insuring to those honestly elected to this House their seats.

Section 2021 provides for the appointment and attendance with the supervisors of deputy marshals in cities of over twenty thousand inhabitants, to aid and assist the supervisors. Sections 2022 and 2024 I will quote in full:

SEC. 2022. The marshal and his general deputies, and such special deputies, shall keep the peace, and support and protect the supervisors of election in the discharge of their duties, preserve order at such places of registration and at such polls, prevent fraudulent registration and fraudulent voting thereat, or fraudulent conduct on the part of any officer of election, and immediately, either at the place of registration or polling place, or elsewhere, and either before or after registering or voting, to arrest and take into custody, with or without process, any person who commits, or attempts or offers to commit, any of the acts or offenses prohibited herein, or who commits any offense against the laws of the United States; but no person shall be arrested without process for any offense not committed in the presence of the marshal or his general or special deputies, or either of them, or of the supervisors of election, or either of them, and, for the purposes of arrest or the preservation of the peace, the supervisors of election shall, in the absence of the marshal's deputies, or if required to assist such deputies, have the same duties and powers as deputy marshals; nor shall any person, on the day of such election, be arrested without process for any offense committed on the day of registration.

SEC. 2024. The marshal or his general deputies, or such special deputies as are thereto specially empowered by him, in writing, and under his hand and seal, whenever he, or either or any of them, is forcibly resisted in executing their duties under this title, or shall, by violence, threats, or menaces, be prevented from executing such duties, or from arresting any person who has committed any offense for which the marshal or his general or his special deputies are authorized to make such arrest, are, and each of them is, empowered to summon and call to his aid the bystanders or posse comitatus of his district.

The other provisions of the election law sought to be repealed it is unnecessary to read. They are auxiliary to section 2016, the part of section 2018, and sections 2022 and 2024, cited, and are substantially nugatory without them. I certainly may say the provisions read are those claimed by the other side as the objectionable ones, and my purpose is attained if I can defend them successfully against the assault.

Sections 2022 and 2024 empower the deputy marshals to keep the peace at the polls, protect the supervisors in the discharge of the duties I have reviewed, prevent fraudulent registration and fraudulent voting, and fraudulent conduct, ballot-box stuffing, on the part of election officers, and to arrest without process any person who in their presence commits or attempts to commit any of the crimes mentioned.

I have correctly read the laws complained of, pointed out their purpose, exposed their rigors and the full extent of their oppression. The only pertinent question is, do they disfranchise the legal voter? An election law should be so severe in its provisions as to prevent illegal voting and false counting, and yet insure the ballot to every one entitled to it. To fail in either respect would be an evil, an equal evil if to an equal extent. I know of no difference between the two wrongs, so far as they affect an election, the one disfranchising the legal voter, and the other preventing the illegal, unlawful electors to vote. And have gentlemen on the other side furnished us with evidence that under the operations of these laws men have been disfranchised. It is not enough that men may have been prevented from voting; it is not enough that alien-born citizens who had fraudulent naturalization papers have been prevented from voting. The surest test of this law after it has been in force eight years is the results, the effects. The last House had out its committee to investigate its operations in New York, where our democratic friends complain of it chiefly. The report of that committee asserts that warrants were issued irregularly and arrests made; it does not prove, it furnishes no evidence, that legal voters were disfranchised. The testimony submitted completely establishes that thousands of illegal and fraudulent votes were kept out of the ballot-box.

The feature chiefly complained of is, an officer may arrest if a man in his presence commits or attempts to commit a crime. To illustrate: the repeater is at the poll with the ballot in his hand; he is registered from a certain number, it has been ascertained the place is a vacant lot; it has been ascertained to a certainty he is not a resident of the election district, more, that under the same name, by a comparison of lists of registration, he is registered in twenty other election districts. The "grievance" is, the marshal, when—yes, before—the ballot is deposited in the box, may arrest the repeater. The other side urges not to allow that ballot, folded, secret, and unmarked, to be placed in the box and do its work of wrong and injustice, not to compel the officer of the law to find a magistrate and procure a warrant for the repeater before arresting him, thus giving opportunity for escape, visiting another poll, and repeating his offense, is an abridgment of the liberty of the citizen. An alien-born citizen justifies his right to vote under a naturalization paper issued in 1868, describing the man as a British subject, issued upon renunciation of allegiance to the Queen of Great Britain, the man confessedly is a German, and was never on English soil. Gentlemen on the other side say the man should be permitted to vote, though manifestly he has no right to, and thereafter criminal proceedings be instituted against him, if he can be found. This election law provides that crime against the elective franchise may be prevented.

The question is, Shall fraudulent voting be prevented or permitted without remedy, with the uncertain chance of finding the criminal, if not arrested on the spot, for punishment? I have heard it urged against these laws that they frighten men from the polls; to that I reply no honest man belonging to the largely dominant party in the city of New York, conscious of his right there, was ever driven away by a law which has no penalties for the innocent. If men have been deterred from voting in New York on account of these severe provisions, it was because with a guilty purpose they properly feared their rigors. Gentlemen upon the other side, the merit of the provisions referred to is that the elector is compelled to furnish evidence of his title to the elective franchise; the legal voter too surely prizes his great privilege to be annoyed even at that if it prevents his ballot being balanced by fraud.

But it is claimed these provisions are unconstitutional. Whenever the democratic party have been unable to defend their opposition to a public measure on ethical grounds it has shouted itself hoarse defending and interpreting the Constitution. All through the war of the rebellion at most of its conventions the party informed the country secession was unconstitutional, but also that all the measures adopted to suppress it were unconstitutional. As in the case of the illegal vote, the only redress was a warrant from a magistrate.

I suppose eloquent gentlemen on the other side will any day outdo us in denouncing illegal voting. Their denunciation of the crime will only be equaled by their denunciation of laws to prevent it. Let me fairly state your position: Fraud in the election of a Representative to this House is very wrong, but it is equally wrong for Congress to pass a law to prevent it; Congress can pass no law to prevent gangs of men, twenty in number, voting at twenty different polls on the same day; can pass no law to prevent the bribery of electors; can pass no law to protect an honest count of the ballots after their deposit in the box; all would be unconstitutional and void, and, from the democratic stand-point, an abridgment of the rights of the States, and consequently of the rights of the citizen. For a moment let me examine the provision of the Constitution. The first clause of section 2 reads:

The House of Representatives shall be composed of members chosen every second year by the people of the several States, and the electors in each State shall have the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the State Legislature.

I grant this provision gives to the Legislature, indirectly, the determining of the qualification of the electors for Representative in Congress, but it does not give it uncoupled by limitation, it does not give it except as it adopts as a standard for the qualifications of the congressional elector, the elector of the most numerous branch of the State Legislature, which the State Legislature may of course from time to time vary. I say, therefore, the right of ballot at a congressional election comes from the United States Constitution; it declares to the State, you may define the qualification of your electors of members of the most popular branch of the Legislature, and change it as often as you like, but those electors and none others shall vote for Representatives to Congress; the Constitution of the United States guarantees and protects them in that right.

Suppose a State should restrict or enlarge the class who may vote for Representative in Congress within or beyond the qualified electors for the most numerous branch of the Legislature. I ask the gentleman from Kentucky if such limitation would not be unconstitutional and void? To illustrate: under the State law there is not in my State any property qualification attached to the elector for the most numerous branch of the Legislature; suppose a Legislature of the State should attach one to the elector for Representative in Congress that he should be taxed as the owner of one thousand dollars' worth of real estate, and under the system of State election laws those only possessed of that qualification could vote for Representative, will the gentleman tell me Congress could not protect the electors for the most numerous branch of the Legislature, unpossessed of the aforementioned property qualification, in the privileged constitutional right of voting for Representative in Congress?

Section 4 of the Constitution provides:

The times, places, and manner of holding elections for Senators and Representatives shall be prescribed in each State by the Legislature thereof; but the Congress may at any time by law make or alter such regulations.

It will be remarked the reservation to the State Legislature is no broader than the grant to Congress over this question. It is obvious there was no intention of reserving to the States more than it expressed in the Constitution. Independent of the Constitution, I will concede for the purposes of this argument the entire jurisdiction of the subject would be in the States. It seems to me, therefore, when in the broad language employed the Legislatures of the several States were authorized to determine the times, places, and "manner of holding elections," the phrase "manner of holding elections" includes the declaring how the ballots shall be voted, whether secretly or openly, what measures shall be taken to prevent illegal voting, and in what manner the votes at the close of the election shall be canvassed and returns made. The power to enforce when made is an incident to the authority to make laws. In constitutional law we do not look for legislative detail, but simply power for legislative detail in a subordinate body.

It is conceded on all hands the reservation "but Congress may at any time make or alter such regulations" as to the time, place, and manner of holding elections was that Congress might perpetuate itself, was for the self-preservation of that branch of the Government; if a State should not make the regulations Congress might; if a State made them unjustly or improperly Congress might alter them; but it will be borne in mind the power over the subject in Congress is independent of non-action or unjust and improper action on the part of a State Legislature. To have granted the power thus conditionally would have left as a debatable point what would constitute sufficient legislation or improper legislation on the part of the Legisture, and we find, I say, no limitation on the power of Congress to make regulations independent of State legislation; and I therefore insist, when the reservation to the States is no broader than the grant to Congress, and when it is manifest, is conceded by all here, asserted by all writers contemporaneous with the adoption of the Constitution, many of whom aided in its preparation, and since, that the clause gives Congress the power to make the needed election laws, to perpetuate itself by biennial elections this House, if the State failed therein, and yet gives it in absolute terms, not depending upon State action or want of State action, Congress has power to enact the proper elections laws to secure an honest election and give the proper officers the authority to execute them. This is a question of power. And suppose a State Legislature had made no provision for an election of Representatives in Congress; I then judge, by the line of argument pursued by some of the speakers upon the other side, Congress might; and this concedes the issue, for the question involved is not one of propriety but of constitutional power.

I have urged the constitutional right to make laws infers the power of their enforcement; that whatever laws Congress may pass upon the subject she can compel the observance of under the Constitution. I have already said all the authority is to the effect this provision was intended to perpetuate the legislative branch of the Government. The last subdivision of section 8, first article of the Constitution, provides Congress has power "to make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers," (and perhaps it will be urged this applies to the powers only in section 8,) "and all other powers vested by this Constitution in the Government of the United States." Under this provision Congress has passed all the laws against obstructing mails and robbing them, the only other provision of the Constitution, reserving to Congress the power "to establish post-offices and post-roads."

The Constitution declares "Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises;" and thereupon and under the provision cited for carrying into execution the powers granted Congress we have our whole system of criminal laws to punish smuggling and violations of internal-revenue laws, and yet under the same authority, we are told, Congress cannot provide for the enforcement of the laws it may legally enact to protect the ballot-box from illegal votes, and provide for an honest count at the election of Representatives to this House.

The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CARLISLE] seems to have discovered a new argument against the constitutionality of these election laws; I do not remember to have seen it elsewhere. They are unconstitutional, he thinks, because Congress has the same power over the election of Senators it has over the election of Representatives, and, therefore, he urges these laws might be applied to the election of Senators. Does it not occur to the gentleman the constitutional authority to supervise, regulate, and protect a senatorial election is an authority to be executed within the forms of proper laws in reference thereto? Because Congress has the authority to provide for a senatorial election, and an honest one, and for the honest election of Representatives to this House, it does not follow it must be by the same forms of law and the same methods, that it has not that authority because what would be proper in the one case would not be in the other.

Mr. Chairman, that extra session has been rendered necessary and the bold attitude of the majority assumed because this election law is a protection against the repeaters and ballot-box stuffers of New York City; it is because of its effect as a restraint, then, it is attacked. It is not my intention to investigate the operations of the law in that great city; that will be thoroughly done by my colleague who will follow me; in fact, sir, the subject needs no elucidation. The methods of the illegal voters, the false counts in the past, have been known by the intelligent public, and I had hoped the day was past when the representatives of a great political party would openly demand the guards against them be removed. No rhetorical flourishes over the rights of the citizen, no citation of English precedents, no argument over the scope and meaning of the Constitution, covers your purpose and object; and it is fitting, in making this onslaught upon the purity of elections, you should, if unsuccessful, seek to strangle the judiciary.

If you cannot repeal the laws, the next best thing for your purpose will be to starve the courts which administer them; but do not, gentlemen, deceive yourselves. The allies you court will never gain you victory; the methods you have adopted will never gain you honor or power. The people value liberty and respect the Constitution, and believe the first can only be maintained by an honest ballot, which the last guarantees. If there was to-day any doubt in the minds of the people we had not the constitutional power to prevent fraud in the elections to this House you would hear on all sides expressions both earnest and loud not to repeal the laws we have, but to give them a constitutional foundation. Your purpose is fully understood. You will feel more assured of success in the presidential contest in 1880 with the safeguards to an honest election removed.

In the contest of 1876, your presidential candidate sought to debauch the count of the canvassing boards. Rallying under the same standard-bearer, you intend to carry the election in 1880 by fraud. You have made your demand, and with the threat against national life if it is not acceded to, I can only express my belief, give utterance to my hopes that your unholy purpose will be staid by the presidential veto, and if it shall be, the glad shout of triumph from a solid North will satisfy you this nation will not meet its death at the hands of ballot-stuffers and repeaters at the polls, or of their apologists and defenders in Congress. A majority of the people are in favor of honest elections and a government created by them and that majority, never fear, will make common cause, forgetting all lesser questions, to preserve the one and thus insure the other.

Mr. McCOOK. Mr. Chairman, this morning, in common with other Representatives from the State of New York, I received the following resolution of the Legislature of that State, which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

STATE OF NEW YORK, IN SENATE,
Albany, April 9, 1879.

Resolved, (if the assembly concur,) That the refusal by a partisan majority in Congress to appropriate for the support of the National Government the moneys raised by the people for that purpose, except upon condition of the repeal or amendment of existing law, is a dangerous violation of the Constitution, amounting practically to revolution, which should be at all times resisted by the Executive by all constitutional means, and especially in the present crisis, when an attempt is being made to prostrate just laws heretofore enacted for the protection and purity of the elective franchise under threat of withholding the means for carrying on the Government which the Constitution enjoins.

Resolved, (if the assembly concur,) That a copy of this resolution be sent to each Senator and Representative from this State in the Congress of the United States.

STATE OF NEW YORK, IN SENATE, April 9, 1879.

The foregoing resolutions were duly passed.
By order:

JOHN W. VROOMAN, Clerk.

IN ASSEMBLY, April 21, 1879.

Concurred in without amendments.
By order of assembly:

EDWD. W. JOHNSON, Clerk.

Mr. FINLEY. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question? Was not that passed by a strict party vote?

Mr. McCOOK. It was passed by the Legislature of the State of New York.

Mr. FINLEY. And by a strict party vote?

Mr. McCOOK. I presume so.

Mr. Chairman, I do not know that I can say anything new in regard to the measures under discussion; but as I am absolutely certain that the city which I have the honor in part to represent is vitally interested in that portion which secures to us an honest vote and a fair count, I owe it to my constituents to give some of the reasons why I shall oppose any interference with it.

In regard to the constitutional questions involved or the propriety of attaching general legislation to appropriation bills, I shall have nothing to say. They have been so exhaustively discussed by able lawyers on each side of the House that I could do but little more than repeat the arguments; but I shall speak to what I claim are the merits of the law, the necessity for its continuance, and the injury that will result from its repeal.

It is a fortunate thing, I think, Mr. Chairman, that the majority of the people of this country are much more interested in laws that protect them in their rights of person and property than in elaborate constitutional arguments on abstract propositions. I am not indifferent, of course, to the necessity for a substantial adherence to the fundamental law of the Republic in our legislation, but no refinement of reasoning and no citation of precedents from English history can long deceive those to whom our written Constitution is accessible. In the language of Mr. Dallas, "its words are plain and intelligible, and it is meant for the home-bred, unsophisticated understanding of our fellow-citizens," and these same "fellow-citizens" know perfectly well that the men who framed it not only lived almost within sight of the days when the principles of the British constitution were established, but understood thoroughly its practical workings. Knowing all this, they are quite as well aware as we that while no king in England has exercised the veto power for over two hundred years, yet the men who gave to us our Constitution deliberately conferred it upon the President of the United States. Our constituents know quite as well as we that while the English House of Lords can be coerced by the unquestioned power of the executive to create peers in sufficient numbers to control its action, yet the authors of our Government made the Senate the equal in dignity and power of the House, limiting its purely legislative functions in the single instance of the right to originate bills for raising revenue. Knowing all this as they do, I do not believe that any attempt to intimidate the President or other co-ordinate branch of the Government will be sustained by them, and upon the simple but important questions necessarily involved the republican party can with entire safety appeal to the country.

Stripped of all the high-sounding words with which our democratic friends express their fears of centralization arising from Federal interference in elections, it is easy to discover what they hope to accomplish by insisting upon the changes suggested in this law. They understand very well that by the ordinary and usual methods of legislation it cannot be repealed, and they know quite as well that unless it is stricken from the statute-book the electoral vote of the State of New York in 1880 cannot be cast for their presidential candidate. In this calculation, and for reasons that I shall endeavor to give, the city of New York is an important factor; and to capture its vote a solid South, in close alliance with Tammany Hall, is in full hue and cry after an election law passed in the interest of fair play and honest voting.

It is inevitable of course that in any discussion involving the rights of the people and the question of national authority over its citizens a wail of sorrow should come up from the lately oppressed South; but so far as that section itself is concerned the election law is of no practical importance. The governing class in that portion of our country has already adopted such vigorous and effectual methods to preserve the purity of the ballot-box that Federal laws are unnecessary; and under the system of supervision established by them peace has been and will be kept at the polls, and the South kept solid, supervisors or no supervisors, deputy marshals or no deputy marshals. With the flight or annihilation of the "carpet-bagger" "radical misrule" has ceased; and, indifferent to Federal election laws and relieved at last of the incubus of Federal soldiery, the natural rulers of the land can work out in their own peculiar way the problem of the equality of the negro before the law. This new plan having resulted in the elimination of the black man from Congress, if not from politics altogether, the North, but especially the city of New York, is now to be saved from itself by removing the restrictions placed upon fraudulent voting and ballot-box stuffing. With a disinterestedness which I am sure we appreciate, our southern friends, with the aid of the few democrats on this floor from the North, offer us relief from the tyranny of United States laws and United States officials. No definite plan has yet been suggested as a substitute; but it is fair to infer that "rifle clubs" and "white-leaguers" are considered more efficient as conservators of the peace and guardians of the ballot than Federal marshals and supervisors.

Mr. Chairman, willing as the South appears to be to carry out the "reforms" proposed by the repeal of this law, a distinguished citizen of my own State is entitled to the credit of inaugurating the movement; for it was not until my colleague [Mr. FERNANDO WOOD] announced it to the last House of Representatives that the democratic party became thoroughly convinced that the law was an unconstitutional and dangerous one. It cannot be denied that prior to that there had been rumors that it was a bad one; but after its practical operation in the city of New York in the presidential election of 1876 had passed the scrutiny and received the approval of a democratic committee of investigation, of which my colleague [Mr. COX] was chairman, these rumors apparently died away. They were revived, however, and assumed form if not substance last autumn, just one month after the people of the State of New York had shown their utter distrust of the democratic party by electing to the Forty-sixth Congress twenty-five republicans out of the thirty-three Representatives to which she is entitled on this floor. So completely did they withhold their confidence from this so-called party of the people that in all that populous and important part of the State north of the city but one democratic member [Mr. LOUNSBERY] was elected. Even in the Tammany-ridden city itself we elected three republicans out of the seven composing our delegation; and the mover of the resolution that has caused all this trouble, that vigilant tribune of the people and leader of his party in this House, [Mr. FERNANDO WOOD,] finds himself in this Congress in a minority of fifty-two hundred and sixty-two, although elected in 1876 by over six thousand majority.

It was natural, perhaps, that this startling change should be accounted for in a way that would act as a salve to the wounded pride of defeated democratic leaders. More important still, excuses had to be made to that watchful and exacting section about to enter upon its second great struggle for the preservation of the Constitution of the fathers, and Tammany Hall, true to its instincts, pitched upon an election law passed to prevent fraudulent voting as the victim as well as the explanation. It was this that caused the appointment of the Davenport committee of investigation; and I am convinced that we are indebted to the same influences for the stand taken by the democratic party which has led to the expense, annoyance, and danger of this called session. Of the seven called sessions of Congress since the adoption of the Constitution two have been forced upon the country by the democratic party since October, 1877. They have signalized their return to power by making the first necessary because of an attempt by a democratic House in the Forty-fourth Congress to impose restraints upon the constitutional power of the President as Commander-in-Chief of the Army and Navy. The second has been forced upon us because a democratic House in the Forty-fifth Congress attempted to coerce the Senate of the United States. The first was the special work of the South in its determination to cripple the Army and tie the hands of the Executive. The second we owe to the democractic party acting at the dictation of Tammany Hall for the purpose of not only capturing the next House of Representatives but the Presidency itself.

If I am correct in asserting that a solid South has struck hands with Tammany Hall in preparation for the campaign of 1880, it may be well enough for us to know something of one of the parties to this powerful alliance. What the other is the world knows, for the history of the solid South in arms is written in blood from Bull Run to Appomattox, where, with a courage that we cannot but respect, it fought for the right of secession and disunion. Defeated at last, after four long years of terrible war, it now appears in the Congress of the Union which it failed to destroy as the champion and expounder of the Constitution which it tried to subvert. In this new role it has, as a rule, but few words but those of abuse for the party which, with all its mistakes, never faltered in its devotion to the integrity of the Union, and whose blunders were mainly on the side of generosity and magnanimity.

Mr. Chairman, the other ally, although not so well known, has played no insignificant part in the history of the country, for it dates back as far as the year 1789, when it was first established. In 1805 it was incorporated as a charitable organization, but it was soon perverted from its original purposes into a political machine, unscrupulous, powerful, and dangerous beyond example in our history. The celebrated Aaron Burr was one of its original members and organizers, and De Witt Clinton was one of its most relentless enemies. It is but fair to say that for the first thirty years of its existence many good men were numbered among its members, and even to-day some excellent citizens follow its fortunes. While it has an outside organization that is public it has an internal one that rules it absolutely and despotically. It is secret; it has its "sachems" and its "sagamores;" it practically registers the decrees and obeys the behests of one man; and it is essentially anti-democratic in all of its ways and tendencies.

From such a political organization it was inevitable that great evils should follow, until at last it never hesitated about the means it used to accomplish its ends, or the agents it employed to consolidate its power. I do not assert that all of its members were cognizant of the crimes committed by it against good government, but it is indisputable that it was the "fostering mother" of that peculiar and skilled talent which found its opportunity on election day and around the ballot-box. It was well described by an eminent writer when he said, in 1872, that "its theory of political action for the last twenty years has been that New York was to be governed from below, and not not from above; by the weight of ignorance and the strength of corruption, and not by the force of intelligence and virtue." So true was this that elections in the city became a mere farce, and honest men of all parties stood helpless and appalled in the presence of disreputable political intrigues and gigantic political frauds. Made bold by immunity from punishment, its satellites plundered the city openly and shamelessly; it placed its creatures on the bench and in other places of profit and trust, and in 1868 cheapened it American citizenship and outraged decency and justice by ordering some of its judges to issue thousands of fraudulent naturalization papers.

It was by these notorious means that the city of New York was carried by 60,578 majority and the State by 10,000 for the democratic candidate for President in 1868. It was the knowledge of these facts that led to a union of respectable men of all parties which swept Tweed and his gang from power and place; and it was with the hope and in the belief that the repetition of these crimes could be made impossible that the very law was passed which we are now called upon to strike from the statute-book. [Applause.]

I do not wish to be understood as saying that Tammany Hall, as at present constituted, is as wicked and corrupt as it was in the days which I have attempted to describe. It unquestionably is an improvement on the days when the citizens of New York were at the mercy of a merciless crew; but its traditions are not forgotten, its greed for power is unabated, and the sudden interest which it has developed in this election law should make us hesitate before we repeal or modify it.

Mr. Chairman, that I may not be accused of exaggerating the evils that called for the passage of this supervisor law, and to satisfy the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] that he is mistaken when he refers to it as being "born of the passions incident to civil strife," I invite attention to the report of a congressional committee, of which Hon. William Lawrence was chairman, made to this House February 23, 1869.

The investigation was ordered in consequence of a memorial from many of the best citizens of New York, presented to Congress December 14, 1868, when the evidence of the infamous proceedings of the month previous at the presidential election was easily obtained. The report is very voluminous, but neither its statements nor its conclusions can be successfully controverted:

But, appalling and startling as these frauds have been in our past history, they are all surpassed in some respects by those perpetrated in the general election in the State, and especially in the city of New York, on the 3d of November, 1868.

These frauds were the result of a systematic plan of gigantic proportions, stealthily prearranged and boldly executed, not merely by bands of degraded desperadoes, but with the direct sanction, approval, or aid of many prominent officials and citizens of New York, with the shrewdly concealed connivance of others, and almost without an effort to discourage or prevent them by any of those in whose interest and political party associations they were successfully executed, who could not fail to have cognizance of them, and whose duty it was to expose, defeat, and punish them.

* * * * * * *

These frauds are so varied in character that they comprehend every known crime against the elective franchise. They corrupted the administration of justice, degraded the judiciary, defeated the execution of the laws, subverted for the time being in New York State the essential principles of popular government; robbed the people of that great State of their rightful choice of electors of President and Vice-President, of a governor and other officers; disgraced the most populous city of the Union; encouraged the enemies of republican government here and everywhere to deride our institutions as a failure, and endangered the peace of the Republic by an attempt to defeat the will of the people in the choice of their rulers.

* * * * * * *

Among the most prominent of the frauds committed in the interest of the democratic party in the city and State of New York, in connection with the election in November, 1868, are these:

1. Many thousands of aliens fraudulently procured or were furnished with certificates of naturalization illegally or fraudulently issued, by means of which they were enabled to register as voters, and voted in violation of law.

2. Many hundreds of certificates of naturalization were granted in the names of fictitious persons, to be used by native-born and naturalized citizens and aliens in falsely registering as voters, and to enable them to vote many times at the election.

3. Many hundreds of persons voted in New York City from two to forty times or more, each under assumed or fictitious names, fraudulently registered for the purpose.

4. Extensive frauds were committed in canvassing tickets, and names of voters were entered on the poll lists, and democratic tickets counted as if voters representing them voted, when no such person voted at all.

5. To accomplish these frauds gross neglect of duty and disregard of law so great as to evince a criminal purpose prevailed in some of the courts, while officers and democratic partisans of almost every grade, either by official influence or otherwise, aided, sanctioned, or knew of and failed to prevent them. The same influences shielded the perpetrators in nearly all cases from detection or arrest, and when arrested they have, through the agency of judicial officers and others charged with the duty of prosecution, escaped all punishment.

6. Through these agencies the democratic electors of President and Vice-President and the democratic candidate for governor of the State of New York were fraudulently elected.

7. And the investigations of the committee show that existing State laws and the mode of enforcing them are wholly inadequate to prevent these frauds, but that Congress has the power to enact laws which, if faithfully executed, will to some extent furnish remedies hereafter.

There is no law of Congress professing to prevent or punish frauds in voting or conducting elections, and the penalties relating to certificates of naturalization are by no means adequate.

Mr. Chairman, prior to the year 1868, naturalizations in the city were effected only in the court of common pleas and the superior court. The average number naturalized each year in the two courts from 1856 to 1867 inclusive was 9,207. On the 6th of October, 1868, however, the supreme court, presided over by Judge Barnard, afterward impeached and removed, commenced operations, and in twenty-three days 10,093 American citizens and democratic voters had been ground out by this new process. Between the 8th and the 23d of that month, this good judge, single-handed and alone, ordered a daily average of 718 certificates of citizenship; but even his industry was exceeded by those who presided over the superior court, where McCunn, assisted by Garvin, naturalized in one day (October 14) 2,109 persons. On other days, 1,868, 1,856, 1,842, and 1,760 were naturalized, the daily average for seventeen days being 1,415; and the indefatigable McCunn declared that he could examine two witnesses in a minute, and often exceeded that number in practice. When it is remembered that time is consumed in calling applicants and witnesses; in explaining what is to be proved, and in making room by withdrawal for others; the committee's estimate of twelve naturalizations in one hour is a fair and liberal one. Attention is also called to the report of a select committee of the Twenty-eighth Congress, where in speaking of a judge in Louisana it says:

It further appears that nearly four hundred certificates were issued in one day, and it seems to your committee impossible that this could have been legally done.

The reputation of that State for extraordinary energy and ability in all matters pertaining to elections and the purity of the ballot-box is so well known that it needs no eulogy from me; but the skill displayed by the New York democratic judge was as two to one in comparison to his Louisiana prototype. Fortunately both were removed from the bench which they disgraced.

The common pleas court had some old-fashioned notions about honesty and decency, and naturally was not in favor with these patriots zealous to confer the rights of citizenship upon all comers, so that during the whole year it granted but 3,145 certificates. Altogether there were issued in the three courts during that year 41,112 certificates of naturalization; more than four times the average of previous years, and two and a half times greater than the largest number in any preceding year. In order to avoid the previous declaration required by law, the large majority of certificates issued were upon "minor applications," or those who had lived in the United States five years, including three years next preceding arriving at the age of twenty-one. In the supreme court in one month, out of a total of 10,093 naturalized, 9,711 were "minor applications." In the superior court, out of 17,572 certificates granted, 13,451 were on "minor applications." In many instances no renunciation of allegiance was made; and in some the records show that those who were born in Germany renounced allegiance to the Queen of Great Britain and Ireland.

That the whole plan was a prearranged one to cheat and defraud is clearly shown. The evidence is conclusive that between September 16 and October 23 there were printed for the use of the courts 105,000 blank applications and 69,000 certificates of naturalization, and this in the face of the fact that prior to 1868 the highest number naturalized in the city was 16,493 in 1856. Of this number 75,000 applications and 39,000 certificates were furnished to the supreme court between the 16th of September and the 22d of October, and to the superior court 30,000 applications and 30,000 certificates, and 10,000 were furnished to the supreme court so late as October 20, or within two weeks of the day of election. Of the whole number of certificates furnished the latter court but 1,800 remained after the naturalization mill had ceased from its labors in the interest of democracy and pure elections.

Certificates were issued in great numbers, signed and sealed in blank, and delivered to persons who never appeared in court or who never took the oath of allegiance. They were scattered broadcast over the city and to the adjoining counties, and democratic partisans in their anxiety for a fair ballot and an honest count supplied portions of New Jersey and Connecticut out of their abundance.

The papers were distributed in bundles to groggeries and groceries, to houses of ill-fame, to bar-rooms, and billiard-rooms, in blank, and filled up as men called for them. They were sold in scores of places for from fifty cents to $2 each.

Professional witnesses were employed in shoals and openly and notoriously advertised their infamy. Eighty witnesses appeared for over 9,000 applicants, swearing to their personal knowledge as to length of residence, place of birth, character, &c. One individual appeared as witness 455 times in the supreme court during October, and an examination of the record shows that the same man appeared on the same day 299 times in the superior court. Another is down as witness in one court 224 times in one month and 252 times in another court, while a third appears 251 times in the one and 195 times in the other. It is impossible to arrive at a correct estimate of the total number of illegal votes cast in the State at the presidential election, but from the best information gathered by the committee it is placed at 60,000, of which at least one-half went to swell the democratic majority in the city.

Every possible form of fraud was practiced, of which ballot-box stuffing and repeating were the simplest and easiest. False personation, perjury of witnesses, fabrication of applications and oaths to support them, and granting certificates in fictitious names and without the presence of the applicant, were some of the means by which the Tammany democracy proved their devotion to the principles of the Constitution.

The occasion, too, was one that called for the exercise of their highest powers. The republican candidate for President was the foremost soldier of his age, as magnanimous in peace as he had been chivalrous in war; and with them it was a labor of love to defeat the man who had been engaged in a "wicked and unconstitutional" struggle for the maintenance of the Union. To-day, with the prospect of renomination almost a certainty, Tammany and a solid South are arrayed against an election law made necessary because of the crimes committed by one of the allies; but as "anything to beat Grant" signally failed in 1868, so do I believe that it will fail in 1880.

Mr. Chairman, the story that I have tried very briefly to tell of the shameful practices that made this election law an absolute necessity is neither a new nor pleasant one. As a citizen of New York, proud of its intelligence, its wealth, its generosity, and its acknowledged financial and commercial supremacy, it is with regret that I have been compelled by a sense of duty to refer to a page in its history that I should like to see folded down forever. I mention it because so terrible have been the evils resulting from unchecked democratic domination in that splendid city, that I would be untrue to my people did I remain silent when an effort is made to break down the only bulwark we have against the flood of crimes that would inevitably destroy us.

The attempt is so entirely without justification, and has been pushed with so much arrogance and in such utter disregard of the interests of the city and the country, that it should be, and I hope will be, resisted at all hazards and to the bitter end. If there is any question upon which there is absolutely unanimity among those more interested in good government than in the rise or fall of individuals or of parties, it is that the ballot-box and the jury-box shall be kept free and pure. This is the question we are now called upon to decide, and we may be very sure that the country will hold us to a strict accountability for the exercise of our trust.

So far as I have any knowledge, this law was enforced in 1872 and 1874 in New York and throughout the country without any complaint either as to its constitutionality, its necessity, or the manner in which it was administered. The frauds which had made it necessary were so recent, so outrageous, and had been so clearly established that even the democratic party hesitated about facing the people on the issue of its repeal. Gradually, however, as the section which has always controlled the policy of that party grew stronger and more solid in Congress, the law was found to be an obstacle in the way of a complete capture of the Capitol. Under it "honest citizens" were interfered with in their sacred right to stuff ballot-boxes, repeat ad infinitum, or bulldoze black men, and an occasional United States official was discovered who insisted that the penalties attached to its violation were not mere pleasantries. In fact, it was found that when properly enforced it really did "abridge the liberties of the citizen" so beautifully and touchingly referred to by my friend from Kentucky, [Mr. BLACKBURN,] and for that reason it had to be looked after. Too wise, too prudent, and as yet too weak to fully carry out their designs the first effort was what might be called a tentative one, resulting in a committee of investigation to inquire into elections in northern cities in 1876, of which my distinguished constituent as well as colleague [Mr. COX] was chairman. No one who knows him will question his democracy, his devotion to his party, or his ability; yet the report which he made to the House March 3, 1877, must have been a sad disappointment to those who only wanted an excuse to sweep the law out of existence.

I read extracts from his report in regard to the law and the conduct of the election in New York City:

Whatever may be said about the United States law as to elections or their supervision by United States authority; whatever may be said as to the right of a State to regulate in all ways such elections, this must be said: that the administration of the law by Commissioners Davenport, Muirhead, and Allen, the United States functionaries, and their subordinates, was eminently just, wise, and conducive to a fair public expression in a presidential year of unusual excitement and great temptation.

* * * * * * *

Both political organizations presented applications for the appointment of supervisors. The court, following the decision of Judge Woodruff in 1872, recognized the lists which were indorsed by the State and national committees. Objections were made and heard, so as to purge the lists, and in the whole five hundred and sixty-nine electoral districts two supervisors of different parties were on hand to supervise the registry and aid the local or State officials.

* * * * * * *

The United States marshal, district attorney, and the counsel of the corporation of New York were called in. They were men of various politics. They came to an agreement, which was signed, so as to execute the law without straining it, and so as to adjudicate without irritation or impediment the questions which might arise during the day of election.

* * * * * * *

Of course the United States marshal had his deputies to execute the warrants. There was one marshal for each election district. Extracts from United States statutes were sent out in circulars, together with directions to supervisors and deputy marshals. More care could not have been taken, in the judgment of the committee, for the verification of the registry and the purity of the election.

* * * * * * *

The committee would commend to other portions of the country and to other cities this remarkable system, developed through the agency of both local and Federal authorities, acting in harmony for an honest purpose. In no portion of the world, and in no era of time, where there has been an expression of the popular will through the forms of law, has there ever been a more complete and thorough illustration of republican institutions. Whatever may have been the previous habit or conduct of elections in those cities, or howsoever they may conduct themselves in the future, this election of 1876 will stand as a monument of what good faith, honest endeavor, legal forms, and just authority may do for the protection of the elective franchise.

From the moment the supervisors are appointed, from the moment that the lists are purged, from the moment that the applications are examined, to the very last return of the popular expression, this election shows the calm mastery of prudence. For this due credit should be given to men of both parties, and especially to the corporation counsel, Mr. Whitney, and United States supervisors.

* * * * * * *

All cases of fraud which were brought to the attention of the committee were thoroughly examined, and the committee went so far as to find out that no more vigilance could have been exercised by any arrangement known to the law to prevent fraudulent voting. The telegraph, post-office, and police, and all the legal and police paraphernalia were in constant requisition and use to avoid any bad registry or voting. Conferences among the best men, irrespective of party, and the co-operation among men of all parties, and the watchfulness on both sides of the Hudson and East Rivers, counsel given and received from all classes of officials, all with the one main object, effectually estopped a fraudulent presentment of the popular wish.

* * * * * * *

Whether this work, which is unexampled, should be accounted a republican work, through their Federal election law, or the work of the local authorities and organisms, inspired by a desire for an honest vote among the people, who were especially jealous of it on account of what was occurring elsewhere, one thing the committee must report, that it approximated as near to perfection as it was possible to do. There were no riots, no fights, no bayonets, no disturbance, no conflicts of authority, and none of the concomitants which accompany fraud and endanger free institutions.

The people of the country owe a tribute of respect to the police of a city of more than a million, and to the United States officers, who numbered thousands, for the harmony of action between the various officers, so as to illustrate to all the world how the imperial island city can conduct herself under great excitement and in view of startling events.

The report from which I have read extracts is signed by three democratic members of Congress, Mr. COX of New York, Mr. RICE of Ohio, and Mr. Waddell of North Carolina.

Mr. Chairman, the next time this law was brought prominently before the country was when my colleague [Mr. WOOD] rose in his place and denounced it, as well as the officers who two years before had been complimented by Mr. COX. As I have before stated, this occurred within a month of the overwhelming defeat of the democratic party at the congressional elections of last fall in the State of New York; and, as we have seen, it led to the appointment of another committee of investigation. Long before that report could be made to the House the democratic party in the Forty-fifth Congress had determined to repeal the law; and, with the knowledge of the fact that after March 4 both Houses of Congress would be democratic, they attached the repealing clauses to an appropriation bill, knowing that a republican Senate would not agree to them. The result was as they expected; and now, with House and Senate in political accord, the Government is threatened with starvation unless the President approves a bill or bills submitted to him.

The election law that Mr. COX two years ago spoke of as "approximating perfection" is now denounced as "partisan" and "unconstitutional," and this, too, when the agents who enforced it are the same and the means by which it was executed identical. That this charge of partisanship in the administration of the law is untrue in fact is clearly shown by the evidence of Mr. Davenport before the Lynde commission, (page 491 and following,) to which I invite attention. It is too long to give in detail at this time, but it can be summarized as follows: With satisfactory evidence of the frauds committed in 1868, Mr. Davenport, as commissioner only, began in 1870 to attack the 1868 papers. In that election he proceeded to cause parties holding the papers to be challenged and inquired of, and, so far as possible, he endeavored to prevent their registering upon them. In 1872, acting as supervisor, he issued precisely the same instructions that he subsequently issued in 1874, 1876, and 1878. In addition, in 1876, having obtained from year to year more definite information as to the facts, he caused those who registered in that year on 1868 papers issued by the supreme and superior courts to be challenged upon the sole grounds that they had been illegally issued, unless it was otherwise specifically mentioned. The number registered that year was about ninety-five hundred, and he issued the order as a preliminary step to what was done at the election last autumn, and because he desired to bring home to each individual notice of the claim made that these papers were illegal. As a result of this action, about four hundred certificates were voluntarily surrendered in 1876.

Early in May, 1878, the chief supervisor determined to proceed finally against these papers, and that every appearance of partisanship might be removed he notified the authorities of Tammany Hall that it was his desire to take them up, if possible, with the acquiescence of all political parties. In response to this a committee was appointed by Tammany, two of the members of which at least met with the chief supervisor (at his request) on more than one occasion, but finally failed to appear. Why, I leave to this committee to determine. The express purpose of the supervisor was to avoid conflict at the fall elections and to enable those who were entitled to it to be naturalized properly and legally at once; and no complaint was made and no warrant sworn out against any man who had not registered on the papers of 1868 issued by the two courts engaged in fraudulent naturalization. After consultation, the United States district attorney suggested that some preliminary notice should be given, and on the 24th of August, 1878, the following was issued and published in the press of the city. In addition, the chief supervisor directed copies to be mailed to the persons interested, and the supervisors in the election districts were ordered to hand to each person who held one of the papers of 1868 on which he had voted in 1876 a copy of the notice as he came to register. The following is the notice:

UNITED STATES COURT-HOUSE, ROOM 1, FOURTH FLOOR,
New York, August 29, 1878.

SIR: As complaint has been filed with me charging you with being possessed of a false, fraudulent, and void certificate of naturalization, issued in 1868, your attention is called to the following notice from the United States district attorney.

Respectfully, yours,

JOHN I. DAVENPORT.

—

OFFICE OF THE UNITED STATES ATTORNEY FOR THE SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF NEW YORK,
New York, August 24, 1878.

To holders of certificates of naturalization purporting to have been issued from supreme and superior courts in the city of New York in 1868:

I am officially informed by the chief supervisor of elections for this district that complaints have been lodged with him, as commissioner, charging many persons residing in this district with being possessed of fraudulent certificates of citizenship (commonly known as naturalization papers) purporting to have been issued by the supreme and superior courts in the city of New York in the year 1868. Such complaints further charge the holders of such certificates with having fraudulently registered thereon at the last congressional election in 1876. These are offenses against the laws of the United States. As some of the persons holding such certificates may be lawfully entitled to be naturalized, and as many of them were possibly ignorant and misled, and in order that no injustice may be done to any person now willing to obey the law, I hereby give notice that each person against whom such complaint has been made can avoid arrest and prosecution by appearing before Commissioner Davenport, in his office, in the United States district court building, room 1, fourth floor, on or before the 21st day of September next, (1878,) and surrendering such certificate, if, upon examination, it shall prove to be fraudulent. For the convenience of such of the accused as are laboring-men, the United States commissioner's office will, on and after Monday, the 26th instant, and until Saturday, September 21, proximo, be kept open until eight o'clock and thirty minutes in the evening.

STEWART L. WOODFORD,
United States Attorney.

As a result of this first notice over one thousand persons appeared and surrendered their certificates.

On the 21st of September a notice of a substantially similar character was given, extending the time to October 12. In response to this notice over two thousand persons appeared and surrendered their certificates; and on the last-mentioned date a third and last notice was sent out, extending the time until November 1.

Under these three notices thirty-four hundred appeared and, without compulsion or coercion, voluntarily surrendered their certificates of naturalization. In the case of each individual the surrender was accompanied by a deposition subscribed by him in the following words, and it can be found on page 552 of the evidence taken by the Lynde committee of the last House:

THE UNITED STATES }
vs. }
—— ——. }

SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF NEW YORK, ss:

—— ——, being duly sworn, deposes and says that he resides at No. ——, in the city of New York.

That he was born in —— about the year ——, and arrived in this country about the year ——, being at that time about —— years of age; that in the year 1868 deponent received a certificate of citizenship, purporting to have been issued to him by the —— court in the city of New York; that about —— years previous to obtaining the said certificate deponent —— declared his intention to become a citizen of the United States; that deponent has —— served in the Army of the United States, and his father or mother were —— naturalized citizens of this country during the period of his minority; that deponent could —— read and could —— write at the time of obtaining his said certificate, and that his witness was one —— ——, who had known deponent for about —— years, at the time deponent applied to be made a citizen; that deponent, upon learning that it is claimed that the certificate he so received is false, fraudulent, and void, and that complaint has been made of his possession of the same, desires to avail himself of the provisions of a notice issued by the attorney of the United States in this district on October 12, 1878, and therefore appears and voluntarily surrenders the said certificate, to the end and for the purpose that the same be canceled or destroyed by the court having jurisdiction in the premises; and he prays that such court will take such action in the matter.

—— ——.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this —— day of ——, 187-.

—— ——,
United States Commissioner, Southern District of New York.

In order that there could be no mistake about the question as to the knowledge of the person who subscribed the deposition, the chief supervisor swears:

I desire to be understood as testifying unequivocally that as to each person before me who surrendered a certificate I personally made the inquiry as to whether he had read the deposition or it had been read to him, and as to whether he fully understood the contents of the papers.

Many were read a second time and explained; all were signed in the presence of the chief supervisor, and every precaution taken to prevent misapprehension. No man of sufficient intelligence to exercise the right of suffrage could have signed such a deposition without knowing its full purport, and the mere fact that over three thousand subscribed it and voluntarily surrendered their papers is almost conclusive proof against every naturalization certificate issued in 1868 from the supreme and superior courts.

Mr. Chairman, if it be conceded that it is right to prevent men from voting on papers illegally issued, the action of the chief supervisor up to the day of election at least was prudent, unpartisan, and clearly in the interests of an honest vote. The principal grievance, however, is that on that day six hundred persons were arrested, and that this intimidated others whose right to vote was undoubted. The last I believe to be absolutely without foundation; and while there may have been individual instances of hardship in enforcing the law, that any number of legal voters were deprived of their rights is unsupported by evidence of any reliable character.

When we consider all the circumstances, the only wonder is that the law was enforced so fairly and with so few just causes for complaint. Within the narrow limits of the city a presidential election calls out more votes than in any one of twenty States of the Union. In 1876 its vote was larger than that of Arkansas, Delaware, and Florida combined; and larger than either one of the great States of Alabama, Louisiana, Mississippi, or Texas. It has five hundred and sixty-nine separate and distinct polling places; and to assert that the arrest of one man on an average at each place intimidated any one is simply absurd.

Just as it stands on the statute-book and administered precisely as it has been, the law secures to the citizens of New York what they imperatively demand—a fair election; and I adopt without reserve the conclusions of my colleague [Mr. COX] when he said of the election in New York which he investigated that—

> Of course, mistakes here and there occurred. Errors were made in consequence of mistakes of voters themselves as to registering their residence, but those mistakes were, as far as could be, remedied; and it would be wrong to hold the system pursued by State and Federal officers responsible for a few flecks and specks.

And now, Mr. Chairman, a few words more and I shall no longer trespass on the time and patience of this committee. I am a strong partisan and a firm believer in the necessity for republican rule in Congress and out of it; but if it can only be secured by interfering with the rights of the citizen, either under cover of law or in disregard of it, the price is entirely too great to pay for success. I believe in a perfect equality of rights and privileges, and I most certainly believe in protecting every citizen without regard to race or color in the full enjoyment of them. The war for the suppression of the rebellion left upon our hands a whole people suddenly, perhaps prematurely, endowed with the rights of citizenship; and when the Congress of the United States is discussing a law involving the freedom and purity of elections, we should not entirely lose sight of them in our zeal for the white man. It may be an old-fashioned idea, but I believe that it is as wicked and criminal to deprive the native-born black man of life, liberty, or his right to vote, as it is to deprive the foreign-born white man of either. I believe that officers of the Government who would use or abuse an election law so as to intimidate white democrats should be promptly and severely punished; and I also believe that those who use or encourage "rifle clubs" or "bulldozing" to intimidate black men who are republicans are public enemies and should be treated as such. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, in the darkest days of the rebellion, when the continent fairly trembled under the tread of armed men and when republican institutions were on trial, I never permitted myself to question the advantages of our form of government over all others; but no government is worthy of the name that is unable or unwilling to protect all of its citizens at home or abroad in peace as well as in war. Sentimental talk about the glories and beauties of the great Republic, with its motto of liberty and equality, in the presence of thousands of unpunished offenses against each, will deceive no one; and until white and black, native and naturalized, in every State in this Union, are protected in the exercise of all their rights, this Government of ours is but little more than a mere experiment.

Speaking for myself alone, I am neither alarmed nor disturbed at the prospect of seeing these great questions of equal rights and privileges carried into the next presidential campaign by the two parties dividing substantially on sectional lines. With many others, I had hoped that our sectional troubles and difficulties were buried beyond the possibility of resurrection, but as this new issue is none of our making, neither will we hesitate to accept it. Unless I much mistake the signs of the times the solid South in 1880 will be confronted for a second time by a solid North, [applause;] strong, patient, slow to anger or to recognize the fact that its confidence and generosity have been abused, but as firm for the right as it was once before in a memorable period of our history.

If, as has been said, the South is "solid" and will remain so in self-defense, the instinct of self-preservation will bind the people of the North together as firmly as in those stirring days when a solid North meant the preservation of the Union. There was no hesitation or faltering then, neither do I believe there will be now; and while it will not be a reassuring spectacle to see section arrayed against section, with the memories of 1861–'65, still fresh and unforgotten, it is barely possible that a solid North once more may not be without its advantages as a warning for the future. [Applause.]

Mr. ELLIS. Mr. Chairman, the issues presented in this bill have been so thoroughly and ably discussed that I feel great hesitation in further trespassing upon the patience and attention of the committee by attempting further argument; and I would not do so but for the fact that I come from a State and represent in part a people who have very often felt the iron enter their souls and the hard hand reached out for their oppression under color of the statutes we seek to repeal; and I feel it would be wrong for me to remain silent. A great battle is being fought, in which the interest and honor of my people are involved; and I do not think that I should stand with idle hands and permit others to achieve that peace and security which are to be obtained for them in the repeal of these obnoxious laws and in a full return to the plain and simple methods of the Constitution, unburdened by hostile enactments.

Before proceeding further, I desire right here and now to protest in the most solemn and emphatic manner against the long-continued and persistently repeated efforts of gentlemen on the republican side of the House to revive sectional issues, to array North against South, to bring back memories born of strife that has long since passed away. Oh, why will not the poisoned arrow lie still? Why will not the envenomed dart remain hidden beneath oblivious waters? Why must these discontented ghosts of the unhappy past, bearing back to us and to our people bitter and burning memories of an unholy and fratricidal war, be forever recalled?

Why is it that you republican Representatives of the great enlightened North and of a great political party will not cease to misrepresent the people of the conquered section? Why will you not cease to pour into the ears of your people the poison of hatred and sectionalism and distrust of the South? Is the Union never to be restored? Are the old fraternal feelings always to be banished? Do you seek to leave this legacy of hate to your people? Is your dream of Union ended and achieved by a mere physical, geographical, and political union? Do you not wish the Union which was imagined by our fathers, the Union of love, of confidence, of common hopes, common ambition, common achievements, common happiness? Is hatred and strife absolutely necessary to the life of the republican party? It is now more than fourteen years since the thunder of the last hostile gun disturbed the calm of our skies. The North triumphed fully; the South was conquered. Every issue of the war is settled. Slavery is forever gone, and no man regrets it. The doctrine of secession is forever dead. The political equality and rights of the ex-slave are fixed forever. Nobody here or elsewhere seeks to disturb them. I say, and let no man attempt to contradict what I assert, speaking not only for my own people, but as I believe for the entire people of the South, that they have accepted in the best of faith and with sincere hearts every single issue which was raised by the war and settled by the war.

The thirteenth, fourteenth, and fifteenth amendments to the Constitution, which were the outgrowth of the war, or rather which were enacted to preserve and secure what the distinguished gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. GARFIELD,] the leader of his party on this floor, declared to be the "precious results of the war," have been solemnly ratified and accepted, and to their maintenance the southern people have pledged their faith. No attempt at misrepresentation, no effort of any republican member to misrepresent or to garble what may have fallen in the heat of debate from the lips of democratic members can gainsay or detract from the truth of what I here solemnly proclaim. Oh, how weak, how utterly helpless must be that cause which requires to be bolstered and supported by misrepresentation, by misquotation of speeches, by citing isolated paragraphs from obscure papers edited by hair-brained idiots! Yet such has been the course of nearly all the republican members who have spoken on this question.

Mr. Chairman, no States have suffered in the past from the enforcement and abuses of the statutes we now seek to repeal as have Louisiana and South Carolina; and yet look at the sentiments of the people of those two States with regard to the constitutional amendments. No longer than the day before yesterday, when the people of Louisiana had assembled in convention to form a new constitution, the very first resolution which was entertained in a convention which is three-fourths democratic was, in substance, that the recent amendments to the Constitution and all the rights and privileges of the colored people under those amendments were sacred, inviolate, inviolable, and that there existed no intention on the part of any one to interfere with them, or to raise a single issue settled by the war. So much for Louisiana. The democratic convention of South Carolina assembled last year to nominate candidates and to adopt a platform, and the very first plank laid down in that platform was that the thirteenth, fourteenth, and fifteenth amendments are and ought of right to remain inviolate, and pledging the democracy of that State to maintain these amendments in letter and in spirit. In view of these solemn declarations and of the fact that since the South laid down her arms in surrender no word or act has been said or done by her except in obedience to the Constitution and the laws, I do appeal to you, representatives of the great republican party, to cease to misrepresent, to cease to revile us of the South. I beg of you, as you claim to have preserved the Union, not to jeopardize that Union either in the present or in the future, and not to make of it a mockery by sowing seeds of hatred and distrust, and by endeavoring to array section against section. I appeal to you as men and as representatives of a great Republic, and as statesmen worthy to be the representatives of a free people, to place the issues involved in this bill away above the region of sectionalism, far, far above the clouds of hatred and of prejudice, in that clear and pure region where the sunlight of judgment and reason falls undimmed and unfailing, and by that light to read and debate these great questions, and by that light to settle the issues which now divide us.

Will it do to meet the arguments which we have advanced in favor of the repeal of these obnoxious statutes by shouting "revolution?" Nobody is affected by it; nobody believes it. Nobody but a fool would for an instant believe that there is the slightest danger of "revolution" in this country. A little more than a month ago we began this debate. The great leader of the republican party raised the cry of "revolution," "destruction of the Government," "starving the Union to death." How have the people heard his cry of alarm? I will cite but one single response to it. Capital is always timid. Capital never invests in a government that is tottering amid the throes of revolution. Capital is a halcyon bird and flies only under calm skies and above calm waters. A month ago the capitalists of this country heard the gentleman from Ohio shout "revolution," and yet since the 22d day of March—I have the authority of the Secretary of the Treasury for the fact—nearly two hundred and thirty millions of the securities of the Government have been taken up by capital. No, the sensible and thoughtful people of this country do not believe your cry of "revolution," nor will they believe that the southern people are disloyal and revolutionary. Nor do they believe that the democratic party, which for eighty years controlled the destinies of this country and conducted it to its highest pinnacle of glory, cannot be trusted now. They know full well that the only aim and object of that party is to restore the reign of the Constitution and to get rid of the extra-constitutional and tyrannical methods which have been superinduced in the conduct of our civil affairs.

The distinguished gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. ROBESON] who so refreshed this side of the House with an elaborate constitutional argument and succeeded, after two hours of great labor, in proving what everybody admits to be true, urges us of this side of the House not to "unnecessarily thrust this issue upon the country;" and another gentleman who holds high rank in the councils of his party [Mr. FORT, of Illinois] declares that all this question is mere sentiment; that there is no reality in the wrongs we complain of and which we seek to remedy; and my friend from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] who preceded me challenged the democrat who succeeded him in debate on this side to point out the "grievances" which may have been suffered under the laws we seek to repeal by this bill or by the Army bill. The gentleman from Illinois to whom I have referred further said that "there was a cry of bayonets" but "there were not any bayonets to complain of." Permit me, Mr. Chairman, to answer the challenge of the gentleman from New York and to contradict the assertion of the gentleman from Illinois. Bear with me, sir, while in a plain, unvarnished way I recount to this House what I have seen myself in the past eight or ten years done under color of these infamous statutes. When my honored friend, the eloquent and distinguished gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. BLACKBURN,] spoke the other day of seventeen years of darkened history, he alluded more particularly to the events of the past eleven years, for it is within the history of those years that the events which I shall recount have taken place.

Mr. REED. Why did he say seventeen years?

Mr. ELLIS. I did not understand the remark of the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. REED. If you are explaining the position of the gentleman from Kentucky, I ask you if that gentleman meant ten years why did he say seventeen?

Mr. ELLIS. Mr. Chairman, it would seem, as we gather from Holy Writ, that people were sometimes attracted by the sight of a "reed shaken by the wind," but it is too common a spectacle in this House to excite much attention. [Laughter.]

Mr. REED. The expression quoted by the gentleman is rather too common to be repeated by an educated man. A friend near me suggests that there is wind enough, but the reed is not shaken. [Laughter.]

Mr. ELLIS. Well, be that as it may, it requires usually but very little to shake it. [Laughter.] When interrupted by the gentleman from Maine I was about to recount to this House some scenes that have transpired in my own State, some of which I saw, and others of which I know to be true; scenes the recounting of which will bring a blush to the patriot's cheek; scenes which too often repeated have made the pages of the history of our country for the past eleven years dark and shameful pages. In 1867 I saw States blotted out of the Union and "military districts," ruled by soldiers, created on their ruins. I saw troops conducting the registration of voters and stationed at all the polling places. I saw test oaths, infamous in their conception and ruinous in their effects, applied to the body of the citizens, in order that the virtue and wealth and intelligence of the Southern States might have no controlling voice in the elections. Let me cite one instance. An old man who had no part in the war, venerable in years, of the purest and most exalted Christian character, who had been for forty years a minister of the gospel of our holy religion, and was still one, though for a long time physically unable to preach, went to the registration office and asked to be registered. He was bowed with the weight of more than fourscore years. The question was asked him: "Were you in the confederate army?" "No," he answered. "Have you extended aid in any manner to the confederate cause?" Again he responded he had not. Again he was asked "Have you preached sermons advising secession and sustaining the rebellion?" and he responded that it had been long since his voice had been heard in the pulpit, and that he had never preached political sermons; "but," said he, "sometimes during the war, in the midst of their great sorrows, I prayed for my people." The soldier who was conducting the registration told him "stand aside, sir. You cannot register or vote."

In 1872 I saw the legally elected government of my State overthrown by bayonets. A company of United States troops marched to the state-house under the order of a drunken Federal judge, issued at midnight under cover of the very laws we now seek to repeal, and seized the building; and I saw Federal bayonets crossed above the entrance to the state-house, sentinels on guard all around it and pacing up and down its corridors. If a representative of the people was able to produce a pass to the legislative hall signed by the United States marshal he was admitted, but those who possessed not that "shibboleth" were denied admittance and ordered away.

Mr. HISCOCK. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. ELLIS. I cannot now. I did not interrupt that gentleman, and I decline to be interrupted by him now.

In 1874 I saw a United States marshal in charge of United States troops, with his pockets full of blank warrants of arrests, raiding the whole northern section of my State. Citizens guilty of no crime, against whom there was neither charge nor suspicion, were arrested at midnight and dragged from their homes and families for political effect, and for no other reason than that they dared to be democrats and to attempt through the peaceful agency of the ballot-box the overthrow of the infamous political party which was ruling and ruining the State. Writs of habeas corpus, legally issued to restrain these outrages and release the injured and outraged citizens, were returned to the civil officers, who attempted to serve them, with epithets that would have befitted the mouth of a harridan of the "fish market," and with a message to the honored judge who issued the writs too foul and indecent to pass the lips of a gentleman.

In 1875 I saw the legally elected legislators of my State peaceably assembled in the state-house in legal and constitutional session. The body had elected their speaker and their officers, and were proceeding with the discharge of their duties, when a regiment of United States troops with fixed bayonets surrounded the state-house. A detachment of those troops, commanded by a colonel and brevet brigadier-general of the Federal Army, entered the legislative hall and by force arrested and ejected from the hall five members of the Legislature legally elected, and thrust in and seated in their places five men who had been beaten at the polls.

Again, in 1876, under color of this law the troops were invoked both in Louisiana and South Carolina for no other purpose than to carry the elections, and that their presence did unquestionably carry the election for the republican candidates in South Carolina there is not a shadow of a doubt. In that same year, under color of this supervisors statute which we seek to repeal, I saw ten thousand men arrested in the city of New Orleans by United States marshals only five or six days before the election. Yes, arrested by virtue of these very statutes in which the gentleman from New York finds no harm, under which he solemnly declares no citizens have suffered grievance, and yet by these arrests we estimate that between two and three thousand citizens in the city of New Orleans were deprived of their right to vote. In connection with this latter statement I beg to read from the great argument of that distinguished and able jurist, Judge John A. Campbell, formerly of the Supreme Court of the United States, delivered before the electoral commission. Said he:

> I can tell you another fact. I can tell you a fact more startling than any fact which has been reported here and which may serve at the next election for the campaign speeches of that time. On the 30th day of October there issued out of the circuit court of the United States at New Orleans ten thousand and more of warrants of arrest, to seize ten thousand distinct individuals, inhabitants of the city of New Orleans, for having falsely registered themselves in 1874 as competent voters. They embraced many of the most respectable men in the city, my friend and family physician and one of our Representatives in Congress among the number of those arrested for false registration.

Yes, sir, I am the Representative in Congress who was one of those arrested for having fraudulently registered myself as a voter. I had lived in that city for many years and am a native of the State; my residence was upon one of the principal streets of the city; my law office was within four blocks of the court-house from which issued these warrants; I was in the midst of my campaign, speaking every day and night, and the daily papers contained notices of my movements and speeches; and yet, sir, under color of these most infamous laws I and ten thousand of my fellow-citizens, as good, as free, as honest, and as guiltless as I, were arrested and compelled to stand trial before a United States commissioner. Ten thousand men arrested before one commissioner five days before an election, deprived of the right to vote unless we could have trial and be acquitted; a physical impossibility almost that all of us could be tried within that time. Here, Mr. Chairman, was one of the most daring, infamous, flagrant outrages upon the rights and liberties of citizens, perpetrated in the interest and at the behest of the republican party, and yet that party declares that we shall not repeal those laws, and distinguished representatives of that party assert that no grievance has been suffered under them; that the question of their repeal is a mere question of sentiment, and that there is nothing real in our complaints against their execution.

Mr. HISCOCK. What was the charge made against you?

Mr. ELLIS. I was accused of having falsely registered myself a voter.

But Judge Campbell continues:

Never was such a picture of any community as that. There were ten thousand lies sworn to in order to procure those warrants. There was not a scintilla of proof, nor any desire to have any proof. Thirteen hundred and sixty cases were tried and dismissed; but it effected the purpose. The affidavits were all made by two men, policemen, both of them. I have read a portion of the affidavits myself piled up in the court-house, covering a table so high.

Citizens arrested upon the affidavits of perjured partisans under color of this law, and yet we are told that no man has suffered grievance by its execution. Three thousand citizens deprived of their right to vote, and yet we are coolly told by the party who perpetrated this outrage that the laws must stand in order that the "ballot may be safe" and the "elections pure."

Mr. Chairman, the republican party declares it will appeal to the people. Sir, we will join them in that appeal; and I most fearfully mistake the tone and temper of that great sovereign of us all, the American people, if they do not sustain our action and declare, in a manner and with an emphasis that no one can mistake, that these blots and blurs upon the statute-books shall be repealed. But why not trust the people? Are you prepared to assert that the American people cannot be trusted with the management of their local elections without the supervision, espionage, and intermeddling of the Federal Government?

You will appeal to the people, but you refuse to trust them. In the ultimate I think the republican party will find out that the distrust is mutual. But grant that no citizen has been deprived of a right; that no one has been arrested or subjected to outrage under these laws; grant that no bayonet-point has ever been turned to the overthrow of State governments or the overawing of the people at the polls; grant all this, and yet I remember that Daniel Webster once declared in a great speech that "our fathers went to war for a mere preamble." I remember, too, how that sturdy champion of English liberty, John Hampden, refused to pay an odious tax, not because of the paltry shillings that it would cost, but because of the principle involved. In urging the repeal of these statutes we are contending for a great principle. We know that they are repugnant to the Constitution; we feel that they are at war with every American idea of civil liberty; and because of the principle involved we intend to exhaust every legal and constitutional means within our power to repeal them.

Mr. BAILEY. I desire to ask the gentleman if the dispatch published in a morning paper is correct, and if he has any knowledge of its correctness, in reference to the constitutional convention of his State?

Mr. ELLIS. Mr. Chairman, I thought when I yielded to an interruption that the gentleman from New York desired to propound to me a question pertinent to this issue. I have no time for interruptions not pertinent.

Mr. BAILEY. It is a question pertinent to the subject of our discussion. In the Republican of to-day I find the following:

LOUISIANA CONVENTION—STATE SOVEREIGNTY PREDOMINATES.

NEW ORLEANS, April 24.

In the constitutional convention of to-day several committees were appointed, and resolutions providing that members of the convention take an oath to support the Constitution of the United States was laid on the table by a vote of 64 to 63.

Mr. ELLIS. I have no knowledge of the truth or falsity of this dispatch.

Mr. BAILEY. It is an Associated Press dispatch to the Washington Republican.

Mr. ELLIS. I do not attach much credit to the dispatch; but grant that it is true, what difference does it make? I know of no law which requires delegates to a constitutional convention of a people to take any oath to the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. BAILEY. If there is no harm in Louisiana to refuse to swear to support the Constitution of the United States, then I beg the gentleman's pardon.

Mr. ELLIS. If the gentleman means by the production of that dispatch to reflect upon the patriotism of the people of Louisiana or their devotion to the Constitution of our common country then I take issue with him. It has been suggested to me by a distinguished lawyer that members of constitutional conventions are never required to take such an oath, and that no law requires it. My friend from Ohio [Mr. HILL] assures me that neither the members of the constitutional convention of New York or Ohio took any oath to the Constitution of the United States. No regulation that I am aware of requires such an oath.

Mr. BAILEY. I will say that I do not think in the State of Louisiana it is at all necessary.

Mr. ELLIS. No, because the people of my State love and revere the Constitution of the United States, and it requires no oath to remind them of their duty to it.

Mr. HILL. Will my friend from Louisiana allow me to make a suggestion?

Mr. ELLIS. With great pleasure.

Mr. HILL. I know that in the recent constitutional convention of the State of Ohio no such oath was required; and the loyalty of the people of that State has never, that I know of, been called into question.

Mr. KEIFER. Allow me to suggest to my colleague from Ohio that he is mistaken. All the members of the constitutional convention of Ohio did take an oath to support the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. ELLIS. I cannot be further interrupted. This colloquy has absolutely nothing to do with the question I am discussing.

Mr. Chairman, in my judgment it has been conclusively shown in argument upon this and the Army bill that the statutes which we seek to repeal are in conflict with the Constitution of the United States, and no serious attempt has been made by gentlemen upon the republican side to answer these arguments. The only attempt at any constitutional argument in reply was made by the gentleman from New Jersey, [Mr. ROBESON,] and after two hours of laborious effort he summed up the conclusion of his entire argument in these words; I read from the gentleman's speech:

I repeat my proposition: The United States is a government of limited powers delegated to it by the Constitution, but limited only in numbers, and not in quality. Wherever they are clothed with power by the Constitution they are sovereign and supreme. Those powers are the supreme law of the land when organized in the form of law by the National Legislature, and when they are so organized they must be enforced by all the powers of the Government, or the Government will be destroyed or will remain only an object of derisive scorn for the enemies of free government throughout the world.

Mr. Chairman, there is not a democrat who is prepared to dispute or take issue with that proposition. It is now more than fifty-eight years since the principle enunciated by the gentleman was laid down by Chief-Justice Marshall in the case of Virginia vs. Cohens, reported in 6 Wheaton, and it has never been denied. If the gentleman from New Jersey had gone but a step further and had quoted the language used by Chief-Justice Chase in the legal-tender cases, that any statute which had not its foundation in the Constitution was therefore null and void, he would have uttered the whole law and not a portion of it with regard to the construction of statutes. But my friend from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] is a little bolder in his assertions of Federalism, and declares that "the right to vote for members of Congress is given by the Constitution of the United States." There is no such thing known as the "right" to vote. Suffrage is a "privilege" and not a "right." Clearly it is not a natural right, nor is it a conferred right arising from the mere formation of men into political corporations, but it is a "privilege" which the citizens grant and take reciprocally by virtue of the law which they enact for their own government when they come to the formation of States and governments for their mutual protection and benefit. The gentleman from New York puts the argument rather ingeniously. He says "the right to vote for a member of Congress is derived from the Constitution of the United States." Well, the right to have members of Congress at all originates in the Constitution of the United States; but the right to vote, the naked privilege of voting at all never was given by the Constitution of the United States. This is expressly decided in the case of the United States against Cruikshank, and other cases.

Long before the Constitution of the United States was dreamed of, long before the Revolution of '76 was contemplated, the privilege of voting existed subject to various restrictions and modifications, and with various qualifications in the different colonies that constituted the first confederation. The privilege was preserved in the old confederation; and when the colonies assembled to frame the Federal Constitution they still had the privilege of suffrage, regulated and controlled by the colonial governments. The Constitution of the United States which they framed conclusively and expressly leaves that privilege with the States, with full power to regulate, modify, or qualify its exercise in any mode which they might deem proper. With regard to the election for members of Congress the Constitution fixes no qualification, but simply provides that those citizens in the States who vote for members of the most numerous branch of the State Legislature shall vote for Representatives in Congress. The right to vote for a member of Congress depends entirely upon the right to vote at all. If a person in a State has no right to vote at all, of course he cannot vote for a member of Congress, and no Federal law could confer it. The State government fixes the regulation and defines the qualification by which he votes at all. The State government determines and fixes the qualification, and when once fixed, and when once the qualification is filled and complied with, the privilege is secured, and then the citizen is at liberty to vote for all such officers as may have to be elected by the people, whether State officers or members to Congress.

The right to vote for a member of Congress is simply incident to the right or privilege of voting at all, which right or privilege he derives from his State government.

Mr. HISCOCK. Will my friend allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. ELLIS. I will, if pertinent to this issue.

Mr. HISCOCK. In the event they should prescribe a different qualification——

Mr. ELLIS. What does the gentleman mean by "they?"

Mr. HISCOCK. In the event that the State Legislature should, for instance, attach a property qualification to the right of voting for a member of Congress when no such qualification existed in order to have the right to vote for members of the State Legislature; or suppose they should attempt in any other way to limit the right to vote for members of Congress different from members of the lower house of the State Legislature, would it be competent for Congress to pass laws to protect the electors of the most numerous branch of the State Legislature in their right to vote for members of Congress?

Mr. ELLIS. If the State should attempt to establish a property qualification——

Mr. HISCOCK. If they should attempt to abridge or enlarge the class entitled to vote for members of Congress and make it different from the class entitled to vote for members of the most numerous branch of the State Legislature——

Mr. ELLIS. I will answer the gentleman. There is in the Constitution but a single inhibition on the power of the State in regard to fixing the qualification of voters, and it is this——

Mr. HISCOCK. The question I asked is this: in the event of the State attempting to declare different qualifications for electors of members to the most numerous branch of the State Legislature, would Congress have the right to pass laws for the protection of the classes indicated (the electors of the most numerous branch of the State Legislature) in their right to vote for Representatives to Congress?

Mr. ELLIS. I apprehend that no State will stultify itself in attempting an enactment so directly in conflict with the express provisions of the Constitution.

Mr. HISCOCK. That is not the question. The question is one of power, of constitutional right. It is not a question of stultification.

Mr. ELLIS. A State would undoubtedly have the right to fix a property qualification. As I have already stated, there is but a single inhibition upon the power of the State with regard to fixing the qualification for electors, and it is that no State shall deprive any citizen of the privilege of voting on account of race, color, or previous condition.

Mr. HISCOCK. That does not answer the question. In the event that a State should do what I have stated, would Congress have the right to protect the person whose right of voting for members of Congress the State might undertake to abridge?

Mr. ELLIS. If my friend from New York will be still I will answer the question fully. As I understand, he wishes me to answer this question: whether the State of New York, for instance, would have the right to require of those who vote for members of Congress a qualification different from that required of those who vote for members of the most numerous branch of the State Legislature? I answer the State would clearly not have the power under the Constitution.

Mr. HISCOCK. Very well, then. The next question I ask is this: if the State should attempt to make such a distinction, would Congress have the right to interfere and enforce the right of the elector as against this unconstitutional law of the State?

Mr. ELLIS. The Constitution of the United States declares in express terms that those who vote for members of Congress shall have the qualification for electors of the most numerous branch of the State Legislature.

Mr. HISCOCK. I understand that, but suppose there should be a conflict in defining the qualification of the two classes of voters?

Mr. ELLIS. The gentleman wishes me to answer whether if a State should endeavor to do something forbidden by the Constitution the Government of the United States would have the power to assert its authority and maintain the Constitution?

Mr. HISCOCK. That is the very question.

Mr. ELLIS. I answer unquestionably in the affirmative. That is the very argument of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. ROBESON] which I quoted a few moments ago, and from which I said no democrat dissented; and it is, that the Government of the United States is absolutely and unquestionably supreme in all powers delegated to it by the people in the Constitution; and whatever a State should do or attempt to do in violation of the Constitution would be absolutely null. In the contingency supposed by the gentleman from New York the remedy of the citizen who should be deprived of his right to vote for members of Congress by onerous State regulation and unjust discrimination would be enforced and preserved, not by the direct action of the Government, not by an attempt on the part of Congress to modify or alter by statute the State regulation, but when Congress considered the claim of a Representative to his seat who had been elected by the operation of the onerous and unconstitutional qualification for electors prescribed by the State it would have the power to deprive him of his seat and to deny to the State which had enacted such unconstitutional legislation representation in Congress until it had altered the law and made the electors for members of Congress stand upon exactly the same basis as electors for members of the most numerous branch of the State Legislature, in direct obedience and perfect conformity with the provision of the Federal Constitution upon this subject.

But, Mr. Chairman, time presses me, and I must hurry on to a portion of the question involved, upon which I had originally intended to dwell particularly and at length. I did not intend to be drawn into the discussion of the constitutional aspect of these questions in the slightest degree. The arguments made by my friends, the gifted and eloquent gentleman from Virginia, Mr. TUCKER, Mr. HURD of Ohio, and Mr. CARLISLE of Kentucky, remain unanswered and unanswerable, and have demonstrated beyond the possibility of answer the flagrant unconstitutionality of the statutes we seek to repeal upon this and the Army bill. Without attempting an answer upon any legal or constitutional grounds, our friends of the republican side intrench themselves behind the old "war issues," and invoke sectional appeals, and the eternal "negro question." There is not a republican on the floor who will dare rise in his place and gravely maintain that the people of the Northern States cannot be trusted with the management of their State affairs and the conduct of their local elections. There is not one here who will assert that the great loyal people of the loyal North, who, in the language of our rhetorical friend from Michigan, [Mr. BURROWS,] will gather around the "bleeding, stricken, and starving form of the Republic" with "bandages," "soothing sirup," "beef tea," and the like, when we naughty democrats attempt to starve it to death, are not to be trusted in the matter of pure elections, of free ballot, and a fair count. These laws are unnecessary in the North, so the republicans hold, but are necessary for the protection of the black people of the South, and to enable them to vote in peace and security.

The argument is that the colored people are shot, killed, persecuted, driven from the ballot-box, or are overawed or cowed into voting the democratic ticket; and gentlemen point to the fact that the South is "solidly democratic" and that the negroes either vote the democratic ticket or do not vote at all in confirmation of their theory. Mr. Chairman, it is upon this question that I wish to dwell, and I believe that I can show that the causes which have wrought the great change in the minds of the colored voters of the South are powerful and natural, and amply sufficient to have caused the colored race to turn their backs forever upon the republican party. I assert now and maintain that from the time the African was stolen from his native land and brought here as a slave the republican party (and I will in a moment state my authority for giving that party such an ancient date) has been the worst enemy the colored race ever has had or ever will have. The republican party has been "the old man of the sea" upon the neck of that race. It has burdened it and ridden it and borne it down and denied it rest and peace, and all for its own political aggrandizement. No wonder that the colored race have at last thrown it down and are aiding the democratic party to crush it with their ballots.

A very distinguished member from Ohio, the ablest leader of his party in this House and perhaps in the whole country, a few years ago made a speech in which he traced the different civilizations of the North and South and the differences in principle between the democratic and republican parties back respectively to the early settlements of our fathers at Plymouth Rock on the one hand and at Jamestown on the other. I accept that gentleman's theory, and charge upon the republican party as it existed in the early days the introduction of slavery into this country. History will bear me out in the assertion that it was not the South nor southern men, nor southern merchants, nor southern ship-owners, nor southern ships that brought the slave to this country. A distinguished member from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] in his speech on the Army bill told us how he had gone down South once for the purpose of buying and acquiring title to a colored man who had run away from the South and had risen to be a "D. D." That gentleman told us that he paid simply for "the boy Jim" and did not pay "for improvements." Let me remind that gentleman that it is not the first time gentlemen from New England went abroad for the purpose of acquiring property of that kind, and that they did not always return with a legal title for which they paid money, but they too frequently came back bearing with them the human chattel and holding it simply by the right of the robber and the title of the pirate.

Mr. REED. I hope the gentleman is not going to "revive sectional hatred."

Mr. ELLIS. No, I simply intend to revive historical truths, and to tear masks from hypocritical faces. Coming down a little later we find New England and the States of the North quietly getting rid of slave property, and the vast majority of slaves tending down toward the fertile plantations and more genial climate of the South where slave labor was profitable. Alas, the fatal beauty and richness of the fair States of the South fastened this curse upon her. A little later we find the States of the North emancipating by gradual process the slaves who remained in their midst, not from any feeling of philanthropy but because of the unprofitableness of slave labor in their midst. A little later we find the republican party making the slavery question an issue in Federal politics until at last, in 1861, war between the sections broke out which resulted in the total emancipation of the colored race. The year 1865 found the negro of the South a freedman. He had grown and developed from a low, degraded slave to a civilized being. He had ceased to worship the "fetish" or the sun, and had some idea of God and religion. He had ceased to speak a "gibberish" and had possessed the tongue and language of a man. He had so progressed from the untutored savage which he was, when called to the knee of the patient South, as to be in the estimation of all of our northern fellow-citizens fit to be a citizen of this great country and to participate in the conduct of its public affairs.

It has often seemed good to the omnipotent Father of us all to make of slavery a school for the education of races; and when you revile the South as a slave-owner; when you taunt her with the memories and the blot of slavery, I ask you to remember that in the providence of God she was also called to be the teacher of the colored race. You claim that the North made freedmen of four millions of men held in bondage, and I claim that the patient and long-suffering South made a savage a civilized man. If you broke the fetters of a physical bondage that held him in the semi-patriarchal relation which existed between the southern master and the slave, I claim that we broke the bondage of his soul, the fetters from his mind, and that under the care and tutelage of the South the barbarian was converted into a civilized being. If you freed his body, we freed his soul; if you have conferred the right of citizenship, we prepared him to receive that right and to be able to enjoy and to exercise it. I believe that the civilization of the African race is not inherent but is imitative. Do you doubt it? I point you to Africa and to the fact that in the past fifteen centuries that race has made no progress whatever. While the spirit of progress "has moved upon the waters" of all the other lands of our earth; while man everywhere by his genius and his daring has made the most gigantic strides in progress in the arts and sciences and improvements of every character, the African race has stood still. To-day the savage warrior meets his enemy with the same weapons with which his fathers fought more than a thousand years ago. To-day the canoe that bears the African from place to place over the waters is precisely in build and size as the frail vessel which his father steered fifteen centuries ago. To-day the tribes of Africa indulge the same weird religious rites which characterized them, and their deities are the same that held their fathers in the bond of superstition fifteen centuries ago. The rest of the world has moved, but Africa has stood still. Every effort to civilize the African has failed. Efforts to improve him by colonizing from America members of his race who had been instructed and advanced to some degree of civilization have been tried and have failed. Experience has shown that so soon as left to themselves and the fostering care and restraining influence of the superior race is withdrawn, he has moved backward and steadily returned toward his ignorance, his barbarism, and his superstition.

In our own country it is conclusively proven that the negro has improved and has become civilized exactly in proportion to the nearness of his contact with his white owner. In the upland regions of the South, where the slave-owners were poor and the number of slaves held were few and the institution more nearly approximated the patriarchal relation, the civilization of the negro was more apparent and better defined. In the richer regions, where each slave-owner was possessed of hundreds of slaves and the contact with the master and his family was not so near and so immediate, the degree of civilization was not near so rapid or so great. The house-servant and the body-servant became in the course of a few years to a great extent polished in manner, polite in bearing, correct in language and deportment, and learned to speak with great correctness, and to acquire in a great degree those conventionalisms of manner and language which characterize our best society. The field-hand, on the contrary, on the large plantation, who had no contact with the white owner or his family, remained the same, awkward, ignorant, and stupid, from the day of his birth almost to the day of his death. The Southern States took the slave by her knee and after a hundred years made him what he was in 1865. She held him close to the strong blaze of American civilization and converted him from a savage to a human. She advanced him far enough and civilized him enough to be in the opinion of the republican party worthy the boon of American citizenship. When, however, in 1865, he was made a freedman his condition was one to excite the profound sympathy and pity of every thinking man. Torn away from the fostering care and patient instruction of his owner, he was left poor, weak, helpless to act for himself. What his condition imperatively demanded was that, as far as was possible, he should have the benefit of the instruction and example and influence of his former master. To the white owners of the land he was obliged to look for labor and wages. To the white man he was obliged to look for equal protection under the law. To the white man he was compelled to look for the enjoyment of those rights and privileges which had been conferred upon him. Every interest which he had demanded that the closest relation of friendship and sympathy compatible with the altered relation should be established and maintained between him and his former master. But the republican party, careless and callous of his condition, having no real sympathy with him, having used his body in war as food for gunpowder in a quarrel in the engendering of which he had no part, having made of his condition and fancied or real sufferings their sole political stock in trade, saw in him an instrument by which the political power of the republican party could be perpetuated and maintained in the Southern States.

In order to accomplish this it was necessary to enfranchise the negro and array him in deadly hostility to his former white owners, and so the republican party gave him the ballot, not for his good but for its own aggrandizement. Then that party organized freedmen's bureaus, whose agents taught the negro that the Government and the republican party would divide the land and stock of the white people equally with him. Yes, you organized your "loyal leagues" and swore them with the most terrible oaths to obey the behests of the republican party and to hate his white neighbor. You poured into his ear and soul the killing poison of hatred and hostility to the white race and alarmed his timid and ignorant mind by holding out to him the most dreadful threats of re-enslavement and punishment if he permitted the whites of the South to regain control of their State governments. You taught them that there was no virtue or binding force in the Constitution and its amendments, which granted to them these rights and liberties. You taught them that the vast sea of blood which had flowed in our unhappy civil war was a libation to the gods of falsehood and deceit. You taught them that the uniform of the United States was a badge of the tyrant, and the bayonet of the soldier was the sheen and point of a well-rounded falsehood. You taught them that the true political line was the color line, and that they must be republicans simply because they were black men. You professed to be the party of peace, yet you taught the colored man the infernal gospel of hate and strife. You professed to be the party of high moral ideas, yet you taught him corruption and fraud and enforced the lesson by the examples which republicans set him in the reconstructed governments of the South. You taught him that official stations were but institutions for the benefit of the office-holder and not for the people. You taught him that the position of a public servant and an office-holder was the particular personal property of the incumbent and ought to be used for no other purpose than to make money. The carpet-bag office-holder who called himself republican plundered and robbed and sold the prerogatives and influence of his office, whether it was the patronage of a governor, the vote of a legislator, or the decree of a judge, and there is no wonder that the colored man, unused to the exercise of political power, should follow the tempting example of his white instructor and political guide.

But, Mr. Chairman, not only did the republican party demoralize the colored race for its political advantage, but it robbed and plundered them. It organized by act of Congress the great "Freedman's Savings and Trust Company." Republican freedman's bureau agents and emissaries in the South invited the colored people to deposit their earnings in that institution. They taught them that it was a Government institution and that their hard earnings would be safe and sacred. This "savings and trust company" issued to the colored depositors bank-books upon the backs of which were engraved the faces of the lamented Lincoln, of Grant and Sherman and Howard and Sumner. While the colored man of the South generally could not read, he knew these familiar faces, and he was induced by the very sight of the pictures of the great men and professed friends of the negro race to believe that his little earnings would be safe. The colored people came up with their earnings. The woman who had washed and cooked or scrubbed all the week came to the bank on Saturday night to deposit her one or two dollars which remained over after her wants had been provided for; the field-hand at the end of each month deposited his five or ten dollars; the drayman brought his earnings; the porter or waiter deposited portions of his hard-earned pay, and each was happy in the thought that he was laying up something for the support of his declining years. Then a republican Congress enacted and a republican President signed the law which modified the original charter of that institution, struck down the safeguards which had been placed about it, enabled its philanthropic directors to loan money to their own favorites and confederates in villainy, accepted in pledge of said loan "wild-cat stock" and mortgages upon valueless real estate, until at last the bank suspended and utterly failed, and by one fell swoop the freedmen of the South were robbed of more than three millions of dollars. History does not record an instance of perfidy like this. Nothing has been done to right the wrong. Under the laws which a republican Congress and President approved the remnants of the freedman's earnings are now being paid out month by month and year by year to three directors, who do not even visit the bank, and to a whole army of clerks and attorneys, agents and messengers, who are of no use whatever and are simply cormorants, devouring the sum of which the negro race was robbed, or rather I should say are vultures feeding upon the carcass of this institution of the freedmen. It remained for a democratic Congress to investigate and bring to light the villainy of this great robbery, and for a southern ex-slave-holding, ex-confederate democrat to take the initiative to do justice to the freedmen.

But, Mr. Chairman, this was not all. Not only did the republican party array the negro against the whites and "rend away with curses" the ties which bound him to his only friends and leave him helpless and alone; not only did it rob him of his hard-earned savings; but it did more. For the past ten years it has shed his blood and caused it to be shed for the purpose of staining its party banners; and every red drop of the life-current which has flowed from the negro's veins in obedience to the mandate of the fierce Moloch of radicalism has been coined into political capital in the interest of the republican party. In order to "fire the northern heart" you have excited him to deeds of violence against the whites, knowing full well that retaliation, swift and sure, would be the result, and that his blood would be shed. But what mattered that to the republican party? The blood-curdling language of the carpet-bag governor of Mississippi [Mr. Ames] cited this morning by my eloquent friend from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER] that "the blood of twenty-five or thirty negroes would be good for the republican party," and the no less brutal answer of the last carpet-bag governor of Louisiana, who told colored men "if the blood of five or six negroes in your parish is shed it will not be a bad thing for our party North," explains the doctrine of radicalism with regard to the killing of negroes in the South.

And here, Mr. Chairman, I may appropriately cite the evidence of Ex-Governor Moses, of South Carolina. A little over a year ago he published an elaborate confession of the crime and wrong which had been done by the republican party in South Carolina. He said that they had hired roughs and rowdies and bad men to come from northern cities to South Carolina, and had arrayed them in the weird garb of the Ku Klux Klan, and had commissioned them to commit outrages and murders upon colored men, which were charged upon the native white citizens, and all done for the purpose of manufacturing political capital for northern consumption, "to fire the northern heart," to drive away love, to bring about and intensify hate.

Mr. Chairman, I do not hesitate to say here, upon my responsibility as a man before my country and my God and under the solemn sanction of my official oath, that ninety-nine cases out of every one hundred of murders which have been perpetrated in the South and of which colored men have been the victims, have been instigated directly by the agents and henchmen of the republican party in the Southern States for the sole purpose of keeping the northern mind set against perfect peace and perfect confidence in their brethren of the Southern States. How, then, does the record stand? Instead of educating the colored man the agents and emissaries of the republican party persistently stole the common-school fund year after year. I speak from the record and from the reports of republican school superintendents of education in Louisiana when I say that in eight years of republican rule $500,000 of the school fund raised by taxing the whites was stolen and plundered by republican officials. Instead of protecting your southern partisans have plundered him. Instead of enlightening him as to his duty as a citizen you have taught him fraud, force, violence, corruption. Instead of teaching him that he was a freedman and that his rights are fixed in the Constitution and are secure forever you have taught him that the Constitution was but a rope of sand that would be broken to pieces by the mere temporary triumph of one party over another in a State election.

Having thus plunged and steeped the colored race in misery, being directly responsible for his condition as a slave in the United States and for all the wretchedness, misery, and degradation which he has suffered and is to-day suffering in the United States, what do you now propose to do with him? You are determined he shall not rest. Despairing of further using him in the Southern States either as a voter or as a martyr, you propose now by your agents and emissaries to induce him to leave the land of his nativity, the climate and the soil and the labor best adapted to him, and for political purposes and no other, in order to weaken southern representation and to strengthen northern representation, to induce the negro to migrate to a land he knows not of, to labor to which he is unaccustomed, to a people whose race prejudices are stronger than those of the South, to a cold, ungenial climate where certain misery, want, and ruin await him. This is your finishing stroke to his ruin. It is utterly false that the negro is fleeing from oppression or from the "bludgeons" or stripes of southern democrats.

The movement in Louisiana has been principally from the parish of Madison, where there has been no complaint of "bulldozing," where the colored race is in an immense majority, where they elected their own officials, and where they are and have been on the best of terms with the white people. The movement is a purely political one. Secret circulars describing the beauties and glories of Kansas, chromos representing pictures of beautiful homes, of domestic peace and comfort, of billowy oceans of green wheat, of fruits such as the heathen poet never dreamed of in his most beautiful visions of the garden of the Hesperides, of a land "flowing with milk and honey," where the hours glide by on golden wings and the reign of Saturn still lingers, of free homes and Government lands, have been circulated among the negroes of the South to induce them to migrate to the North. Some thousands of them have started. Already their wailings and cries of despair reach us from the bleak shores of Kansas. A few weeks ago these colored emigrants with their helpless women and children left a land where spring sat upon forest and fields clad in her glorious garments of green all spangled with ten thousand bright flowers brought into life and beauty by the warm wooings of her balmy breath. They have reached the shores of the "promised land," where timid spring still hesitates to smile lest her warm impulses be frozen by the tyrant winter's breath. Cold and naked and hungry, these wretched dupes raise a piteous cry for aid.

The public charity is appealed to; bills for the relief of these unfortunate and starving emigrants have been introduced in this and the other branch of the National Legislature, and I wonder, Mr. Chairman, if upon the patriotic and philanthropic vision of the republican statesmen there is not adumbrating the enchanting dream of another "Freedman's Bureau," with its capacity to rob, to plunder, to steal, to mislead, and to ruin, and all for the benefit of the republican party and republican patriots.

But, sir, I cannot pause further now to dwell upon the ruin morally, ocially, and politically that has been wrought to the colored peo- by its inexorable task-masters, the republican party. Misled, pl uided, deceived, plundered, demoralized, and murdered for the mis t and in the behest of the republican party, is it any wonder beneh political sentiment of the colored race has undergone a great that th Is it any wonder that they refuse to be led any further by change? prophet? Is it any wonder that Southern States and dis- this veiled verwhelmingly republican have changed and are now tricts once Do you deny the capability of the colored man to change? democratic? assert your right to dominate him politically and Do you fiercely hen freed from mere physical bondage in order that morally? Is he he may be your slave in mind and in soul? Sir, he has changed. Let me quote here an extract from a letter written after the last election by Hon. J. A. Gla, a colored man, a State senator and now a member of the constitutional convention of Louisiana, and an honor to the African race.

I cannot pause to read the whole letter, but will print extracts from it:

Here in Carroll the 5th of November passed off without a single misunderstanding in any portion of the parish. The colored voters went to the polls, voted unmolested, and returned to their homes. Their voting gave evident signs of a change taking place. Most of them made more inquiries on the morning of the election than had been made for years past put together who they would vote for, and chose in most instances for themselves. The unquestioning obedience of years back has evidently passed away, and the colored people are becoming free voters to all intents and purposes.

What has brought about this apparent progressive change? Why are our people dropping away from their white leaders? It is all nonsense to talk about bulldozing. No doubt such a thing exists, but it has not done the work attributed to it by a long way. The cause is deeper and wider than any bulldozing; it rests with republican leaders themselves who have abused and betrayed the confidence placed in them by the colored people.

* * * * * * *

Is it to be wondered at that the colored people have no further use for these republican white leaders? Is it any way astonishing that there is a break in the republican ranks? The mass of the colored people in their simplicity believed the many promises made, and innocently expected them to be fulfilled. They did not care so much for themselves, but they expected that the leaders of their own color, after so much labor and self-sacrifice, would be remembered; but they even have been forgotten, and cast politically aside as so much worn-out material. Hence the resentment now showing itself at the ballot-box.

* * * * * * *

These are pertinent questions, and my advice to-day to the people of my race in this senatorial district is to abandon past prejudices and join hands with the conservative people of the country, so that we may live long and prosper, with no more causes for inequality, but each man act well his part and independently assert his rights in the parish of East Carroll, the granite building in New Orleans, and throughout the State of Louisiana.

Respectfully,

J. A. GLA.

Again, sir, allow me to quote from the greatest, the brainiest, and ablest colored leader in the United States, I refer to Hon. P. B. S. Pinchback, and read now an editorial from his paper, the Louisianian, an able and fearless champion of the rights of the colored race in the United States:

The time having passed when the colored voters can be herded together and voted like sheep, the army of evil advisers who swarmed down upon us like the locusts upon Egypt have disappeared as mysteriously as they came. With the exception of a few, who still condescend to hold the offices, and whose days it is rumored are numbered, we are rid of their presence. Left to themselves, and at last thoroughly convinced of the necessity of making an effort from within the race to arrest the demoralization among them, we are persuaded to believe the time has come when they will listen to reason and be prepared to follow men capable of leading.

Again, sir, I have permission from my honored colleague and friend, Mr. GIBSON, to extract from a letter written by Hon. T. T. Allain, a State senator in Louisiana, and an eloquent champion of the rights of his race, a portion of a letter that might well be commended to the notice of the President of the United States before he vetoes the Army bill as well as the one we are now debating, because it seeks to lay down the doctrine of non-intervention by Federal power in State elections. I hold in my hand and will read the original letter of Senator Allain, in his own handwriting. It is addressed to one of Louisiana's noblest and purest sons, a grandson of Andrew Jackson:

HARD TIMES PLANTATION, RAPHAEL P. O.,
Iberville Parish, Louisiana, December 2, 1878.

DEAR COLONEL: Your esteemed favor of 22d ultimo was duly received, and, coming from so distinguished a source, afforded me much gratification, insomuch that you were pleased to appreciate and to recognize the efforts which I have made in behalf of conciliation, harmony, and concord between the white and colored races within my native State, and especially during my career as State senator.

To permanently effect such object has heretofore been and ever will be my supreme desire; and it is certain that no endeavor will ever be spared on my part to promote an era of perfect good feeling between the white and colored people of my section.

We may thank God, and it is universally conceded by our leading statesmen, that bygones shall be ignored, and that all our energies shall be devoted to the regeneration, the practical and material reconstruction, to the rehabilitation of our wasted and distracted State upon the basis of undisputed unification.

The appointment of that eminent colored lawyer, Frank Cassells, esq., as assistant attorney-general of the State of Tennessee by the democratic administration of that State is much appreciated; and should such precedent be continued in the Southern States, in my opinion combinations among present antagonistic parties will be formed in or before 1880 that will give republican newspapers little cause to again flaunt the emblem of the "bloody shirt."

As a colored man and a republican, representing the interests of my race, I would say that it is with serious apprehension that I have noted intimations that President Hayes contemplates a change in his "southern policy;" and it is my earnest hope and prayer that he will persevere in his present wise course of non-intervention in local State affairs. I am confident that a reversal or change of such policy would not be conducive but would be detrimental to the welfare of my people. All classes in Louisiana, whether white or colored, are now closing up their political issues; and I feel assured that the day is not far distant when the color line will be definitely obliterated in regard to civil matters, and an epoch of prosperity and happiness will brilliantly illuminate the horizon of our glorious State.

I have great faith in Governor Nicholls. I believe that he will see all cases of outrage against my people shall be thoroughly investigated; that the guilty shall be punished and that the laws shall be vigorously executed; and in so doing he will most assuredly be sustained by the best public sentiment of the State.

Let me here observe, in all frankness and candor, that I am not entitled to nor can I accept your congratulations upon the democratic success in Louisiana, as I am and have been on the other side of the political question.

In reply to the question propounded in regard to the personal and political freedom of the colored people in our parishes, I must confess my inability to give you other information than that obtained from the public prints; yet it does give me the liveliest satisfaction to be able to assure you that in spite of all the asperities engendered during the recent campaign in this parish no disturbance of any nature occurred, but each voter deposited his ballot unquestioned and undisturbed.

As an evidence of the good feeling existing in my own immediate vicinity, the Second ward of this parish, where the republican vote has a majority of about ten to one, John W. Austin, esq., was elected overwhelmingly a member of the police jury, though well known to be a conservative democrat, and his name was on the tickets of both parties.

I mention this fact to illustrate that in numerous cases and in various localities the white and colored people in Louisiana are daily drawing closer and closer toward the elucidation of political issues.

Very respectfully, your most obedient servant,

THEOPHILE T. ALLAIN,
Late Senator Fourteenth District of Louisiana.

Colonel E. J. W. BUTLER,
1520 Lucas Place, Saint Louis, Missouri.

But, sir, I cannot now pause to comment even upon these letters of these three able and prominent colored men, one of whom writes from the most northerly parish in the State, another from a central parish, and the third from the city of New Orleans, in the southern part of the State. I commend their careful perusal to those violent and vindictive partisans who are so ready to quote from such testimony as was manufactured to order for the use of the Teller committee. I commend their careful perusal to those honest republicans of the Northern States who wonder that States and districts that were once republican are now democratic. And I tell them in all candor the colored people have changed and are changing their political views, not from fear, not from coercion, but because their eyes are at last opened to the falsehood, the treachery, the shameless robberies, the utter faithlessness, the broken promises of their inexorable task-master, the republican party. Soon will the two races in the South be most perfectly united. Through years of darkness, of misrule, of lawlessness, they have been apart. They understand each other now. The best and kindliest relations will spring up. Each race will understand and confess its errors and follies and crimes and blunders, and then there will be a union of interests that will leave no room for the crime of the bulldozer or the robbery and plunder of the adventurer.

Mr. Chairman, God is just. Strangely does He sometimes move to the fulfillment of His infallible decrees of justice and mercy, but yet they fail not. By lawless means a lawless party sought to humiliate and dominate the patient and enduring South by setting the African to rule above her. But to-day she rules herself in all her States, and the element which was introduced for her humiliation has become a new source of strength and power.

I have thus sought to show that the colored race no longer votes solidly the republican ticket. I have sought to show that the causes which have produced this change are natural and powerful. I have done this to meet the charge that colored men in the South are denied the right to vote as they please and to take away the last excuse of the republican party for wishing these laws we now seek to repeal to remain upon the statute-book. I have dwelt upon this subject because good and honest republicans of the North have wondered why districts where the colored voters are immensely in the majority go now overwhelmingly for democratic candidates. If I shall have thrown some light upon this vexed question, and if I shall have demonstrated that colored voters exercise their rights as American citizens freely and fully, then I have also taken away the last excuse urged by the republican party for desiring Federal intervention in State elections, either by the presence of Federal troops or Federal marshals or Federal supervisors at the polls.

But, Mr. Chairman, I am warned by the advancing hands of the clock that but two or three minutes of my time remain, and I must hurry to a close. The gentleman from New Jersey, [Mr. ROBESON,] in the close of his elaborate speech, alluded with an eloquence and beauty of language which I cannot command to that noble citizen of Rome who, fully armed and mounted and glittering in all the paraphernalia with which the Roman knight was accustomed to meet the enemies of Rome, plunged fearlessly into the gulf which had opened in the Roman forum in order that the city might be saved.

Mr. Chairman, the South is reviled, misrepresented, calumniated, and wronged; her patriotism and her honor are all the time called in question; but let me say to those who revile and to those who doubt and misrepresent that she is prepared to make any sacrifice which fealty and devotion to this Government shall ever demand of her patriotism; and if a gulf should open in our midst, threatening the destruction of our Union and our Constitution, and naught but her sacrifice would close it and save this people, then, sir, do I believe she would come, not glittering in armor nor clad in the habilaments of wealth and power—for she has none of these—but with face as sad as that eternal sadness which looks forever from the marble face of sculptured Antinous and with the blood and tears of her recent crucifixion still upon her garments, and yet with a martyr's resolution in her heart and with courage such as never nerved a Roman's heart or strung a Spartan's arm, would she willingly make the sacrifice for the Constitution and the Union and for our common country, with all its mighty destinies. [Great and long-continued applause.]

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, the reapers over this broad field of debate have had no Boaz to command them to purposely let fall handsful of the ripe harvest for gleaners who should come after them. I may be permitted, however, to glean among the sheaves. In what I have to say to-day I shall attempt no display of wit, rhetoric, or eloquence. We are called on to deal with a matter of supreme national importance; it behooves us to talk and act with propriety and sobriety.

If it were proposed to go forward promptly and provide the necessary appropriations to carry on the legislative and judicial branches of this Government, also for the necessary expenses of the several Executive Departments, and for the maintenance and support of the Army, I think no acceptable apology could be offered by me for occupying the time of this House in debate. Other things are proposed, however. At the last session of the Forty-fifth Congress there was abundant time to have made these appropriations, but the House of Representatives refused, and persisted in an effort to coerce a co-ordinate legislative branch of the Government into the repeal of certain laws (of which I shall speak as I proceed) in no way connected with the appropriations. Failing in that attempt, the last Congress adjourned without having performed one of its first and highest constitutional duties.

Both of the legislative branches of the United States being now democratic, it is proposed to persist in passing the requisite appropriation bills coupled with other legislation foreign to the subject of appropriations and radically changing existing laws. By threats, boasts, and defiance we are given to understand the President will be coerced to surrender his constitutional prerogative and to approve any legislation, however much against his judgment or vicious it may be, or no further appropriations for the purposes named will be made. With a bare majority in this House and only a small majority in the Senate, the democratic party threatens (for the first time in the history of the Government) to annul the veto power of the President by, if possible, intimidating him to approve such bills as it may pass. This high prerogative, wisely reposed in him by the Constitution, that party, in its mad and revolutionary career, says shall be rendered a nullity, or this Government shall have withheld from it the sustenance that gives it life.

The Constitution (second paragraph, seventh section, article 1) invests the President with a legislative power equal to one-sixth of each branch of Congress. He cannot refuse to exercise this grant of power, if in his judgment the rights of the people are about to be struck down through unwise legislation, without being recreant to his august trust. This power cannot be taken from the President in the manner proposed without making a long stride in revolution. Let us pause on the brink of so fearful an abyss!

It is vain to argue and read portions only of the Constitution to prove that all legislative power is vested in Congress. To the astonishment of many of us who know so well the legal attainments of two of my colleagues [Mr. MCMAHON and Mr. HURD] we have heard them read portions of the Constitution with an air of satisfaction, to try to show that the President has nothing to do with legislation, and while still panting for breath after having announced so utterly untenable a position, turn upon the President and warn and threaten him and the country with the direst consequences if he does not lay at the feet of the democratic party a constitutional power they so vehemently deny he possesses. We have listened in vain for their reference to and comments on the seventh section, article 1 of the Constitution, which gives the President the veto power. They and others pass it by as though it was not to be found in the instrument. I would do my colleagues injustice to suppose they had never read or heard of it. I do them ample justice when I say their ripe judgments taught them that no subtle reasoning would convince anybody, not even their democratic brethren, that its plain terms were meaningless.

It is true that all legislation originates with Congress, as all bills for raising revenue must originate in this House. (Section 7, article 1, Constitution.) If Congress should refuse to pass any bills we would have no legislation; if this House would originate no revenue bills there would be no new revenue laws; but this does not prove that Congress alone can make a law or that this House can alone provide for raising revenue. In the cases given these bodies can alone prevent legislation but cannot alone create it.

The President is given the sole appointing power under the Constitution, (save as to certain officers,) yet the Senate must advise and consent or his appointments fall. The reasoning of gentlemen would authorize the President to say to the Senate that it should advise and consent at his dictation. The Constitution is wisely made up of "checks and balances." We cannot too clearly understand the momentous question, the final issue of which now engages the anxious attention of above forty-five million of people, who are just emerging from an era of long suffering and distress, connected with, growing out of, and incident to our recent great and bloody war, and entering upon a new era of comparative prosperity and happiness. The party now in possession of both branches of Congress, in its initial proclamation of ascendency to legislative power, notifies the country that it will leave the legislative and executive branches of the Government unprovided for; that the administration of justice in the courts of the United States shall stop—"the wheels of justice" shall no longer revolve; and that the Army shall be disbanded and our frontiers be left unguarded, our forts and arsenals unmanned and unprotected, and the peaceable and law-abiding people and their property be left without security against domestic violence too great to be controlled by State and other authorities; or otherwise the officers and men of the Army shall go unpaid, unclothed, and unfed; and all this, unless the minority in Congress and the chief executive head of the Government will assent to the repeal of all United States laws affording protection to citizens at the ballot-box from intimidation, murder, and violence, and which may prevent ballot-box stuffing, repeating, and other election frauds.

More briefly put, the democratic party now says through its members here that all United States laws shall be repealed which stand in the way of free frauds and open intimidation and violence at the polls, or it will withhold the necessary means to longer carry on the Government. This is the issue and this is the stake. If that party cannot be allowed to hold and control this nation through a violation of the purity and freedom of the ballot-box, then this Union shall no longer live. Is this the height, breadth, and depth of the patriotism of that party or the strength of the tenure of its love for this country. One member [Mr. BLACKBURN] goes even further, and in his candor and frankness tells us his party does not intend to stop with what is now proposed. In his speech of the 3d instant he said:

> For the first time in eighteen years past the democracy are back in power in both branches of this Legislature, and she proposes to signalize her return to power; she proposes to celebrate her recovery of her long-lost heritage by tearing off these degrading badges of servitude and destroying the machinery of a corrupt and partisan legislation. We do not intend to stop until we have stricken the last vestige of your war measures from the statute-book, which, like these, were born of the passions incident to civil strife and looked to the abridgment of the liberty of the citizen.

This should be a timely warning, but warnings are seldom heeded. Eleven years and more have rolled by since a national democratic convention, in 1868, declared all the reconstruction acts of Congress "unconstitutional, revolutionary, and void." The next step may be to repeal all laws for the punishment of treason or the suppression of rebellion; they are also of our war measures.

My friend from Virginia [Mr. TUCKER] and many on the other side of this House speak of their return to the Union, to the "long-lost heritage" of which the gentleman from Kentucky speaks. Their forced return was welcomed with a patriotic joy unspeakable. At their coming there were bonfires, illuminations, shouts, prayers, praises, and invocations all over the loyal North. The gates of the Union were set wide ajar that their coming might not be obstructed. If their return was voluntary the inducement to return was involuntary. The only condition of their return was that they should remain and be good citizens. Southern democrats were forced at cannon's mouth and bayonet-point to take the ballot in the Union. When General Lee's army surrendered at Appomattox, Virginia, and General JOHNSTON'S at Greensborough, North Carolina, long steps toward giving the South a free ballot were taken.

Generals Grant and Sherman with their armies made a free ballot in the Union and under the Constitution for democrats in the South possible. And still the Army is abused and maligned.

Paradoxical as it may seem, the democratic party can now boast of nothing good in it (if it really possesses any merit) that it does not owe to defeat in peace or war.

The republican party blazed the way for the democratic party South to return to the Union, and on its return led its members up to the ballot-box, rebaptized them with American citizenship, reclothed many of them with justly forfeited civil rights, among which is the right to hold office, and rehabilitated many of them with the right to again gather around the sacred shrine of constitutional liberty and worship at its purified altar, on which, for its preservation and perpetuation and for the benefit and glory of all mankind, there was immolated half a million of patriots.

It is my purpose and design to briefly discuss the nature of the legislation proposed to be forced on this country, but before proceeding to do so I desire to notice the so often cited supposed precedent, drawn from English history, as a justification of the revolutionary course now entered upon by the dominant party here.

The distinguished gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] in his recent able speech has fully shown that in two hundred years of constitutional government no such attempt as this has been made in monarchical England, where originally all power was vested in the Crown. I wish to add that from the days when a House of Commons was first formed and made the depository of legislative power; from the reign of Charles I—1625 to 1639—through all the long, bloody, and angry civil strifes in England, neither the House of Commons nor any other organized power contending with the king for concessions made a proposition even to take the life of the kingdom unless concessions were granted by the crown. It is true subsidies for the crown, the princes, and for the elevation and maintenance of royalty have been refused, also money to carry on a foreign war not approved of by the Commons has been withheld, and only granted as an equivalent for regal concessions to an oppressed people. But in vain will search be made in the history of England for a precedent for the action now proposed. When, in the history of Great Britain or any other country before this, has a legislative body ever said to the chief ruler, "Give us a law such as we demand, surrender to us a section of your arch of power, or we will destroy our own nation?" It is reserved to an American Congress controlled by a revolutionary democracy to first enter upon any such suicidal policy. The proposition is not to withhold power or appropriations from the chief Executive of the nation, but to destroy the Government by a failure to perform a sworn constitutional duty necessary to the Republic's life.

I crave your attention while I review, briefly as possible, the objectionable features of the proposed legislation.

THE TEST OATH.

It is proposed to repeal certain provisions of the statute known as the jury law, fixing the qualifications of jurors, the substantive part of which is found in sections 820 and 821 of the Revised Statutes of the United States. There is, I believe, a general acquiescence in the repeal of section 820, which makes acts of insurrection or rebellion causes of disqualification and challenge of jurors in the United States courts. This section was, doubtless, wisely enacted, but its repeal can do no great harm at this day.

Section 821 should not be repealed, in my opinion, though perhaps no great public injury would result. It only gives the attorney for the United States the right to move, and the court, in its discretion, the power to tender to persons summoned as jurors, an oath or affirmation to support the Constitution, and that they have been guilty of no act of insurrection or rebellion against the United States, and, on their declining to take such oath or affirmation, discharge them from serving as jurors. There may still be cases where persons once engaged in rebellion should not sit in judgment upon acts of others involving the same elements of guilt. Under this section the whole matter is in the discretion of the court.

But we are not permitted to vote alone for the repeal of the test-oath laws. The proposition comes coupled with one requiring the whole plan of selecting jurors to be overturned. I believe for the first time in the history of the United States, or any of the States, so far as I can learn, party politics is to be forced by law into the jury-box. In addition to the repeal of certain sections of the law relating to jurors, we are asked to vote for a provision which requires the clerk and a commissioner appointed by the court of the "principal political party opposing that to which the clerk may belong" to select one name, alternately, until the required number of jurors is obtained; they, of course, to select from their political party friends. Should a political millennium be found in any United States court district where all should see eye to eye in politics, no jurors could be selected at all. (Just now it does not look like we are approaching a political millennium.) Such a law can only be properly characterized as infamous. Jurors selected for party reasons would feel that the law justified them in standing by their respective party friends. Verdicts would be in many cases, both civil and criminal, impossible, and such is the avowed purpose of the proposed legislation. Such a law would be unconstitutional. It certainly violates the spirit if not the letter of the first section of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution. It would abridge the privileges and immunities of citizens of the United States. Greenbackers, nationals, socialists, independents, and non-partisans are to have no officer to put them on juries; they are practically denied if not rendered ineligible by law to sit upon a jury in the United States courts.

Mr. LOWE. Swallow both parties. We will take the whole jury

Mr. KEIFER. I understand that you are capable of swallowing far more than you can digest. [Laughter.]

Mr. LOWE. There is no republican party in Alabama. They met in State convention and there committed political hari-kari, and refused to nominate a ticket or arrange a platform.

Mr. KEIFER. Taken together, the proposition is to qualify those recently engaged in rebellion, and to disqualify those who (as greenbackers, &c.) do not belong to one of the two principal parties of the country from sitting as jurors. I protest against the insult and outrage.

This proposition comes, like the others, after mature gestation from the womb of a democratic caucus, although the member from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] appeared as the putative father of it.

SUPERVISORS, MARSHALS, ETC., AT THE POLLS.

This bill contains provisions for repealing all of substance of the present law authorizing chief supervisors and supervisors of elections chosen from different political parties to be appointed by a United States court, to see that there is an honest registration of voters in States where registration is required; to scrutinize, count, and canvass the ballots, &c., to the end that an honest, free, and fair election and count of ballots cast for Representatives and Delegates in Congress may be had; also for the repeal of the law authorizing the appointment to keep the peace by United States marshals of special deputies in cities of twenty thousand inhabitants or upward; and also the law defining the duties on election days of the marshal, his general and special deputies; also the only section of the statute providing a punishment for interfering with the discharge of the duties of such supervisors, marshals, &c.; also to modify the law so as in no case to require (only authorize) supervisors of election to attend at the polls on election days, and to prohibit them from canvassing the ballots cast.

The sections of the Revised Statutes sought to be repealed are 2016, 2018, 2020 to 2027, inclusive, and 5522; and section 2017 is to be modified by striking out of the first line the words "are required," and section 2019 by striking out all relating to canvassing ballots, and section 2028 by striking out all relating to "a deputy marshal," and the words "city, town, county, and parish."

If this bill passes in its present form it will take away all laws requiring marshals and their deputies to attend on election days and keep the peace and protect the supervisors of election. Supervisors (not chief supervisors) of election may still be appointed, clothed with authority (not required) to go to the polls and stand around with their hands in their pockets, at the risk of their lives, so they may have the sweet boon of informing on and swearing against violators of the law. What a glorious privilege granted to an American citizen! And herein lies all the boasted merit of the retained portion of the law authorizing the appointment of supervisors of election—the privilege (not duty) granted by law of watching their neighbors, and then swearing against them at some future time! The only section (5522) of the statute which would afford such supervisors the slightest protection while enjoying this privilege is to be repealed in such way as to indicate that while the law does not make it a crime for supervisors of elections to be at the polls, it is perfectly proper to break their heads while there. Their own hands are to be tied against resistance, and there is to be no law allowing any interference on election days to prevent breaches of the peace, murder, &c., at the polls. There is to be at the polls free frauds and free crimes, unrestrained by law.

It is not necessary to have a law to grant the privilege to become an informer and a witness where a crime is committed. That is a privilege belonging to every man's "heritage." The democratic party (should their bills now pending become laws) can go to the country and say "it has considerately permitted free swearing after elections as well as free fraud in their conduct."

The section especially objectionable to democrats is the one (2022) authorizing the United States marshal, his general and special deputies, to keep the peace and to protect the supervisors of election in the discharge of their duties, and which authorizes all these officers to arrest at the polls, without warrant, persons who in their presence commit crimes against the election and other laws of the United States.

It should be specially noted that at the polls on election days, under the proposed law, all persons are to be held sacred and free from arrest for offenses against the laws of the United States, although committed in the presence of officers of the law.

The power and right of marshals and their deputies in discharging their duties to call to their aid bystanders or a posse comitatus are to be taken away by the repeal of section 2024.

Is the power to make arrests without warrant an extraordinary one?

My colleague [Mr. HURD] said these "supervising officers are armed with authority unknown in the history of the common law or State laws. They have authority at the day of election to make arrests without warrants," &c.

With due deference I insist that he is grossly in error both as to the common law and State laws. At common law, high sheriffs, constables, marshals, and all other like officers are authorized to make arrests on view and hold the accused until a legal warrant can be obtained. This right is supposed to belong to any citizen.

In my State, (Ohio,) where the shackles of the law sit easy on the good citizens, all the constabulary force of the State is required by statute to arrest and detain all persons "found violating any law of the State," &c., "until a legal warrant can be obtained." (Section 21, criminal code, 1869.) Another section (22) of Ohio's criminal code is as follows:

> Any person not an officer may, without warrant, arrest any person if a petit larceny or a felony has been committed and there has been reasonable ground to believe the person arrested guilty of such an offense, and may detain him until a legal warrant can be obtained.

Mr. HURD. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. KEIFER. Certainly.

Mr. HURD. Will the gentleman read the section of the Ohio statute to which he refers?

Mr. KEIFER. I have just read one and have accurately quoted the substance of the other.

Mr. HURD. Which section has the gentleman read?

Mr. KEIFER. I read section 22 and quoted section 21.

Mr. HURD. What was the section the gentleman has just read?

Mr. KEIFER. Section 22 of the code which you drafted.

Mr. HURD. Will you please read it again so that I may call the attention of the House to it?

Mr. KEIFER. I have not time to do it now, but I will send it to the gentleman and he can read it.

Mr. HURD. I will state that the provision of the Ohio code to which my colleague refers authorizes the arrest of private persons only in cases where petit larceny or felony has been committed.

Mr. KEIFER. All that is stated in the law, but I cannot yield longer to my colleague. I will send the provision to the gentleman, so that he can read it at his leisure. He wrote it, and he ought to know all about it.

Mr. HURD. I will state that it contains the well-established principle of the common law that no citizen can be arrested except for felony or breach of the peace.

Mr. KEIFER. My colleague is in error; it authorizes arrests by private persons without warrant.

Mr. GEDDES. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. KEIFER. Certainly.

Mr. GEDDES. Will the gentleman explain the meaning of that clause in section 2022 of the supervisors act which provides that a Federal official may arrest a party who attempts or offers to commit one of the offenses named in the statute?

Mr. KEIFER. I will say to the gentleman that I will do that when I have more time than I have now, and as I proceed.

My colleague [Mr. HURD] will allow me to do him an honor by saying that he drafted these sections of Ohio statutes which so properly arms both officers and citizens with what he now calls extraordinary power. Many of the States have the same wise provisions in their statutes. It is a felony in Ohio to cast a fraudulent vote, and to commit other offenses against her election laws; and hence by law any officer or private citizen may arrest at the polls without warrant all such offenders.

The law now sought to be repealed does not authorize arrests to be made "without process for any offense not committed in the presence of the marshal," his deputies, or of the supervisors of election. With these limitations the statute confers no unusual or extraordinary powers, but very necessary and salutary ones. Only those desiring to offend against the election laws, or to abet offenders against them, or to gather the fruits of election frauds, would be expected to complain of the present statutes.

There may be imperfections in the law or wrong done sometimes in its execution, yet not such as to afford a good reason for blotting it out. The sun, the center and source of all light and heat, has its dark spots. Who would for that reason favor striking it from the firmament of the heavens?

SHALL PEACE BE PRESERVED AT THE POLLS?

There is danger that some gentlemen may be deceived at the adroitness in which the proposed legislation on the Army bill is stated in debate. My friend from Virginia [Mr. TUCKER] and other distinguished members hardly want to deceive themselves in this way.

The question is not, shall troops or armed men be used at the polls to prevent a free and fair election; but it is this: shall peace be preserved at the polls to secure a free and fair election? No person favors the use of the military or civil power to prevent a free, fair ballot, but the democratic party says, in effect, we shall not use the military or civil power to secure a free, fair ballot. The words "or to keep the peace at the polls" are to be stricken out of sections 2002 and 5528 of the statutes, thereby making it a high crime for any military, naval, or civil officer of the United States to put down violence or suppress open crime at the polls on election days. It is now by law a high crime for any of these officers to in any way hinder or prevent any person from voting. (Revised Statutes, section 2009.)

Existing law also prohibits officers or other persons in the Army or Navy from interfering with the right of a person to vote at any election. (Revised Statutes, sections 2003, 5529–5532.) A violation of these sections subjects the guilty to a fine of not exceeding $5,000 and imprisonment at hard labor not more than five years, and also perpetual disqualification from holding any office under the United States. (Section 5532.) These extraordinary penalties having been affixed to any violation of the rights of a voter by United States officers, it remains to be determined whether their use to suppress riots purposely gotten up to prevent a full, free, and fair vote should be made a crime.

The proposition of the majority on this floor is to, by law, countenance and promote violence and disorders by lawless persons at the polls on election days. Failing in this, the democratic party say the Union is not worth supporting. It values free fraud and unrestrained violence more than the country.

To amend the law as now proposed will paralyze the officers of the United States, so that at least on one day and at one place in each year the shield of the laws of this country will be thrown around those who may engage in any kind of violence which will prevent a full, fair, and honest expression of the will of the voters.

In all this long debate not one word has escaped the lips of any democrat in condemnation of the bands of lawless persons who are to be permitted to invade the polls. Nothing has been brought to the notice of Congress or the country during this long debate which tends to prove that the officers of the Government have ever prevented a single man from voting, and as he wished. The polls on election days should be a place of absolute peace. Disorders and violence are the forerunners of and incident to election frauds. What is the objection to peace at the polls?

It must be kept in mind that the legislation proposed makes it a crime for marshals and other officers in the civil service of the United States to suppress riots, &c., by the aid of an armed posse comitatus at the polls. It is not the employment of troops alone that is to be prohibited at the polls, but the civil power of the Government is to be suspended there. On a former occasion I said the democratic party favored free frauds at elections. From the legislation now proposed that conclusion is irresistible.

By statute (R. S., sec. 788) the duties of marshals and their deputies in executing United States laws are the same as sheriffs and other like officers in executing State laws. These officers have always been charged with the public duty of keeping the peace. They have been at common law and by statute authorized and required not only to suppress riots, &c., but to make arrests without warrant and detain persons found violating any criminal law or ordinance until a legal warrant could be obtained. Under this legislation the functions of all this class of officers are to be suspended at elections of members of Congress.

The real cause of complaint is not that officers charged with the duty under the present law of keeping the peace have failed to do their duty, or that they have prevented legal voters from voting, but that they have overawed, or are likely to overawe, disturbers of the peace at the polls who engage in preventing, by intimidation or otherwise, the legal voter from voting, or who engage in promoting fraud by repeating and ballot-box stuffing. To accomplish this end the democratic party threaten, on failure, to stop the wheels of the Government and initiate revolution. The people will stand amazed in the presence of such a threat, but they will meet it with patriotism and their sovereign power.

Again and again during this discussion of the Army bill has it been said these two sections are unconstitutional. My colleague from Ohio [Mr. HURD] and my friend from Virginia, [Mr. TUCKER,] both justly distinguished for their legal learning, reiterate this view. I must be pardoned for differing with them. The sections, taken alone or separately, do not undertake to authorize anything to be done by any person; they are wholly prohibitory and restraining, not permissive, statutes; they make the use of troops or armed men at the polls a crime on the part of any United States military, naval, or civil officer; they only limit a power which may exist under the Constitution and laws. As has been so often said, these sections are not to be repealed, but only re-enacted so as to make it a crime (hitherto unknown) to keep the peace at the polls.

The claim of gentlemen, then, is this: that it is unconstitutional not to make it a penal offense to keep the peace where elections are being held. By necessary implication the proper officers should, as a matter of duty, keep the peace everywhere else.

During this debate it has often been stated that the legislation proposed on the Army bill is similar to English law. This is wholly untrue. The honorable gentlemen from Kentucky [Mr. KNOTT] and from Mississippi [Mr. MULDROW] somewhat astonished us by the confident manner in which they read English statutes to justify this legislation. I need hardly do more than invite attention to the laws quoted by them to convince every person that there is no possible similarity between the two. The English statutes read are mere police regulations for the government of soldiers (not officers) when not on duty; no reference is even made to the duty of officers or the powers of the Crown. The English statutes require soldiers quartered within two miles of election polls to remain in barracks, &c., when not on duty during an election. The proposed law would apply only to officers, military, naval, or civil. There is not even an inference to be drawn from the English statute that the government designed to limit its power through its officers to keep the peace at the polls or anywhere else. These English laws do not undertake even to regulate the conduct of all the soldiery, but only such as are quartered within two miles of a nominating or voting place; there is nothing prescribed as to the conduct of all other British soldiers at the polls. English statesmen do not make and keep for one hundred years a defective law on the statute-books.

The statute of George II was passed when England had quartered all over it troops, who often made election days an occasion for riotous and disorderly conduct. The statute was then and is still a wise one, and would be utterly unobjectionable in this country.

I give here the section of the statute of George II so often cited:

SEC. 2. And be it enacted, That on every day appointed for the nomination or for the election or for taking the poll for the election of a member or members to serve in the Commons House of Parliament no soldier within two miles of any city, borough, town, or place where such nomination or election shall be declared or poll taken shall be allowed to go out of the barrack or quarters in which he is stationed, unless for the purpose of mounting or relieving guard, or for giving his vote at such election; and that every soldier allowed to go out for any such purpose within the limits aforesaid shall return to his barrack or quarters with all convenient speed as soon as his guard shall have been relieved or vote tendered.

The government of England has frequently used its army to suppress election riots in London and other large cities; notably at elections held during the exciting times pending the repeal of the Corn Laws, and also when financial relief was demanded. In Scotland and Ireland the army has always been used to keep the peace when election riots have occurred. Pending the struggle which resulted in the passage of the reform bill (in 1831) the election riots in Belfast and other places in Ireland were put down by the British army, and it alone could keep the peace at the polls. Recently as 1872, during election and other riots in principal cities of Ireland, growing out of the deadly strife between Catholic and Orangemen, English soldiers were used to keep the peace. By law also all the police and constabulary force of the kingdom are specially enjoined to keep the peace at elections.

It will be found that it was left to the democratic party of this country to attempt to legalize fraud, outrage, and violence at elections.

My friend from Virginia [Mr. TUCKER] gave an instance where in 1741 an English officer was, "on bended knee," reprimanded by the speaker of the House of Commons for, my friend says, "using troops at the polls." Not so; but for, under a pretense of quelling an "alleged riot at Westminster," assuming to control the election of a member of Parliament.

Under our law a similar offense would not be punished by a parliamentary reprimand, but the offender would suffer fine, imprisonment, and total disqualification from holding an office under the United States. (Revised Statutes, section 5532.)

WHAT ARE FREE SOUTHERN ELECTIONS?

It is now alleged that recently peaceful, free, and fair elections have been held in the Southern States under democratic rule, and Mississippi, Georgia, and other States are given as instances to prove the good effects of the "liberty of the citizen" at elections uninfluenced by troops or United States officers. We are often told that the colored men when left free vote of their own volition the democratic ticket. Peace and order are now said to reign at the polls in democratic Southern States.

An examination of election returns reveals to us some startling facts. If democratic claims were true we would expect to find a largely increased vote in these States, especially democratic vote. At the risk of being tedious I give here some figures showing the vote in years when it is alleged the bayonet and carpet-bag rule held sway in comparison with more recent elections, held wholly free from such rule and conducted on the broader principles of "democratic liberty." A few examples must suffice for the whole southern vote where the same conditions exist.

In the second district of Georgia the democratic vote in 1872 was 9,530, the republican 9,616; in the sixth district the democratic vote was 9,993, and republican 6,196; and in the eighth district the democratic vote was 7,437, and the republican 6,230. In 1878 the vote in the same Georgia districts was, second district, (Mr. COOK'S,) democratic 2,628, republican 6; sixth district, (Mr. BLOUNT'S,) democratic 3,192, republican 18; and in the eighth district, (Mr. STEPHENS'S,) democratic 3,673, and the republican 54.

In these three districts of Georgia the aggregate vote on Congress men in 1872 was, democratic 26,960 and republican 22,042, and with a democratic "free election" in 1878 the total in the same districts was, democratic 9,439 and republican 78. The democratic vote fell off from 1872 to 1878 over 60 per cent. (17,521) and the republican vote all vanished save 78.

The Mississippi election statistics are, if possible, more significant. The vote given is on Congressmen.

In the third Mississippi district in 1872 the vote was, democratic 6,440 and the republican 15,047; in 1878 it was, democratic (for Mr. MONEY) 4,025 and republican 686.

In the fourth district in 1872 the vote was, democratic 6,870, republican 15,595; in 1878 it was, democratic (for Mr. SINGLETON) 4,025, republican 0.

In the fifth district in 1872 the vote was, democratic 8,073 and republican 14,817; in 1878 it was, democratic (Mr. HOOKER) 4,816 and republican 686.

In the sixth district in 1872 the vote was, democratic 8,509, republican 15,101; and in 1878 it was, democratic (Mr. CHALMERS) 6,663 and republican 1,370.

The total vote on Congressmen in these four Mississippi districts in 1872 was 29,892 democratic and 60,560 republican; in 1878 it was 20,154 democratic and 2,050 republican.

In 1872 the republicans, by large majorities, carried each of these four Mississippi districts; but in 1878, when the democratic vote had fallen off 33 per cent., (or 7,738,) democrats were elected in each nearly unanimously. The republican vote went down from 60,560 in 1872 to 2,050 in 1878. The total vote fell off from 90,452 in 1872 to 22,210 in 1878. This is the fruit of a democratic "free" election in the South.

The member from the third district of Mississippi in 1878 received 2,295 less votes than Mr. Chisholm received in 1876, when he was returned as beaten. The gallant Chisholm and his heroic son and daughter, with many of his political friends, had met violent deaths for their temerity in 1876.

Democrats boast that in the elections in Mississippi and other of the Southern States in 1878 peace reigned; it was the peace and serenity which succeeds death. The work of the kuklux, white-liners, rifle clubs, democratic regulators, through intimidation, assassination, and crime unparalleled in barbarity, bore its fruits and established the rule of an armed and lawless minority over the timid majority, and the elective franchise was trampled in the dust. To an implacable and merciless opposition the people surrendered their political rights. When the people no longer struggle for their rights against lawlessness then democrats cry, "peace reigns." The Czar Nicholas of Russia, after exterminating all the inhabitants of certain districts in poor unfortunate Poland and making a wilderness of the country, called it "peace." By the proposed legislation these lawless democratic bands are in effect to be legalized. The figures given show that the colored men did not vote the democratic ticket but did not vote at all.

The honorable gentleman [Mr. STEELE] of the sixth North Carolina district who did me the honor in February last of answering with some feeling a five-minute speech of mine, then assured the House that I was in error when I charged fraud, intimidation, violence, and murder to be in election matters the allies of the democratic party; and he also then, and in his recent speech, assured us of the utterly peaceful character of elections in his State, and especially in his own district. I need not furnish any evidence to the contrary. He did not however tell us why the vote in his district dwindled down from 23,261 in 1872 and 27,539 in 1876 to 5,328 in 1878; and he did not stop to explain why the democratic vote (as reported) went down from 17,256 in 1876 to 4,908 in 1878, or why the republican vote of 10,561 in 1872 and 10,282 in 1876 all vanished in 1878 but 258 votes. These figures are at least suggestive of a great controlling cause which compelled the people of his district to forego the privilege of voting. People do not voluntarily surrender this high privilege.

I make no charge against the honorable gentleman, but I assure him that the figures make out a case of wrong somewhere. He compared his district for fairness in the election with my own, (fourth Ohio.) My democratic opponent received about the same number of votes in 1878 cast in the same year for the three democratic members from the sixth, [Mr. STEELE'S,] the seventh, [Mr. ARMFIELD'S,] and the eighth [Mr. VANCE'S] North Carolina districts, and he was still beaten by 5,100 votes in a district below the average of Ohio districts in population, and in which no suggestion of fraud was made by any person. My opponent received in 1878 about 1,000 more votes than were cast in that year in the second, sixth, and eighth Georgia districts, and he was overwhelmingly defeated, while the three honorable gentlemen from that State [Mr. BLOUNT, Mr. COOK, and Mr. STEPHENS] are now chairmen of important committees of this House. With more votes than it takes to elect three of the most distinguished southern democratic members of this House, a single northern democrat is left at home. Other examples equally strong could be given to show the result of such democratic rule.

It does not come with good grace from gentlemen to assail my party with the charge of preventing the people from voting. No case has been cited to prove that any voter has been prevented by the use of the Army under republican rule from voting. The most that can be said is that in some instances lawless democratic bands may have been prevented from taking possession of the polls. It is not for the mass of the people of the South for whom the democratic party pleads. That party never did plead for their rights in times past. Is legalized riots one of the methods by which "property, intelligence, and education will rule the land?" as says a distinguished Senator, [Mr. THURMAN.] Prior to the war, when there was so much eloquence expended over the rights and wrongs of the South by democratic orators, nothing was said by them of the rights and against the wrongs of any persons, white or black, save those interested in slavery.

The census of 1860 showed 12,240,000 population in the fifteen Southern States, 8,039,000 of whom were white, 251,000 free colored, and 3,950,000 were slaves. The same census showed there were 384,884 slave-holders in the United States, less than 5 per cent. of the total white population of the South. Only about 20 per cent., as statistics show, of the total white population of the South in 1860 were, through family relationship or otherwise, interested in slaves or slave labor directly or indirectly. It is still over the supposed wrongs of this one-fifth of the white population (or their immediate descendants) of the South that the democratic party had so long mourned and still mourn, utterly forgetting that the 4,000,000 colored people once held in slavery and the 80 per cent. of white people of the South, many of whom through the curse of slavery, socially and otherwise, were once worse off than the black slaves, possessed any rights to be guarded. The word "liberty" had no meaning for them.

The democratic party now, as in the past, in mockery cry out for liberty and the people's rights.

That party precipitated this nation into a civil war in which blood flowed in torrents for above four years to secure the supposed rights of one-fifth of the white people of the South, and to enable that few to forge new fetters for the feet of 4,000,000 of God's people. And now that the democratic rebellion has failed that old party, before the sulphurous smoke and fumes of a hell-born war have quite blown away, proclaims itself the champion of the people's liberties.

When we have that freedom of the ballot desired by democrats it will be when and only when that sacred few of the South alone shall be suffered to vote, to the exclusion of the great mass of the white voters and all the colored. Unless a speedy remedy is applied the figures given warn us the day is near when this so much desired object of the democratic party will be attained.

CONCILIATION.

It is also said that all these election laws should be amended or repealed in the interests of conciliation. What is conciliation so much talked about on the other side of this Chamber? Webster says it is "to win over; to gain from a state of hostility." Are the gentlemen on the other side of the House and their constituents in a state of hostility? We are told the war and the rebellion have been at an end for above fourteen years, and yet daily and hourly here conciliation is demanded.

This demand is sometimes made to ring in our ears coupled with a threat that without it the nation is still imperiled. The thing demanded is concession (not conciliation) of the great fundamental principles of a free government, those for which the best blood of the land was shed. Are we never to be through conciliating those who tried to take the Republic's life? It is unworthy of a patriotic people to be constantly crying "Conciliate us!" "Conciliate us!" lest we do not become or remain good and patriotic citizens. Those who laid down their treason with their arms should ask no conciliation and they now need no forgiveness. Out of the goodness and abundant thankfulness of the hearts of the loyal, patriotic people of this Union all this class of persons were forgiven when the bells rang out and the cannon pealed forth the joyful sounds of peace; that slavery was dead; that America's proud banner waved over none but the free; and that the Union was vouchsafed to us in all its integrity. Is conciliation all on one side? The North and my party demand nothing of the South but that her people, possessed of equal rights before the law, stand by the Republic now and for the future.

When, unwillingly, the South laid down its arms, the republican party handed her hitherto rebellious people the ballot, granted them amnesty and pardon, rehabilitated them with full and complete citizenship, and without ample guarantees for the future made them the peers in political rights and privileges of those who, under God, saved through blood and tears, at the cost of untold millions, the Union. This was conciliation superadded to high magnanimity and grace. The North may yet tire of southern democratic demands. If, however, conciliation can be made still more complete by the continued exerise of grace and forgiveness I am most sincerely and heartily in favor of it. But if concessions of cardinal principles are still further demanded, with no arrogance I hope, and without threat, speaking as I believe not only for my party but the truly patriotic people of this whole country, I warn those who make such demands that they will be successfully opposed not only in debate and by vote here and elsewhere, but, should the final arbiter be appealed to, on the bloody theater of war.

Mr. Chairman, many of us have been surprised to hear advocates of this legislation against the purity of the ballot-box demand it in the name of LIBERTY.

In February last, Mr. Hewitt, of New York, made a speech here favoring this legislation and headed it "personal liberty of the citizen." Others have said they favored such legislation because they desired "the subordination of the military to the civil power." My colleague [Mr. HURD] says he is filled with joy to recollect "that the party of the Army is not in power in this Congress." Has it come to pass that the "personal liberty of the citizen" hangs on his power to perpetrate fraud and violence on election days? Does it not absolutely depend on his amenity to law in case he engages in either of those things? Is the "subordination of the military to the civil power" secured by protecting by law open violence at election polls? Would this not be under sanction of law the subordination of both the military and civil power to the licentious mob? Would it not be the enthronement of lawlessness and the overthrow of the highest and dearest rights of an American citizen?

It is true the republican party "is the party of the Army." I hope it will, in the future as in the past, invoke that strong arm of this Government as a last resort to save endangered constitutional liberty. What is liberty, civil liberty? The nature of true liberty ought in this country to be understood. Liberty and authority go hand in hand in a republic. Liberty unrestrained by authority is license. Authority unmitigated by liberty is tyranny. The instructed eye can see no liberty where there is no restraint. Liberty and law sternly confront each other; if the latter is withheld the former falls. Law is the fly-wheel to the great mechanism of constitutional liberty. It is our proudest boast to-day that events of the last score of years have demonstrated that our Government is strong enough to maintain itself against foreign or domestic foes, yet shorn by its organic act of all power to oppress or degrade its most humble citizen. None now are so high as to be above the law and none so low as to be beneath the protection of the law. Liberty teaches us to reverence and support authority as well as to withstand tyranny. The love of liberty which does not produce these effects is as hollow and hypocritical as a religion which is productive of immorality and an evil life. Seldom have the rights of the people been assailed or cloven down that it was not done in the name of "liberty" or "religion," as though a great wrong could be sanctified by a name.

In the language of the heroic Madame Roland, as she bowed reverently before a statue of liberty at her execution: "O Liberty, what crimes are committed in thy name!"

Secession, rebellion, and treason invoked the sacred name of liberty to shield from the broad glare of the civilized and Christianized world the shame, the infamy, and colossal crime of attempting to perpetually enthrone human slavery! In this country, under the disgraced mantle of the Constitution of our fathers, slavery in its direst form was long protected and perpetuated. War was the only remedy for the eradication of such national sins. The sacrifices of that war, manifold and terrible as they were, are more than compensated for by the result attained. Let not licentiousness be mistaken for liberty. Licentiousness is a lawless power too often indulged in under a pretense of liberty.

The poet Milton fitly characterized a class of persons, all of whom are not yet dead. He said they were those—

> That bawl for freedom in their senseless moods,
> And still revolt, when truth would set them free;
> License they mean, when they cry—liberty.

Let us cease this mockery in the name of liberty.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I beg to say this Government would rightfully spring to arms to redress a wrong done to one of its citizens in a foreign land. Let it not be said that the broad shield of the Constitution and laws of the United States shall not be thrown over and around an American citizen at home.

I hope the Stars and Stripes shall ever be an emblem of liberty and protection for all citizens of this Republic on land and sea, at home as well as abroad. [Great applause on the republican side of the House.]

Mr. SPRINGER obtained the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] has fifteen minutes reserved by the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ELLIS] and ten minutes from the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, the Constitution of the United States in the first article, and the first section of that article, provides that "all the legislative powers herein granted shall be vested in the Congress of the United States, which shall consist of a Senate and House of Representatives," and in the second clause in the fifth section of the same article it is provided that "each House may determine the rules of its own proceedings."

By virtue of these constitutional powers this House has determined the rules of its proceedings, and among those rules will be found Rule 120, which prohibits propositions changing existing law, except such as being germane to the subject-matter of the bill shall retrench expenditures. This House need not have passed that rule; it need not have had any rule on the subject, or when passing a rule it might have provided that all legislation should be upon appropriation bills. It is the exclusive province of the House of Representatives to determine its rules of proceedings and its methods of legislation. Whether it makes proper rules or not, or whether its rules be acceptable to the other departments of Government or not, there is no appeal from its action in making them, and we are alone responsible to our constituents for making them.

It is said that we have placed riders upon the appropriation bills. Suppose we have; who has a right to complain of that? Has the Senate the right to complain of it? The Senate can make its own rules. Has the President a right to complain of it? He has nothing to do with it.

This House having placed these provisions on the appropriation bills it is alone responsible for them. If the President of the United States should see fit in the exercise of the powers conferred upon him to veto a bill passed by this House and the Senate, he must find another and a better reason than that there were two subjects embraced in one bill.

But I deny that there is any rider upon the pending bill, or upon the Army appropriation bill which has already passed this House and is now pending in the Senate. What is a rider? The House of Lords defined in 1702 what a rider was, or a "tack" on supply bills as it was then called, by passing the following resolution:

That the annexing a clause or clauses to a bill of aid or supplies, the matter of which is foreign to and different from the matter of said bill of aid or supply, is unparliamentary and tends to the destruction of the constitution of this government.

Mark the words "foreign to" and "different from."

I accept the doctrine in its fullest extent as applied to the English Parliament. But what do the Commons say in regard to their power? On the 3d day of July, 1675, the House of Commons laid down this rule with regard to appropriation bills; a rule which has been accepted by the House of Lords and by all the other departments of the government of England from that day to this, over two hundred years:

That all aid and supplies and aids to His Majesty in Parliament are the sole gift of the Commons; and all bills for the granting of such aids and supplies ought to begin with the Commons; and that it is the undoubted and sole right of the Commons—

Mark these words:

it is the undoubted and sole right of the Commons to direct, limit, and appoint in such bills—

What?

the ends, purposes, conditions, considerations, limitations, and qualifications of such grant: which ought not to be changed or altered by the House of Lords.

That rule has been in force for more than two hundred years. It was the law of England one hundred years before our fathers rebelled against the authority of that government. When our Constitution was made the framers were cognizant of these provisions and reserved to the House of Representatives the right to originate money bills. And reserving that right, we took with it also, in passing every bill appropriating the people's money, the right to say what limit should be placed on the appropriation, what conditions should be placed upon it, what end should be attained, what purposes should be subserved, and what should be the qualifications of the grant.

It is for this House to say what will be the limitation placed upon appropriation bills. And what have we said? In reference to the Army appropriation bill we have said this and nothing more: that we will appropriate money enough to support the Army in suppressing bands of hostile Indians; we will appropriate money sufficient to keep a force upon the Mexican border; but we will limit the expenditures to those purposes only, and will refuse to vote the people's money to pay for an Army to be used as policemen to keep the peace at election polls. We will not make an appropriation for transportation, for the salary of the officers or the pay of the soldiers in the discharge of that kind of service; nor will we furnish them subsistence while engaged in that work. And, in addition to this, we will say to those who control the Army, it shall be unlawful to use soldiers for any such purpose.

Is such a provision a rider? It is not; it never has been so considered by any legislative body in the world. What have we proposed in reference to the election laws? We have proposed to appropriate all the money necessary for the courts; we will appropriate all the money needed to pay the expenses of the Government. But we will pay nothing for marshals to keep the peace at any poll in the United States on election day, for we do not want their services, and we will not appropriate money for that purpose. We have made some other changes in this bill. We have refused to appropriate money for what is known as the Hayden survey, for we were of the opinion that service was no longer necessary for the Government. We failed to put in the bill an appropriation for such purpose. Would it be proper for the President to send the bill back with his veto saying, "I will forbid the paying of your own salaries; the paying of the salaries of the judges and the expenses of the courts, and the paying of the clerks in the Departments unless you put in the bill a clause appropriating money to pay for the survey of the public lands?" It is not the province of any other department of the Government to question our right to limit an appropriation or to abolish any particular service that has heretofore called for the expenditure of the public money.

It would be strange indeed if the Executive should veto a bill, not on account of what was contained in it, but on account of that which it did not contain. Such a use of the veto power would give the Executive and a minority in one House of Congress the power to dictate all legislation, or "starve the Government to death."

Let us examine the precedents in this country in reference to legislation upon appropriation bills. In 1846, on the 12th day of August, David Wilmot, of Pennsylvania, moved a proviso upon an appropriation bill. That proviso has taken his name and has become a part of the history of this country. The bill appropriated $3,000,000 for the purpose of carrying on the war with Mexico, and "the Wilmot proviso" made it an express condition that none of that money should be used for the acquisition of territory upon which slavery should exist. When that provision was offered in the House of Representatives a point of order was made upon it. The Chair overruled it, an appeal was taken, and the Chair was sustained by the House. The proceedings, as recorded in the Globe, volume 15, page 1217, are worthy of careful consideration, and are as follows:

Mr. Wilmot moved an amendment, to add at the end of Mr. McKay's modified bill the following:

"Provided, That, as an express and fundamental condition to the acquisition of any territory from the Republic of Mexico by the United States, by virtue of any treaty which may be negotiated between them, and to the use by the Executive of the moneys herein appropriated, neither slavery nor involuntary servitude shall ever exist in any part of said territory, except for crime, whereof the party shall be first duly convicted."

The first section of the bill was still under consideration, and after some conversation the amendment of Mr. Wilmot was received as an amendment to this section.

Mr. Dobbin rose to a point of order. He contended that the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Wilmot] was not in order, the subject of slavery having no connection with the bill.

The chairman overruled the point of order. The bill (he stated) appropriated a certain sum of money to be put at the disposal of the President. It was certainly competent on the part of the House to adopt a provision limiting the application of the money and providing that it should be applied only on certain conditions.

Mr. Dobbin appealed from the decision.

The question on the appeal was taken by tellers; and the decision of the chairman was sustained—ayes 92, noes 37.

Thus the amendment was decided in order.

That decision of the Chair and the House would to-day be denounced by some gentlemen as "revolution in Congress." The House at that time was democratic, having elected John W. Davis, of Indiana, Speaker by a vote of 120 against 72 for his whig opponent.

That is not all. There are other precedents in our history. In 1856 there was pending in this House the regular Army appropriation bill—just such a bill as we had before this House a few days ago. At that time a gentleman, who is now one of the President's advisers, Mr. John Sherman, was a member of this House. He moved to that bill an amendment in the following language:

Provided, nevertheless, That no part of the military force of the United States herein provided for shall be employed in aid of the enforcement of the enactments of the alleged Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Kansas, recently assembled at Shawnee Mission, until Congress shall have enacted either that it was or was not a valid Legislative Assembly, chosen in conformity with the organic law by the people of the said Territory: And provided, That until Congress shall have passed on the validity of the said Legislative Assembly of Kansas it shall be the duty of the President to use the military force in said Territory to preserve the peace, suppress insurrection, repel invasion, and to protect persons and property therein, and upon the national highways in the State of Missouri, from unlawful seizures and searches: And be it further provided, That the President is required to disarm the present organized militia of the Territory of Kansas, and recall all the United States arms therein distributed, and to prevent armed men from going into said Territory to disturb the public peace or aid in the enforcement or resistance of real or pretended laws.—Congressional Globe, volume 32, part 3, page 1790.

When that amendment was offered a point of order was made, and a republican chairman, Mr. Leiter, of Ohio, then presiding, sustained the point of order and ruled out the amendment. Mr. Sherman took an appeal from that decision, and the committee sustained the appeal, declaring in effect that the amendment was in order upon an Army bill. The question was settled, not by the decision of the Chair alone, but by the Committee of the Whole House; and on an appeal by Mr. Sherman, the committee declared that it was germane to an Army appropriation bill to declare that no part of the money appropriated should be used for the purpose of enforcing certain laws in Kansas; and also that it was germane, in connection with the appropriation, to impose certain duties on the Executive as a condition of the grant of supplies.

That bill, with the Sherman proviso, became then the first great measure of legislation that marked the advent of the republican party in this country. That was the first Congress in which the republican party had a majority, having elected Mr. Banks Speaker after a protracted struggle. The Senate and the President were democratic. The Senate refused to agree to this Sherman proviso; and the House of Representatives, controlled by the republican majority, resolved to adhere to it. They did adhere to it until finally the session adjourned without making appropriations for the Army. On the 18th of August, 1856, the first Congress in which there was a republican House of Representatives adjourned without making appropriations for the Army, because the Senate would not agree to the limitations which the House proposed to couple with the appropriation. President Pierce convened Congress in extra session three days thereafter.

Thus it will be seen that the republican party signalized its first existence as a majority in this House by forcing an extra session of Congress rather than yield a provision which it had placed upon an appropriation bill to the effect that no part of the money should be used for purposes which the House deemed unjust.

I will refer before I conclude to speeches made at that time by Mr. Wade, Mr. Trumbull, Mr. Fessenden, Mr. Seward, Mr. Joshua R. Giddings, Mr. John P. Hale, Mr. Henry Wilson, and other gentlemen who were conspicuous members of the republican party, some of them in this House and some in the other; all of them sustaining the action of the House holding that these provisions were germane upon an appropriation bill, and that it was the right and duty of the House to maintain its dignity and authority by insisting upon such limitations. Among those speeches was one by the late Vice-President Henry Wilson, in which he took the position that, according to the rules of Parliament, it was the right of the House of Representatives to maintain a similar attitude in reference to appropriation bills; and he quoted at that time an article of Mr. Madison in the Federalist, whose language was not only indorsed by Mr. Wilson, but by Senator Seward and other republicans. It was the accepted doctrine of all the leaders of that party in Congress at that time. I call the especial attention of republicans upon the other side of the House and of the people of the whole country to the following extract from the speech of Mr. Wilson. He said:

These Senators have assumed to veil themselves in the garments of constitutional law and parliamentary authority. I intend to disrobe the honorable Senators. I mean to strip them so naked that the mantle of charity, which is said to cover a multitude of sins, will not hide their nakedness from the public gaze. The action of the House is pronounced unconstitutional by these Senators. Other Senators have repeated the declaration. Will these Senators condescend to inform the Senate what clause of the Constitution the House has violated by putting this proviso in the appropriation bill? Will these Senators point to the violated section or clause?

* * * * * * *

But the House is sustained in this conflict by the authority of James Madison. His capacious mind conceived and his skillful hand framed many of the provisions of the Constitution. If any American statesman among the living or dead ever understood the intentions of the framers of the Constitution or the powers of that instrument, James Madison was that man. He has been fitly designated the father of the Constitution. In No. 58 of the fifth volume of the Federalist Mr. Madison says:

"The House of Representatives can not only refuse, but they alone can propose the supplies requisite for the support of the Government. They, in a word, hold the purse, that powerful instrument by which we behold, in the history of the British constitution, an infant and humble representation of the people gradually enlarging the sphere of its activity and importance, and finally reducing, as far as it seems to have wished, all the overgrown prerogatives of the other branches of the government. This power over the purse may, in fact, be regarded as the most complete and effectual weapon with which any constitution can arm the immediate representatives of the people for obtaining a redress of every grievance, and for carrying into effect every just and salutary measure."

Senator Wilson unqualifiedly indorsed this doctrine of Mr. Madison and the fathers of the Republic, and proceeded at length in sustaining the conduct of the House of Representatives at that time in insisting upon the Sherman proviso. He said:

I submit to every candid mind that the action of the House is fully sustained by this authority of Mr. Madison. "The House of Representatives," says Mr. Madison, "can not only refuse, but they alone can propose the supplies requisite for the support of the Government." This declaration is full, ample, complete. If the House can refuse the supplies requisite for the support of Government, if it possesses this complete and effective weapon for obtaining a redress of every grievance, and for carrying into effect every just and salutary measure, the occasion surely demands the full exercise of that power by the House, and in its firm exercise, to use the words of Madison, it will be sustained by the consciousness of being supported in its demands by right, by reason, and by the Constitution.

* * * * * * *

That Senator went so far the other day as to tell us that the House knew the Senate was opposed to the proviso. Well, sir, supposing the House did know the Senator from Connecticut and his compeers on that side of the Chamber did not relish this proviso, were the members bound to surrender their own judgments to gratify the wishes and meet the exigencies of those Senators? Perhaps it would save a great deal of trouble if the Senate should send down to the House whenever it made a proposition that it would be distasteful to the Senate to send the matter up here. Such a sentiment is better fitted for the senate of Louis Napoleon than for this Chamber. This proviso is revolutionary, unparliamentary, unconstitutional, because the House knew that it was distasteful to the Senate. Sir, such a suggestion as this would excite a smile if uttered by a third-rate county-court lawyer in some justice's court. I dismiss it from this Chamber.—Congressional Globe, volume 32, pages 38, 39.

This was the opinion of the late Vice-President Wilson in 1856, when the cry of "revolution in Congress" was raised against the Sherman proviso.

If gentlemen will read the whole article quoted from the Federalist by Senator Wilson they will be surprised to find that the language of the extract quoted is used with reference to that provision of the Constitution guaranteeing to the States equal representation in the House of Representatives in accordance with population. Mr. Madison, referring to the objection that the smaller States, through their power in the Senate, might refuse to the States of larger population this equal and just representation, said, in substance: "Here is the remedy which the House of Representatives will have." I hold in my hand a volume of the Federalist, published in New York in 1788, at the very time when the Constitution was pending before the people of the United States—published for the purpose of influencing their judgment upon that question. Thus these views sanctioned by James Madison, who is recognized as the "Father of the Constitution," became a part of the understanding of the people in ratifying that instrument. I will not detain the committee by reading, but will ask to have printed as a part of my remarks the following extracts from speeches on the Sherman proviso in 1856 by prominent leaders of the republican party.

Senator Lyman Trumbull, of Illinois, commenting upon the Senate amendment to strike out the Sherman proviso, said:

Now, if the proposed amendment is agreed to, we are to send a bill back to the House of Representatives, and say to its members: Unless you stultify yourselves, unless you admit those laws to be valid which you have said were void, and unless you are willing to appropriate money to be used in the employment of troops to enforce laws which you said were so invalid that they could not lay the foundation for an election of a Delegate from the Territory, the whole Army appropriation bill is to be lost, and the consequences are to be upon the country. I say, sir, if the Senate is prepared to take such a course, it assumes the responsibility and the whole responsibility of the defeat of this appropriation. It comes to us as one bill. I hope, then, if the Senate should concur in the amendment proposed by the Senator from Virginia, that when the House refuses to agree to it better counsels will prevail, and the Senate will recede and acquiesce in this legitimate and proper bill, which comes to it from the proper department of the Government.—Appendix Congressional Globe, Thirty-fourth Congress, page 1093.

Senator Trumbull at another time pending the same question said:

That House has made ample provision for the Army, and the question is simply shall the House of Representatives be coerced into an appropriation of money to enforce laws which have been found to be void, or shall this appropriation bill go unpassed? I say, sir, the responsibility is here, and it cannot be charged that it is adopting a revolutionary measure; but the responsibility is upon the Senate which demands an appropriation of money to enforce bogus laws in Kansas.—Globe, volume 32, page 2231.

Senator William Pitt Fessenden, of Maine, discussed the parliamentary question and held the Sherman proviso to be germane to an appropriation bill. He said:

Are we to be answered by the honorable chairman of the Committee of Finance that such a provision is not germane to the bill? It is perfectly so; nothing could be more so. The Senator is learned in parliamentary history. Does he not know well that in the English Parliament from the earliest times not only have appropriation and revenue bills gone together, but in cases without number it has been the habit of that Parliament to check the power of the Crown by annexing conditions to their appropriations of money? It is not only not a new thing, but a very common thing in the history of all Parliaments. Does he not know that the only mode in which our ancestors of Massachusetts checked the powers of their royal governors was by granting money only on conditions? The power of supply and the power of annexing conditions to supply have always gone together in parliamentary history; and their joint exercise has never been denounced as a case of revolution, or calling for revolution, or tending to produce revolution, in any shape or form whatever.

Sir, it is a power essential to the preservation of our liberties. We do not wish to dissolve this Government; but unless we would destroy it, we must point out the mode in which the money we grant is to be used, or else submit to any use of it that the Commander-in-Chief may choose to select. It is the peculiar prerogative and right of Congress to control the Commander-in-Chief of the Army and to control the Army which they raise. Do gentlemen argue here that our only business is to make the appropriations for the support of the Army, and not question the use that is to be made of them? That we cannot annex any conditions to our grants of money—a power that has always been claimed as essential to freedom from the beginning of English liberty, which we inherit, and from the beginning of legislation in this country? Sir, the idea that we cannot annex conditions of that kind, restraining the power of our military officers, is a notion that, if admitted, would reduce us to worse than colonial bondage. It is the only protection we have, unless we choose to do in fact what the gentleman from Virginia says we must necessarily be considered as doing when we affix any condition of this kind to a grant of money—initiate a revolution.—Appendix Congressional Globe, Thirty-fourth Congress, page 1096.

Senator John P. Hale, of New Hampshire, said:

Mr. President, I understand this principle to be the great principle of English liberty incorporated in our Constitution, and it is the only means by which the Parliament of Great Britain have held the King in check. If we surrender it we shall give our own Executive an arbitrary power unknown to the Constitution, and not vested in the King of England. It is the only principle that is left of popular government by which the supremacy of the popular will can be maintained in this country or in England; and if we give it up to-day we may just as well give up the experiment of this Government.—Congressional Globe, volume 32, part 3, page 2230.

Representative Joshua R. Giddings, of Ohio, said:

And now, sir, I take the position which I have always maintained here for myself, and which I am unwilling in the midst of passing events to leave unproclaimed on this floor, and that is, that the people have a perfect, unlimited control over their own funds. We are the Representatives of the people here. We are their agents, sent here to deal out their funds, and it is not for the Senate or for the Executive to say that we shall appropriate them for any object revolting to the proper sense of justice and propriety. I lay down this as a principle too old and too well understood to be disputed at this day.

More than six centuries since, as early as June 15, 1215, at the field of Runnymede, it was extorted at the point of the sword from King John, and the British people have from that day maintained their dignity and their rights, and the British sovereign whenever he has negotiated a treaty with any nation approaches the Commons in the language of dependence, acknowledging the prerogatives of the people. It is an historical fact that the Crown of England approaches the Commons saying: "We lay this treaty before you that you may judge of the propriety of making an appropriation to carry it into effect.—Congressional Globe, 1856, page 2196.

Senator Benjamin F. Wade, of Ohio, said:

The House of Representatives have put this provision in their bill. No doubt it is proximate, it is legitimate, it is germane to the subject, when they appropriate money, to say how it shall be applied and how it shall not be applied.

* * * * * * *

What use is there in having a House of Representatives if you sit here to dictate on what principle they shall grant money; if they must swallow your views whole or be guilty of revolution, what becomes of your Constitution? I ask, Mr. President, has it come to this that the House of Representatives is so imbecile under the Constitution that you must set yourselves up here as the arbiters of all things and dictate to them precisely what provisions their appropriation bills shall contain, and if they do not favor your fancies you will defeat the most solemn appropriation bill that can be framed. You are willing to go to the people on this issue; so am I. I glory in taking it to the people.—Congressional Globe, volume 32, page 14.

* * * * * * *

The Senator from Virginia tells us that if the House attempt to interpose a condition to an appropriation bill which they make, it is revolution. Well, sir, if to resist in any way measures like these is revolution, I say let revolution come. The pride of the American people, the principles of the American Government, demand revolution, if that be revolution. But is it revolution, Mr. President? Must the people's House of Representatives sit with their arms folded, and although the Constitution of the United States confers emphatically upon them the power to originate all revenue bills, (which comprises the power to place these grants of money on such condition as they see fit,) must they refrain from exercising their authority in an emergency like this? Is this the liberty of the American citizen, that the people's House, where there really is a representation of the people, where the wisdom of the fathers placed the taxing power, are leading to revolution by annexing a condition to the appropriation of the people's money—a most wholesome restraint, putting a curb in the mouth of the traitor who sits in the executive chair, now stimulating this country, as fast as he can do it, to civil war?

* * * * * *

I repeat, I am sorry to see at this time, with all the light which we have on the subject, a disposition to resist the will of the people's representatives, when that will is nothing under heaven but what meets the approbation of every just and unbiased man.

* * * * * * *

I say the House of Representatives have done right. They have inserted no provision in this bill but what may be defended now and hereafter, before any just earthly tribunal, and before the Almighty God. There is not a single article in the proviso proposed to be stricken out which does not meet the approbation of every just and unprejudiced man. The House of Representatives, representing a vast majority of the people, in view of these enormities, endeavoring to put some slight, though I admit inadequate, check on them, have offered you this mild and equitable restraint on the Executive. Here we are told it is revolutionary, and therefore we must not breathe the breath of life into their action, but must permit it to go back to the House with our appeal to the House to recede. Sir, I do not know but that you may succeed under the idea that this is revolution; but, so help me God! I hope that the man who proposes to recede a hair's breadth from the action of the House will never find his way back again; and I do not believe he will.—Globe, Appendix, Thirty-fourth Congress, page 1091.

Senator William H. Seward, of New York, said:

The time was, and that not long ago, when a proposition to employ the standing Army of the United States as a domestic police would have been universally denounced as a premature revelation of a plot, darkly contrived in the chambers of conspiracy, to subvert the liberties of the people and to overthrow the Republic itself. The Republic stands upon a fundamental principle, that the people, in the exercise of equal rights, will establish only just and equal laws, and that their own free and enlightened public opinion is the only legitimate reliance for the maintenance and execution of such laws. This principle is not even peculiar to ourselves—it lies at the foundation of the government of every free people on earth.

It is public opinion, not the imperial army, that executes the laws of the realm in England, Scotland, and Ireland. Whenever France is free, it is public opinion that executes the laws of her republican legislature. It is public opinion that executes the laws in all the cantons of Switzerland. The British constitution is quite as jealous of standing armies as a police as our own. Government there, indeed, maintains standing armies, as it does a great naval force; but it employs the one as it does the other, exclusively for defense or for conquest against foreign States. Fearful lest the armed powers of the State might be turned against the people to enforce obnoxious edicts or statutes, the British constitution forbids that any regular army whatever shall be tolerated on any pretense. The considerable military force which is maintained in different and distant parts of the Empire only exists by a suspension of that part of the constitution, which suspension is renewed by Parliament from year to year and never for more than one year at a time. Civil liberty and a standing army for the purposes of civil police have never yet stood together and never can stand together. If I am to choose, sir, between upholding laws in any part of this Republic which cannot be maintained without a standing army, or relinquishing the laws themselves, I give up the laws at once, by whomsoever they are made and by whatever authority; for either our system of government is radically wrong, or such laws are unjust, unequal, and pernicious.—Appendix to Globe, Thirty-fourth Congress, p. 1108.

* * * * * * *

If the founders of the Constitution had been told that within seventy years from the day on which they laid its solid foundations and raised its majestic columns a standing army would have been found necessary and indispensable merely to execute municipal laws, they would have turned shuddering away from the massive despotism which they had erected.—Ib., page 1111.

* * * * * * *

Since the House of Representatives has power to pass such a bill distinctly, it has power, also, to place an equivalent prohibition in any bill which it has constitutional power to pass. And so it has a constitutional right to place the prohibition in the annual Army appropriation bill. I grant that this mode of reaching the object proposed is in some respects an unusual one, and in some respects an inconvenient one. It is not, therefore, however, an unconstitutional one, or even necessarily a wrong one. It is a right one, if it is necessary to effect the object desired, and if that object is one that is in itself just, and eminently important to the peace and happiness of the country or to the security of the liberties of the people. The House of Representatives, moreover, is entitled to judge and determine for itself, whether the proceeding is thus necessary, and whether the object of it is thus important.—Appendix, Globe, Thirty-fourth Congress, page 1107.

What next? You come back to argument. You assert that the course of the House of Representatives in insisting upon this proviso is unconstitutional and revolutionary. My excellent friend from Massachusetts, in his very able speech, has given you the authority of the Federalist for the very power which the House of Representatives is thus exercising.—Congressional Globe, volume 32, page 50.

I commend these extracts from the speeches of the fathers of the republican party to those who are now proclaiming "revolution in Congress," because this House is now doing what was so laudable and patriotic in 1856.

POWER OF CONGRESS OVER ELECTIONS.

I will pass to another subject, namely, the power of Congress over the elections of Representatives. Section 4 of the the first article of the Constitution is as follows:

The times, places, and manner of holding elections for Senators and Representatives shall be prescribed in each State by the Legislature thereof; but Congress may at any time by law make or alter such regulations, except as to the places of choosing Senators.

This provision should be construed in connection with the first clause of section 3 of article 1, which is as follows:

The Senate of the United States shall be composed of two Senators from each State, chosen by the Legislature thereof, for six years; and each Senator shall have one vote.

Let us analyze these two provisions with reference to the power of Congress over the elections of Senators and Representatives.

The Constitution clearly recognizes the following provisions on the subject:

First. United States Senators shall be chosen by the Legislatures of the States.

Second. The times, places, and manner of holding elections for Senators shall be prescribed in each State by the Legislature thereof.

Third. Congress may at any time by law make regulations, or alter State regulations, prescribing the times and manner of holding elections for Senators.

Fourth. The times, places, and manner of holding elections for Representatives shall be prescribed in each State by the Legislature thereof.

Fifth. Congress may at any time by law make regulations, or alter State regulations, prescribing the times, places, and manner of holding elections for Representatives.

The Constitution of the United States is remarkable for the precision of its language. Hence I have sought to make the provisions in reference to the elections of Senators and Representatives a little more clear by setting forth each power recognized by the Constitution in a separate proposition. Each of these five propositions can stand by itself, and each recognizes a distinct and independent constitutional power or requirement. As to Senators, the choosing function is lodged in the Legislatures of the States, and the times, places and manner of electing Senators shall be prescribed in each State by the Legislature thereof. But Congress may at any time prescribe the times such elections shall take place, and the manner of holding the elections. As the senatorial elections must be by the Legislatures of the States, Congress cannot, in the very nature of the case, prescribe any regulations as to the manner of holding the election, which would authorize agents of the Government to supervise the election or to personally inspect and scrutinize the manner in which the voting was done, or to enter the legislative halls while the elections were progressing, or to challenge the right of any member of the Legislature to vote, or to count the votes when cast and attach certificates to the records of the Legislature. But Congress may fix the times, and may prescribe any regulations as to the manner, of holding the elections of Senators, which are self-executing—such, for instance, as that the voting shall be by ballot or viva voce, by separate houses or in joint convention. Congress has already gone to the very extent of its power on this subject by passing the act of July 25, 1866, the provisions of which are printed in the Revised Statutes, sections 14 to 19 inclusive. This act prescribes the times and manner of holding the elections for United States Senator. But the law sends no Government agents there to supervise the election or scrutinize the methods employed, or to challenge the votes of members, or to count the votes cast for Senators. The body to elect being a State agency, no Government agents can interfere with it. The gentleman from New Jersey, [Mr. ROBESON,] in his remarks in this House on the 23d instant, referring to this subject, said:

We have adopted the Legislature of that State as such, and we cannot by the Constitution so interfere with it as to destroy its character as a Legislature. We have adopted an organized body, an organized machine, full armed and equipped with all its functions.

But the gentleman was even more specific than this. I will read from the RECORD a question put to him by the gentleman from Alabama, and his answer thereto:

Mr. SAMFORD. Does the gentleman then concede that Congress has no power to send deputy marshals and supervisors into a State Legislature?

Mr. ROBESON. I concede that the Congress of the United States has no power to send supervisors into the Legislatures of the various States. I say the Constitution has adopted the Legislature of the State, and Congress cannot appoint new officers for it.

And further, in answer to a question put to him by the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. CARLISLE,] the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. ROBESON] said:

I especially deny and disclaim the right of the United States to appoint officers of that Legislature who shall take part in its deliberations and actions. I expressly disclaim and deny the power of the United States to look to the qualifications of the members of that Legislature or to decide whether they are proper members of the Legislature or not. I say that by the Constitution we have accepted it as the State Legislature, and every member of it might be false and fraudulent, yet we would have no power to control it. But when that Legislature is organized, and acts, I say that no outside authority, neither individual nor the power of citizens, nor the power of a State, has the right to interfere with it, and that the United States, if need be, with all its power should protect and defend it in the exercise of its functions.

We can doubtless all agree as to the soundness of this conclusion. Congress cannot interfere with the Legislatures in their elections of United States Senators. The protection referred to by the honorable gentleman is doubtless that which is provided in the fourth section of the fourth article of the Constitution, and not that which the Army afforded, without invitation, the Legislature of Louisiana in January, 1875.

ELECTIONS OF REPRESENTATIVES.

While we may all agree as to the powers of Congress over the elections of United States Senators, there has been the widest diversity of opinion on the subject of the elections of Representatives in Congress. It seems to me that we all might get much closer together on this question if we would take the letter and spirit of the Federal Constitution for our guide instead of consulting our own wishes or our party necessities.

I will restate the constitutional provisions on this subject as I have already analyzed them:

Fourth. The times, places, and manner of holding elections for Representatives shall be prescribed in each State by the Legislature thereof.

Fifth. Congress may at any time by law make regulations or alter State regulations prescribing the times, places, and manner of holding elections for Representatives.

The only difference in the force of the language of the two provisions is this: the State Legislatures "shall," the Congress "may," prescribe the regulations. It is universally conceded that the States are required by the Constitution to prescribe the times, places, and manner of holding elections for Representatives in Congress. That power of the States is complete, and the terms used—"times," "places," "manner"—cover the whole subject, everything necessary to be done in order to bring a private citizen from his home in the State and seat him here as a Representative on this floor. Whether this power is conferred upon the States or reserved by the States is immaterial. The power is expressly set forth in the Constitution, and under it the States may exercise all legislative powers necessary to carry into effect the constitutional provision. But while this is true, it is equally true that Congress may at any time by law exercise precisely the same power—that is, Congress may at any time by law prescribe the times, places, and manner of holding elections for Representatives in Congress.

I concede the power of Congress over the subject to be as full, perfect, and complete as the power of the States. If Congress in its wisdom sees fit to assume this power, it may prescribe the times, places, and manner of holding elections for Representatives and appoint its own agents for executing its provisions and for carrying its laws into complete effect.

I concede further the fact that the Constitution and the laws of the United States which shall be made in pursuance thereof shall be the supreme law of the land, and that the judges in every State shall be bound thereby, anything in the constitution or laws of any State to the contrary notwithstanding. The laws which Congress may pass in pursuance of the Constitution will override and supersede all State laws on the subject.

And while considering this provision of the Constitution I will ask the careful attention of members to the articles in the Federalist on the subject. I read from the fifty-ninth article, written by Alexander Hamilton:

> The natural order of the subject leads us to consider, in the first place, that provision of the Constitution which authorizes the National Legislature to regulate in the last resort the election of its own members.
>
> It is in these words: "The times, places, and manner of holding elections for Senators and Representatives shall be prescribed in each State by the Legislature thereof; but the Congress may at any time by law make or alter such regulations, except as to the places of choosing Senators."
>
> * * * * * * *
>
> I am greatly mistaken, notwithstanding, if there be any article in the whole plan more completely defensible than this. Its propriety rests upon the evidence of this proposition, that every government ought to contain in itself the means of its own preservation.
>
> * * * * * * *
>
> It will not be alleged that an election law could have been framed and inserted in the Constitution, which would have been applicable to every probable change in the situation of the country; and it will therefore not be denied that a discretionary power over elections ought to exist somewhere.
>
> It will, I presume, be as readily conceded that there were only three ways in which this power could have been reasonably organized: that it must either have been lodged wholly in the National Legislature or wholly in the State Legislatures, or primarily in the latter, and ultimately in the former. The last mode has, with reason, been preferred by the convention. They have submitted the regulation of elections for the Federal Government, in the first instance, to the local administrations, which, in ordinary cases, and where no improper views prevail, may be both more convenient and more satisfactory; but they have reserved to the national authority a right to interpose whenever extraordinary circumstances might render that interposition necessary to its safety.
>
> Nothing can be more evident than that an exclusive power of regulating elections for the National Government, in the hands of the State Legislatures, would leave the existence of the Union entirely at their mercy. They could at any moment annihilate it by neglecting to provide for the choice of persons to administer its affairs.

Mr. Hamilton, who wrote these provisions, and Mr. Madison, who is recognized as the father of the Constitution, are equally responsible for the articles in the Federalist. The articles all appeared, in the first instance, under the same nom de plume of "Publius," and were published in newspapers pending the adoption of the Constitution in order to influence the decision of the people on the question of its ratification or rejection. These two great expounders of the Constitution are universally recognized as the highest authority on questions of constitutional construction. And when it is conceded that the power reserved to Congress to make at any time regulations as to the times, places, and manner of holding elections for Representatives was so reserved for the manifest reason that the Federal Government should have within its own control sufficient power to secure its own preservation, it follows that the reserved power was ample for that purpose. The power reserved in the General Government, then, is ample to preserve the existence of this House without any assistance, co-operation, or agency of the State governments. If that be not true, the authors of the Constitution did not understand the meaning of the language they employed, and the people who ratified it did so under a misapprehension of its meaning.

When may Congress exercise its reserved power to make regulations as to the times, places, and manner of holding elections of Representatives? I answer in the language of Mr. Hamilton:

> Whenever extraordinary circumstances might render that interposition neces sary to its safety.—Federalist, No. 59.

Congress may "at any time" make the regulations, and Congress alone must judge of the necessity or propriety of assuming its power over the subject. Congress has already assumed and exercised its reserved power as to the time of holding elections for Representatives, and has fixed with certain exceptions the day, to wit, the Tuesday after the first Monday in November every second year. No one has denied the power of Congress to fix that day and require all the States to comply with it; and an election held upon any other day than that prescribed by Congress would be absolutely void. The power to regulate the manner of holding the election is equally broad and complete. But when ought Congress to exercise its reserved power to regulate the manner of holding elections for Representatives? The letter and spirit of the Constitution evidently contemplated that the States would be left to exercise this important function, and for seventy-five years they did exercise it without question. Mr. Hamilton, in the fifty-ninth article of the Federalist, quoted above, says upon this subject:

> They [the framers of the Constitution] have submitted the regulation of elections for the Federal Government in the first instance to the local administrations, which in ordinary cases, and when no improper views prevail, may be both more convenient and more satisfactory.

And further, the power—

> Must either have been lodged wholly in the National Legislature or wholly in the State Legislatures, or primarily in the latter and ultimately in the former. The last mode has with reason been preferred by the convention.

Mark the language of this important statement: primarily in the States, but ultimately in the General Government—not to be exercised by both at the same time, but primarily in the one and ultimately in the other. The power to pass a law implies the power to provide for its enforcement. A law may be self-executing, or such that its operation does not require personal agents to carry it into effect; such, for instance, as a law prescribing the time of holding an election. Or a law may require agents or officials to enforce it, as for example regulations as to the registration of voters, the receiving and counting of the ballots, and the making out of the certificates or returns of the election. Congress may pass laws making regulations as to the manner of holding elections for Representatives which are self-executing, and leave the States to make all such regulations as require personal agents or officials to carry the provisions into effect, without producing confusion or collision. But as long as State Legislatures are required to prescribe regulations which require personal agents or officials to carry them into effect, the power of the State is complete over such regulations and over the agents or officers who execute them. It is an axiom in natural philosophy that "two substances cannot occupy the same place at the same time." It is equally axiomatic that two legislative jurisdictions cannot take effect upon the same subject-matter and the same persons at the same time. Two courts may have jurisdiction of the same subject-matter and the same parties, but cannot exercise it at the same time: as, for instance, a State court has jurisdiction to naturalize foreign-born persons, to try suits in which a citizen of one State is plaintiff and a citizen of another is defendant, and to try persons for counterfeiting the money of the United States.

A United States court in the same district has also jurisdiction of such cases, but both courts cannot try the same case at the same time. While the State court is exercising the jurisdiction, the Federal court and the Federal Government and all its agents and officials must refrain from any supervision, scrutiny, or interference whatever with the proceedings; and vice versa. The proceedings of the State court can only be reviewed on appeal or by writ of error to the supreme court of the State. And the decision of the State supreme court is final, unless some law of Congress or the Constitution of the United States is in question, and then error may be prosecuted to the Supreme Court of the United States. This doctrine is in no way affected or modified by the provision for transferring certain cases from State courts to Federal courts before trial. While a State court is trying a person for counterfeiting United States coins or notes, or a civil suit between citizens of different States, or hearing the application of a foreigner to be admitted to citizenship, it is exercising a jurisdiction concurrent with the Federal jurisdiction. But while a State court is authorized to hear an application for admission to citizenship, the right of determining the question is in that court, and, as no appeal from the judgment of the court is provided for, the decision of admission is final, and the certificate of naturalization is a record of the court and entitled to full faith and credit in every other State. Will it be claimed that because Congress may, if it sees fit, deprive State courts of jurisdiction in matters of naturalization, it may also, while the court is authorized to exercise the jurisdiction, send a United States supervisor or marshal into a State court to supervise and scrutinize the proceedings, to take a position beside the judge, to interrogate the witnesses, and finally to deny the right of the court to admit the party to naturalization and to the rights of citizenship? Such an absurd claim has never been asserted, and never will be.

It would be just as unconstitutional for the General Government to attempt to send agents, supervisors, or marshals into a State Legislature to supervise, scrutinize, and count the votes cast for United States Senators, and make out certificates and enter them of record on the journals of the Legislature. It makes no difference that the State Legislature has the exclusive power of choosing the Senators. The State court has, when exercising jurisdiction as to naturalization, the right to exercise that jurisdiction in its own way, according to its own understanding of the law, and free from all advice, interference, or outside supervision or scrutiny of any kind whatever. So with the judges of elections, acting under State law and receiving their appointment and deriving their jurisdiction from State laws. The three election judges in Illinois, for instance, constitute an organized body—a court of certain jurisdiction, limited it is true, but complete as to the subjects committed to it. They may administer oaths and determine, by a majority vote, all questions of law and fact which may arise as to the qualifications of any person offering to vote. They have clerks to record their proceedings. They must count, certify, and return the votes cast, and do and perform all other acts and things necessary to complete the receiving, counting, and returning of the votes cast.

The gentleman from New Jersey, [Mr. ROBESON,] as I have already shown, concedes that the Congress of the United States has no power to send supervisors into the Legislatures of the States when those Legislatures are engaged in the work of electing Senators, for the reason that, by the Federal Constitution, we have adopted the Legislature of the State as a whole, and it "must act according to its constitution as a Legislature." He further said: "Every member of it might be false and fraudulent, yet we would have no power to control it." For myself I cannot see the difference between the right of a court, of a Legislature, or of a board of election judges to perform their legitimate functions in their own way, free from all "outside authority." The one is as completely an organized body as the others. If the laws of Congress or the Constitution of the United States adopt either of them to perform for the Federal Government a particular function, or exercise a particular jurisdiction, the body adopted must perform its duties in its own way, according to its own rules and judgment, and under the laws creating their offices and defining their powers.

The judges of an election are State officers. In the State of Illinois they take the following oath before entering upon the discharge of their duties:

I do solemnly swear that I will support the Constitution of the United States and the constitution of the State of Illinois, and that I will faithfully discharge the duties of the office of judge of election, according to the best of my ability.

Their duties are clearly laid down in the State laws, and these are the duties they take an oath faithfully to perform. Under the laws of the State of Illinois, all ballots are numbered with a number corresponding with the number of the voter on the poll list. But it is made a misdemeanor, punishable by fine of $1,000 and imprisonment for one year, for any judge or clerk of election to ascertain, by comparison of the poll-book with the ballot, or allow any other person to ascertain by such comparison or otherwise, how any elector voted at the election. By section 2018 of the Revised Statutes of the United States it is made the duty of United States supervisors of election "to personally scrutinize, count, and canvass each ballot in their election district or voting precinct cast, whatever may be the indorsement on the ballot," and by the preceding section they may inspect the "poll-books, registry lists, and other tallies or check-books." And by section 5522 of the Revised Statutes of the United States it is enacted as follows:

Every person, whether with or without any authority, power, or process, or pretended authority, power, or process, of any State, Territory, or municipality, who obstructs, hinders, assaults, or by bribery, solicitation, or otherwise, interferes with or prevents the supervisors of election, or either of them, or the marshal or his general or special deputies, or either of them, in the performance of any duty required of them, or either of them, or which he or they, or either of them, may be authorized to perform by any law of the United States, in the execution of process or otherwise, or who by any of the means before mentioned hinders or prevents the free attendance and presence at such places of registration or at such polls of election, or full and free access and egress to and from any such place of registration or poll of election, or in going to and from any such place of registration or poll of election, or to and from any room, where any such registration or election or canvass of votes, or of making any returns or certificates thereof, may be had, or who molests, interferes with, removes, or ejects from any such place of registration or poll of election, or of canvassing votes cast thereat, or of making returns or certificates thereof, any supervisor of election, the marshal, or his general or special deputies, or either of them; or who threatens, or attempts, or offers so to do, or refuses or neglects to aid and assist any supervisor of election, or the marshal or his general or special deputies, or either of them, in the performance of his or their duties, when required by him or them, or either of them, to give such aid and assistance, shall be liable to instant arrest without process, and shall be punished by imprisonment not more than two years, or by a fine of not more than $3,000, or by both such fine and imprisonment, and shall pay the cost of the prosecution.

This is one of the sections which we propose to repeal by the pending bill. In view of this sweeping provision and sections 2017 and 2018 which authorize the supervisors of elections to scrutinize the poll lists and the indorsements on each ballot, and the law of Illinois which inflicts severe penalties upon an election judge of the State who permits this to be done, what is the unfortunate official sworn to faithfully perform his duties to do in the premises? If he executes the State law and refuses the inspection, he is "liable to instant arrest without process," and to a fine of $3,000 and imprisonment for two years, and if he violates the State statute and permits the inspection, he is liable to a fine of a thousand dollars and to one year in the county jail. But this is not all. By the laws of Illinois, the judges are required to admit certain specified persons to the room where the election is held, and no others. Yet the law of Congress makes it unlawful to exclude the United States supervisors of election. The State judges are authorized to pass upon the qualifications of every person offering to vote, to prevent illegal or fraudulent votes from being cast, &c. But by section 2022 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, it is made the duty of the marshal and his deputies "to prevent fraudulent voting or fraudulent conduct on the part of any officer of election," and immediately, either before or after voting, "to arrest and take into custody, with or without process, any person who commits or attempts or offers to commit any of the acts or offenses prohibited herein," &c. If the State judges of election should decide to permit any person to vote, whose vote the marshal or his deputies might, in their wisdom, regard as fraudulent, or if they should do anything which these marshals might regard as "fraudulent conduct," an offense capable of indefinite expansion or contraction, according to the partisan zeal of the marshal, the judges would be liable to instant arrest without process. Upon the slightest pretext the State officials might be dragged from their places, and a mob of partisans, headed by United States marshals and their deputies, could take possession of the polls and make the further holding of the election an impossibility—all under the color of a law of Congress. Is it possible that such a law can be passed in pursuance of the Constitution? Have our fathers transmitted to us as a sacred legacy a fundamental law which permits such outrageous usurpation? I do not believe it.

The States are now required to provide election blanks, to pay for making out registry lists, to post notices of the elections, to furnish ballot-boxes, to pay the salaries of the judges and clerks of the election, and to provide suitable rooms in which the elections may be held. The blanks, ballot-boxes, and rooms are procured by the States at their own expense, and for the accommodation of their own officials. It has been heretofore universally understood that whatever person or corporation or body-politic purchased and paid for, belonged to such person and could be used and controlled accordingly. But that principle is now openly disregarded by the Federal election laws. The States are now required to rent rooms, purchase ballot-boxes and election blanks, and pay all the expenses thereof, and United States supervisors are authorized to make indorsements on the State's blanks and certificates, to remain with the State's ballot-boxes, exercising a joint custody over them, and to enter the room rented and provided by the State, and "there remain until every duty in respect to such canvass, certificates, returns, and statements has been wholly completed." It is strange that this arbitrary power did not go a little further, and require the States to furnish the United States supervisors and marshals suitable rations and sleeping accommodations.

We submit this plain question to the honest judgment of gentlemen on the other side of the House: Can two jurisdictions be made to operate upon the holding of the same election at the same time? Is not this as absurd as to subject a person to trial for the same offense in two different courts at the same time? One court might sentence the prisoner to imprisonment for life, and the other to be hanged.

If jurisdiction to hold an election for Representatives in Congress be derived from State laws, passed in pursuance of the Constitution of the United States, it is exclusively, over that particular election, in the State officers conducting it. But if such election is held in pursuance of Federal laws, passed in pursuance of the Constitution, the jurisdiction is exclusively in the Federal officers, so far as the holding of the election is concerned. The holding of an election is a judicial function, as well as ministerial. Two sets of officials, deriving their powers from separate legislative jurisdictions, cannot be required to perform the same official duties in respect to the same subject-matter at the same time and in the same place. Nor can one legislative jurisdiction or law-making power require the agents or officials of another law-making power to execute its laws when such laws may conflict with the laws of the other. No man can serve two masters.

UNDER WHOSE PROTECTION ARE THE VOTERS?

When a Legislature is engaged in the duty of electing United States Senators, the members in going to and returning from the Legislature are under the protection of the State constitution and laws. If their deliberations are threatened by domestic violence, they may call upon the President of the United States to protect them. If they are dispersed by a mob and cannot assemble, it would be the duty of the governor of the State to call on the President of the United States for aid, and it would be the duty of the President to respond with all available forces at his command.

If a State court is engaged in trying a person for the crime of counterfeiting, or in the business of hearing applications for naturalization, or in any other official duty, the witnesses and jurors must look to the court for protection in going to, remaining at, and returning from the court, and parties litigant must be protected in the presence of the court, by the court. This is true, although the State court is exercising a jurisdiction derived from the Federal laws as well as from the State. So in regard to the matter of holding an election for Representatives in Congress. If the officials holding the election are the officers of the State, acting in pursuance of State statutes, and deriving all their powers from the State, it is the duty of the State to protect such officers, and all persons who may be entitled to vote at such election, in going to, remaining at, and returning from the same. But if Congress should at any time by law make regulations for holding elections for Representatives in Congress, and appoint its officers for conducting the same, then and in such case, the United States would assume the duty and obligation of protecting its officers while holding the election, and all persons who were entitled to vote, in coming to, remaining at, and returning from the same. In this way alone can collisions and conflicting jurisdictions be prevented.

The Creator of the Universe has so ordained his laws that no two stars will ever, under any circumstances, chance to meet at the same point in space. Otherwise the whole solar system would be a failure, and the earth and the stars might at any time come into collision. There must be harmony in the laws of man as well as in those of the Creator. Richard Hooker, nearly three hundred years ago, discovered this truth. He said: "Of law there can be no less acknowledged than that her seat is in the bosom of God—her voice the harmony of the world." When our fathers made the Constitution of the United States they conceived the great truth that there could be two governments in this country—one State and the other Federal—an imperium in imperio, each having its appropriate sphere, each sovereign in its own powers, and the rights, powers, and jurisdiction of each so carefully defined that their working together could be as harmonious and as free from collision and conflict as the movements of the earth and stars in space. The statesmen of the Old World do not understand this Federal and State system of government. And I am sorry that so many of our own citizens fail to see, or seeing refuse to recognize, the peculiar features of our dual system. If we will carefully examine the Constitution of the United States we will find it to be, if not the perfection of human wisdom, at least the best system of government ever devised by the wisdom of men. It has survived the vicissitudes of nearly a century of time; it has proven itself equally strong and effectual in peace and in war; it has the undoubted power of self-preservation; it may exercise all its functions without encroaching upon the rights of the States or infringing upon the liberties of the people.

But I must pass on. I concur, Mr. Chairman, with much of the speech of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. ROBESON] delivered a few days ago on this subject. I put this question to him now, "Are these laws which have been passed, known as the Federal election laws, constitutional? Does he hold them to be constitutional? Does he hold them to be made in pursuance of the power of Congress to prescribe regulations as to "the times, places, and manner of holding elections?" He nods assent. He does hold them to be constitutional. I am glad the gentleman has given his opinion. I am only sorry he was not a member of the last House at the last session when the Dean-Field case was before the House. The minority of the committee, represented by four gentlemen on the other side, held that this law was not made in pursuance of that authority, but was made in pursance of the authority to enforce the rights of citizens of the United States to vote in the several States of the Union.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. SPRINGER. I hope I may be allowed to continue for a moment longer.

Mr. PHISTER. I hope the gentleman will be permitted to conclude his speech as he very seldom occupies the floor.

Mr. EWING. I will yield the gentleman one minute of my time.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask that the time I may consume shall not be counted out of the time of the gentleman from Ohio. If it is I will not consume further time.

Mr. GARFIELD. Does this extend the time when the debate is to be closed?

Mr. BREWER. I object to extending the time.

Mr. SPRINGER. I will take the minute allowed me by the gentleman from Ohio. It appeared in the contested-election case of Dean against Field that two supervisors at each voting place—twenty in all—appointed under the authority of Congress had shown by their report that Mr. Dean, a democrat, was elected; but when that report came before us as part of the facts in the contested-election case, every republican on that side of the House refused to give any weight to the supervisors' count and instead took the count of three aldermen made at night-time three days after the election when no supervisors were present to supervise the count. Was that right? I ask the gentleman from New Jersey whether it was. I do not think he believes it was.

I promised to answer a question put to me by the gentleman from Maine a few days ago when I was in the chair as chairman of the Committee of the Whole on the Army bill, but my time will not now permit. I will merely say that the marshals under the statutes of the United States have all the powers that sheriffs have in the States and no more.

FEDERAL ELECTION LAWS LEFT IN FORCE.

It has been frequently stated that should the pending bill pass, all laws of Congress for protecting voters and punishing frauds at elections would be repealed. No greater mistake could be made. In order to completely refute this statement I will ask to have printed as a part of my remarks the election laws of the United States as they will stand if the repealing measures are passed. They are as follows:

TITLE XXVI.

THE ELECTIVE FRANCHISE.

SEC. 2002. No military or naval officer, or other person engaged in the civil, military, or naval service of the United States, shall order, bring, keep, or have under his authority or control, any troops or armed men at the place where any general or special election is held in any State, unless it be necessary to repel the armed enemies of the United States.

SEC. 2003. No officer of the Army or Navy of the United States shall prescribe or fix, or attempt to prescribe or fix, by proclamation, order, or otherwise, the qualification of voters in any State, or in any manner interfere with the freedom of any election in any State, or with the exercise of the free right of suffrage in any State. (See sections 5530–5532.)

SEC. 2004. All citizens of the United States who are otherwise qualified by law to vote at any election by the people in any State, Territory, district, county, city, parish, township, school district, municipality, or other territorial subdivision, shall be entitled and allowed to vote at all such elections, without distinction of race, color, or previous condition of servitude; any constitution, law, custom, usage, or regulation of any State or Territory, or by or under its authority, to the contrary notwithstanding.

SEC. 2005. When, under the authority of the constitution or laws of any State, or the laws of any Territory, any act is required to be done as a prerequisite or qualification for voting, and by such constitution or laws persons or officers are charged with the duty of furnishing to citizens an opportunity to perform such prerequisite, or to become qualified to vote, every such person and officer shall give to all citizens of the United States the same and equal opportunity to perform such prerequisite, and to become qualified to vote.

SEC. 2006. Every person or officer charged with the duty specified in the preceding section, who refuses or knowingly omits to give full effect to that section, shall forfeit the sum of $500 to the party aggrieved by such refusal or omission, to be recovered by an action on the case, with costs, and such allowance for counsel fees as the court may deem just.

SEC. 2007. Whenever under the authority of the constitution or laws of any State, or the laws of any Territory, any act is required to be done by a citizen as a prerequisite to qualify or entitle him to vote, the offer of such citizen to perform the act required to be done shall, if it fail to be carried into execution by reason of the wrongful act or omission of the person or officer charged with the duty of receiving or permitting such performance or offer to perform, or acting thereon, be deemed and held as a performance in law of such act; and the person so offering and failing to vote, and being otherwise qualified, shall be entitled to vote in the same manner and to the same extent as if he had in fact performed such act.

SEC. 2008. Every judge, inspector, or other officer of election whose duty it is to receive, count, certify, register, report, or give effect to the vote of such citizen, who wrongfully refuses or omits to receive, count, certify, register, report, or give effect to the vote of such citizen upon the presentation by him of his affidavit, stating such offer and the time and place thereof, and the name of the officer or person whose duty it was to act thereon, and that he was wrongfully prevented by such person or officer from performing such act, shall forfeit the sum of $500 to the party aggrieved by such refusal or omission, to be recovered by an action on the case, with costs, and such allowance for counsel fees as the court may deem just.

SEC. 2009. Every officer or other person, having powers or duties of an official character to discharge under any of the provisions of this title, who by threats, or any unlawful means, hinders, delays, prevents, or obstructs, or combines and confederates with others to hinder, delay, prevent, or obstruct any citizen from doing any act required to be done to qualify him to vote, or from voting at any election in any State, Territory, district, county, city, parish, township, school district, municipality, or other territorial subdivision, shall forfeit the sum of $500 to the person aggrieved thereby, to be recovered by an action on the case, with costs, and such allowance for counsel fees as the court may deem just.

SEC. 2010. Whenever any person is defeated or deprived of his election to any office, except elector of President or Vice-President, Representative or Delegate in Congress, or member of a State Legislature, by reason of the denial to any citizen who may offer to vote, of the right to vote, on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude, his right to hold and enjoy such office and the emoluments thereof, shall not be impaired by such denial; and the person so defeated or deprived may bring any appropriate suit or proceeding to recover possession of such office, and in cases where it appears that the sole question touching the title to such office arises out of the denial of the right to vote to citizens who so offered to vote, on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude, such suit or proceeding may be instituted in the circuit or district court of the United States of the circuit or district in which such person resides. And the circuit or district court shall have, concurrently with the State courts, jurisdiction thereof, so far as to determine the rights of the parties to such office by reason of the denial of the right guaranteed by the fifteenth article of amendment to the Constitution of the United States, and secured herein.

SEC. 2011. Whenever, in any city or town having upward of twenty thousand inhabitants, there are two citizens thereof, or whenever, in any county or parish, in any congressional district, there are ten citizens thereof, of good standing, who, prior to any registration of voters for an election for Representative or Delegate in the Congress of the United States, or prior to any election at which a Representative or Delegate in Congress is to be voted for, may make known, in writing, to the judge of the circuit court of the United States for the circuit wherein such city or town, county or parish, is situated, their desire to have such registration, or such election, or both, guarded and scrutinized, the judge, within not less than ten days prior to the registration, if one there be, or, if no registration be required, within not less than ten days prior to the election, shall open the circuit court at the most convenient point in the circuit.

SEC. 2012. The court, when so opened by the judge, shall proceed to appoint and commission, from day to day and from time to time, and under the hand of the judge, and under the seal of the court, for each election district or voting precinct in such city or town, or for such election district or voting precinct in the congressional district, as may have applied in the manner hereinbefore prescribed, and to revoke, change, or renew such appointment from time to time, two citizens, residents of the city or town, or of the election district or voting precinct in the county or parish, who shall be of different political parties, and able to read and write the English language, and who shall be known and designated as supervisors of election.

SEC. 2013. The circuit court, when opened by the judge as required in the two preceding sections, shall therefrom and thereafter, and up to and including the day following the day of election, be always open for the transaction of business under this title, and the powers and jurisdiction hereby granted and conferred shall be exercised as well in vacation as in term time; and a judge sitting at chambers shall have the same powers and jurisdiction, including the power of keeping order and of punishing any contempt of his authority, as when sitting in court.

SEC. 2014. Whenever, from any cause, the judge of the circuit court in any judicial circuit is unable to perform and discharge the duties herein imposed, he is required to select and assign to the performance thereof, in his place, such one of the judges of the district courts within his circuit as he may deem best; and upon such selection and assignment being made, the district judge so designated shall perform and discharge, in the place of the circuit judge, all the duties, powers, and obligations imposed and conferred upon the circuit judge by the provisions hereof.

SEC. 2015. The preceding section shall be construed to authorize each of the judges of the circuit courts of the United States to designate one or more of the judges of the district courts within his circuit to discharge the duties arising under this title.

[Section 2016 to be repealed.]

SEC. 2017. The supervisors of election are authorized * * * to attend at all times and places for holding elections of Representatives or Delegates in Congress, and for counting the votes cast at such elections; to challenge any vote offered by any person whose legal qualifications the supervisors, or either of them, may doubt; to be and remain where the ballot-boxes are kept at all times after the polls are open until every vote cast at such time and place has been counted, the canvass of all votes polled wholly completed, and the proper and requisite certificates or returns made, whether the certificates or returns be required under any law of the United States, or any State, territorial, or municipal law, and to personally inspect and scrutinize, from time to time, and at all times, on the day of election, the manner in which the voting is done, and the way and method in which the poll-books, registry list, and tallies or check-books, whether the same are required by any law of the United States, or any State, territorial, or municipal law, are kept.

[Section 2018 to be repealed.]

SEC. 2019. The better to enable the supervisors of election to discharge their duties, they are authorized and directed, in their respective election districts or voting precincts, on the day of registration, on the day when registered voters may be marked to be challenged, and on the day of election, to take, occupy, and remain in such position, from time to time, whether before or behind the ballot-boxes, as will, in their judgment, best enable them to see each person offering himself for registration or offering to vote, and as will best conduce to their scrutinizing the manner in which the registration or voting is being conducted; and at the closing of the polls for the reception of votes, they are required to place themselves in such position, in relation to the ballot-boxes, as will enable them to fully perform the duties provided herein, and shall there remain until every duty in respect to such canvass, certificates, returns, and statements has been wholly completed.

SEC. 2028. No person shall be appointed a supervisor of election under the preceding provisions, who is not at the time of his appointment, a qualified voter of the election district or voting precinct in which his duties are to be performed.

SEC. 2029. The supervisors of election appointed for any county or parish in any congressional district, at the instance of ten citizens, as provided in section 2011, shall have no authority to make arrests, or to perform other duties than to be in the immediate presence of the officers holding the election, and to witness all their proceedings, including the counting of the votes and the making of a return thereof.

SEC. 2030. Nothing in this title shall be construed to authorize the appointment of any marshals or deputy marshals in addition to those authorized by law, prior to the 10th day of June, 1872.

SEC. 2031. And there shall be allowed and paid to each supervisor of election compensation at the rate of $5 per day for each day he is actually on duty, not exceeding ten days; but no compensation shall be allowed, in any case, to supervisors of election, except to those appointed in cities or towns of twenty thousand or more inhabitants.

CRIMES AGAINST THE ELECTIVE FRANCHISE.

SEC. 5506. Every person who, by any unlawful means, hinders, delays, prevents, or obstructs, or combines and confederates with others to hinder, delay, prevent, or obstruct, any citizen from doing any act required to be done to qualify him to vote, or from voting at any election in any State, Territory, district, county, city, parish, township, school district, municipality, or other territorial subdivision, shall be fined not less than $500, or be imprisoned not less than one month nor more than one year, or be punished by both such fine and imprisonment.

SEC. 5507. Every person who prevents, hinders, controls, or intimidates another from exercising, or in exercising the right of suffrage, to whom that right is guaranteed by the fifteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States, by means of bribery or threats of depriving such person of employment or occupation, or of ejecting such person from a rented house, lands, or other property, or by threats of refusing to renew leases or contracts for labor, or by threats of violence to himself or family, shall be punished as provided in the preceding section.

SEC. 5508. If two or more persons conspire to injure, oppress, threaten, or intimidate any citizen in the free exercise or enjoyment of any right or privilege secured to him by the Constitution or laws of the United States, or because of his having so exercised the same; or if two or more persons go in disguise on the highway, or on the premises of another, with intent to prevent or hinder his free exercise or enjoyment of any right or privilege so secured, they shall be fined not more than $5,000 and imprisoned not more than ten years; and shall, moreover, be thereafter ineligible to any office, or place of honor, profit, or trust created by the Constitution or laws of the United States.

SEC. 5509. If in the act of violating any provision in either of the two preceding sections any other felony or misdemeanor be committed, the offender shall be punished for the same with such punishment as is attached to such felony or misdemeanor by the laws of the State in which the offense is committed.

SEC. 5510. Every person who, under color of any law, statute, ordinance, regulation, or custom, subjects, or causes to be subjected, any inhabitant of any State or Territory to the deprivation of any rights, privileges, or immunities, secured or protected by the Constitution and laws of the United States, or to different punishments, pains, or penalties, on account of such inhabitant being an alien, or by reason of his color or race, than are prescribed for the punishment of citizens, shall be punished by a fine of not more than $1,000, or by imprisonment not more than one year, or by both.

SEC. 5511. If, at any election for Representative or Delegate in Congress, any person knowingly personates and votes, or attempts to vote, in the name of any other person, whether living, dead, or fictitious; or votes more than once at the same election for any candidate for the same office; or votes at a place where he may not be lawfully entitled to vote; or votes without having a lawful right to vote; or does any unlawful act to secure an opportunity to vote for himself, or any other person; or by force, threat, intimidation, bribery, reward, or offer thereof, unlawfully prevents any qualified voter of any State, or of any Territory, from freely exercising the right of suffrage, or by any such means induces any voter to refuse to exercise such right, or compels, or induces, by any such means, any officer of an election in any such State or Territory to receive a vote from a person not legally qualified or entitled to vote; or interferes in any manner with any officer of such election in the discharge of his duties; or by any such means, or other unlawful means, induces any officer of an election or officer whose duty it is to ascertain, announce, or declare the result of any such election, or give or make any certificate, document, or evidence in relation thereto, to violate or refuse to comply with his duty or any law regulating the same; or knowingly receives the vote of any person not entitled to vote, or refuses to receive the vote of any person entitled to vote, or aids, counsels, procures, or advises any such voter, person, or officer to do any act hereby made a crime, or omit to do any duty the omission of which is hereby made a crime, or attempt to do so, he shall be punished by a fine of not more than $500, or by imprisonment not more than three years, or by both, and shall pay the costs of the prosecution.

SEC. 5512. If, at any registration of voters for an election for Representative or Delegate in the Congress of the United States, any person knowingly personates and registers, or attempts to register, in the name of any other person, whether living, dead, or fictitious, or fraudulently registers, or fraudulently attempts to register, not having a lawful right so to do; or does any unlawful act to secure registration for himself or any other person; or by force, threat, menace, intimidation, bribery, reward, or offer, or promise thereof, or other unlawful means, prevents or hinders any person having a lawful right to register from duly exercising such right; or compels or induces by any of such means, or other unlawful means, any officer of registration to admit to registration any person not legally entitled thereto, or interferes in any manner with any officer of registration in the discharge of his duties, or by any such means, or other unlawful means, induces any officer of registration to violate or refuse to comply with his duty or any law regulating the same; or if any such officer knowingly and willfully registers as a voter any person not entitled to be registered, or refuses to so register any person entitled to be registered; or if any such officer or other person who has any duty to perform in relation to such registration or election, in ascertaining, announcing, or declaring the result thereof, or in giving or making any certificate, document, or evidence in relation thereto, knowingly neglects or refuses to perform any duty required by law, or violates any duty imposed by law, or does any act unauthorized by law relating to or affecting such registration or election, or the result thereof, or any certificate, document, or evidence in relation thereto, or if any person aids, counsels, procures, or advises, any such voter, person, or officer to do any act hereby made a crime, or to omit any act the omission of which is hereby made a crime, every such person shall be punishable as prescribed in the preceding section.

SEC. 5513. Every registration made under the laws of any State or Territory, for any State or other election at which such Representative or Delegate in Congress may be chosen, shall be deemed to be a registration within the meaning of the preceding section, notwithstanding such registration is also made for the purposes of any State, territorial, or municipal election.

SEC. 5514. Whenever the laws of any State or Territory require that the name of a candidate or person to be voted for as Representative or Delegate in Congress shall be printed, written, or contained, on any ticket or ballot with the names of other candidates or persons to be voted for at the same election as State, territorial, municipal, or local officers, it shall be deemed sufficient prima facie evidence to convict any person charged with voting, or offering to vote, unlawfully, under the provisions of this chapter, to prove that the person so charged cast or offered to cast such a ticket or ballot whereon the name of such Representative or Delegate might by law be printed, written, or contained, or that the person so charged committed any of the offenses denounced in this chapter with reference to such ticket or ballot.

SEC. 5515. Every officer of an election at which any Representative or Delegate in Congress is voted for, whether such officer of election be appointed or created by or under any law or authority of the United States, or by or under any State, territorial, district, or municipal law or authority, who neglects or refuses to perform any duty in regard to such election required of him by any law of the United States, or of any State or Territory thereof; or who violates any duty so imposed; or who knowingly does any acts thereby unauthorized, with intent to affect any such election, or the result thereof; or who fraudulently makes any false certificate of the result of such election in regard to such Representative or Delegate; or who withholds, conceals, or destroys any certificate of record so required by law respecting the election of any such Representative or Delegate; or who neglects or refuses to make and return such certificate as required by law; or who aids, counsels, procures, or advises any voter, person, or officer to do any act by this or any of the preceding sections made a crime, or to omit to do any duty the omission of which is by this or any of such sections made a crime, or attempts to do so, shall be punished as prescribed in section 5510.

SEC. 5518. If two or more persons in any State or Territory conspire to prevent, by force, intimidation, or threat, any person from accepting or holding any office, trust, or place of confidence under the United States, or from discharging any duties thereof; or to induce by like means any officer of the United States to leave any State, district, or place, where his duties as an officer are required to be performed, or to injure him in his person or property on account of his lawful discharge of the duties of his office, or while engaged in the lawful discharge thereof, or to injure his property so as to molest, interrupt, hinder, or impede him in the discharge of his official duties; each of such persons shall be punished by a fine of not less than five hundred nor more than five thousand dollars, or by imprisonment, with or without hard labor, not less than six months nor more than six years, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

SEC. 5520. If two or more persons in any State or Territory conspire to prevent by force, intimidation, or threat, any citizen who is lawfully entitled to vote from giving his support or advocacy, in a legal manner, toward or in favor of the election of any lawfully qualified person as an elector for President or Vice-President, or as a member of the Congress of the United States; or to injure any citizen in person or property on account of such support or advocacy; each of such persons shall be punished by a fine of not less than five hundred nor more than five thousand dollars or by imprisonment, with or without hard labor, not less than six months nor more than six years, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

SEC. 5521. If any person be appointed a supervisor of election or a special deputy marshal under the provisions of title "The Elective Franchise," and has taken the oath of office as such supervisor of election or such special deputy marshal, and thereafter neglects or refuses, without good and lawful excuse, to perform and discharge fully the duties, obligations, and requirements of such office until the expiration of the term for which he was appointed, he shall not only be subject to removal from office with loss of all pay or emoluments, but shall be punished by imprisonment for not less than six months nor more than one year, or by a fine of not less than $200 and not more than $500, or by both fine and imprisonment, and shall pay the cost of prosecution.

SEC. 5522. [To be repealed.]

SEC. 5523. Every person who, during the progress of any verification of any list of the persons who may have registered or voted, which is had or made under any of the provisions of title "The Elective Franchise," refuses to answer, or refrains from answering, or, answering, knowingly gives false information in respect to any inquiry lawfully made, shall be punishable by imprisonment for not more than thirty days, or by a fine of not more than $100, or by both, and shall pay the costs of the prosecution.

SEC. 5528. Every officer of the Army or Navy, or other person in the civil, military, or naval service of the United States, who orders, brings, keeps, or has under his authority or control, any troops or armed men at any place where a general or special election is held in any State, unless such force be necessary to repel armed enemies of the United States, * * * shall be fined not more than $5,000, and suffer imprisonment at hard labor not less than three months nor more than five years.

SEC. 5529. Every officer or other person in the military or naval service who, by force, threat, intimidation, order, advice, or otherwise, prevents, or attempts to prevent, any qualified voter of any State from freely exercising the right of suffrage at any general or special election in such State, shall be fined not more than $5,000, and imprisoned at hard labor not more than five years.

SEC. 5530. Every officer of the Army or Navy who prescribes or fixes, or attempts to prescribe or fix, whether by proclamation, order, or otherwise, the qualifications of voters at any election in any State, shall be punished as provided in the preceding section.

SEC. 5531. Every officer or other person in the military or naval service who, by force, threat, intimidation, order, or otherwise, compels, or attempts to compel, any officer holding an election in any State to receive a vote from a person not legally qualified to vote, or who imposes, or attempts to impose, any regulations for conducting any general or special election in a State different from those prescribed by law, or who interferes in any manner with any officer of an election in the discharge of his duty, shall be punished as provided in section 5529.

SEC. 5532. Every person convicted of any of the offenses specified in the five preceding sections, shall, in addition to the punishments therein severally prescribed, be disqualified from holding any office of honor, profit, or trust under the United States; but nothing in those sections shall be construed to prevent any officer, soldier, sailor, or marine from exercising the right of suffrage in any election district to which he may belong, if otherwise qualified according to the laws of the State in which he offers to vote.

Mr. EWING obtained the floor.

Mr. CASWELL. I ask the gentleman to yield to me for one minute.

Mr. EWING. I yield to the gentleman for one minute.

Mr. CASWELL. Mr. Chairman, when the democratic party came into power in this House four years ago we were promised retrenchment and reform, not only in the reduction of expenses, but in the manner and methods of legislation. Soon after Mr. Tilden, who was nominated by that party for President of the United States, in his letter of acceptance under date of July 31, 1876, denounced the very policy which is now being pursued by that party in both branches of Congress. I send to the Clerk's desk an extract from that letter which I desire to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

We see to-day the immediate representatives of the people in one branch of Congress while struggling to reduce expenditures compelled to confront the menace of the Senate and the Executive, that unless the objectionable appropriations be consented to the operations of the Government thereunder shall suffer detriment or cease.

In my judgment an amendment of the Constitution ought to be devised separating into distinct bills the appropriations for the various departments of the public service, and excluding from each bill all appropriations for other objects and all independent legislation. In that way alone can the revisory power of each of the two Houses and of the Executive be preserved and exempted from the moral duress which often compels assent to objectionable appropriations rather than stop the wheels of Government.

Mr. CASWELL. Mr. Tilden, it seems, thought it so important that all extraneous matter should be excluded from appropriation bills that he recommended the adoption of a constitutional amendment forbidding it. Yet, in violation of these pledges, this House at the last session refused consent to the passage of the ordinary appropriation bills unless acts of a general nature—acts which they knew would provoke discussion and upon which the people were divided—should be attached thereto.

This extra session was called for the purpose of making those provisions, and for nothing more. As soon as we are assembled the democratic party celebrate their entrance to power in both Houses of Congress not to the purposes of the session, but by precipitating this long, extended discussion of questions not in the least material to the present necessities of the country, and though we have been here for five weeks or more, we are no nearer to-day the passage of the desired bills than we were when first assembled, not because there is disagreement upon the appropriations, the real objects of the session, but because that party are insisting upon legislation of another character and so unnecessary at the present time. Eighteen months will yet elapse before the laws of which they so much complain could in the least degree embarrass them.

Is this long, protracted session for an unnecessary purpose a saving of money? Is this retrenchment or reform? Are you justified in keeping this Congress in session with the great expense attending it for the repeal of laws which can in no way harm you or the country before ample time and opportunity will intervene for their consideration and repeal? But you say these laws are unconstitutional and a menace to the people. If they are unconstitutional they will do you no harm; but if binding, and you intend to carry elections by fraud or violence, I concede they are a menace to you and the officers appointed under them will confront you; if your purposes are honest, they are not. Again it is said this is a sectional contest. I deny it. We do not make war upon any locality. We make war upon fraud and obstruction to a free and fair election, whether we find them in South Carolina or New York, in the South or in the North; and I tell you if you strike these safeguards from the statute, either at this or any other session, the people will condemn you for it.

This very session, these pending amendments, this long and continued agitation are a menace to the business and industries of the country. All eyes are upon us. The revolutionary plans of the party here in power cause the people to tremble, for it is so apparent that you mean to overturn and strike down the very measures which have protected the country from annihilation and ruin. You may continue this contest; you may seek to destroy the laws which have preserved and protected the liberties of the people, under the cry of liberty as you interpret it, yet I tell you, gentlemen, before the campaign of 1880 is reached you will cry out for the hills and rocks to fall upon and cover your record from the face of the earth.

Mr. EWING addressed the committee. [His remarks will appear in the Appendix.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

Here the committee informally rose; and the Speaker having taken the chair, a message from the Senate, by Mr. BURCH, its Secretary, informed the House that the Senate had passed, without amendment, the bill of the House (H. R. No. 1) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes.

The announcement was received with applause on the democratic side of the House.

Mr. GARFIELD. Wait; he laughs best who laughs last.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. GARFIELD. I rise to move an amendment under the five-minute rule.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that under the order of the House the general debate has terminated and the Committee of the Whole is now under the five-minute rule.

Mr. ATKINS. Who has the floor?

Mr. EWING. I still have the floor, and move to strike out the last word.

Mr. GARFIELD. I do not object, but I believe I first rose to move an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will not lose his right but will be recognized afterward.

Mr. ATKINS. I ask the gentleman from Ohio whether it will not suit his convenience just as well to speak to-morrow?

Mr. EWING. Certainly.

Mr. ATKINS. Then I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having taken the chair, Mr. BLACKBURN reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had under consideration the bill (H. R. No. 2) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes, and had come no resolution thereon.

ENROLLED BILL.

Mr. KENNA, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a bill (H. R. No. 1) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes; when the Speaker signed the same.

JURISDICTION OF FEDERAL COURTS.

Mr. TUCKER, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1365) giving the consent of Congress to the jurisdiction of the Federal courts in actions of ejectment in which the United States is interested; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BAILEY. I ask unanimous consent to present joint resolutions of the State of New York.

Mr. LOUNSBERY. I object.

ABRAHAM ALSTEAD.

Mr. WHITE, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1366) for the relief of Abraham Alstead, late second lieutenant Company A, Fifty-fifth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Indefinite leave of absence was granted by unanimous consent to Mr. TUCKER, on account of the necessity of being under the treatment of a physician.

C. A. CUTTER.

On motion of Mr. FORT, by unanimous consent, leave was granted for the withdrawal from the files of the House of the papers in the case of C. A. Cutter, no adverse report having been made.

And then, on motion of Mr. ATKINS, (at five o'clock and seven minutes p. m.,) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions, &c., were presented at the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as stated:

By the SPEAKER: The petition of Daniel Kernan, for pay for work done in the folding-room, House of Representatives—to the Committee of Accounts.

By Mr. BREWER: Papers relating to the pension claims of John Barton, of Willington V. Heusted, and of Joseph W. Seeley—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, papers relating to the claim of William R. Moore—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, resolution of the Legislature of Michigan, asking for the protection of settlers under the homestead law in certain counties of that State—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

Also, resolutions of the Legislature of Michigan, asking that permission be given for the construction of a bridge across the Detroit River—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. BROWNE: The petition of 179 citizens of Indiana, against the extension of the Birdsell clover-huller patent—to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. CRAVENS: Papers relating to the claim John R. Pratt for pay for a horse lost in the service of the United States—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. DIBRELL: A communication from Second Lieutenant W. H. Carter, Sixth Cavalry, in regard to promotions in said regiment—to the same committee.

By Mr. FINLEY: Three petitions of citizens of Crawford County, Ohio, against the extension of the Birdsell clover-huller patent—to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. HILL: The petition of Frank Partee, Lyman Langdon, and others, of Defiance County, Ohio, for the passage of the Reagan interstate-commerce bill—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. HURD: The petition of M. Boos & Son, for the amendment of the revenue law relating to the bonds of rectifiers—to the Committee of Ways and Means.

By Mr. JOHNSTON: The petition of tobacco manufacturers of Richmond, Virginia, to amend section 3385 of the Revised Statutes of the United States in regard to cancellation of export tobacco bonds—to the same committee.

By Mr. JOYCE: Papers relating to the petition of Frank A. Page, late a second lieutenant United States Army, retired, to be restored to his former rank and position in the Army—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. MARTIN, of West Virginia: Papers relating to the war claim of Joseph R. Shannon—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. MILES: The petition of Jacob Wiedeman, guardian of Leopold Schmidt, for a pension—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MORSE: The petition of Charles W. Abbott, pay director, and W. W. Barry, passed assistant paymaster, United States Navy, for relief on account of the defalcation of R. J. O'Reilly, a paymaster's clerk—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Also, papers relating to the claim of John R. Farrell, for pay for subsisting and lodging recruits for the United States Army—to the Committee of Claims.

By Mr. MULLER: The petition of F. W. Fisher and others, of New York City, for the passage of the bill, introduced by Mr. COX, to amend title 53 of the Revised Statutes, relating to merchant seamen—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. SHELLEY: Papers relating to the war claim of Agnes and Maria De Leon—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. SLEMONS: Papers relating to the claim of William Moss, for pay for preserving the archives of the United States land office at Washington, Arkansas—to the Committee of Claims.

By Mr. SPARKS: The petition of 265 citizens of Illinois, against the further extension of the Birdsell clover-huller patent—to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. UPDEGRAFF, of Iowa: The petition of 31 citizens of Fayette County, Iowa, for a law restricting the remedy for the infringement of patents to actions against manufacturers—to the same committee.

By Mr. VAN AERNAM: Three petitions from 130 citizens of New York, against the further extension of the Birdsell clover-huller patent—to the same committee.

By Mr. WAIT: The petition of Jacob Roth, for bounty and back pay—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. WASHBURN: A paper relating to the claim of James D. Wood, for pay for a horse lost in the military service of the United States—to the same committee.

By Mr. WILLITS: Memorial of the Legislature of the State of Michigan, asking that authority be granted to construct a bridge across the Detroit River at or near Detroit, Michigan—to the Committee on Commerce.

Also, the petition of Mrs. D. L. Wood and other officers of the Woman's National Christian Temperance Union, Ann Arbor, Michigan, that no change be made in the internal-revenue laws that will promote the interest of dealers in spirituous liquors—to the Committee of Ways and Means.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, April 26, 1879.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. P. HARRISON, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

ADMISSION TO THE FLOOR.

On motion of Mr. SHALLENBERGER, by unanimous consent, admission to the floor of the House for to-day was granted to Governor Stone and several members of the Legislature of Pennsylvania.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. ACKLEN. I demand the regular order of business. It is important we should have a morning hour; there are matters which should be disposed of.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I can imagine nothing of more importance than disposing of the appropriation bill which we have been discussing for three weeks, and I believe by agreement both sides of this House expect to reach the vote on it to-day.

Mr. ATKINS. General discussion closed yesterday at five o'clock, and so far as I have been able to hear the expression of members, the wish is to close all discussion and vote on amendments at two o'clock to-day.

The SPEAKER. That would give about two hours for debate under the five-minute rule.

Mr. ATKINS. To be equally divided between the two sides.

Mr. CONGER. I think that is time enough.

Mr. ATKINS. I move, then, to dispense with the morning hour.

The motion was agreed to, two-thirds voting in favor thereof.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ATKINS. Before moving to go into committee, I move, by unanimous consent, that all debate be closed at two o'clock.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ATKINS moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. ATKINS. I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of proceeding with the consideration of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, (Mr. BLACKBURN in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 2) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes.

Mr. EWING resumed and concluded the speech commenced yesterday. [See Appendix.]

Mr. GARFIELD. I move as an amendment to the pending bill to strike out lines 2006 to 2064 inclusive, commencing with the proviso.

I had intended to speak somewhat elaborately upon this bill, but I have preferred to give way for the sake of allowing those who had not spoken an opportunity to be heard.

I would not rise now to ask the attention of the House at all but for the sake of correcting a few plain misapprehensions and evasions in this debate. The gentleman who has just taken his seat [Mr. EWING] has said that I have led in an attempt to raise sectional feeling in the North against the patriotic people of the South. It is the old and absurd cry of a sectional North and a national South; that is, the thirty million people of the North and their Representatives, of whom he is one, are sectional, passionate, unkind; and the fifteen million of the "national-minded and patriotic" people of the South are suffering from the narrow and unjust sectionalism of the thirty million among whom my colleague and I live.

The gentleman reminds me of what he was pleased to call a patriotic sentiment of mine uttered at the last session of Congress, when I said what I am glad to have remembered, that in my judgment the man or political party who sought to raise sectional issues and revive the unhappy passions that ought to sleep in the graves of our dead on both sides was not patriotic, nor would he find an echo to his sentiments in the hearts of the best people of this country. I said that deliberately, with all the meaning that the words import.

The blindness that leads my colleague to call two-thirds of this nation sectional also leads him to think my denunciation of those who reawaken old sectional strife can apply only to republicans. Let him not forget the origin of the present controversy. Who raised this unhappy issue? Did any republican begin it? Was it not brought here by the predetermined caucus action of the democratic party? Was it not embodied in the declaration of your Senators and Members that if you could not force certain acts of legislation upon the statute-book you would never grant supplies for the support of the Government? That was the party and that was the act which raised this controversy, involving an issue never raised before in this nation; and because we meet it and denounce it you declare that those who stand by the orderly and constitutional methods are sectional and you who make the innovation are national!

Gentlemen, I took upon myself a very grave responsibility in the opening of this debate when I quoted these declarations of leading members on the other side and said that the programme was revolution and if not abandoned would result in the destruction of this Government. I declared that you had entered upon a scheme which if persisted in would starve the Government to death. I say that I took a great risk when I made this charge against you as a party. I put myself in your power, gentlemen. If I had misconceived your purposes and misrepresented your motives it was in your power to prove me a false accuser. It was in your power to ruin me in the estimation of fair-minded, patriotic men by the utterance of one sentence. The humblest of you or the greatest of you could have overwhelmed me with shame and confusion in one short sentence. You could have said, "We wish to pass our measures of legislation in reference to elections, juries, and the use of the Army, and we will do so if we can do it constitutionally; but if we cannot get these measures in accordance with the Constitution, we will pass the appropriation bills like loyal Representatives, go home, and make the appeal to the people."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. I will take the floor and yield my time to my colleague.

Mr. GARFIELD. I thank you. Now any man speaking for the majority who had made that declaration, uttered that sentence, would have ruined me in the estimation of fair-minded men, and set me down as a false accuser and slanderer. Forty-five of you have spoken. Forty-five of you have deluged the ear of this country with debate, and that sentence has not been spoken by a single one of you. On the contrary, by your silence, as well as by your affirmation, you have made my accusation overwhelmingly true.

And there I leave that controversy. The assaults upon my speech have been, from the beginning to the end, evasions of the issue. What have you said? Not less than thirty of you, in spite of my plain and emphatic declarations to the contrary, have insisted that I said it was revolutionary to put a rider on an appropriation bill, a thing that no man on this side of the House has said. You were guilty, gentlemen, and in this I include the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. KELLEY,] of what Sidney Smith once called "an indecent exposure of your intellects."

Mr. KELLEY. Did I misrepresent you when I said that your speech which lay before me had the title of "Revolution in Congress," and said if the gentleman believed that doctrine now he had undergone a mental revolution? [Laughter and applause on the democratic side.]

Mr. GARFIELD. I cannot yield out of my time.

If the gentleman had read my speech as well as the title, he would have read that in 1872, in the debate from which he was quoting, the democratic party on this floor said we should not consider an appropriation bill at all. I said to them, "You have a right to vote against it; you have a right to filibuster to get a chance to speak on it if need be; but when you say that the majority shall not act on an appropriation bill at all, because there is a rider on it, that is parliamentary revolution;" and so I say to-day, and the gentleman quoted that as though it were inconsistent with my present position, which is as that of 1872, that to refuse to act on the appropriations is revolutionary. In 1872 the democracy said the appropriation bill should not be acted on at all because a rider was on it. Now they say the appropriation bills shall not be acted upon at all unless there are "riders" on them. I resisted the democratic position then, and I resist them now.

Mr. KELLEY rose.

Mr. GARFIELD. I cannot yield, having but a few moments. The gentleman can obtain the floor afterward.

There is another point which I must touch to show the evasions which have been resorted to in this debate. The other side seeks to go before the country on pleas like these that stand as the heading of the speech of the distinguished gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. TUCKER:] "Elections by the people must be free from the power and presence of the standing Army." They seek to make the people believe that democrats in Congress are struggling to get the bayonets away from the breasts of the voters, and that we are striving to keep the Army at the polls. The democratic press is everywhere stating the issue in this way, that the republicans are defending an odious law, enacted amid the passions of the war, to authorize the use of the Army at State elections.

Now "behold how plain a tale shall put that down." On this side this proposition was made: if you find fault with the law of 1865, we will help you repeal it altogether. On the motion of the distinguished gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] every republican on this floor who voted at all when the Army bill was here voted to repeal in toto the law of 1865, which you complained of to the people as putting the bayonets at the breasts of the voters; and every democrat who sits here and voted at all voted "no." You would not repeal the law, but you would tell the people we were trying to keep it on the statute-books and you were trying to get it off.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. DUNNELL was recognized and yielded his time to Mr. GARFIELD.

Mr. GARFIELD. I thank the gentleman for his courtesy.

Now, Mr. Chairman, our vote on that subject has put us beyond all cavil on this high and unassailable ground. We are willing and we have voted to repeal the whole of that law, and we even went so far as to put that repeal on the Army bill, and you voted against it. Now, never again go to the people and say you tried to repeal the odious law of 1865, and the republicans would not let you.

My colleague [Mr. EWING] who has just taken his seat says that the sections sought to be repealed by the bill now before us authorize unwarrantable and unconstitutional interference with elections in the States. He says that the supervisors and marshals are intruders at the election of Congressmen; that they have no constitutional right to be there, even as witnesses. Gentlemen, I never believed in State rights to the extent you did and do; but there is one thing concerning which I have always thought that the State came pretty near being sovereign. I suppose that all our States claim the right to have a Legislature of two houses, each house with a right to make its own rules, sit in its own separate chamber, and pass measures according to its own rules, and regulate the conduct of its own clerks. Yet, gentlemen, if you will read from sections 14 to 19 of the Revised Statutes you will find that the following has been done: The supreme power of the United States by force of national law has gone into the Legislature of every State in this Union, and said to them: "There is a certain Tuesday, the second Tuesday after you have organized, when you shall not fix your own time of meeting; when you shall not even adjourn over. You shall meet at twelve o'clock. When you meet you shall not vote by ballot; you shall vote viva voce. Your clerk shall call the roll. You shall vote for a Senator." The law prescribes how the clerks of both houses shall make the entries on their journals. If there is no election the clerk shall certify it; and then this national authority says: "If there is no election by the separate vote of the two houses the second day, I take your two houses and consolidate them into one. I abolish the distinction between senator and representative; put them into one hall, and hold them in joint session from day to day, and they shall vote as one body until a Senator is elected."

Who does all that to State Legislatures? It is done by a law of the United States passed in July, 1866, and no democrat has denounced it as unconstitutional; no State Legislature has made any opposition to it; and every one of the seventy-six Senators now at the other end of this Capitol holds his seat in pursuance of the operation of that law.

Mr. EWING. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. GARFIELD. Not in my five minutes; not at present. Now, if we can do all that unchallenged in a Legislature of a sovereign State, in the name of all that is reasonable, who will say that we cannot go among our own citizens and supervise and protect our own ballot-boxes where men are to be elected to seats on this floor? Your constitutional question is given away when you admit the supervisions there, as you do in this bill; still more decisively it is given away by the universal acquiescence in the law for electing Senators.

Mr. EWING. Not at all.

Mr. GARFIELD. The great danger of this country is that our sovereign may be dethroned or destroyed by corruption. In any monarchy of the world if the sovereign be slain or become lunatic it is easy to put another into his place, for the sovereign is a person. But our sovereign is the whole body of voters. If you corrupt or kill or render lunatic our sovereign there is no successor, no regent to take his place. The source of our sovereign's supreme danger, the point where his life is vulnerable, is at the ballot-box, where his will is declared; and if we cannot stand around that cradle of our sovereign's heir-apparent and protect it to the uttermost against all assassins and assailants, we have no government and no safety for the future. [Applause.]

Mr. EWING. I hope the House will allow me to ask the gentleman a question, and him to reply. I ask the gentleman, may we therefore authorize United States supervisors to inspect the officers of the house and senate of each State as to the manner of election when electing a United States Senator, and appoint marshals to back up the supervisors, and send out the Army to back up the marshals?

Mr. GARFIELD. Not at all. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. ROBESON] answered that by anticipation.

Our Constitution adopted the Legislatures of the States as our agents to elect Senators, at the times and in the manner which Congress may by law direct.

For the election of Representatives to this House we may set up all our own machinery if we please. We may adopt the State machinery, and superadd our own national superintendence and safeguards; and the safeguards which have already been established we will maintain and defend. [Applause.]

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, before this debate shall close I desire briefly to state the reasons which influence me in giving my support to the pending bill. This measure in its main features proposes the necessary appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial departments of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880. It is not insisted by any gentleman upon this floor, nor has it been intimated by any officer of the Government, that the appropriations here proposed will not to the fullest extent meet all the requirements of the public service. They are, in fact, sir, conceded to be ample. The opposition to this bill, then, is not because of any alleged deficit in amount, but for the reason, and the sole reason, that other legislation is contemplated by its closing sections. To justify a vote against an appropriation bill—a vote which, if successful, must inevitably tend to impair if not to cripple the Government in its necessary functions—there must exist some solid and constitutional ground upon which to base our opposition. If hostility to this bill springs from no higher motive than the mere advancement of partisan purposes we can stand justified neither in conscience nor before the country. Let us, then, sir, calmly and uninfluenced by partisan bias examine this bill in all its parts and ascertain whether in any of its provisions there is aught which will justify this House in accomplishing its defeat.

As I have said, Mr. Chairman, the sums appropriated by this bill are conceded to be sufficient for the purposes indicated. This narrows the discussion to what have been called the political sections of the bill, and to these I shall address my argument. What, then, are the features of this bill which have been so bitterly antagonized upon this floor? What is the political legislation proposed which gentlemen deem of so monstrous a character as to justify them in voting against necessary supplies for the General Government? I shall, sir, endeavor fairly to state these measures, as well as the amendments offered in committee, and to discuss them in a spirit of candor. They are, first, the repeal of the statute requiring a test oath for jurors in United States courts; second, the repeal of the statute authorizing interference with the freedom of the ballot; third, the amendment dispensing with biennial examinations of pensioners; fourth, the amendment providing for issuing in payment of pension arrearages the $10,000,000 now held in the Treasury for the redemption of fractional currency; fifth, the amendment abolishing the southern claims commission.

Mr. Chairman, before proceeding to the discussion of the sections intended to be repealed by the pending bill it may be well to inquire whether the mode of legislation is itself novel or extraordinary. An examination of legislative history will show that the right to attach conditions to supply bills has ever been held with a firm hand by the representatives of the people, both in our own country and in England. The pages of English history are full of instances where the Commons have by their control of the purse prevented encroachments of the Crown upon popular rights. The framers of our Federal Constitution expressly placed the power of originating money bills in the House of Representatives. Section 7 of article 1 of the Constitution reads:

All bills for raising revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives; but the Senate may propose or concur with amendments as on other bills.

Mr. Chairman, it is no difficult task to show that instead of the method proposed by the pending bill being "revolutionary" or even novel in its character it has been employed by all of the political parties which have administered this Government from the earliest period of its history. It has, sir, in fact, in late years, been the constant habit of the majority to attach extraneous legislation to the general appropriation bills. During the twelve years extending from July 5, 1862, to March 3, 1875, three hundred and eighty-seven acts of legislation were passed as attachments to general appropriation bills; all of which time the republican party had the majority in both branches of Congress. Many of these were measures of great political importance. Sir, whatever of censure may attach to this method of legislation must be largely shared by those who now condemn it. It is but just, however, to all parties who have practiced it to say that for the first time in our history has it been characterized as unconstitutional and revolutionary. During the debate in the Senate upon the Army appropriation bill in 1856, Mr. Fessenden, of Maine, a leading republican Senator, used the following language:

Does he not know well that in the English Parliament from the earliest times not only have appropriation and revenue bills gone together, but in cases without number it has been the habit of that Parliament to check the power of the Crown by annexing conditions to their appropriation of money? Does he not know that the only mode in which our ancestors of Massachusetts checked the powers of their royal governors was by granting money only on conditions? The power of supply and the power of annexing conditions to supply have always gone together in parliamentary history; and their joint exercise has never been denounced as a case of revolution, or calling for revolution, or tending to produce revolution in any shape or form whatever. It is a power essential to the preservation of our liberties.

And while the same bill was under discussion, Senator Seward, of New York, distinguished alike as a jurist and statesman, said:

Since the House of Representatives has power to pass such a bill distinctly, it has the power also to place an equivalent prohibition in any bill which it has constitutional power to pass. And so it has a constitutional right to place the prohibition in the annual Army appropriation bill. It is a right one if necessary to effect the object desired and if that object is one that is in itself just and eminently important to the peace and happiness of the country, or to the security of the liberties of the people. The House of Representatives, moreover, is entitled to judge and determine for itself whether the proceeding is thus necessary, or whether the object of it is thus important.

The Representatives from the State of Iowa now holding seats upon this floor do so by authority of a statute attached to an appropriation bill passed while the republicans were yet in the ascendency. In the face, sir, of such authority and such precedents the cry of "revolution" is worse than idle.

JURORS' TEST OATH.

By sections 820 and 821 of the Revised Statutes all persons who bore arms against the Government or in any manner aided or abetted its enemies during the late rebellion are disqualified from acting as grand or petit jurors in any of the courts of the United States. This inability arises from the clause requiring the following test oath to be taken before entering upon such service:

You do solemnly swear (or affirm) that you will support the Constitution of the United States of America; that you have not, without duress and constraint, taken up arms or joined any insurrection or rebellion against the United States; that you have not adhered to any insurrection or rebellion, giving it aid and comfort; that you have not, directly or indirectly, given any assistance in money or any other thing, to any person or persons whom you knew, or had good ground to believe, to have joined, or to be about to join, said insurrection or rebellion, or to have resisted, or to be about to resist, with force of arms, the execution of the laws of the United States; and that you have not counseled or advised any person to join any insurrection or rebellion against, or to resist with force of arms, the laws of the United States.

Can any gentleman suggest any necessity for longer retaining this law upon our statute-book? Under it a large proportion of the more intelligent citizens of the Southern States are excluded from the jury-box. Their political disabilities have in all other respects been removed; and while qualified to sit as Senators and Representatives in Congress, to hold Cabinet appointments, or the highest judicial positions, they are by this statute disqualified from serving as jurors. The Postmaster-General of the United States, a distinguished Federal judge, as well as many other appointees of President Hayes to high office, are incompetent jurors under the statute in question. No reasonable objection, I think, sir, can be interposed to its repeal.

FREEDOM OF ELECTIONS.

Mr. Chairman, the remaining sections which it is proposed to repeal are restraints upon the freedom of elections. It would be difficult to conceive of a question of higher moment or which more vitally concerns the sacred right of the citizen than that of the exercise of the elective franchise free from apprehension of unauthorized arrest and imprisonment. This is the chief corner-stone of all his other rights and privileges. The history of our race, both in this country and in England, is a succession of struggles against encroachments upon the rights of the people. During a period of eighty years of our history no laws such as we now seek to repeal were to be found upon our statute-books.

Mr. Chairman, are these laws salutary; do they accord with the spirit of our free institutions; is there a necesity for their continuation? The framers of our Federal Constitution, men who were deeply read in political science, wisely separated the powers of government into three co-ordinate departments, the legislative, the judicial, and the executive. Each of these, while in one sense a check upon the others, was nevertheless in its own sphere supreme. Their respective powers were clearly defined by the Constitution. To the legislative was confided the enactment, to the judicial the interpretation, and to the executive the execution of the laws. An infringement by either of these upon the prerogatives of the others was, by express terms, guarded against by the framers of the Constitution. In order that the legislative department of the Government, that in which the power of the people is most clearly manifested, should be left wholly under their control, the election of Representatives was guarded with great jealousy. Their perfect independence, so essential to the preservation of popular rights, could only be secured by a free ballot. It was thought the liberty of the citizen would rest upon a slender foundation if upon the day when power returned to his own hands he was liable to executive interference.

Now, sir, what is the question at issue? What is the legislation sought to be repealed by the pending bill? As I have said, Mr. Chairman, for eighty years of our history no laws which trenched upon the freedom of the ballot were to be found upon our statute-book. If the statutes under discussion by executive interposition trammel the elector in his choice of Representatives, it is clear that they are inimical to the letter as well as the spirit of the Constitution. The Executive in the exercise of the legitimate functions of his office cannot be restrained. His perfect independence is essential to the maintenance of Government. But it is none the less important that the law-making power should be freely exercised without restraint upon the part of the Executive.

It should be remembered that these laws abridging the rights of the people in the choice of their Representatives, were enacted either while the country was engaged in war, or just emerging from the chaotic condition which war had produced. They could never have received the sanction of a free people in a state of profound peace. The words of the distinguished Senator from Illinois, [Mr. DAVIS,] in his recent speech upon the Army bill, are worthy of the earnest consideration of the American people:

In the opinion of the patriots of that day the state of feeling in certain parts of the country was of such a character as to endanger peaceful elections while the war lasted, unless a military force was kept in readiness for any outbreak of popular commotion. This was the conviction that prompted the legislation, but I venture to say no one of the eminent men who voted for it intended or expected that it would remain a part of the permanent law of the land. They were too well read in the lessons of history and the traditions of the Anglo-Saxon race to believe that a free people would tolerate—except on great emergencies like a war waged for the maintenance of the Union—the interference of the military in civic concerns. And they were men of principle and did not wish it to be otherwise.

It is no new thing in time of peace to repeal a law passed in time of war. Indeed, no wise statesman will hesitate to do it if the law be unsuitable to the changed condition of things. It is a part of the very nature of every man of our race to rebel against anything which interferes with the freedom of elections, and the days of the Republic are numbered if the people ever consent to place the ballot-box under the protection of the bayonet.

Is there a necessity, Mr. Chairman, for the continuance of these laws? Are they to be permanent? Are the liberties of the citizen safe when he can be obstructed in the choice of his Representative, whether by the armed soldiery or deputy marshals? What is the monstrous power which gentlemen upon the other side so earnestly seek to perpetuate? A statute of the United States, by virtue of which deputy marshals may be appointed without limit as to number, who are required by law to be present at the places where the elections are being held. They are permitted, without process or warrant, without affidavit being made that any law has been violated, to make arrests, and this not only of the electors but of any officer of the State government who may be conducting such election.

More than this, sir. This statute authorizes such deputy marshals to arrest any voter when they may think he is about to violate any law. He is to be arrested, not for the actual commission of an offense, but whenever in the judgment of a partisan official there is an apprehension that he may do so. A kindred power to this can be found ingrafted upon no other statute-book either in our own country or in England. This clause absolutely places the citizen at the mercy of subordinates, and that upon the day when above all others he should be unrestrained in his liberty. I refer, sir, to the peaceable, orderly citizen, who has the lawful right to deposit his ballot. Under this particular clause of the statute he is as liable to arrest as though he were a malefactor. The objection is that the power to arrest is vested in any official of high or low degree, except for the actual commission of an offense or upon a lawful warrant. He who believes that the American people will consent that their liberties may be permanently held by so brittle a tenure has studied the history of our race to little purpose. This question, sir, rises far above the plane of mere partisan politics. In the mutations of party supremacy those who so earnestly defend this policy may be compelled to press the bitter cup to their own lips.

It must be remembered that this is in no sense a sectional controversy. The people of the North have far greater interest in the pending bill than the South can have; a more vital interest, from the fact that because of excess in population they are more nearly affected by it. Upon this question and that of the comparative cost of maintaining deputy marshals and supervisors at the polling places I am indebted to the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. CARLISLE,] his summary being from official sources. He says:

According to the census of 1870 there were sixty-nine cities in the Union to which the most offensive and objectionable parts of these laws are applicable, fifty-five of them in the North and fourteen of them in the South. The fifty-five in the North contained a population of nearly five millions of souls, while the fourteen in the South contained only a little over one million and two hundred thousand. If we look at the expenditures we will find that more than five times as much money was disbursed in the years 1876 and 1878 to pay for the services of supervisors and special deputy marshals of elections in the Northern States as in the Southern States. The whole expenditure in 1876 was $275,296 60, of which the sum of $230,522 was paid for services in six Northern States, and only $44,774.60 for services in the South. In 1878 the whole sum expended was $202,291.09—so far as reported—and of this the sum of $177,652 was on account of services rendered by these officers at elections in the same six Northern States, and $24,639 in the whole South.

Sir, the purity of the ballot-box must be maintained. None should be permitted to approach it except such as have the lawful qualifications. To these the pathway must be unobstructed. Every necessary guard must be thrown around it to protect it against fraud. But, sir, while this is true, it is all important that the right of the people, unawed by menace, to elect their Representatives shall not be abridged. Upon the full exercise of this right depends not only the maintenance of the independencee of the popular branch of our Government, but of the integrity of the Government itself.

PENSIONS.

I come now, Mr. Chairman, to the discussion of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MCMAHON] and adopted in committee, and now a part of the pending bill. That amendment has my earnest approval. It is as follows:

Sections 4771, 4772, and 4773 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, providing for biennial examinations of pensioners, are hereby repealed: Provided, That the Commissioner of Pensions shall have the same power as heretofore to order special examinations, whenever in his judgment the same may be necessary, and to increase or reduce the pension according to right and justice; but in no case shall a pension be withdrawn or reduced except upon notice to the pensioner and a hearing upon sworn testimony except as to the certificate of the examining surgeon. In order to provide for the speedy payment of arrearages of pensions the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to issue immediately in payment thereof, as they may be adjusted, the $10,000,000 in legal-tender currency, now in the United States Treasury, kept as a special fund for the redemption of fractional currency under section 1 of joint resolution 17 of the Congress of the United States, approved July 22, 1876.

I am unable, sir, to discover why any gentleman who desires to do justice to Union soldiers should oppose this section of the bill. It relieves the large proportion of pensioners from the trouble, expense, and delay of biennial examinations, as required by existing law. The proposed amendment, while it dispenses with unnecessary examinations, which have in many instances worked great hardships to the pensioner, nevertheless vests the Commissioner of Pensions with adequate authority to order special examinations whenever in his judgment they may be necessary to secure the ends of justice. The gentleman from Ohio has called the attention of the House to the fact that, notwithstanding the enormous expense of these biennial examinations, they are in rare instances of practical value to the Government. The Commissioner of Pensions has, in fact, recommended to Congress the repeal of the law requiring them. The pending bill appropriates a sufficient amount for the special examinations to which I have referred. The expense of the biennial examination of pensioners for the years 1877 and 1878 was $153,898.80. Less than one-third of this sum annually expended will be sufficient to meet the expense of all necessary special examinations. But, as before suggested, Mr. Chairman, the great advantage arising from the proposed legislation is to the pensioner himself. This, aside from motives of economy, should secure its adoption by Congress. It will be further seen that this section prevents the name of any pensioner being dropped from the roll or his pension reduced unless upon competent sworn testimony and after due notice. The justice of this provision is too palpable for argument.

Now, sir, I will pass to that portion of the section which provides for the speedy payment of arrearages of pensions. The law requiring such payment was passed by the last Congress. Shall that law remain a dead letter upon the statute-book, or shall we proceed now in good faith to give it practical effect? There being a deficiency, as shown by the report of the Secretary of the Treasury, the practical question arises, how shall these arrearages of pension be paid? How shall the necessary funds be obtained? Two modes are proposed: first, that of the Secretary of the Treasury, which will appear by the closing sentences of his official letter to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations relative to these pensions, dated February 12, 1879. The Secretary says:

It would thus appear that the sinking fund must be entirely ignored and twenty-seven millions be provided for by additional legislation.

This may be accomplished by the imposition of some new tax adequate for the purpose, or by authorizing the money to be borrowed upon 4 per cent. bonds, which, in the present state of the market, can be sold at par.

As new taxes cannot be immediately productive, it is recommended that authority be given to raise the amount necessary by the sale of 4 per cent. bonds, described in the acts of July 14, 1870, and January 20, 1871.

Very respectfully,

JOHN SHERMAN,
Secretary.

Hon. J. D. C. ATKINS,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations, House of Representatives.

Second, the method proposed by the section of the bill now under consideration, providing that the $10,000,000 now kept in the Treasury as a special fund for the redemption of the fractional currency should be made available for that purpose. In other words, the policy of the Secretary is to raise the money by increasing our bonded debt, while the plan proposed by this bill is to pay out the ten millions now lying idle in the Treasury. It cannot be denied, Mr. Chairman, that these plans reflect the views of two wholly dissimilar schools in our financial politics. Between them each Representative upon this floor must here and now decide. We are now confronted with one phase, and an important one, of the great question in which the people of this country feel an abiding interest. The line of battle now drawn is that which shall separate the friends and foes of financial reform in the near future.

Sir, the people will not be deceived by the cry raised upon this floor, of "revolution," of an attempt to "starve" the Government. We meet this hypocritical pretense with stubborn facts. Every dollar necessary for the support of the Government is appropriated by this bill. Who then is "starving" the Government, those who vote for or those who vote against the pending bill? Unfortunately, Mr. Chairman, "starvation" does exist in many portions of this country, but it has been produced by the financial legislation which we seek in part to antagonize by the pending amendment. By this section it is proposed as a matter of justice to Union soldiers to pay without delay their arrearages of pensions, and this not by adding to our bonded debt, but by paying out money unnecessarily hoarded in the Treasury. As I have suggested, Mr. Chairman, the law granting arrearages of pensions was passed by the last Congress, but, according to the letter of the Secretary, new legislation is necessary to give it practical effect. Reject this section of the bill, and what avails the pension law? To those who are to be the recipients under it you but "keep the word of promise to the ear and break it to the hope."

The test vote already taken in committee upon the adoption of this amendment, has shown who favor and who oppose this meed of justice to Union soldiers. Every vote then given against this section was by republicans. And, sir, it will become a part of our legislative history, that if this most just measure shall fail, either upon the final vote in this House or when it shall have reached the executive chamber, it will be solely because of the hostility of those who heretofore have claimed to be par excellence the friends of Union soldiers. Why the opposition to this measure? Are the republican members of this House so wedded to the policy of contracting the volume of the currency, the policy of increasing our bonded debt, that they prefer that this pension law shall remain a dead letter upon the statute-book rather than the ten millions now held as a useless reserve in the Treasury shall be put in active circulation? Evil betide those whose dearest rights are antagonized by the darling financial theories of the republican leaders.

The proposed legislation, Mr. Chairman, is one step, but an important step in the right direction. We seek the repeal of no existing law by the amendment under discussion. By the act of June 30, 1864, the legal-tender circulation is limited to four hundred millions. The amount outstanding at present is in round numbers three hundred and forty-six millions, of which the ten millions affected by this section is a part. It is true, as has been said, the ten millions will fall short of the full payment of all arrears of pensions required by the law of the last Congress. How shall the deficit be provided? Simply by additional legislation increasing the volume of greenback currency to the full limit of the four hundred millions allowed by existing law. Taking the statements of the Secretary as correct, the conclusion is irresistible that these arrearages of pensions can only be paid in the manner I have indicated or by an increase in our interest-bearing debt.

SOUTHERN CLAIMS COMMISSION.

I pass now, Mr. Chairman, to the discussion of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG] which abolishes the southern claims commission.

That amendment commands my earnest support. I gave it my vote in committee, and will do so again when the vote is taken in the House. Sir, this commission, of doubtful propriety in the beginning, has long since accomplished whatever of good it was capable. It should be remembered that it was organized in 1871, and for a temporary purpose. The law which called it into being provided that its functions should cease at the end of two years. From year to year its lease of life has been continued by appropriations such as we now propose to strike from this bill. If the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Wisconsin shall prevail, then this commission, with its power to oppress and defraud, will expire with the present fiscal year.

It should be borne in mind, Mr. Chairman, that this commission is in no sense a "court." It possesses none of the attributes of a court of law. The modes of procedure sanctioned by time and experience and so well adapted to secure the ends of justice by which courts are governed are unknown to this commission. If it had been the intention of its founders to originate a scheme by which favorites could be enriched and the public Treasury plundered, they could not well have devised a more fitting instrument. The rules of evidence by which honest claims are established in courts of law are wholly ignored by the act creating this commission. It is vested with absolute power upon ex parte testimony alone to allow claims without limit, and for all practical ends its arbitrament is final. I have said, Mr. Chairman, that the rules of evidence by which courts of law are controlled may be ignored by this commission. If gentlemen will take the trouble to examine the statute creating this commission they will find that sworn evidence is not required in the establishment of claims before this tribunal. The words of the statute are:

The commissioners, in considering said claims, shall be satisfied from the testimony of the witnesses under oath, or from other sufficient evidence, &c.

What a discretion is here vested in this commission! What a gateway for trumped-up, fraudulent claims against the Government! The "other sufficient evidence" means the ex parte unsworn reports of agents and detectives. That such a tribunal with such powers can exist by law is, as the gentleman from Wisconsin has well said, an anomaly under our form of government.

Mr. Chairman, if any necessity ever existed for the establishment of the southern claims commission, that necessity has ceased to exist. I think I am warranted in asserting that with but rare exceptions all claims possessing but the semblance of merit have long since been passed upon by this commission. We have had fourteen years of peace, and yet it is insisted that this commission shall be continued for the sole purpose of allowing claims against the Government for property taken or destroyed during the war.

Is this, sir, to be a permanent tribunal? Are the finances of this country in so satisfactory a condition that the enormous sums annually disbursed from the public Treasury for the maintenance of this commission and its retinue of officers and agents and the payment of its awards shall continue indefinitely? Is the lapse of time to work no bar to these claims? The Legislatures of all our States have enacted statutes of limitation. In many of them promissory notes and bonds are barred at the end of ten years, while it is a perfect defense to open accounts and claims, whatever their original merit, that they were not sued in a court of competent jurisdiction within five years from maturity. And yet gentlemen gravely insist that after the lapse of fourteen years the Government is to have no benefit from the presumption which has been crystallized into law in each of the several States. But it has been insisted, Mr. Chairman, that it would work injustice to those whose claims are now pending if this commission is abolished. It must be remembered that this commission, by the act of its creation, was to expire by limitation at the end of two years from March 3, 1871. It was then supposed, and justly so, that whatever bona fide claims were held by loyal citizens against the Government of the United States for property taken or destroyed during the war could be presented within that period.

But, sir, under the pretext of allowing time for the adjustment of claims pending, the functions and powers of this commission have been continued already for a period of six years beyond the time it was to expire by the statute which created it. And gentlemen may rest assured that the day is far distant when there would be an end to the presentation of claims before this commission. Sir, the only protection to the Treasury is by the passage of this amendment, to avail ourselves of the benefit of the statute of limitations, which should have been interposed six years ago. And permit me, Mr. Chairman, to say that while gentlemen upon the other side of this Hall denounce this method of legislation as unconstitutional and revolutionary, it will be well for them to remember that the very law creating the southern claims commission was passed as a rider upon the Army appropriation bill of March 3, 1871, and that, too, when the republicans were largely in the ascendency in both branches of Congress.

In corroboration of this statement I refer to volume 16 of the United States Statutes at Large, pages 521 and 522. It was a high order of statesmanship to create this commission, with all its powers for plundering the Treasury, by a rider upon an appropriation bill; but when it is sought by the same method to abolish it and close up the avenues for perjury and fraud, it is denounced as unconstitutional and revolutionary. Sir, while I am far from favoring the practice of attaching extraneous legislation to appropriation bills in the main, yet I am free to declare that I know of no method of legislation warranted by the Constitution and legislative precedent which I would not approve if thereby the Federal Treasury could be protected from the further payment of stale and unauthorized demands.

In my judgment, Mr. Chairman, not only should Congress by adopting the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG] refuse to make further appropriations for the continuation of the southern claims commission, but as a matter of justice to a people burdened with debt and taxation an amendment should be incorporated into our Federal Constitution forever prohibiting the payment of these claims either by direction of courts or by act of Congress. I had the honor some days since to introduce into this House a joint resolution proposing the submission to the Legislatures of the several States for ratification an amendment such as I have suggested, which I trust at no distant day will become a part of our organic law. Such a constitutional amendment, Mr. Chairman, will not only bar the doorway to the public Treasury against fraudulent claims, but it will eliminate forever from our national politics a disturbing question productive only of sectional animosity and strife.

A novel spectacle was presented in the Committee of the Whole when the vote was taken upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin, to which I have referred. While every Representative of the national greenback organization, and the large proportion of democratic Representatives upon this floor voted for this amendment, the republican members, with singular unanimity, voted against it. Why was this? Did it spring from a desire to perpetuate this commission with its enormous capacities for evil, or rather from an apprehension that its adoption now would result in the loss of that kind of political capital so essential to success in the coming presidential contest? Some of us, Mr. Chairman, have been charged with the intention of "paying rebel claims;" but, sir, in order that this question may forever be put at rest I propose the incorporation into both our statute and organic law of a perpetual bar against all these claims, let them come from whatever quarter or in whatever guise they may.

The sincerity of gentlemen in their opposition to the payment of "rebel claims" is to be tested. The vote upon this amendment is soon to be taken in the House, and no gentleman who votes a further lease of life to this commission can take shelter behind the plea that this amendment was attached to an appropriation bill. As I have shown by reference to the statutes, it came into existence as a "rider" upon an appropriation bill, and it is but simple justice that it should pass out of existence in the same manner.

Mr. Chairman, I shall detain the House but a moment longer. While I greatly prefer that each act of legislation should stand alone, yet I cannot forget that the mere method of legislation is of far less moment than its substance. Especially is this true when, as I have shown, the method violates no clause of the Constitution and is warranted by the whole course of our legislative history. If the measures I have discussed when presented as separate acts of legislation are wise and salutary, then, sir, they are none the less so because grouped in one bill.

No one, Mr. Chairman, regrets more than myself the attempts made upon this floor to arouse into new life the bitter passions which fourteen years of peace should have subdued. Evil and only evil can result from this attempt to array one section against the other. Partisan ends may be accomplished, but only by the longer postponement of that tranquillity so essential to material prosperity. Let these bitter animosities cease, and let us, I implore you, sir, turn our backs upon the past with its sad memories and strifes, and address ourselves to the consideration of the living, vital issues of the hour which so nearly concern us and those who shall come after us. With business paralyzed, capital shrinking from profitable investment, our workshops closed, and labor seeking employment, it is all important that sectional strife upon this floor should cease, to the end that we may address ourselves to measures of practical legislation so essential to the restoration of prosperity.

During the delivery of the above remarks the five minutes allotted to Mr. STEVENSON expired.

Mr. CABELL. I will take the floor and yield my time to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. STEVENSON resumed and concluded his remarks as above.

Mr. HORR. If I were able to follow the advice of my friend at my left here and "print," I should not now trespass upon the time of the House, but the pursuits of my life have been such that they have not prepared me for speech-making and much less for speech-writing, and the consequence is that I have to talk here, or I cannot print.

A circumstance of my early life will illustrate my condition. When I was a young man I was teaching school in one of the new counties of Ohio, which had among the other attractions of a pioneer life a village debating society. The question was up, whether it was just and proper to support the public schools by a general tax on all the property of the State. A gentleman of the village, a man of wealth, but one who had no children, opposed the law on the ground that it took his money, his hard earnings, to support the children of other people. On the other side of the question was a young man, full of enthusiam and eloquence, who made the usual arguments in favor of the law and then closed by an appeal to the judges who were to decide the question, not to strike down a law which gave education to his children, which carried an education to the little ones domiciled in the homes of the judges, and which enabled his opponent also to educate his children. When that gentlemen took the floor to reply, he said, before proceeding to answer his young and enthusiastic friend's elaborate argument he should devote a few moments to stating some of the difficulties attending an attempt to send children to school before they were born! [Laughter.] The statement made on that occasion would apply with great force in showing why I am not able to print my speech before it is made. [Laughter.]

While I would like to discuss this question and give you some of the reasons for the alarm which pervades this country at this time, I am compelled for want of time to do it but for a moment only. The alarm which is felt all over the North, I tell you candidly, is owing to the fact that this Government is about to pass into the hands of the men who so recently tried to destroy it. But there is another serious cause of uneasiness, and that is, the democratic party has gone over and given itself up to the "grand center" in this House—the "greenbackers." [Laughter.]

Now, I know something about that greenback disease. When it first strikes a man he will commence "running at the mouth," like one who has been salivated. The next thing, you will hear him belly-aching around about bondholders and national banks; then his bowels of compassion will begin to yearn over the poor of the country, though I never yet knew one of them to give a poor man a meal or a single day's work in my life. [Laughter.] Take the case of my honorable friend from Indiana, [Mr. DE LA MATYR.] Does he know what he has done? Have you read the bill he has introduced for the creation of greenbacks to supply the wants of the people, as he calls it?

Mr. DE LA MATYR. That was simply a petition, offered at the request of another man, and was not my own bill at all; nor do I indorse it.

Mr. HORR. I supposed you drew it.

Mr. DE LA MATYR. Not at all.

Mr. HORR. Very well. I have read the bill, and its provisions would make a horse laugh unless he was entirely devoid of a sense of the ludicrous. [Laughter.]

Now, what do we find here? When our country needs rest and quiet; when the business interests of this land demand that we should come here and pass these appropriation bills pure and simple and then go home about our business, I say what do we find? We find the democratic party uniting with these men to flood this country with a mass of trash.

I have been doing some figuring upon this subject, and do you know if you should pass all the bills now introduced for increasing the volume of the currency, how long it would take to print the money?

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WILLITS obtained the floor and yielded his time to Mr. HORR.

Mr. HORR. Thank you.

I was about to say that I had figured up the matter and I find that it would require, without doubt, the use of ten power presses and engines to be kept running night and day for the next six months.

Some man, who has figured it out, claims that in order to produce the flood it had to rain eight hundred feet of solid water every day. [Laughter.] Now, sir, in order to meet the requirements of these gentlemen, and supply the currency provided for by these bills, they would have to get their Chaplain here to ask our Father above to open again the doors and windows of heaven and have it rain "greenbacks" instead of water for the next forty days and forty nights. [Laughter and applause.]

Why, sir, the eloquent and elegant gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER] had the temerity the other day to intimate here to us that God was about to raise up a new David for political honors in 1880, intimating thereby, I suppose, that He was about to advance the interests of a gentleman at the other end of this Capitol who always writes or has others write after his name "independent." Now, I am not here to contend that such a thing is impossible with God. I have too much confidence in His power to doubt that He could perform even that difficult operation; but I ask the gentleman from Iowa, in all candor, if it is not asking too much of Providence! [laughter;] altogether too much! Why, who are these independent men? As a rule they are good for nothing in cases where anything is to be done. They are always on both sides of every question, and never squarely on either side of any. [Laughter.] They may be called political mermaids—half fish and half woman. Too much woman to be good for anything as a fish, and too much fish to be worth anything as a woman. [Laughter.]

I have said that what our country needs is rest—an opportunity to revive industries and set in motion the productive labor of the nation, the real and only source of wealth in every country. I am aware that we have a large number of men in this Hall who think to revive trade and set in motion the great enterprises of profit in this land by simply running a paper-mill backed by legal enactments. No greater delusion ever maddened the brain of mortal man. It is not simple nonsense, but nonsense boiled down to a sirup—sugared off! Mr. Chairman, if I only had the time I should like to say a word or two more. [Loud cries of "Go on!"]

Mr. WEAVER. I move that the time of the gentleman be extended.

There was no objection.

Mr. HORR. We of the North do not seek sectional strife. All we ask is that the laws shall be respected and executed all over the United States, North and South alike. Did it ever occur to you gentlemen to ask the question why it is that the North is filling up so with immigration while the South lags behind? Have you ever studied this question any? While canvassing my district last fall my attention was called especially to that fact. Way up in the northernmost part of the lower peninsula of my State I found a new county filling up with astonishing rapidity. In three counties of my district there have been opened up and put in cultivation during the last year over forty-five thousand acres of wild land, and from what I can learn there has been in that district alone during the past three years more immigration than into any entire southern State, except Texas.

Now, why is it? When I was up in that country I asked men there why it was that they sought homes in such a cold climate when the South was full of unoccupied lands? One gentleman told me that he had tried to live in the South, but that, having been a Union soldier and having settled in Mississippi near where Chisholm and his family were murdered, he was compelled to flee for his life. He claimed that these people were murdered on account of their politics, and added that had they not been republicans they would be alive to-day. A gentleman now in this city, who lived right there at the time, tells me the same story. Now, the first man left all he had in this world and took up a homestead in the wilds of northern Michigan, with nothing to rely on but his own two hands, rather than risk his life at the South. Another very intelligent-appearing gentleman stated to me that he too had tried the South; that while he lived there he was under no fear for his life, but he claimed that the people treated him with so much indifference on account of his political notions that he would not stay. He said that the habit in that country was to ostracise men from all good society unless they yielded obedience to the notions of the party in power. He said further that he would not have staid there for the entire State of South Carolina, such was the bitterness and hatred there toward strangers from the North who settled among them. Is such the case? Do you thus ostracise men who settle among you because they differ from you in politics? If so, why do you wonder that men refuse to live among you?

Why wonder that your lands lie unimproved and that emigrants turn from your shores with hasty tread? I do not wonder that your rivers, which contain power to run the machinery of the world, yet go on unused to the ocean, no hum of industry on their banks and without turning a spindle. The reason for it is plain. It is because of your hatred of northern men; because of your intolerance toward the opinion of others; because of your social ostracism exercised toward strangers who do not share your notions about the superiority of the southern chivalry or agree with you as to the destiny of the colored race. An inflation of the currency will not save the South. What you really need is to go to work. [Great laughter.] You should have more schools, more enterprise and thrift, and less recklessness of life, less hatred of what you call carpet-baggers—damned Yankees! Your business enterprises should be conducted more with piety and less with pistols. What Mississippi needs to-day is more corn and cotton and less cussedness, [laughter and applause;] more mills, more manliness; less murders, less moonshiners. What would improve South Carolina is more hams and fewer Hamburghs. She should raise horses and hogs more and hell less. [Great applause.]

I would like for a moment to discuss one other question, and I approach it tremblingly, because it brings more or less into view the question which has been pending here for the last five weeks; pending because we gentlemen on this side of the House will not adopt a certain policy and join with the other side in their efforts to ruin not only the political but the commercial interests of this country. Because we will not do this we are denounced as "sectionalists." A dozen gentlemen on the other side (I have kept the tally) have been continually making the charge against us on this side of the Chamber that we are sensationalists, that we are continually trying to create sectional strife, and they ask us if we are never going to stop waving the "bloody shirt." I want to talk for a moment about this bloody-shirt business. I find from a careful examination of the list that there are among the majority members of this House about seventy men who served in the confederate army. Now you gentlemen complain bitterly of us if we even in any way refer to the late war, and you seem to take great delight in taunting us with this "waving of the bloody shirt." But how is it down there among yourselves? It would seem that you do not hesitate to hoist your own bloody garments, so much so that I am told that a man in the South who did not serve in your army stands no show for political preferments. How is that? Does he?

Mr. DAVIDSON. Oh, yes.

Mr. HORR. It is said that in your conventions, at the hustings, everywhere upon the stump, you gentlemen are wont to boast of having worn the gray, and that it is the common custom among you at all times, in season and out of season, to unfold and call attention to your confederate uniforms. Is my information correct? If so, then it would follow that it is not so much the blood that you object to as it is the kind of blood. It is the talk about Union blood only that so much exasperates you! Here are some seventy of you who have traversed the entire South, holding up your own bloody garments at every precinct in that broad land, and yet if one of us happens to incidentally mention the lessons of the war you set up a howl about our "waving the bloody shirt," and grow red in the face denouncing such sectional strife.

All we claim at the North is simply the right to choose our own emblems. We had among us during the war another kind of shirt; I recollect all about it. It was worn by the men who sympathized with the South, who opposed the war; men who tried to prevent volunteering, who opposed the draft. And my distinguished friend from Ohio [Mr. EWING] knows how it was. I was in Ohio at that time, and I suppose it is no disgrace to have lived in Ohio. [Laughter.] I say we had another kind of shirt worn by those men who, when the draft could no longer be avoided, with blanched cheeks and relaxed muscles took a precipitate flight for the shores of Canada. [Laughter and applause.] It would, perhaps, suit you gentlemen better if we would hoist their shirts as our symbols. But you will pardon us, I trust, if we decline the job. You should not be too notional about the matter because we prefer the garments of our own boys in blue, though some of them may be armless, some of them riddled by deadly bullets, and smeared, it may be, with the life-blood of dying soldiers. You may honor your fallen heroes if you will, but you may not dictate to us with what feelings of affection we shall cherish ours.

I tell you this is a question about which the people of the North are in earnest. Again let me repeat that what the people ask of us to-day is, that we pass these appropriation bills pure and simple, as any business man would have drawn them, and then go home.

There used to be an idea prevalent among theologians or common in some mythologies that God sometimes brings about desired action among mortals by pestilence, famine, and terrible exhibitions of power. Now it has occurred to me that the Deity never had a better opportunity to bless this country to-day than by dispersing this Congress. He might do it by turning the yellow fever into this House. I should of course prefer that he would use good discrimination in making his selections. [Great laughter and applause.]

Anything that should stop this excitement—that should stay the hands of the majority from the blow already aimed at the life of the nation; anything that should thwart the attempt to enact the wild financial schemes to flood this country with irredeemable trash; anything, I say, that should give the business interests of the country quiet rest, would be welcomed by the people at almost any price. What they desire is to be released from this eternal tinkering at the revenue laws, this incessant meddling with the tariff and the currency. These things, sir, do more to paralyze the business and destroy the best interests of the country than all other causes combined. [Applause.]

Then let me urge upon you gentlemen of the majority the great responsibility that rests upon you. It is for you to say when this turmoil shall cease. It is for you to say whether you will continue to sustain and nourish this Government, or whether you will let it die of want; and let me beg of you not to commit yourselves beyond the power of revocation; for I say to you the people will hold you responsible for the result, and I tell you in all sincerity your plan of starvation will not work.

The method is not entirely a new one. Our people think that it has been tried before—first at Bell Isle; that it was repeated at Salisbury; that it was intensified at Andersonville! It did not work then, and trusting in the undying patriotism and loyal hearts of the men who saved the nation at that time, once more kneeling around the altars erected and consecrated to freedom in those trying days, and still having an abiding faith in that God "who holds the destinies of nations as in the hollow of His hand," we swear once and forever that it shall not win now. [Applause.] Do not compel us to go over again the terrible scenes of the past.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. POEHLER. The gentleman who has just spoken [Mr. HORR] says to us that the country demands that we shall pass these appropriation bills and go home. I agree with that gentleman in that proposition. We intend to pass to-day the last appropriation bill that is asked for. If the other side shall oppose it, that will not be our fault. It will then be for the President to say whether this Government shall have the necessary appropriations or not.

Mr. Chairman, the bill now under consideration has been so ably argued on both sides that I shall not occupy the attention of the committee for any length of time. Still I feel it my duty to say a few words in behalf of my State, and in doing so I am confident that I express the opinion not only of all democrats but also a large number of republicans; for I doubt if there is any State in the Union where the law as it now stands would deprive the citizens of the right of suffrage to the same extent that it would in the State of Minnesota. It is true that it has not been applied or enforced there, but its application, if it is allowed to remain on the statute-book, is only a question of time or of party necessity. Disguise it as you may, its operation so far has been against naturalized citizens, and this is why it would work great injury to the people of the State which I have the honor in part to represent, a large majority of whom are of foreign birth and would be particularly affected by it.

According to the census of 1870, the total population was 439,706. Of these 285,516 were such whose parents were of foreign birth, and only 154,190 whose parents were natives, and among them thousands of grandchildren of foreign emigrants. According to our constitution, every foreigner who has resided one year in the United States and four months in the State, and who has declared his intention to become a citizen, is a voter.

Many of our citizens have filed their naturalization papers in the land offices to prove their right to pre-empt or "homestead" their lands. The election laws of Minnesota do not require the presentation of the naturalization papers as a requisite to have their names placed on the poll list.

The oath of the applicant stating when and where he was naturalized, that he has had a certificate of his naturalization, and that the same is lost, destroyed, or beyond his power to produce to the judges, is sufficient evidence; and the judges must enter his name on the poll list, and he is entitled to vote.

Now, Mr. Chairman, if the supervisors of election have the power under the supervisor law as it now stands, and John I. Davenport has assumed that power, to examine the certificates of naturalization and pass upon their validity, then, indeed, many of the voters of my State can be disfranchised. If the supervisors can pass upon the validity of certificates, what can they not do in the absence of the latter? Not one of that class would be permitted to vote if this law would be applied.

Mr. Chairman, I am not speaking in behalf merely of the democratic party. A majority of the adopted citizens in my State are allied to the republican party and vote with them. This is not a political question. It is a question of right to the immense majority of the people of Minnesota; it is a matter of justice to our State, for it annuls that part of our State laws which provides that the names of all persons voted for by an elector shall be on one ballot, and defines who shall have charge of the ballot-box and who shall count and canvass the votes. These laws have met the approval of all parties, and are respected and obeyed. There is no necessity for supervisors or marshals in Minnesota.

Is there a man, unless he be a selfish partisan, who would favor a law that gives almost unlimited power to one man to arrest men at will, using his sole judgment to determine if they have the right to vote or not, a power greater than the most despotic monarch of Europe dare exercise to-day? It is a power which no party should be allowed to exercise; those who use it to-day may suffer by it to-morrow. Gentlemen on the other side have declared the repeal of these laws to be revolutionary. They simply state it to be so, but fail to show where the revolution comes in. It cannot be in the mode or manner, for it has been clearly shown that some of the most important acts of Congress have been passed as amendments to appropriation bills. It cannot be in the repeal of the law, for the Government stood for more than eighty years without those laws under the wise rule of patriots who valued the personal liberties of the citizen as too sacred to be thrown into the political vortex for party purposes. Surely, Mr. Chairman, to repeal laws so obnoxious; to prevent men from exercising doubtful powers; to protect citizens in their lawful rights, ought not to, and cannot with truth, be called revolutionary.

It is claimed by the gentlemen on the other side that it is necessary to have the supervisors to protect the purity of the ballot-box, and the soldiers to keep the peace at the polls. Mr. Chairman, let us carry this to its logical conclusion by increasing the Army and placing a military chieftain in the executive chair, and then our dreams of peace will be realized! Order will then "reign in Warsaw." Mr. Chairman, I for one am opposed to all legislation which gives to one party greater influence and power to control elections than to the other. The effects of such legislation will not show themselves at once in every part of the country; they will at first appear isolated, but it will not be long before every State will have its Davenport.

Prince Bismarck has had a severe struggle with the Prussian Chambers ever since 1863. At different times has he dissolved the latter, but though he has thousands of officials and hundreds of thousands of soldiers at his disposal, with which he could surround every poll in the country, and control the election for the benefit of his candidates, yet he has never used that immense power, as even he knows that anything of the kind will make elections mere farces.

Such laws, as has been shown by several other speakers before, among them my friend from the Milwaukee district, [Mr. DEUSTER,] will be a damper upon emigration, for the Davenports select chiefly the emigrants upon which they can exercise that cruel authority which this law bestows upon them. And what would my State be without foreign emigration? What would the whole great Northwest be without it? The whole country is interested. It is your duty—your self-interest demands it—to repeal all such laws which in any way interfere with the tide of emigration. That the supervisor law which we now desire to repeal is such a law even the most partisan republican will not deny.

Mr. RYAN, of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, the early record of the State I have the honor in part to represent has been a theme of discussion running all through this long and weary debate. Gentlemen on the other side have seen fit to tell us that the first gun of the late terrible conflict was fired by a historic citizen of that State, and that thereby southern blood was shed upon southern soil.

Mr. Chairman, I deny that statement. The first gun was fired long before that time. The first gun was fired by the southern cohorts of slavery, when northern blood was shed upon northern soil So far as I know, John Brown never pointed his gun at mortal man until after he had witnessed atrocities committed by these emissaries of slavery that shocked mankind, until after he had witnessed his neighbors and his own son butchered like dogs in cold blood. It was then he took his rifle upon his shoulder, and with a few men following him, frenzied by wrongs sufficient "to stir a fever in the blood of age," he invaded the sacred soil of Virginia.

For that act of lawlessness I have not one word of defense. The recording angels, while they may write down in their eternal records that he violated law, will at the same time record the fact that he did so because of law that outraged humanity and the ordinances of Heaven. You arrested him; you charged him with treason, if I remember aright; you hanged him as a traitor.

And in the light of history we have the right to infer that at the time he was in the agonies of death you were meditating the destruction of your country. Before the green grass had sprouted upon the old hero's grave, you had fired upon her flag and drenched your native land in the blood of your brethren.

And when by the strong power of the Government you were forced to stop your career of carnage and desolation, you came upon the floor of this House, rewarded with high honors of state, to prate of the crimes of John Brown, and make laws for the country you sought to destroy. Do not misunderstand me. I do not complain that you are here. But I do complain that it is with ill-grace you open the grave of the man you under such circumstances hanged for high treason and tear the lid from his coffin to spit the virus of envenomed hate upon his ashes.

And now a few observations upon the question under consideration. You would not have us think that you regard a pure ballot as a guarantee of the perpetuation of republican rule; yet you stand in solid column against all Federal legislation for the protection of the purity of Federal elections, and our party stands here as solidly in opposition to you.

You do not want the country to believe that crime against the ballot-box is the agency by which you hope to get complete control of this Government, yet you demand that all Federal laws that stand between an honest vote and fraud shall be stricken from the statute-book. You demand the repeal of all these laws because you say they have been abused in their administration. If that were true it would argue no fault in the law. A wholesome law ought not to be repealed because it has been abused, if the abuse may be guarded against by legislation. But you do not propose any corrective legislation to prevent and punish such abuses. Not at all. On the contrary, you strike down all laws for the prevention, detection, and punishment of offenses against the ballot. You open to the ballot-box an unobstructed highway for fraud and crime.

The ballot is the great foundation upon which the Government rests. This is a government of a people, maintained by their own will expressed through the ballot. It is the only means by which they can give that will expression. If, then, the ballot is corrupt it is not possible for them to express their will at all, and therefore the effect of a corrupt ballot is to exclude the popular will from any agency in the control of the Government. May not a fraudulent or unlawful ballot overturn the undoubted will of the people? Doing that, may it not actually mold the laws and shape the policy of administration? In that case the sovereign will is excluded altogether, and crime usurps its office and functions. What better calculated than that to inflame popular passion, breed public disorder, and foment revolution and anarchy? Then is it not a high duty of Government to jealously guard the purity of the ballot by every means that wise and patriotic statesmanship can suggest?

You are wont to amuse yourselves and weary the country with flaming speeches against the purity of the President's title to his high office. If the people believed you they would not be likely to be indifferent. They do not. They know that fraud, violence, and outrage reigned supreme at the elections in several of the States, utterly subverting the popular will. They know that by criminal agencies the electoral votes of several States were counted for Mr. Tilden which, by the fair expression of a legal vote, would have been given to Mr. Hayes. But suppose that Mr. Tilden had seated himself in the executive chair by a majority of one; suppose that subsequently it had been shown by undeniable proof that he actually bought that one vote; what, in that case, would have been the proper title of the Chief Magistrate of forty-five millions of people? Could he have been called their President? No; he would have been the mere result, the official creation of a monstrous felony. Think you an outraged people would not under such circumstances have hurled him from the chair of Washington? And yet who shall say the effort would not have been the occasion of internecine strife? And would Mr. Tilden be a less atrocious usurper if he had obtained that one vote by any other unlawful means? The logic of fraud against the ballot is to pervert the popular choice, and when that is done and repeated without redress anarchy is sure to follow.

Reference has frequently been made during this discussion to outrages upon the ballot-box in Kansas in her early territorial days. The history and results of that stupendous crime may profitably be considered now and here. Armed bodies of men from the then slave State of Missouri entered the Territory the night before election and encamped in the vicinity of the polling places. In the morning they took possession of the polls, voted in sufficient numbers to nullify the legal vote, carried the elections, and then returned to their homes in Missouri. Members of the Legislature were chosen at that election. That Legislature was the creature of a colossal crime. It enacted laws that sent a thrill of horror through the civilized world and stained the pages of American history. These wrongs inflamed in high degree the passions of the people of the North, and especially of the Territory. The people of the South became correspondingly furious. The result was that assassination, arson, and public disorder stalked unchecked through the Territory. Force was employed to execute these atrocious enactments; their execution was resisted, and the authorities elected or appointed in virtue of them defied.

Each succeeding outrage fanned the fury of popular passion. The famous John Brown invasion of Virginia followed, and close upon its heels came the outbreak of organized treason that for four long years visited upon our people all the horrors of civil war. So it is, that the results which flowed from that gigantic crime against the ballot culminated in the greatest rebellion recorded in history. It is possible that other causes contributed to bring about that contest of arms, but no man can safely affirm that we should have experienced that awful visitation but for that gross and outrageous perversion of the elective franchise.

I have not time to dwell upon the complete subversion of the popular will in several of the Southern States by modes that are open to the severest reprehension.

This you seek either to deny or palliate; but it is, nevertheless, a deplorable fact that cannot be disputed and that has already passed into history. It is to this you are indebted for your majorities in this House and in the Senate. The contemplation by the American people of a Congress ruled by a majority which is the creature of fraud, intimidation, and violence is not calculated to inspire them with very profound respect for either its public measures or its political policy. When you grow eloquent in declaiming about the "sovereignty of the people" and in asserting that this body is "fresh from the people," it might temper your ardor to reflect that you owe your ascendency here to the offense of having suppressed the free choice of the people.

The attempt to repeal these election laws naturally suggests the frauds perpetrated in the city of New York in 1868. In the language of the committee that investigated that outrage, "probably more than fifty thousand fraudulent votes were cast." The lawful vote elected a republican governor; the criminal vote gave the chief magistracy of that great State to the man who was not elected. Over sixty-three thousand spurious naturalization papers were issued. Hundreds of repeaters "voted from two to forty times or more." Frauds were extensively committed in canvassing the vote. Says that committee:

> Through these agencies the democratic electors of President and Vice-President and the democratic candidate for governor of the State of New York were fraudulently elected.

In commenting upon the consequences of this hideous crime the committee say:

> If evils like these may come, or if a republic in name cannot or will not be so in fact; if the popular voice is to be hushed and powerless before the mockery of elections, conducted in the name of the people, but reflecting only the purposes of terrorism and fraud, then revolution will be speedily invited, and the great Republic may crumble to atoms.

The election laws which you are here seeking to repeal grew out of these horrid developments. It is a shocking fact that the history of the last thirty years convicts the democratic party of repeated frauds against the elective franchise, of monstrous audacity and stupendous turpitude. It is fitting that it should celebrate the first hour of its restoration to supremacy in Congress, after a banishment of eighteen years, by the attempted destruction of all legislation designed to guard the ballot against pollution by the criminal agencies through which that party has long been accustomed to subvert the popular will.

There is another feature of this discussion which I must not overlook. This extraordinary session has been made necessary by the refusal of this House to vote supplies for the Army and the Government because the Senate would not approve certain other legislation. Then you aimed at the coercion of two co-ordinate powers. Now you have but one to bring to your feet. Then you sought to usurp the constitutional prerogatives and functions of two other branches of the Government. Now there remains but one to subvert. These supply measures are known as the Army appropriation bill and the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill. Either these must be enacted into laws or the Army and the Government must perish, unless indeed the patriotic States and people of this Union shall come to the rescue, and from their respective resources supply the needed funds. Hence it is that your revolutionary attitude has filled the public mind with alarm.

The general debate upon these bills has embraced a discussion of all the contested issues. The questions arising upon them are the same in principle. They involve the same questions of constitutional law and relate alike to Federal supervision of Federal elections. Upon the Army bill you persisted in placing an extraordinary provision for the repeal of a clause in a section of the Revised Statutes which permitted the use of troops to keep the peace at the polls. Upon the pending bill you persist in placing an extraordinary provision for the repeal of all laws of the United States ordained for the prevention, detection, and punishment of offenses against the ballot-box.

In the outset of this debate you confronted us with the authentic avowal of the purpose of your party to refuse to vote supplies to the Army and the Government unless the Executive in violation of his conscience and judgment, in disregard of his sense of constitutional duty and oath of office, should approve this extraordinary legislation attached to the supply bills. To that we at once opposed the issue that such a course was a violation of the Constitution and revolutionary in the highest degree. It would be not only a high-handed invasion of the constitutional domain of the Executive, but would be a flagrant breach of our sworn obligation; for I hold it to be our paramount duty to do that which is necessary to preserve the Government. We were not permitted to take our seats until we had registered a solemn oath to do that. Shall it be said that at the very time we were taking that oath we were actually meditating the destruction of the Government by starvation unless the Executive should surrender to us his constitutional check upon us—upon Congress?

Such, then, Mr. Chairman, was the issue fairly made upon the threshold of this contest. How have you met it? First, by artfully misstating it; secondly, by the assumption that you are the embodiment of the sovereign will.

First. You assumed that the issue made by us is that you violated the Constitution by placing upon these appropriation bills this repealing legislation. Upon this false assumption, upon this fictitious issue, you have predicated argument upon argument. To controvert it you have exhausted research and impressed into your service all the powers of logic and all the devices of rhetoric. We have made no such issue. On the contrary, we not only admit but affirm that you have such constitutional authority. You have constructed a scarecrow and called ostentatiously upon the country to behold the vigor and courage with which you tear him down.

Your second method of meeting the real issue has the merit of greater candor. You affirm that you, being the popular branch, are the embodiment of the popular will. Hence it is the people in their sovereign capacity that demand a resort to this extraordinary method to expunge from the statute-book all Federal legislation for preserving fair, free, and pure elections, and to oppose this is to antagonize our common sovereign. To do that is to assail a great fundamental principle of the Government, a thing that no one of the branches of the Federal system has a right to do. The absurdity of your logic is a vivid illustration of the dangers you threaten. It is not specious enough to deceive any fair intelligence. If your position is correct, your action, being expressive of the sovereign will, should be crystallized into law. It follows from your process of reasoning that this House is of itself all sufficient as a law-making body; that neither the Senate nor the Executive should have any part or lot in molding legislation or shaping the policy of administration, for otherwise they may override the will of the people.

What is this but overt revolution? Is it not a usurpation of the powers of all the other departments of the Government? Is not this a complete subversion of the Constitution? In the language of Mr. Jefferson, such "is not the Government we fought for," but "an elective despotism." Hear him:

All the powers of government, legislative, executive, and judiciary, result to the legislative body. The concentrating these in the same hands is precisely the definition of despotic government. It will be no alleviation that these powers will be exercised by a plurality of hands, and not by a single one. One hundred and seventy-three despots would surely be as oppressive as one. Let those who doubt it turn their eyes on the republic of Venice. As little will it avail us that they are chosen by ourselves. An elective despotism was not the government we fought for, but one which should not only be founded on free principles, but in which the power of government should be so divided and balanced among several bodies of magistracy as that no one could transcend their legal limits without being effectually checked and restrained by the others.—Jefferson's Notes on Virginia.

Ours is a mixed form of government; a government of varied powers, each essential as a balance to the other; a government of branches, each a check upon the other; and the powers and functions of each and every one of them are carefully provided for and guarded by a written constitution. The Executive is a check upon Congress, and the Constitution makes the exertion of the power mandatory. It provides that every bill that shall have passed both Houses "shall, before it become a law, be presented to the President of the United States; if he approve he shall sign it; but if not, he shall return it with his objections to that House in which it shall have originated." If his judgment and conscience do not approve the bill he is commanded by the Constitution and his oath to veto it. That is the executive check upon Congress. This check is not absolute, but qualified. It may be overcome by a two-thirds vote of each House. The Senate is a check upon this body, and has the constitutional power to interpose an absolute veto against any bill we may pass. This House is a check upon the Senate, and is vested with a like power to negative the action of the Senate.

The judiciary is a check upon the law-making power, and may declare null and void any act by which legislation seeks to invade constitutional rights. Congress is a check both upon the executive and judiciary, and may exert the power of impeachment if either shall violate its functions. These checks, with their respective powers and restraints, constitute our form of government. Destroy any one of them by suffering one department to usurp the functions of another, and your Constitution is subverted, your system of government fatally undermined, and the whole fabric hastens to become a prey to anarchy.

Mr. Madison, at the ripe age of eighty-four years, referring to this executive check upon Congress, affirmed "that a primary object of the prerogative most assuredly was that of a check to the instability in legislation which had been found the besetting infirmity of popular governments." And John Adams protested that this qualified check of the executive upon the legislative power was not sufficient to preserve the Constitution, but that it should be made absolute; in other words, that the negative given the Executive should equal the one given to the Senate and House respectively. He says:

Unless three powers have an absolute veto or negative to every law, the Constitution can never be long preserved.

Again he says:

The legislative power is naturally and necessarily sovereign and supreme over the executive, and therefore the latter must be made an essential branch of the former, even with a negative, or it will not be able to defend itself, but will be soon invaded, undermined, attacked, or in some way or other totally ruined and annihilated by the former.

And again, in his third letter to Roger Sherman on the Constitution of the United States, he says:

There is a sense and degree in which the executive, in our Constitution, is blended with the legislative: The President has the power of suspending a law; of giving the two Houses an opportunity to pause, to think, to collect themselves, to reconsider a rash step of a majority; he has a right to urge all his reasons against it by speech or message, which, becoming public, is an appeal to the nation; but the rational objection here is not that the executive is blended, but that it is not enough blended; that it is not incorporated with it and made an essential part of it. * * * It is, moreover, possible that more than two-thirds of the nation, the Senate and House, may, in times of calamity, distress, misfortune, and ill-success of the measures of government, from the momentary passion and enthusiasm demand a law which will wholly subvert the Constitution. The constitution of Athens was overturned in such a manner by Aristides himself; but we may take stronger ground, and assert that it is probable such cases will happen, and that the Constitution will, in fact, be subverted in this way. Nay, I go further and say that, from the constitution of human nature and the constant course of human affairs, it is certain that our Constitution will be subverted, if not amended, and that in a very short time, merely for want of a decisive negative in the Executive.

Let it be noted, too, that the power reserved to the people is also a check upon all delegated power. This body must surrender its authority to the people every two years. One-third of the Senate yields up to the sovereign its authority every two years. The Executive delivers back to the people his authority every four years. Thus it is within the power of the people to speedily correct any abuse of the veto or other powers with which the Constitution has invested the departments of Government. All these prescribed checks are necessarily vested with a discretion, but if they shall be unwisely employed the remedy is with the people, and not with this House or any other branch of the Government.

But you propose to constitute yourselves the judges of the soundness of the discretion exhibited by the Executive in the exercise of the power given him as a check upon you, and you also propose to regulate its exercise. What can be more reprehensible or despotic? In order to accomplish that purpose you are not content to stop with the threat that you will destroy the Government by starvation. Not at all. You have been careful to remind the President that his title to office is still in jeopardy. In other phrase, you put these measures before the Executive and command him to approve them, with a threat that if he refuses you will expel him from his office and force the Government to perish for want of money to preserve its life. Heroic party! Patriotic party!

The sophistry by which you seek to conceal your treasonable designs, the fallacy upon which you seek to justify all this, may be brought clearly to view by a careful consideration of a conclusion affirmed in this debate by the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. CARLISLE,] who is esteemed on both sides of the House for his fine legal acumen. I refer to this speech because I regard it as the ablest delivered on the democratic side during this debate. He says:

It is admitted that it is neither unconstitutional nor revolutionary simply to repeal these laws; but it is charged that it is both unconstitutional and revolutionary to attempt to repeal them in a manner the Executive does not like. One gentleman, at least—the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. FRYE]—has been candid enough to declare on this floor, amid the applause of his political friends, that we shall not repeal these election laws until, in some manner, the present Executive has been removed from office. Here is the exact language of the gentleman, as reported in the official debates:

"You have not repealed the law affording protection to the voter at the polls yet. You have not repealed the election laws yet; and you will not repeal them until you have removed the present Executive from his chair." [Applause.]

Sir, this presents a square issue from which we, as the representatives of a majority of the people, cannot shrink without dishonoring ourselves and degrading our constituencies.

If there had previously been a doubt as to the propriety of the course we have adopted, that declaration and its indorsement by the party of the Executive on this floor ought to have dissipated it. It has dissipated it; and I believe that to-day we stand as thoroughly united in our determination to assert the supremacy of the popular will, under the Constitution, and to redress popular grievances by lawful means, as any body of men have ever stood since our race first began its struggle for free government and individual liberty.

Even one usually so fair as this distinguished gentleman bows before a party exigency to misstate the position of his antagonist. It is not "charged that it is both unconstitutional and revolutionary to attempt to repeal them in a manner the Executive does not like." I hold if the President approves the repeal he must sign the bill, whether he "likes the manner" or not. If in his judgment the end sought by you is right the Constitution commands him to approve these bills, however objectionable may be "the manner" in which they are presented to him. But if you link these measures to the appropriation bills and submit them to him for his action and he shall then officially declare to you that he cannot approve them, you are lawfully notified of the exercise of his constitutional prerogative, and if after that you insist that he shall approve them or you will not vote supplies at all, you are resorting to force to compel the President to violate his conscience, his constitutional obligations, and his oath of office. And that we charge to be unconstitutional and revolutionary.

As reference has been made to the position assumed by the gentleman from Maine, let us take another case. Suppose these measures to have been incorporated in a separate bill, that it had passed Congress and been returned by the Executive with his objections. What has the Constitution declared of that bill in this condition? Why, that it ought not to become a law. The Constitution says that no bill ought to become a law unless this House, the Senate, and the President shall all officially declare that it ought to become a law.

The Constitution was made by the people for our government and theirs. They provided in that instrument the methods by which their will should be determined, and they made us swear that we would observe those methods. What are those methods? These: if the House shall approve a measure and the Senate shall approve it, and the Executive shall approve it, the popular will has been declared and crystallized into law. But "under the Constitution" if either this House, the Senate, or the Executive (unless overcome by two-thirds of each House) shall say no, then the popular will as determined by those constitutional methods says it shall not become a law. So, then, in the case made we have before us a measure which the Constitution has declared shall not be a law, which the sovereign will under the Constitution has said shall not become a law. It is before us stamped with the condemnation of both the Constitution and the lawfully expressed will of the people.

The Constitution and our common sovereign have declared that it shall not become a law, but the gentleman from Kentucky and his party say it shall. Well, how? You must in some way override the Constitution. How do you propose to do it? By the application of force, of the element of coercion. Link it to a supply bill and compel the Executive to do what? He has declared upon his official oath that he cannot approve it. His judgment disapproving it, the Constitution commanded him to veto it; he recorded an oath in heaven that he would obey that command of the Constitution. Then what is it, I repeat, you thus seek to compel the Executive to do? Why, to trample the Constitution in the dust, to disregard his conscience, and violate his oath of office; to surrender to you a power delegated to him by the Constitution and by the people. For what was that power thus delegated to him? Why, as a check upon you, upon this body, upon Congress. In other phrase, you demand that he shall deliver over to you a power which the people gave him as a restraint upon you. The people, through their Constitution, have made him take an oath that he will employ that power to prevent less than two-thirds of both Houses from making any measure a law which does not meet his approval.

Now, in order to make your measure a law, you propose to make him surrender to you the power which his oath binds him to exercise to prevent you from making it a law, or if he refuse you will let the Government perish.

In this connection pardon me for again reminding you that the Constitution imposes upon you an obligation. The paramount obligation imposed upon this body, the obligation exalted by the Constitution above all others, is to preserve the Government. We were not permitted to take our seats until we registered an oath to faithfully discharge that obligation. I find no reservation or condition in that oath. I did not take it upon my lips with the mental reservation that I would preserve the Government if the President would consent to obey my commands. I did not take it with the mental reservation that I would not preserve the Government unless the Executive should consent to the repeal of legislation that might be offensive to me. I did not take that oath with a mental reservation that I would respect and observe it if the President would agree to surrender to me the power delegated to him by the people to check and restrain me. Did you take that oath with any such mental reservations?

Mr. Chairman, stripped of all sophistry, purged of every fallacy, the demand is that, in order to make these offensive and pernicious measures the law, the President of the United States shall trample upon the Constitution and violate his oath of office, or if he refuses you will trample upon the Constitution and violate your oath of office. This is the thing which the honorable gentleman tells us that he and his associates "cannot shrink from without dishonoring themselves and their constituents."

In conclusion, I congratulate myself and the country that this debate has torn from the democratic party, ruled now as in the past by a solid South, the veil which has hitherto concealed its designs against wholesome laws, against the Constitution, and against good government. You of the South should remember that upon you rests the responsibility for the acts and policy of that party, for you are a majority, and shape its course. In the caucus you rule the party, and the party rules the House and Senate. You freight the air with imprecations against us for what you are pleased to characterize as sectionalism.

I would have peace; the North longs for peace. But when you talk to us of peace you at the same time do that which provokes passion. You tell us that the North will not suffer the ghost of rebellion to down, and at the same time you flaunt in our faces the threat that you will celebrate your advent to power by expunging from the statute-book every vestige of our war legislation and wipe out all that is grand and glorious in the record of the last eighteen years. You appeal to us to "let the dead past bury its dead," and in the same breath you charge us with all the bloodshed, sorrow, and desolation of the war. You beg that we will not open anew the wounds of that conflict, and then complain that we shot treason to death. You tell us the war is ended, and then hurl maledictions upon us because, as you put it, we would not let you go in peace. You charge us with reviving the passions of civil strife, and at the same time denounce us as tyrants and despots because we expelled, in time of war, from the pulpit a clergy for desecrating the Christian religion by petitioning the Almighty to interpose in behalf of a monstrous crime for the destruction of our Government. You implore us to give you peace, and then shake your fists in our faces and tell us that "revolution has no terrors for you"—a flagrant and arrogant boast of the wicked part borne by you in the recent attempt to overthrow this Government. You offer us peace and reconciliation, but you demand as the price of it that you be restored to complete control of the nation. If you would have a lasting and valuable peace you must in earnest and patriotic sincerity haul down the rebel flag and salute the Stars and Stripes.

Mr. CHALMERS. Gentlemen upon the other side of the House in this debate have talked about everything in the heavens above, in the earth beneath, and in the waters under the earth. I propose now to bring them back to the question at issue in this bill, which is plain and simple.

There are two laws standing upon the statute-book in regard to supervisors of elections, one made for the country, the other made for the city, confessedly made for the city of New York; and John Davenport boasts that they were made at his dictation.

The city of New York is democratic; the country districts are republican. Hence we find that through the ingenuity of this matchless trickster in politics we have one law for the democrat and another for the republican. The supervisors who are to watch over the democratic polls are intrusted with extraordinary power to supervise registration, in effect to determine the qualifications of voters, and with or without warrant to arrest citizens at the polls. In the country districts there is no such power.

By section 2029 of the Revised Statutes, which remain unchanged, it is expressly provided:

> The supervisors of election appointed for any county or parish in any congressional district, at the instance of ten citizens, as provided in section 2011, shall have no authority to make arrests, or to perform other duties than to be in the immediate presence of the officers holding the election, and to witness all their proceedings, including the counting of the votes and the making of a return thereof.

Now all that is proposed by this bill is that we shall equalize the powers of supervisors everywhere in the Union—make their power the same in the cities that it is in the country districts, the same for the democrat that it is for the republican, the same for the bond-holding, purse-proud man in the rural districts of New York that it is for the toiling masses in the city of New York, who have been denounced on the floor of Congress as thieves, scoundrels, and the very scum of the earth.

That is the full extent of the legislation here proposed—no more. Yet when we have proposed to equalize the power of supervisors it has been suddenly discovered that they are mere "stool-pigeons with their wings clipped." If they are stool-pigeons, we did not create them; the republican party created them, and at the same time that they made stool-pigeons with clipped wings to nestle gently at republican polls they created vultures with fierce beaks and sharpened talons to hover around democratic precincts and to tear the vitals of democratic voters.

We simply demand that the law shall be equalized. We leave the supervisors as we found them. We do not even change their pay, lest perchance it should be said that we recognized the constitutionality of their appointment, which we utterly deny. We leave them the same in the South that they are to-day, not because it is right, but because we do not desire to demand upon an appropriation bill anything that is not vital and immediately essential for the preservation of civil liberty. That is all there is in this bill as to supervisors of elections.

In response to my gallant democratic friend from Ohio [Mr. EWING] who paid such a handsome compliment to the South I have a word to say. There was a time when I as a southern democrat believed that the position of northern democrats in the war was hateful. But, sir, I have learned to believe that the time will come when the historian will write it down that the northern democrats were the truest patriots in this country. They imitated the example of their old leader, Andrew Jackson. It will be remembered that when on the plains of Florida the militia, claiming that their enlistment had expired, attempted to return home, "Old Hickory," with the old flag in his hand, rallied the volunteers and drove the militia back to their places. When upon the next occasion the volunteers undertook to leave, he, with that same old flag in his hand, rallied the militia and drove the volunteers back to their places. So, sir, the historian will say that when the southern democrats undertook to leave the Union, the gallant democrat of the North, with the old flag in his hand, rallied the republican party and drove them back into the Union.

When the war was closed and the republican party undertook to destroy the Constitution, history will say that the same gallant northern democracy, with the same flag in their hand, rallied the southern democrats and drove the republicans back to their duty. [Applause.] We, sir, in the South loved the Constitution more than the Union; the republican party loved the Union more than the Constitution; but it will be written in history that the gallant democracy of the North were the truest patriots of the land, and that they loved both the Union and the Constitution one and indivisible. [Great applause].

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Chairman, I agree with the sedate and pious gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HORR] who addressed us a few minutes ago in believing that the chief want of our country is quiet. I have so believed for years. As I have before told this committee, I strove by whatever personal influence I might exercise with the majority of the last Congress to avert this session, and had it been in my power I would have tempered the spirit in which the session was opened. When we were discussing whether the debate should be limited to brief speeches or whether ample time should be allowed I pleaded for the amplest time, that gentlemen on both sides might express themselves calmly and fully, and not be put to the necessity of belching forth the most passionate arguments or appeals that had occurred to them. I then said that by allowing ample debate the country would be enabled to discover how Pickwickian the cry of "revolution" was, and my prediction has been verified by the event. Gentlemen on both sides have made such patriotic utterances as will bind them in the future—utterances of which their constituents will take heed, and to which they will hold them. I had not intended to participate in this brief debate, and would not have done so had my name not been mentioned. But I do not intend that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] shall misrepresent me, even in a parenthetical ejaculation, and my purpose in rising now is simply to say that I never charged him with having asserted that to put riders on appropriation bills is revolutionary, because I could not believe that he so regarded it. When I spoke the gentleman's speech entitled "Revolution in Congress" lay before me, and I said:

The whole system of putting such riders on bills is, as I have said, vicious, and ought to be abandoned. But it is not revolutionary. And the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. GARFIELD,] whose speech lies before me, under the title of "Revolution in Congress," has experienced a thorough revolution in opinion since the 8th of June, 1872, if he now believes the practice to be revolutionary.

What I feared was, that from the title of his speech and by its general expressions those who should not have the opportunity of examining it thoroughly would believe that the distinguished leader of the republican party did regard such legislation as revolutionary.

Now, sir, the country needs quiet; and it cannot be quieted by agitation. I now go further than I went before, and I say that the gentleman has seized on the phrases of a Glendower or two, and charges them as the sedate opinion of the democratic party. When Glendower told Hotspur how the heavens had been illuminated and the earth had shaken at the moment of his birth, the answer was, "Yes; and had your mother's cat kittened in that self-same hour, and you not been born, the heavens would have blazed and the earth shaken." That is the spirit of the response which I believe the great mass of the democratic members of the House would have made to the Glendowers whose phrases the gentleman set forth as the basis of a new revolution. [Applause.]

Mr. MONEY. Mr. Chairman, it is not my intention to occupy the time of this House with any discussion of this question. It has been exhausted until it is tedious as a twice-told tale. But I ask attention for one moment until I answer certain questions that have been from time to time propounded by gentlemen on the other side of the House as to the reason why the Chisholm murderers have not been punished. This is a distasteful matter for me to bring before the House; but I feel it to be a duty to my constituents that I should state briefly, clearly, and explicitly the reason why these men have not been punished.

When the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WHITE] put the question to my colleague, [Mr. SINGLETON,] in a tone that seemed to assert there was no answer to it, I attempted to obtain the consent of the House for five minutes to make this explanation; but it was objected to by the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. CONGER,] who said that he had enough information on that subject and did not desire any more. Yes, Mr. Chairman; the gentleman from Michigan knows a great deal about that matter. The trouble with him is that he knows too much that is not true. It is the character, not the quantity, of his information that afflicts him. The gentleman also said that he wanted no further information. I do not know why he did not want it, unless it was that he did not desire to have his fancy trammeled by the facts of this mournful case.

In the October term, 1877, the first term of the circuit court held after the murder of Mr. Chisholm, the grand jury, after investigating the Chisholm case, found six indictments for the murder and twenty for the crime of being accessory to the murder. In the March term which succeeded, the district attorney having charge of the prosecution moved a continuance for the reason that witnesses material to the case of the prosecution were absent. Those material witnesses were the widow and the son of the murdered man. In the September term which followed the yellow fever prevailed all over the State of Mississippi; and the courts were pretermitted not only in that county, but in all the counties of my district, and I believe in every district in that State, except perhaps the first district. When the judge, in view of the public anxiety for the trial of these men for the murder of Mr. Chisholm, went despite the prevalence of the fever to hold his court in De Kalb County, he was petitioned by the board of health of the county, and the petition was signed by every member of the bar in the district, to adjourn the court until the next regular term. He did so in response to this petition.

When the next term of the court came in March, 1879, the prosecution again moved for a continuance, averring that witnesses material to the prosecution, Mrs. Chisholm and H. C. Chisholm, were absent. There have been two continuances—both of them at the request of the prosecution. These are the simple facts in that case. When the jury shall have had it under consideration, upon argument made, I do not doubt that they will return a verdict in accordance with the law and the facts.

I state these things because this case has been continually lugged into the debates on this floor as a matter of political capital. The facts have been continually misrepresented, and the character of the people of that community systematically and persistently maligned and traduced.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Chairman, possibly I would not have alluded to the circumstances of which I am about to speak, if the gentleman who has just taken his seat [Mr. MONEY] had not recalled what took place some days ago when the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SINGLETON] was upon the floor addressing the committee. He was indulging in some very impassioned remarks about the character of the people who belong to the republican party in the South, when I asked whether it was not considered respectable in the State of Mississippi for a man to be a republican. He replied:

Yes, sir; if he comes there and intends to be a republican without showing himself to be unworthy of citizenship.

I asked him again, "Would not the social ostracism make it very unpleasant to be a republican?" He replied:

Not at all, if he was a respectable man; but respectable northern men as soon as they reach the confines of the State become democrats because they see at once that all respectability is on that side.

Now, I find, Mr. Chairman, that the RECORD does not represent that colloquy in that way. I find the question, "Would not the social ostracism make it very unpleasant to be a republican?" entirely eliminated from the colloquy, and the answer to the first interrogatory reads in this way:

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. In Mississippi a man's respectability does not depend upon his political opinions, unless those opinions are carried into practice to bring about race antagonism and place the lives of our people in danger. It rarely happens that men of intelligence come to Mississippi and affiliate with any other than the democratic party.

Now, that was not the answer which I received from the experienced gentleman from Mississippi. The correct answer was the answer which was published in the prints of the day.

I asked further whether Judge Chisholm was not a respectable man. The reply was that Judge Chisholm was not killed on account of his politics, but on account of a family feud. Now, that was correct. The actual colloquy which occurred on that subject was that which I hold in my hand.

Mr. WHITE. Was Judge Chisholm a "respectable" citizen of Mississippi?

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. Yes, sir; and Judge Chisholm was not killed on account of any political opinions, but in consequence of a personal feud, as the gentleman ought to know, which had existed between two families long anterior to the death of Judge Chisholm.

Mr. WHITE. If he had not been a republican would he have been killed?

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. I presume he would. I knew the men who were engaged in that feud; they were all men of courage, who would not submit to an insult.

Mr. WHITE. Have the murderers of Judge Chisholm ever been punished or tried?

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. Now you are asking questions which I do not propose to answer.

Instead of that I find in the RECORD—

Mr. WHITE. Was not Judge Chisholm a respectable citizen; and was he not killed on account of his politital opinions?

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. I have never understood that he was killed on account of his political opinions. His death grew out of a family feud existing long anterior to his death.

Mr. WHITE. Would he have been killed except for those opinions?

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. I do not know. Any opinion upon that subject could amount to nothing more than speculation.

Mr. WHITE. Have the murderers of Judge Chisholm ever been punished or tried?

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. I think not. They have been indicted, and the trials were postponed at the last term of the court on account of the absence of Mrs. Chisholm, the chief witness for the State—and so on.

Now, Mr. Chairman, that is not the colloquy that took place at that time upon this floor. How the RECORD was altered, how my questions were changed, and how answers were given which I did not give, it is not for me at this moment to say.

I do not desire to make a point on any man, or to take advantage of any gentleman who sees fit to round off his remarks to complete a sentence; but I submit it is unfair to change a colloquy and to give it to the country in that way. The only reason I allude to the fact is because that was a great public calamity. I say now and here it was such a crime as the American Government should have taken notice of somehow. It was a political murder.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WARNER. Mr. Chairman, if the war speeches of 1861 have all been rehearsed, it is not too much perhaps to hope that a little time may be given by gentlemen on the other side to the consideration of the questions before the House on their merits. I mean no reflections on the speeches that have been made; many of them have been models of declamation, and I always did like speeches that had the stir of martial music about them—speeches that talked of shotted guns and smoking battle-fields. But I cannot help but reflect that I never heard one of them from a man who had spent the night before under a dog-tent or was fresh from a real battle-field. And I confess, without reservation, that I am no more in favor of the next war after having heard them than I was five weeks ago. I never did like war, and I am free to say that I am more opposed to it now that I know its utter fiendishness than before I had had any experience or it. I give due notice, therefore, that I shall favor the next war only on condition that it is limited strictly to those who want it; on the condition that they are to be the only combatants. I shall say little about it; indeed, if limited as I suggest, I do not think there will be much for anybody to say.

But I wish to say, in the few minutes I have, a few words touching the merits of the question of marshals and supervisors.

First. Whatever constitutional right the General Government may have, if it chooses to exercise it primarily over the election of Representatives to Congress, we deny the constitutional right to send United States officers into States where elections are being held under State laws and by State regulations, to interfere with or control such elections. In other words, we deny the right of United States officers to assume the execution of State laws. I think it but true to say that this proposition has not been squarely met and answered by the other side.

The distinguished gentleman from New Jersey in his able argument, in nearly all of which I heartily concur, did not meet this point, nor did my colleague from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER] in his argument yesterday meet it as I hoped he would.

Second. But if there were no constitutional objections, is this machinery of supervisors and deputy marshals calculated to secure free and fair elections? Is it not rather mere party machinery that will be used always by the party having control of it for its own perpetuation? What more is needed to enable the Executive to determine any general election? Suppose the House and the Senate were republican and the President a democrat, would gentlemen on the other side then contend for the continuance of this power? I will go as far as any one in support of proper regulations that have in view only the purity of the ballot box; that are in the interest alike of the party out of power and the party in power, and that will tend to secure everywhere, in fact, free and fair elections—a correct count and honest and true returns. But that is what the machinery constituted by the laws it is proposed to repeal does not afford, but on the contrary is made the very agency by which free and fair elections are thwarted. Proof of this is abundant. The public Treasury by this machinery is drawn upon for party uses. No; this machinery is in every aspect partisan, unnecessary, unwise, and ought not to be perpetuated.

Mr. VANCE. Mr. Chairman, on yesterday the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER] said that my colleague [Mr. STEELE] had failed to give a reason for the small vote in his district, and he also alluded to the smallness of the vote in my district, the eighth, as well as in those of my other colleagues, [Mr. SCALES and Mr. ARMFIELD.] I sought to obtain the floor at the time to ask the gentleman why he did not refer to the August election instead of the November election, but he declined to allow me to have the floor. I wish simply to state that we had two elections in 1878 in North Carolina. We had our State election in August, and there was a full "turn out." At the November election the vote was small, and the reason why it was small in my colleague's district, and in my district particularly, was because there was no opposition. I wish to call attention to this significant fact. The loss in votes, in a great measure, was in the strong democratic districts. No doubt but Mr. Waddell was defeated because the democrats did not vote.

I presume my friend intended to say there was something wrong down in those districts, and that the people were deterred from voting, and that it was necessary to send Federal supervisors there to look after the elections. Let me say to my friend, to the House, and to the country that that is quite a mistake, for there never was a more peaceful election. In fact, sir, it was quite too peaceful; there was not excitement enough to secure a full vote. Certainly no one, though, was deterred from voting.

Mr. KEIFER. That is what I object to. It was too peaceful.

Mr. VANCE. Sit down, my brother; you would not let me have a word yesterday. It was, no doubt, too peaceful for me. It would have been better if I had met with opposition so far as receiving a large vote was concerned.

My majority in 1872 was 2,500, in 1874 it was 4,500, and in 1876 it was nearly 9,000, and I believe my republican friends agreed that I should not have any opposition the last time lest it should be 16,000, and they therefore let me off. The fact is, and I regard it with pleasure, that I have been sustained by my republican constituents in the eighth district of North Carolina. They know that I am a clever fellow, [laughter,] and they know that I try to treat them right, and that I came here to sustain the Constitution of the United States as far as I am able. I came here in the interest of my own people—the people of my own district, of the citizens of North Carolina, and in the interest of this great country with its forty-five millions of inhabitants, and I am glad to say on the floor of the House that I have voted from conscientious motives all the time, and I have sincerely and truly desired from first to last that in the humble homes of the poor as well as in the palatial residences of the rich there should be peace and prosperity throughout our great country.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. VANCE. Do you want me to quit?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. VANCE. I should have liked to talk a little more, but I must submit.

Mr. ATKINS. The order made by the House was, I believe, that all debate should close at two o'clock. I had not expected to say anything at all upon this subject, and until half an hour ago I was still of that opinion. But in glancing over a RECORD shown to me by a friend I noticed the following statement in a speech by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. SHALLENBERGER:]

> Here was a special election separate and distinct from a State election, where United States officers alone were to be elected, an election which was to be accepted by the people of a State as deciding the momentous question of union or disunion, peace or war, and yet the democratic doctrine upon this floor to-day affirms that the United States is and should be uttterly powerless under the Constitution to protect those polls against the high crimes of Tennessee by and through which the majority of that State were forbidden by armed interference at the polls to hold the State loyal to the old flag.

This is the first time, Mr. Chairman, that I have ever risen upon this floor to defend the State of Tennessee from any charge of disloyalty or to attempt to defend the South. It is not my purpose now to attempt any defense. If the course which the members from that State have pursued for the last eight years since they have been readmitted upon this floor is not an evidence of their loyalty to the Union, I can add nothing to the general judgment in that respect. But I want to contradict, right here and now, the statement that during the year 1861 there were any troops in Tennessee who prevented any man from voting at the polls. I know of no instance, and if there is a member from Tennessee upon the floor to-day, be he republican or democrat, who knows of any instance where any man was refused the right to vote or to express his sentiments on the day when Tennessee separated or voted to separate from the Union, I am willing to yield to him and invite him now to make the announcement.

Mr. HOUSE. Who makes that statement?

Mr. ATKINS. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SHALLENBERGER] makes it. He speaks of—

> The high crimes of Tennessee, by and through which the majority of that State were forbidden, by armed interference at the polls, to hold the State loyal to the old flag.

Alluding to the election of 1861.

Mr. HOUSE. There is not a word of truth in that statement.

Mr. ATKINS. No, there is not a word of truth in it, and it was to say so that I rose. Now I wish to say I was in camp on that day, the day on which Tennessee voted to separate from the Union, at a place in the western portion of the State. There thousands of votes were polled on that day. The soldiers voted as well as the citizens. There was one vote it is true, and only one, against separation. But there was one who cast his vote against it, and that man marched to the polls and deposited his ballot without any challenge from any man. Now, sir, I state kindly and respectfully to my friend from Pennsylvania, who has made the statement doubtless believing it to be true, that there is not one solitary word of truth in it. If there is, it occurred without my knowledge and has occurred without the knowledge of any of my colleagues.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Does the gentleman desire to know the authority upon which I made that statement?

Mr. ATKINS. I do not care a cent who the author of that statement is. I do not believe there is one word of truth in it.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. The democratic candidate for the Presidency was my authority.

Mr. ATKINS. You allude to Mr. Greeley, I suppose?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I do.

Mr. ATKINS. I am not here to impeach Mr. Greeley. But that has nothing to do with it. The statement may have been made in some document got out over Mr. Greeley's name, and Mr. Greeley might or might not have been responsible for it.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER rose.

Mr. ATKINS. I decline to yield further.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. If Mr. Greeley is not responsible, I give the Louisville Journal of June 13, 1861, and others, including Andrew Johnson, of Tennessee.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee declines to yield and the gentleman from Pennsylvania is not in order.

Mr. WHITE. The gentleman from Pennsylvania should be allowed to give his authority.

The CHAIRMAN rapped to order.

Mr. WHITE. I rise to a question of privilege.

Mr. ATKINS. I have but one minute; but if it will appease the gentleman I will yield it to him.

Mr. WHITE. We do not want to be appeased. We want fair play. My colleague wants to give his authority.

Mr. ATKINS. I thought he had given it. Let us not wrangle any more about this matter.

Mr. WHITE. Andrew Johnson is the authority, and I could bring all the Union men of East Tennessee to make good the assertion that Tennessee was bulldozed out of the Union in 1861.

Mr. DIBRELL. The statement is not true. I was a Union candidate, in February, 1861, for the convention, and a Union man up till the time that the war commenced, and I say there never was a fairer election held in that State.

Mr. WHITE. What the gentleman states is not so.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. WHITE. I lived in Tennessee myself——

The CHAIRMAN rapped repeatedly to order.

Mr. ATKINS. I know that my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. WHITE] is perfectly irrepressible, and I think the best way for the House to do is to humor him and let him go on. He acts very much like a spoiled child. There is a Union man upon this floor from Tennessee. He was a Union boy during the war. He is descended from Union parents. His father was a distinguished member of Congress at one time. He was a distinguished man in Tennessee. I have never had one word of conference with my colleague on this subject, [Mr. TAYLOR,] but I am willing now for that gentleman to rise and state in his place whether the people of Tennessee were bulldozed out of the Union by force of arms at the election in 1861.

Sir, we have the authority of Mr. Brownlow that in East Tennessee 30,000 votes were cast against secession, while only 3,000 were cast in favor of it. Does that look much like bulldozing? I will now yield to my colleague, [Mr. TAYLOR.]

Mr. TAYLOR rose. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The time has arrived at which by order of the House all debate upon this bill must cease.

Mr. FINLEY. I desire to call attention to the courtesy which has been extended by this side of the House and which is not reciprocated by the other side.

Mr. HOUSE. I think that unanimous consent might be given that my colleague [Mr. TAYLOR] might be heard.

Mr. ATKINS. I have never asked any favors of the other side of the House and I never intend to ask them, and I will grant very few hereafter.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate upon the bill and amendments is closed by order of the House, and the first question is upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. GARFIELD.]

The Clerk read Mr. GARFIELD's amendment, as follows:

Strike out all from and commencing with line 2006 down to and including line 2064, as follows:

Provided, That the per diem pay of each juror, grand or petit, in any court of the United States, shall be $2, and that the last clause of section 800 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, which refers to the State of Pennsylvania, and sections 801, 820, and 821, of the Revised Statutes of the United States, are hereby repealed; and that all such jurors, grand and petit, including those summoned during the session of the court, shall be publicly drawn from a box containing the names of not less than three hundred persons, possessing the qualifications prescribed in section 800 of the Revised Statutes, which names shall have been placed therein by the clerk of such court and a commissioner, to be appointed by the judge thereof, which commissioner shall be a citizen residing in the district in which such court is held, of good standing and a well-known member of the principal political party opposing that to which the clerk may belong, the clerk and said commissioner each to place one name in said box alternately until the whole number required shall be placed therein. But nothing herein contained shall be construed to prevent any judge in a district in which such is now the practice from ordering the names of jurors to be drawn from the boxes used by the State authorities in selecting jurors in the highest courts of the State; and no person shall serve as a petit juror more than one term in any one year, and all juries to serve in courts after the passage of this act shall be drawn in conformity herewith. All general and special laws in conflict herewith are hereby repealed: And provided further, That the following sections of the Revised Statutes of the United States, namely, sections 2016, 2018, and 2020, and all of the succeeding sections of said statutes down to and including section 2027, and also section 5522, be, and the same are hereby, repealed; and that section 2017 be amended by striking out of the first line thereof as printed in the Revised Statutes the words "and required"; and that section 2019 be amended by striking out of said section in lines 11 and 12 as printed in the Revised Statutes the words "for the purpose of engaging in the work of canvassing the ballots," and by striking out from line 13 of said section as printed in said statutes the words "in respect to such canvass."

That section 2028 be amended by striking out in lines 1 and 2 of said section as printed in the Revised Statutes the words "or a deputy marshal," and by striking out in line 3 of said section as printed in said statutes the words "city, town, county, parish." That all of section 2031 of said statutes, except so much thereof as relates to the pay of supervisors of elections, and that all other sections of the Revised Statutes and all laws and parts of laws authorizing the appointment of chief supervisors of elections, special or general deputy marshals of elections, and prescribing their duties and powers and allowing them compensation, be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

Mr. WEAVER. I offer the following as an amendment to the amendment:

Strike out all after the word "repeal," in line 2035, on page 83 of the bill, down to and including line 2064, upon page 84, as follows:

And provided further, That the following sections of the Revised Statutes of the United States, namely, sections 2016, 2018, and 2020, and all of the succeeding sections of said statutes down to and including section 2027, and also section 5522, be, and the same are hereby, repealed; and that section 2017 be amended by striking out of the first line thereof as printed in the Revised Statutes the words "and required;" and that section 2019 be amended by striking out of said section in lines 11 and 12, as printed in the Revised Statutes, the words "for the purpose of engaging in the work of canvassing the ballots," and by striking out from line 13 of said section as printed in said statutes, the words "in respect to such canvass."

That section 2028 be amended by striking out in lines 1 and 2 of said section as printed in the Revised Statutes, the words "or a deputy marshal," and by striking out in line 3 of said section as printed in said statutes the words "city, town, county, parish." That all of section 2031 of said statutes, except so much thereof as relates to the pay of supervisors of elections, and that all other sections of the Revised Statutes and all laws and parts of laws authorizing the appointment of chief supervisors of elections, special or general deputy marshals of elections, and prescribing their duties and powers and allowing them compensation, be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

Mr. FRYE. Is not that the same amendment as the one offered by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. GARFIELD?]

Mr. WEAVER. It is not the same amendment.

Mr. FRYE. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. Is the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER] an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. GARFIELD,] or does he offer it as a substitute for that amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] is now proposed to be amended by the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. WEAVER,] and the Clerk will again report the two amendments.

Mr. GARFIELD. I think I can save time by stating that my amendment strikes out the whole proviso, and the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa strikes out only that part which relates to marshals and supervisors, but does not touch the jurors. That is the state of the case.

The question was taken upon Mr. WEAVER's amendment to the amendment, and it was not agreed to.

The question recurred upon Mr. GARFIELD's amendment.

Mr. GARFIELD. Upon that amendment I ask for tellers.

Mr. SPRINGER. Is this an amendment to strike out the whole proviso in reference to jurors and supervisors both?

The CHAIRMAN. For the information of the committee the Clerk will again report the amendment.

The Clerk again read the amendment.

Mr. SPRINGER. I would ask whether it is the practice in Committee of the Whole upon a vote by tellers for members who are paired not to vote?

Mr. GARFIELD. I suppose that depends upon the understanding between the parties who are paired. In ordinary cases a pair only covers votes taken by yeas and nays.

Mr. SPRINGER. Is it not understood that a pair is a pair upon every question?

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. Undoubtedly.

The CHAIRMAN. It is not in the province of the Chair to answer as to what arrangement or agreement shall have been made by individual members. It is a mere question which commends itself to the understanding and honor of each gentleman who has made a pair. It is not for the Chair to determine how far a pair may extend.

Mr. GARFIELD. It is a question for each gentleman who has made a pair to determine.

Mr. SPRINGER. I understood that a pair is a pair upon every question, either a rising vote, a vote by tellers, a vote by yeas and nays; otherwise the pair would be of no avail in Committee of the Whole.

The CHAIRMAN. That is a question upon which the Chair has no right to decide at all.

Mr. SPRINGER. We may as well understand this matter of pairs alike upon both sides of the House.

Mr. FRYE. Is the vote now upon the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] or on the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. WEAVER?]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the amendment of gentleman from Iowa has been lost, and the question now is upon the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. GARFIELD.]

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. GARFIELD and Mr. ATKINS were appointed.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 124, noes 138.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

During the taking of the vote,

Mr. FORSYTHE said: I have voted in the affirmative inadvertently and I now withdraw my vote, being paired with the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. LADD.]

Mr. SPRINGER. I move an amendment, with the consent of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, [Mr. ATKINS,] to correct a verbal error. In line 2062 of the bill strike out the words "or general;" and in the same line, after the word "elections," insert "or general deputy marshals having any duties to perform in respect to any election;" so that it will read as follows:

That all of section 2031 of said statutes, except so much thereof as relates to the pay of supervisors of elections, and that all other sections of the Revised Statutes and all laws and parts of laws authorizing the appointment of chief supervisors of elections, special deputy marshals of elections, or general deputy marshals having any duties to perform in respect to any election, and prescribing their duties and powers and allowing them compensation, be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DIBRELL. I desire to offer an amendment as a substitute for one which was adopted on page 29 of the bill.

Mr. ATKINS. I ask unanimous consent to go back for the purpose of amending the bill in certain particulars, which I think ought to be done for the good of the service. The amendment proposed by my colleague [Mr. DIBRELL] modifying the action already taken by the Committee of the Whole in relation to storekeepers, reducing their salaries, I think will meet the approbation of the House. I ask unanimous consent to go back for the purpose of considering that and certain other amendments which I desire to offer.

Mr. FORT. The gentleman alludes to storekeepers?

Mr. ATKINS. That is one amendment.

Mr. GARFIELD. With the limitation made by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations I do not object.

Mr. ATKINS. I am not willing to open the bill to other amendments.

Mr. GARFIELD. There is no objection, I think.

There being no objection, the request of Mr. ATKINS was granted.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment sent up by the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. DIBRELL.]

The amendment was to insert the following in lieu of an amendment adopted on page 29 after line 702:

Provided, That hereafter storekeepers at distilleries that mash less than sixty bushels of grain per day shall be allowed not exceeding $50 per month; but when one person acts as storekeeper and gauger his salary shall not exceed $4 per day for the time actually employed.

Mr. DIBRELL. I have submitted that amendment to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and it meets his approbation entirely.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I desire to ask a parliamentary question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. Should this amendment fail, will it leave the bill as it now stands in regard to storekeepers?

The CHAIRMAN. If this amendment is not agreed to it will leave the bill in its present shape.

Mr. ATKINS. It is a modification of the amendment already adopted reducing the salaries of storekeepers from $100 per month to $50 per month. If this amendment should fail the other amendment will stand.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. If this should fail, I understand the bill would remain as reported.

Mr. ATKINS. No; the other amendment has already been adopted.

The amendment of Mr. DIBRELL was then agreed to.

Mr. ATKINS. I have an amendment to offer on page 11 of the bill: in line 253 strike out "twenty-four" and insert "thirty-five;" and in lines 254 and 255 strike out "$30,543" and insert "$44,100;" so that the paragraph will read:

For thirty-five clerks to committees, at $6 per day during the session, $44,100.

The object of that amendment is to make the number of the committee clerks of the House conform to the report made by the Committe of Accounts a few days ago, and which was adopted by the House.

Mr. GARFIELD. That is all right.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ATKINS. I move to amend, on page 25 of the printed bill in line 586, by striking out "ninety" and inserting "eighty," and to amend the total of the paragraph so as to read "$74,800." This is simply a reduction of the number of nine-hundred-dollar clerks in the office of the Treasurer of the United States, reducing the number from ninety to eighty, and it is made at his suggestion.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ATKINS. I move to amend on page 39 of the bill by inserting after the word "dollars," in line 954, the words "for purchasing books, periodicals, and pamphlets containing information relative to monetary questions, $200;" so that the paragraph will read:

For contingent expenses of the United States mints and assay offices, namely: For specimens of coins, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, $200; for books, balances, and weights, and other incidental expenses, $800; for purchasing books, periodicals, and pamphlets containing information relative to monetary questions, $200; and refining and parting of bullion shall be carried on at the mints of the United States and at the assay office at New York, &c.

That is for the purchase of books for the office of the Director of the Mint, which I think is necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ATKINS. On page 42, in line 1011, strike out "$7,500" and insert "$10,000;" also, in line 1020, strike out "$3,000" and insert "$6,000;" also, in line 1059, on page 44 of the bill, strike out "$7,500" and insert "$12,000;" also, in line 1062, strike out "$5,515" and insert "$15,000;" and in line 1069, strike out "$2,000" and insert "$6,000;" and in line 1077, strike out all of said line to the end of the paragraph and insert "$1,000; in all, $3,500."

The paragraphs as proposed to be amended were as follows:

Mint at Denver, Colorado:
For salaries of assayer in charge, $10,000; melter, $2,250; for assistant assayer, $1,400; two clerks, at $1,600 each; one clerk, $1,400; in all, $10,750.
For wages of workmen, $7,500.
For fuel, lights, acids, chemicals, crucibles, repairs, and other necessaries, $6,000.

Assay-office at Helena, Montana:
For salaries of assayer in charge, $2,500; and of melter, $2,250; and one clerk of class 1; in all, $5,950.
For wages of workmen, $12,000.
For fuel, crucibles, chemicals, light, and other incidental expenses, $15,000.

Assay-office at Boisé City, Idaho Territory:
For salary of assayer, who shall also perform the duties of melter, $2,000; one clerk, $1,000.
For wages of workmen, fuel, crucibles, chemicals, and repairs, and other incidental expenses, $6,000.

Assay office at Charlotte, North Carolina:
For salary of assayer in charge, who shall also perform the duties of melter, $1,500; and the assayer is hereby authorized in case of necessity to employ a clerk at not exceeding $1,000 per annum; for labor and other expenses, $1,000; in all $3,500.

Mr. ATKINS. These amendments are intended to supply the Mint department with larger appropriations than are embraced in this bill. The Director of the Mint has addressed a letter to this House, which has been referred to the Committee on Appropriations, asking for additional appropriations over and above those originally included in this bill and those which were originally estimated for. He says it is necessary to have this additional amount for the purpose of carrying on the mints for the coming fiscal year.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. ATKINS. On page 52 of the bill I move to amend in line 1268 by striking out all of the paragraph after the word "bureau;" as follows:

And the entire clerical force, six excepted, now employed on the Medical and Surgical History of the War shall be employed on the work necessary to the prompt payment of pensions.

That relates to the Surgeon-General's Office. Under the law six clerks only are allowed to work on the Medical and Surgical History of the War in order to complete it. The Surgeon-General desires that that restriction shall be removed, and, yesterday I believe it was, the Committee on Appropriations concurred in that suggestion.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ATKINS. I also offer the following amendment:

On page 55, after line 1345, insert, as a new paragraph, the following:
For eight charwomen, to be employed in the office of the Secretary of War, in the new State, War, and Navy Department building, at $180 per annum each, $1,440; for four watchmen, two firemen, and one laborer in the part of the Adjutant-General's Office to be located on the first and second floors of the old Navy Department building; in all, $4,980. For contingent expenses of the Adjutant-General's Office, in the old Navy Department building, including fuel, light, heating apparatus, matting, cleaning, labor, and incidental items of care of two floors of Navy Department building to be occupied by Adjutant-General's Office, $2,000.

This amendment merely provides for additional force, made necessary in consequence of the removal from the old into the new War Department building.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ATKINS. I offer also the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 61, in line 1479, after the word "hundred" insert the word "fifty."
In line 1480, strike out the word "four," where it first occurs, and insert "six."
In line 1482, strike out "four" and insert "five."
In lines 1486-7, strike out "96,320" and insert "100,690."
On page 62, in line 1510 strike out "twenty-five" and insert "thirty."
In lines 1513 and 1514 strike out $2,500 and insert $5,000.

Mr. ATKINS. This amendment provides for two additional clerks of class 4, deemed necessary by the Secretary of the Interior on account of the increased number of appeals that have been made from the Pension Office to the Interior Department. It also provides for an assistant messenger. It appropriates $5,000 additional for stationary. Only $25,000 was granted last year, and there was a deficiency. It also appropriates $25,000 for casual repairs of the Interior Department building. There has been no appropriation for that purpose within the last three or four years, and I have no doubt this amount is needed.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ATKINS. I move also the following amendment:

After line 1592 on page 65 insert:
To enable the Secretary of the Interior to pay the expenses incurred by the Committee of the National Academy of Sciences during their consideration of the scientific surveys of the Territories, $300.

At the last session of Congress a clause of this kind which had been inserted in the sundry civil appropriation bill by the committee of conference was by accident omitted in the enrollment. The amendment proposes simply to pay the expenses of the National Academy of Sciences while engaged in making a report in reference to geological surveys, in accordance with a resolution of Congress. I hope there will be no objection.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ATKINS. I now move that the committee rise and report the bill to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BLACKBURN reported that the Committe of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the bill (H. R. No. 2) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes, and had directed him to report back the same with sundry amendments and with a recommendation that it be passed.

Mr. ATKINS. I now demand the previous question on the amendments to the legislative appropriation bill.

Mr. BRAGG. I ask the gentleman from Tennessee before he moves the previous question to permit me to offer an amendment to strike out the provision for the commissioners of southern claims.

Mr. ATKINS. If I were acting in my own capacity at this time, I would do so. It is true that I presented this bill without having been authorized to report it from any committee; but I am now acting as chairman of the Committee on Appropriations and I do not feel that I would be doing justice to the committee if I should assent to the gentleman's request.

Mr. GARFIELD. I ask unanimous consent that the yeas and nays may be taken on my motion to strike out the political legislation, extending from lines 2006 to 2064.

Several members objected.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. ATKINS moved to reconsider the vote by which the main question was ordered; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Chair asks that gentlemen now indicate the amendments upon which they desire separate votes; upon the others the question will be put in gross.

Mr. HUBBELL. I ask for a separate vote upon the amendment striking out, in the paragraph relating to photolithographing for the Patent Office, the words "and in the city of Washington, if it can be done there at reasonable rates."

Mr. GARFIELD. I again ask unanimous consent that a vote be taken by yeas and nays on striking out the political provisions embraced in the bill.

The SPEAKER. That request has been declined.

Mr. GARFIELD. I know, but I ask it again.

Several members objected.

Mr. ATKINS. I demand a separate vote on the proposition to increase the appropriations for the distribution and purchase of seed by the Agricultural Department.

Mr. STEVENSON. I object to any separate vote unless we can have a vote on the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin, [Mr. BRAGG.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has no right to object. It is the right of any member to have a separate vote on any amendments reported from the Committee of the Whole. Such a vote has been asked on two amendments. If there be no objection, the other amendments will be regarded as agreed to.

There was no objection.

Mr. ATKINS moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendments were agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The first question was upon the following amendment, on which a separate vote had been asked by Mr. HUBBELL:

In the paragraph relative to photolithographing for the Patent Office strike out, in lines 1703, 1704, and 1705, the words "and in the city of Washington, if it can there be done at reasonable rates," and insert in lieu thereof the following: "wherever it can be done at reasonable rates to the satisfaction of the Commissioner."

Mr. HUBBELL. I merely wish to say——

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order.

The amendment was agreed to; there being ayes 160, noes not counted.

Mr. ATKINS moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The next question was upon the following amendment, upon which a separate vote had been asked by Mr. ATKINS:

Strike out lines 1907 to 1915, inclusive, as amended, and insert the following:

For the purchase and propagation, as required by law, of seeds, trees, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants, $70,000; for parceling, packing, and distributing the same, $30,000: Provided further, That the Commissioner shall be required, and he is hereby instructed, to accompany his next annual estimate of the expenses of the Department of Agriculture with an itemized report of the quantity of seeds and plants purchased during the fiscal year for which this appropriation is made, the date of said purchases, the prices paid, and from whom said seeds and plants were purchased, and to whom distributed, and in what quantities, a reasonable and equal proportion of which seed shall be supplied for distribution among their constituencies to Members and Delegates in Congress when requested; provided no part of said sum shall be paid to salaried employés in said Department.

Mr. MILLS. The word "reasonable" was stricken out of that amendment as mere surplusage.

Mr. WHITE. I suggest to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS] that the language is all right as it stands. The proportion is to be "reasonable," and that reasonable proportion is to be distributed "equally."

Mr. MILLS. An amendment was made correcting the error of the language in this respect.

Mr. WHITE. I wish to ask a parliamentary question. I ask the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. ATKINS,] through the Chair, upon what he desires a separate vote—on the amount merely, or on the entire clause?

Mr. ATKINS. On the amendment of the gentleman from South Carolina.

The SPEAKER. The only way to get any part out is to strike it all out.

Mr. ATKINS. That will leave the bill as it was.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 158, noes 39.

Mr. ATKINS demanded the yeas and nays.

Cries of "No!" "No!" on the republican side.

Mr. ATKINS. I demand them, as I wish to see who it is will vote for the amendment.

The House divided; and there were ayes 16, not one-fifth of the last vote.

So the yeas and nays were refused.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DE LA MATYR moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. ATKINS demanded the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. ELAM and Mr. FRYE demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 141, nays 120, not voting 25; as follows:

YEAS—141.

Acklen,	Armfield,	Atkins,	Beale,
Aiken,	Atherton,	Backman,	Beltzhoover,
Bicknell,	Felton,	Manning,	Singleton, O. R.
Blackburn,	Finley,	Martin, Benj. F.	Slemons,
Bliss,	Forney,	Martin, Edward L.	Smith, Hezekiah B.
Bragg,	Frost,	McKenzie,	Smith, William E.
Bright,	Geddes,	McLane,	Sparks,
Buckner,	Gibson,	McMillin,	Speer,
Cabell,	Gillette,	Mills,	Springer,
Caldwell,	Goode,	Money,	Steele,
Carlisle,	Gunter,	Morrison,	Stephens,
Chalmers,	Hammond, N. J.	Muldrow,	Stevenson,
Clardy,	Harris, John T.	Muller,	Talbott,
Clark, Alvah A.	Hatch,	Murch,	Thompson,
Clark, John B., jr.	Henkle,	Myers,	Tillman,
Clymer,	Henry,	New,	Townshend, R. W.
Cobb,	Herbert,	Nicholls,	Tucker,
Coffroth,	Herndon,	O'Connor,	Turner, Oscar
Colerick,	Hill,	O'Reilly,	Turner, Thomas
Converse,	Hostetler,	Persons,	Vance,
Cook,	House,	Phelps,	Waddill,
Covert,	Hull,	Phister,	Warner,
Cravens,	Hunton,	Poehler,	Weaver,
Culberson,	Hurd,	Reagan,	Wellborn,
Davidson,	Johnston,	Richardson, John S.	Whiteaker,
Davis, Joseph J.	Jones,	Richmond,	Whitthorne,
Davis, Lowndes H.	Kenna,	Robertson,	Williams, Thomas
De La Matyr,	Kimmel,	Ross,	Willis,
Deuster,	King,	Rothwell,	Wise,
Dibrell,	Kitchin,	Ryon, John W.	Wood, Fernando
Dickey,	Klotz,	Samford,	Wright,
Dunn,	Knott,	Sawyer,	Yocum,
Elam,	Le Fevre,	Scales,	Young, Casey.
Ellis,	Lewis,	Shelley,
Evins,	Lounsbery,	Simonton,
Ewing,	Lowe,	Singleton, James W.

NAYS—120.

Aldrich, Nelson W.	Daggett,	Joyce,	Reed,
Aldrich, William	Davis, George R.	Keifer,	Rice,
Anderson,	Deering,	Kelley,	Richardson, D. P.
Bailey,	Dunnell,	Ketcham,	Robinson.
Baker,	Dwight,	Killinger,	Russell, William A.
Barber,	Errett,	Lapham,	Ryan, Thomas
Barlow,	Farr,	Lindsey,	Sapp,
Bayne,	Ferdon,	Loring,	Shallenberger,
Belford,	Field,	Marsh,	Sherwin,
Bingham,	Fisher,	Martin, Joseph J.	Smith, A. Herr
Blake,	Ford,	Mason,	Starin,
Bowman,	Fort,	McCoid,	Thomas,
Boyd,	Frye,	McCook,	Townsend, Amos
Brewer,	Garfield,	McGowan,	Tyler,
Briggs,	Godshalk,	McKinley,	Updegraff, J. T.
Brigham,	Hall,	Miles,	Updegraff, Thomas
Browne,	Hammond, John	Miller,	Urner,
Burrows,	Harmer,	Mitchell,	Valentine,
Butterworth,	Harris, Benj. W.	Monroe,	Van Aernim,
Calkins,	Haskell,	Morton,	Van Voorhis,
Camp,	Hawk,	Neal,	Voorhis,
Cannon,	Hawley,	Newberry,	Wait,
Carpenter,	Hayes,	Norcross,	Ward,
Caswell,	Heilman,	O'Neill,	Washburn,
Chittenden,	Henderson,	Osmer,	White,
Claflin,	Hiscock,	Overton,	Wilber,
Clark, Rush	Hubbell,	Pierce,	Williams, C. G.
Conger,	Humphrey,	Pound,	Willits,
Cowgill,	James,	Prescott,	Wood, Walter A.
Crapo,	Jorgensen,	Price,	Young, Thomas L.

NOT VOTING—25.

Ballou,	Einstein,	Lay,	Stone,
Bland,	Forsythe,	McMahon,	Taylor,
Blount,	Hazelton,	Morse,	Wells,
Bouck,	Hooker,	O'Brien,	Wilson.
Cox,	Horr,	Orth,
Crowley,	Houk,	Robeson,
Dick,	Ladd,	Russell, Daniel L.

So the bill was passed.

During the vote,

Mr. MCKENZIE said: I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Which party has voted to starve the Government to death? [Laughter and applause.]

The SPEAKER. The country will decide that.

Mr. TAYLOR. I am paired with my colleague, Mr. HOUK. If he were present, I would vote in the affirmative.

Mr. WRIGHT. I have been requested to announce that Mr. LADD is paired with Mr. FORSYTHE.

Mr. BRAGG. My colleague, Mr. BOUCK, is paired with Mr. HORR. If present, Mr. BOUCK would vote in the affirmative.

Mr. FORSYTHE. I am paired with Mr. LADD.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. My colleague, Mr. CROWLEY, is paired with Mr. BLOUNT, of Georgia. If present, Mr. CROWLEY would vote in the negative.

Mr. HORR. I am paired with Mr. BOUCK, of Wisconsin. I should like to vote "no," and I strongly suspect if the gentleman from Wisconsin were here he would vote "ay."

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. My colleague, Mr. MORSE, is paired with Mr. STONE, of Michigan. My colleague would vote "ay" and Mr. STONE "no."

Mr. EINSTEIN. I am paired with my colleague from New York, Mr. O'BRIEN. If he were here, I should vote "no."

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin. My colleague, Mr. HAZELTON, is paired with Mr. COX, of New York. Mr. HAZELTON would vote "no" and Mr. COX would vote "ay."

Mr. ALDRICH, of Rhode Island. My colleague, Mr. BALLOU, is paired with the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. MCMAHON. If present, Mr. BALLOU would vote "no" and Mr. MCMAHON would vote "ay."

Mr. ROBESON. I am paired with Mr. HOOKER, of Mississippi. If present, he would vote "ay" and I should vote "no."

Mr. ORTH. I am paired with Mr. WILSON, of West Virginia. He would vote for the bill and I against it.

Mr. RUSSELL, of North Carolina. I am paired with Mr. BLAND, of Missouri. If he were present, he would vote "ay" and I should vote "no."

Mr. WHITE. My colleague from Pennsylvania, Mr. DICK, is absent, sick. He is paired with the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. LAY.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. ATKINS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT OVER.

Mr. ATKINS. I move that when the House adjourns to-day, it adjourn to meet on Wednesday next.

Mr. HUNTON. I desire to state that, by order of the House, the business of the District of Columbia was assigned for Monday at two o'clock.

The SPEAKER. Pending the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HUNTON] asks unanimous consent that instead of Monday the District Committee may have Wednesday at two o'clock.

Mr. HUNTON. That is, if the House adjourns over till Wednesday. I hope the House will only adjourn over till Tuesday.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. GARFIELD. I would suggest to the gentleman from Tennessee that instead of moving to adjourns over till Wednesday he should say Tuesday.

Mr. ATKINS. I am willing to modify my resolution in that way if the House so desires.

Many MEMBERS. No! No!

The question being taken on agreeing to the motion of Mr. ATKINS that when the House adjourns it be to meet on Wednesday next, there were—ayes 115, noes 105.

Mr. RICHMOND. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. ATKINS. I have no objection, so far as I am concerned, to say Tuesday.

The SPEAKER. It is a question for the House to determine.

Mr. SPRINGER. Is it in order to move to amend by inserting Tuesday?

The SPEAKER. The House is dividing.

The yeas and nays were ordered, forty-seven members voting therefor; more than one-fifth of the last vote.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 91, nays 162, not voting 33; as follows:

YEAS—91.

Armfield,	Cowgill,	Horr,	Richardson, D. P.
Atkins,	Crapo,	House,	Robinson,
Bachman,	Cravens,	Hurd,	Ross,
Bailey,	Daggett,	James,	Ryan, Thomas
Barber,	Davis, George R.	Jorgensen,	Ryon, John W.
Barlow,	Deuster,	Killinger,	Sapp,
Bayne,	Dunn,	Kimmel,	Shallenberger,
Bicknell,	Dwight,	Knott,	Smith, A. Herr
Bingham,	Errett,	Lapham,	Smith, William E.
Blake,	Evins,	Lounsbery,	Talbott,
Bliss,	Ferdon,	Marsh,	Urner,
Bowman,	Field,	Martin, Edward L.	Van Aernam,
Brewer,	Finley,	Mason,	Van Voorhis,
Briggs,	Fort,	McGowan,	Voorhis,
Browne,	Godshalk,	Miller,	Wait,
Burrows,	Gunter,	Morrison,	Ward,
Butterworth,	Hammond, John	Newberry,	Washburne,
Calkins,	Harmer,	Norcross,	White,
Cannon,	Harris, Benj. W.	O'Neill,	Whiteaker,
Carlisle,	Haskell,	O'Reilly,	Willits,
Clark, Alvah A.	Hawk,	Osmer,	Wood, Fernando
Cook,	Hayes,	Poehler,	Wood, Walter A.
Covert,	Hiscock,	Rice,

NAYS—162.

Acklen,	Converse,	Goode,	Le Fevre,
Aiken,	Culberson,	Hall,	Lewis,
Aldrich, Nelson W.	Davidson,	Hammond, N. J.	Lindsey,
Aldrich, William	Davis, Joseph J.	Hatch,	Lowe,
Anderson,	Davis, Lowndes H.	Hawley,	Manning,
Atherton,	De La Matyr,	Heilman,	Martin, Benj. F.
Beale,	Deering,	Henderson,	Martin, Joseph J.
Blackburn,	Dibrell,	Henkle,	McCoid,
Bragg,	Dickey,	Henry,	McCook,
Brigham,	Dunnell,	Herbert,	McKenzie,
Bright,	Einstein,	Herndon,	McKinley,
Buckner,	Elam,	Hill,	McMillin,
Cabell,	Ellis,	Hostetler,	Miles,
Caldwell,	Ewing,	Hubbell,	Mills,
Camp,	Farr,	Hull,	Mitchell,
Carpenter,	Felton,	Humphrey,	Money,
Caswell,	Fisher,	Hunton,	Monroe,
Chalmers,	Ford,	Johnston,	Morton,
Claflin,	Forney,	Jones,	Muldrow,
Clardy,	Forsythe,	Joyce,	Muller,
Clark, John B., jr.	Frost,	Keifer,	Murch,
Clymer,	Frye,	Kelley,	Myers,
Cobb,	Garfield,	Kenna,	Neal,
Coffroth,	Geddes,	Ketcham,	New,
Colerick,	Gibson,	King,	O'Connor,
Conger,	Gillette,	Kitchin,	Overton,
Persons,	Samford,	Stevenson,	Warner,
Phelps,	Sawyer,	Thomas,	Weaver,
Phister,	Scales,	Thompson,	Wellborn,
Pierce,	Shelley,	Tillman,	Whitthorne,
Pound,	Sherwin,	Townsend, Amos	Wilber,
Prescott,	Simonton,	Townshend, R. W.	Williams, C. G.
Price,	Singleton, J. W.	Tucker,	Williams, Thomas
Reagan,	Singleton, O. R.	Turner, Oscar	Willis,
Reed,	Smith, Hezekiah B.	Turner, Thomas	Wise,
Richardson, John S	Sparks,	Tyler,	Wright,
Richmond,	Speer,	Updegraff, J. T.	Yocum,
Robertson,	Springer,	Updegraff, Thomas	Young, Casey
Rothwell,	Starin,	Valentine,	Young, Thomas L.
Russell, Daniel L.	Steele,	Vance,
Russell, William A.	Stephens,	Waddill,

NOT VOTING—33.

Baker,	Clark, Rush	Ladd,	Robeson,
Ballou,	Cox,	Lay,	Slemons,
Belford,	Crowley,	Loring,	Stone,
Beltzhoover,	Dick,	McLane,	Taylor,
Bland,	Harris, John T.	McMahon,	Wells,
Blount,	Hazelton,	Morse,	Wilson,
Bouck,	Hooker,	Nicholls,
Boyd,	Houk,	O'Brien,
Chittenden,	Klotz,	Orth,

During the roll-call the following announcement was made:

Mr. TAYLOR. I am paired with my colleague, Mr. HOUSE.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. ATKINS. I move that when the House adjourns it adjourn to meet on Tuesday next.

The question was put; and on a division there were—ayes 138, noes 52.

Mr. ELAM. Upon that question I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered, only thirty members voting therefor.

So the motion was agreed to.

Mr. ATKINS moved to reconsider the vote by which the motion was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. HUNTON. I now ask unanimous consent that Tuesday next, after the morning hour, may be assigned for the consideration of reports from the Committee for the District of Columbia, instead of Monday, to which they would have been entitled.

Mr. GARFIELD. Say at two o'clock, which is the usual hour at which that business comes up.

Mr. CONGER. Will that prevent the question of consideration being raised upon any bill that may be reported?

The SPEAKER. Oh, no.

Mr. CONGER. I shall object to any bills coming before the House that cannot be legitimately reported.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will have a right to object. There will be no advantage taken by the committee. Every point of order which would lie against the bill on Monday would rest against the bill on Tuesday.

There was no objection; and the order was made.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. MARTIN, of North Carolina, leave was granted to withdraw from the files of the House papers in the case of Lieutenant John Scott, no adverse report having been made.

On motion of Mr. WASHBURN, leave was granted to withdraw from the files of the House papers in the case of Dennis Leamy, no adverse report having been made.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. BARLOW, indefinitely;

To Mr. SAPP, for ten days, on account of important business;

To Mr. KILLINGER, for one week;

To Mr. RYON, of Pennsylvania, for one week, from Monday next;

To Mr. OSMER, for eight days from Monday next, on account of important business;

To Mr. DAVIS, of North Carolina, for eight days from Monday, on account of important business; and

To Mr. GODSHALK, for five days, on account of indisposition.

R. M. MILLER.

Mr. TUCKER (by request) introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1367) for the relief of R. M. Miller, of Brownsville, Texas; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of Claims, and ordered to be printed.

EDWIN DE LEON.

Mr. TUCKER also (by request) introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1368) for the relief of Edwin De Leon; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of Claims, and ordered to be printed.

CHURCHES IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. ALDRICH, of Illinois, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1369) to relieve the churches of the District of Columbia, and to clear the title of the trustees to such property; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia.

INDIAN RESERVATIONS.

Mr. SCALES, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1370) giving all religious denominations equal rights and privileges in Indian reservations; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

ISSUE OF LEGAL-TENDERS.

Mr. DE LA MATYR, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1371) to substitute United States legal-tender paper money for national-bank notes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and ordered to be printed.

PIERRE BATTINEAU.

Mr. WASHBURN, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1372) granting a pension to Pierre Battineau, of Minnesota; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

MARZEL ALTMAN.

Mr. WASHBURN also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1373) for the relief of Marzel Altman; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on the Public Lands.

JOHN R. TAGGART.

Mr. WASHBURN also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1374) for the relief of John R. Taggart; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on the Public Lands.

REUBEN J. CHEWNING.

Mr. WASHBURN also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1375) for the relief of Reuben J. Chewning; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

INDIAN TRUST FUND.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, asking Congress to authorize him, as trustee for certain Indians, to deposit money in the United States Treasury in lieu of investment; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. KELLEY. I must object to the further introduction of bills. We want an occasional Monday's session, and next Monday has been dispensed with; but there will be a Monday a week from that, and if all this business gets in now there will be none. I object to it. I do not object to any particular gentleman's bill, but I object to doing this business on Saturday afternoon.

ADJOURNMENT TO TUESDAY.

Mr. ATKINS. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at three o'clock and fifty minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Tuesday next.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions, &c., were presented at the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as stated:

By Mr. BAYNE: Papers relating to the pension claims of James M. Boreland and Samuel C. Schoyer—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BEALE: The petition of the mayor and town council of West Point, Virginia, that West Point be made a port of entry and placed in the Richmond district—to the Committee on Commerce.

Also, the petition of the mayor and town council of West Point, Virginia, for the survey of York River from that place to Yorktown, Virginia—to the same committee.

By Mr. CALDWELL: Papers relating to the pension claim of William H. Walker—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CANNON, of Illinois: The petition of Thomas J. Wood, Richard W. Johnson, and Samuel Ross, that retired officers of the Army who have not received their pay according to the rank on which they were originally retired be paid the difference of pay between the amount actually paid them and their pay as fixed by law on the rank on which they were retired—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. CARLISLE: The petition of A. Y. P. Garnett and Philip McAlus, that the appropriate committee of the House be directed to inquire into and report upon the merits of an invention discovered by them by which frauds by the improper use of internal-revenue stamps upon cigar-boxes can be prevented—to the Committee of Ways and Means.

By Mr. CHALMERS: The petition of Ed. Fontaine and others, relative to certain maps, drawings, and explanations of the same he proposes to give to Congress, provided they are ordered printed—to the Committee on Levees and Improvements of the Mississippi River.

By Mr. CLARK, of New Jersey: The petition of Robert A. Boit, executor of Hugh A. Mercer, deceased, for the reimbursement of the proceeds of the sale of certain mining stock under a certain alleged illegal decree of the United States district court for the southern district of New York—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. COX: The petition of Dr. Mary E. Walker, that in all cases of jury trial in the courts of the District of Columbia and the Territories, where a woman is a defendant and a non-complainant, or vice versa, one-half of the jury shall be composed of women; and that the jurors chosen shall be of the same sphere in life as the parties to any suit, provided that both men and women jurors can be found whose general reputation is good—to the Committee on the Territories.

By Mr. DEUSTER: Memorial of the Chamber of Commerce of Milwaukee, Wisconsin, against the passage of the bill now before Congress to grant permission for the erection of a bridge across Detroit River—to the Committee on Commerce.

Also, resolution of the Legislature of Wisconsin, opposing the passage of any bill to authorize the erection of a bridge across Detroit River—to the same committee.

By Mr. DUNNELL: The petition of L. G. Nelson, of Dodge County, Minnesota, for a post-route from Kasson to Dexter, Minnesota—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Also, the petition of Z. B. Daily and 10 others, of Minnesota, for the passage of the Reagan interstate-commerce bill—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. FORD: The petition of S. H. Gilihan and others, for the repeal of the tobacco tax—to the Committee of Ways and Means.

Also, the petition of S. A. Gilihan and others, for the passage of the Reagan interstate-commerce bill—to the Committee on Commerce.

Also, the petition of Mary Ross and others, that the anti-polygamy law of 1862 be made effective—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. FRYE: Papers relating to the claim of L. W. Tibbetts, to be refunded certain moneys lost while in the United States service—to the Committee of Claims.

By Mr. GARFIELD: The petition of Dr. J. H. Knight, for the amendment of the pension laws—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. JAMES: The petition of Dillzon Mallett, for a pension—to the same committee.

By Mr. MILLER: The petitions of D. C. Vaughn and others, of G. W. Flash and others, and of Samuel Magill and others, all of the State of New York, against the extension of the Birdsell clover-huller patent—to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. NEAL: The petition of Samuel Baker, for an increase of pension—to the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions.

By Mr. PHISTER: The petition of James H. Cracraft and others, of Robertson County, Kentucky, that he be permitted to manufacture cigars with his own hands, for sale, without license—to the Committee of Ways and Means.

By Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin: The petition of Thomas Sugden and 45 others, citizens of Wisconsin, against the extension of the Birdsell clover-huller patent—to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. YOUNG, of Ohio: Papers relating to the war claim of Sarah E. Herrel—to the Committee on War Claims.

IN SENATE.

MONDAY, April 28, 1879.

Prayer by Rev. R. L. DABNEY, D. D., of the Union Theological Seminary, Virginia.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday last was read and approved.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. THEODORE F. KING, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. No. 2) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes; in which it asked the concurrence of the Senate.

Mr. WITHERS. I ask that the bill be laid before the Senate in order that it may be referred to the Committee on Appropriations. I do not observe the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia] in his seat at this moment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will lay the bill before the Senate for reference.

The bill was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in compliance with a resolution of the Senate of the 23d instant, a statement showing what balances have been audited and found due for the transporting of the mails prior to the 1st of July, 1878, and which are unprovided for by any appropriation; which, on motion of Mr. TELLER, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I present a memorial of the Legislature of Illinois, in the shape of a joint resolution, and as it is very short I ask that it be read.

The memorial was read, and ordered to lie on the table and be printed, as follows:

Joint resolution.

Resolved by the senate, (the house of representatives concurring herein,) That our Senators and Representatives in Congress be requested to urge the passage of Senate bill No. 780, reported from the Committee on Public Lands by Senator Oglesby in the United States Senate on the 5th day of June, 1878, a bill to provide for indemnity due the soveral States under the acts of Congress approved March 2, 1855, and March 3, 1857, relating to swamp and overflowed lands; also of House bill No. 4739, introduced by Hon. G. L. FORT on the 6th day of May, 1878, a bill to authorize the Commissioner of the General Land Office to adjust and settle the claim of the State of Illinois and of other States for indemnity for swamp lands sold by the United States, and to bring about such other measures of relief as will hasten to final adjustment of all claims of the State of Illinois against the Government of the United States.

ANDREW SHUMAN,
President of the Senate.
WILLIAM A. JAMES,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Adopted by the senate April 18, 1879.

JAMES H. PADDOCK,
Secretary of the Senate.

Concurred in by the house of representatives on the 19th day of April, 1879.

W. B. TAYLOR,
Clerk of the House.

Mr. CONKLING. I present a memorial signed by a large number of women, members of the Woman's National Christian Temperance Union, remonstrating strenuously against the effort of importers of and dealers in spirituous liquors to secure the repeal of the amended internal-revenue act of March 1, 1879, or any change to promote the interest of dealers in spirituous liquors. I move its reference to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CONKLING presented the petition of Dr. P. F. Reuss, late surgeon Seventh Regiment New York Volunteers, praying for a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I present a petition from sundry citizens in Dakota Territory on the subject of the removal of the Ponca Indians from the Indian Territory to their own reservation in Dakota Territory. A few days ago I presented a petition signed by all the ministers of the churches at Yankton, Dakota Territory. The petition I now present is signed by Rev. John P. Williamson, missionary of the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions at Yankton agency; Joseph W. Cook, missionary of the Protestant Episcopal Church to the Yankton Indians; Alfred L. Riggs, missionary of the American Board at Santee agency, Nebraska; W. W. Fowler, missionary of the Protestant Episcopal Church, Santee agency; Rev. F. L. Riggs, missionary of the American Board at Fort Sully, Dakota Territory; Rev. Thomas S. Williamson, missionary of the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions, Dakota, and several others, praying that prompt action may be taken by Congress for the return of these Indians. They set forth that one-fourth of the number of these Indians who twenty months ago passed from their reservation to the Indian Territory are now dead, and for the sake of humanity the petitioners pray that prompt action be taken by Congress on the subject. I call the attention of the Committee on Indian Affairs to this matter and I hope that they will give it prompt and early consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The petition will be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. PENDLETON presented additional papers to accompany the bill (S. No. 482) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to repair and extend the public building owned by the Government at Cleveland, Ohio; which were referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. WILLIAMS asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 502) for the better preservation of life at sea; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 503) to regulate the legal value of metallic money and to provide for the free and unlimited coinage of gold and silver bullion, and to restore coin to circulation; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 504) to correct the military record of William H. Terry, late a private in Company H, Thirty-fourth Regiment of Kentucky Volunteers; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. ROLLINS (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 505) relating to the Washington Market Company; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. KERNAN (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 506) to change the name of the steam-propeller Nuhpa to Metropolitan; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 507) to increase pensions in certain cases; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 508) for the organization of a secret-service bureau in the Treasury Department; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I beg leave to introduce a bill by request; I have not examined the bill to know whether I am in favor of it or not.

By unanimous consent, leave was granted to introduce a bill (S. No. 509) to amend the practice of the courts of the United States in suits against municipal corporations, by abolishing the use of writs of mandamus in certain cases, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. HOUSTON asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 510) for the relief of Joel S. Hankins and William Boyd; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. VEST asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 511) for the relief of Eugene Wells; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 512) granting to the State of Missouri the public lands heretofore granted that State to aid in the construction of the Saint Louis and Iron Mountain Railroad, and repealing so much of the act of July 4, 1866, as places certain conditions and limitations upon said grant; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. FARLEY asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 513) to provide for the survey of the private land claim in Arizona called the Rancho of El Paso de los Algordones; which was read twice by its title, and, with the papers on file relating to the case, referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

Mr. PENDLETON asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 514) to increase educational privileges and establish additional normal and industrial training schools for the benefit of youth belonging to such nomadic Indian tribes as have educational treaty claims upon the United States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. WALLACE asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 515) empowering the Commissioner of Patents to extend the letters-patent granted to D. W. Crocker, of Deposit, State of New York, on railway-chairs; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Patents.

Mr. TELLER asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 516) to extend the time of special postal service until service can be obtained by advertisement; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. DAWES (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 517) for the relief of Francis S. Davidson; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. EATON (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 518) to incorporate the National Electric Light Company of the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania, asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 519) for the relief of Edward L. Wilson; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Patents.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 520) for the relief of the heirs of Andrew White; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. VOORHEES asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 521) in relation to engineers in the United States Navy; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 522) to extend the provisions of section 4631 of title 56, "prize," of the Revised Statutes, and of the act of June 8, 1874, in relation to prize-money to all fleet officers; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. VOORHEES. I move that the accompanying memorial be printed with the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. VOORHEES also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 523) for the relief of Dr. Charles H. Nichols; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. LAMAR (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 524) to provide for double-stamped envelopes, double postal cards, and letter-sheet envelopes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post-Roads.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. GARLAND, it was Ordered, That the papers in the claim of James E. Hargrove be taken from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

On motion of Mr. HARRIS, it was Ordered, That the papers in the matter of the claim of Willis G. Reeves, of Tennessee, be taken from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Claims.

On motion of Mr. ANTHONY, it was Ordered, That Mrs. Mary S. Harris have leave to withdraw the petition and papers of her late husband, Charles C. Harris, from the files of the Senate, she leaving copies of the same with the Secretary of the Senate.

PENSION-OFFICE BUILDING.

Mr. WILLIAMS submitted the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Appropriations be, and they are hereby, instructed to inquire whether the interests of the Government will be subserved by purchasing the building at the corner of Twelfth street and Pennsylvania avenue now leased for the use of the Pension Office and Bureau of Education, and report by bill or otherwise.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will go upon the Calendar.

Mr. SAULSBURY. That is a resolution which properly ought to be referred, I think, to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. It appertains to the duties of that committee, and it ought to be considered by them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the resolution will be so referred.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I submit, Mr. President, that you do not want to instruct the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds to inquire whether a resolution ought to pass instructing the Committee on Appropriations to make the inquiry. That is the form of the resolution.

Mr. DAWES. I suppose that the resolution should be adopted by the Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. To be sure, we on this side do not wish to interfere with the orderly progress of legislation; but, for one, I do not wish to burden the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with an inquiry such as the resolution imports, and that is, with inquiring into the propriety of passing a resolution to instruct the Committee on Appropriations to make another inquiry. The resolution ought to be amended undoubtedly so as to direct the inquiry to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. CONKLING. Let us hear it read.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Let the resolution be reported and we shall see what it means.

The Secretary read the resolution.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. It is manifest that the instructions to the Committee on Appropriations ought to be stricken out, and that the resolution should go to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. I make that motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from West Virginia moves to strike out "Committee on Appropriations" and insert "Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds."

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I move to strike out the instruction and let the resolution go to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to be acted upon as they may think best.

Mr. DAWES. The Senator I think does not understand the resolution. It instructs the committee to inquire. Very evidently it ought to go to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. As I understand the resolution, it instructs the committee to report by bill or otherwise; it requires them to make a report upon the subject in some form. I submit to the Senator that it would be better to let it go to the committee in the usual way, without instructions.

Mr. DAWES. I suppose that is the meaning of it.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Then let us have it that way.

Mr. DAWES. I do not know who offered the resolution, but I suppose the meaning of it is to inquire into the expediency of purchasing the building. That matter was before the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds at the last Congress, and the resolution evidently ought to go there now if it goes anywhere.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution is an instruction to inquire. Is there objection to the amendment of the Senator from West Virginia to strike out "Appropriations" and insert "Public Buildings and Grounds?" The Chair hears none, and it is agreed to. Shall the resolution be referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds?

Mr. DAWES. It ought to be adopted by the Senate and not referred.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question, then, is on agreeing to the resolution as amended.

The resolution, as amended, was agreed to.

POST-ROUTE IN MAINE.

Mr. HAMLIN submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads be directed to inquire into the expediency of establishing a post-route from Carmel by North Carmel, South Levant, and Levant, to Kenduskeag in the county of Penobscot, Maine.

M'DONALD'S MANUAL.

Mr. MORGAN submitted the following resolution; which was read:

Resolved, That H. B. McDonald be directed to prepare a new edition of the Manual, and that 1,000 copies of the same be printed for the use of the Senate.

Mr. MORGAN. I understand that the present edition of the Manual has been exhausted, and that the resolution under which the edition was printed came from the Committee on Rules. More naturally I would suppose that the resolution ought to go to the Committee on Printing, but following the order which was taken before, I move the reference of this resolution to the Committee on Rules.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If it involves an expense of more than $500 it must go to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. MORGAN. We cannot tell as yet what will be the expense involved.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be referred to the Committee on Rules.

REPORT OF NATIONAL ACADEMY OF SCIENCES.

Mr. ANTHONY submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That 750 additional copies of the report of the National Academy of Sciences be printed for the use of the National Academy of Sciences.

Mr. ANTHONY. I would inquire if the usual number of copies of the report of the National Academy of Sciences was ordered to be printed?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is so informed by the Secretary.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. WALLACE, from the Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1343) to provide for certain expenses of the present session of Congress, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments.

VISITORS TO NAVAL ACADEMY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will announce the appointment of the two Senators who are required by the act of February 14, 1879, to be of the Board of Visitors at the annual examination at the Naval Academy at Annapolis. The Chair appoints the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON] and the Senator from Rhode Island, [Mr. ANTHONY.]

AMENDMENTS TO AN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. KERNAN, Mr. MCMILLAN, and Mr. TELLER submitted sundry amendments intended to be proposed by them respectively to the bill (H. R. No. 2) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

SIDNEY P. LUTHER.

Mr. ROLLINS. I ask that the bill (S. No. 204) for the relief of Sidney P. Luther, which was referred to the Committee on Claims in the early part of the session by a mistake of my own, be referred to the Committee on Finance. It should properly go there.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That change of reference will be made if there be no objection. The Chair hears none.

CHANGES OF SUNDRY CIVIL BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The unfinished business is the joint resolution (H. R. No. 1) to repeal certain clauses in the sundry civil appropriation act, approved March 3, 1879, on which the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. EATON] has the floor.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

Mr. EATON. I ask that the joint resolution be read.

The Chief Clerk read the joint resolution as proposed to be amended by the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. EATON. The first amendment of the sundry civil appropriation act made by the joint resolution is to strike out the words:

And said Lewis and Coffee shall receive no allowance for witness fees and traveling expenses.

In the act of the last session will be found this clause:

To pay B. R. Lewis and J. J. Coffee the balances due them as marshal and clerk respectively at the consulate-general at Shanghai, China, during their absence attending on subpœnas as witnesses before a committee of the House of Representatives, the sum of $2,203.69, to be available at once; and said Lewis and Coffee shall receive no allowance for witness fees and traveling expenses.

Under the ruling of the Department they declined to pay the sum of $2,203.69, which is made available at once because of the concluding part of the paragraph:

And said Lewis and Coffee shall receive no allowance for witness fees and traveling expenses.

Therefore, it is deemed by the Committee on Appropriations proper that that clause should be stricken out, so that these gentlemen may receive the amount of money which is justly their due. It is recommended by the committee unanimously that that be stricken out.

The next item is to strike out from the sundry civil appropriation act the words:

Under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, $100,000.

The committee have to say to the Senate that that is surplusage and ought not to have been in the act at all. The act provides—

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to expend, out of the appropriation for defraying the expenses of collecting the revenue from customs, such amount as he may deem necessary.

That should be the end of the paragraph, but by mistake was added to it:

Not exceeding $100,000 per annum, for the detection and prevention of frauds upon the customs revenue.

It does not belong there at all, and therefore the committee ask that it be stricken out.

The next provision of the joint resolution as amended relates to the paragraph to be found on page 11 of the same act:

That the paragraph in said act relating to the extension of the military telegraph lines from Fort Buford to Helena, Dakota Territory, be amended so as to read as follows, namely: "For the extension of the military telegraph lines to Helena, Montana Territory, and the new post on the Milk River, and such other points as may be necessary, $20,000."

Following that is this clause:

That the paragraph in said act relating to the extension of the military telegraph lines from Fort Elliott, Texas, westward, be amended so as to read as follows, namely: "For the extension of the military telegraph lines to Fort Elliott, Texas, and westward, as may be necessary, $20,000.

No increase is proposed, but a simple alteration in the text. The Department and the Engineer Bureau are very anxious that this amendment should be made; the committee are unanimous in the opinion that it ought to be made; and therefore they recommend it. Then comes the paragraph in relation to the Moline Water-Power Company, and that my friend from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] will explain.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Before the Senator from Iowa proceeds with the Moline Water-Power matter, I wish the Senator from Connecticut would explain a little more fully (I did not understand him at the time) as to this clause in the text of the joint resolution as it came from the House:

And that the following clause in said act, in relation to the publications of the geological survey, namely, the words "under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, $100,000," be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

I did not understand the Senator's explanation in relation to that clause.

Mr. EATON. As the committee understand, that language was entirely surplusage in the original bill which was before us at the last session, and it is not necessary or proper to be in the act. Such was the information from the Department.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is, it got into the act before through a misunderstanding?

Mr. EATON. If my friend has the original bill, the sundry civil appropriation act, on the twentieth page will be found:

For the expenses of the geological survey and the classification of the public lands and examination of the geological structure, mineral resources, and products of the national domain, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, $100,000.

Again, on the twenty-first page, in the same clause, there is this clause, to which the clerk of the committee calls my attention:

And the money resulting from the sale of such publications shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, $100,000.

Therefore the words on the twentieth page are surplusage and ought to be stricken out. The appropriation is twice made in words.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It was a blunder, then, in the former legislation, I understand?

Mr. EATON. Yes, sir.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Which this is intended to correct?

Mr. EATON. Yes, sir; the legislation of last Congress.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is one more of the illustrations, Mr. President, of pasting things on appropriation bills.

Mr. EATON. It is last year's appropriation bill; not this year's.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Last session's?

Mr. EATON. Last session's.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The act approved the 3d of March.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Committee on Appropriations have reported this joint resolution with sundry amendments. Does the Senator from Connecticut wish the vote taken on the amendments separately or in gross?

Mr. EATON. In gross unless a separation is called for.

The amendments were to add to the resolution the following clauses:

That the paragraph in said act relating to the extension of the military telegraph lines from Fort Buford to Helena, Dakota Territory, be amended so as to read as follows, namely: "For the extension of the military telegraph lines to Helena, Montana Territory, and the new post on the Milk River, and such other points as may be necessary, $20,000."

That the paragraph in said act relating to the extension of the military telegraph lines from Fort Elliott, Texas, westward, be amended so as to read as follows, namely: "For the extension of the military telegraph lines to Fort Elliott, Texas, and westward, as may be necessary, $20,000."

That the following paragraph in said act, namely: "That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and empowered to lease the water-power at Moline, or such portion as may be agreed upon, to the Moline Water-Power Company, upon such terms and conditions, and for such term of years, as may be agreed upon, if the same can be done consistently with the interests of the Government of the United States; said lease to be made upon the condition that the said Moline Water-Power Company shall go on and complete the development of the water-power and maintain it at its own cost and expense," be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

That in the final settlement of the accounts of Henry C. De Ahna, late collector of customs at Sitka, Alaska, the proper accounting officers of the Treasury are hereby authorized and directed to allow and pay to the said De Ahna the further sum of $2,000, in full compensation and final discharge for all expenses incurred and losses sustained by said De Ahna in traveling to and from Alaska, and in obtaining and furnishing the Treasury Department with reports concerning the condition of public affairs in said Territory. And said sum of $2,000 is for that purpose hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. WINDOM. I wish to say one word about the proposition in the joint resolution found on page 2 repealing that clause of the sundry civil bill which authorizes and empowers the Secretary of War to lease the water-power at Moline. I want to say to the Senate that I introduced the amendment and referred it to the Committee on Appropriations proposing to repeal this clause. I did it, not because I think the provision as it stands in the sundry civil bill is wrong, but because there was some objection made to it at the close of the last session on account of the fact that it had been brought before the Senate through a committee of conference, which at the time I admitted was informal, but it was resorted to on account of the extreme pressure of business, and having had this bill only some twenty-four hours the rule had been inadvertently stretched, if not broken.

I then suggested to the Senate that there would be time to pass the sundry civil bill if it chose to vote down the report on account of this proposition to which some objection was made; but the Senate did not see proper to do that, and the report was agreed to. I then sought the first opportunity to bring the matter before the Senate so that it might deliberately act on this proposition. I shall vote to-day to repeal it, and hereafter if a proposition shall be brought up in the Senate and I can vote upon it independent of an appropriation bill or a report from a committee of conference, I will vote myself to reinstate the provision precisely as it now stands in the sundry civil bill, although I hope the Senate will repeal it now.

I will read a very brief statement made by the president and directors of the Moline Water-Power Company, stating the facts of this case as they regard them:

When the United States arsenal was located on Rock Island, this company were the owners of the water-power. At the suggestion of the Government in 1867 a contract was entered into between the United States and this company, by the terms of which the company transferred its interest in the water-power to the Government (which was taken possession of) in consideration that the Government was to develop and maintain the entire water-power, and grant to the company the use in perpetuity of one-fourth part of the power developed, free from all charge for rent or repairs.

The charge that an immense sum of money was paid by the Government to the company for the water-power is entirely without foundation. Not a dollar was ever paid to or received by the company from the Government, directly or indirectly, for the transfer of its interest in the water-power. The only consideration was development and maintenance of the water-power, and the company to have free use of one-fourth part, as before stated.

Pending the final execution of the contract between the company and the United States the plans for developing the water-power were very generally discussed and considered. Subsequently changes in plans of development to suit the purposes and convenience of the Government in relation to the location of the arsenal shops have considerably increased the cost of the water-power development; and the commandant of the arsenal estimates that it will cost to complete the development the additional sum of $157,350, for which appropriations have been continuously recommended by the several Secretaries of War since 1876 without avail. An immense bar of sand and mud has been allowed to accumulate at the mouth of the "pool" which, for a very considerable portion of the time, prevents a supply of water to the company's wheels; and, further, in the Government improvement of the navigation of the rapids a chain of rock called the "Moline Chain" has been removed, thus deepening the channel of the river and materially lowering the head of water in the pool.

It is this condition of things that causes the company to claim, and insist, that, if Congress will not appropriate money to carry out in good faith its contract for development and maintenance of the water-power, it ought to allow the company such control as would permit it to complete the development and maintenance of the water-power, which the Government has thus far refused and neglected to do; and this, we believe, was the view taken by the conference committee in inserting the amendment, so thoroughly were they convinced that some measure of relief was due to the company in the absence of appropriations to relieve the embarrassment which the failure of the Government to carry out its contracts had brought upon it. This is all the job or trickery there is in the matter, and in the light of these facts it is difficult to see wherein any charge of wrong-doing on the part of this company can be made or sustained.

CHARLES ATKINSON, President,
J. M. GOULD,
C. H. DEERE,
S. W. WHEELOCK,
JOHN DEERE,
J. S. KEATOR, Directors.

Mr. President, since this contract was made there have been a great many efforts to induce Congress to make an appropriation to carry out the contract as they insisted existed between the Government and the company. I am entirely satisfied that these appropriations will not be made, and therefore I believe that the best way to settle the matter, because I think it will injure nobody, is as provided for in the sundry civil bill; but as the clause there was passed without due consideration, and as neither House has considered it as an original question, I hope it may be repealed, and hereafter that it may be presented in some form where it will be fully discussed and considered as it ought to be. I believe the Secretary of War has declined to act under the authority conferred upon him in the sundry civil bill. The committee of conference at the last session of Congress recommended the passage of this measure, believing it to be a measure of compromise agreed to by all parties in interest.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. The Secretary of War has not declined to act. He has decided that it is not for the interest of the Government that this lease be made.

Mr. WINDOM. That is what I think I said; the Secretary of War had declined to act in making this lease, deciding that it was not for the interest of the Government to do it.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I agree to that.

Mr. WINDOM. Therefore I am entirely willing to have it repealed, and think it ought to be, so that hereafter the matter may be considered entirely independent of appropriation bills and upon its own merits. I am inclined to think that there will be trouble about this indefinitely; and this might be a good way to settle it. I understood the Senator from Illinois to recommend it to the conference committee at the last session, and I want to say that in recommending it myself at that time I acted upon what I supposed to be the judgment of the Senators from Illinois as to its justice and propriety, as well as of the members of Congress from the district and the adjoining district in Iowa, and of all those who were supposed by the committee of conference to be best advised on the subject. The committee of conference acted on the very best information it could get. It acted unwisely, however, in bringing the matter at all before the Senate under the pressure of business, in violation of the rule as I admitted at the time it was, and therefore I hope it may be repealed

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. Being from the State of Illinois, I want to say one word about this matter, as my present colleague was not here at the last session of Congress, and therefore is, perhaps, not informed in regard to it. The Moline Water-Power Company had nothing to do with the insertion of this provision. It came from the hands of a member of the other House who was on the conference committee, and who has uniformly and persistently opposed making any appropriations for the benefit of the water-power there and to carry out the contract. The United States have a large arsenal at Rock Island. Millions of dollars have been spent on the building and on the works there generally. The Moline Water-Power Company contracted with the Government, giving them entire control of the water-power, or rather of so much of it as was necessary to carry on the works, and the Government agreed with this company that they would improve the water-power so that it should be useful to them to carry on their business. But there is now a town there of eight or ten thousand people. I believe with the Secretary of War that it is not for the interest of the Government to cancel this contract that was made with the Moline Water-Power Company, and I still believe that the Government should carry out its contract. Why whenever an appropriation has been put upon a bill in the Senate the conference committee uniformly agree to strike it out, I cannot tell, except that there was more persistence in a member of the other House who was then in Congress, and who opposed the measure, than there was in the gentlemen who were here. I cannot imagine any other reason in the world; but I do believe that the Government ought not to part with the benefits of the contract that has been made with the Moline Water-Power Company.

Now, sir, if this appropriation can be got at this session, or at any other session, all right; if not, then the Moline Water-Power Company ought to have the privilege of suing the Government for a breach of contract.

I have no doubt that the Senator from Minnesota believes I agreed to this provision. He had a right to think so, but it was really sent over, and the member of Congress from the district agreed to it. I told him then I did not believe that it was for the benefit of the Government that this should be done. The present Secretary of War has acted upon the report of the proper officer of the Government on the subject; and the only reason for repealing the clause now is that we do not know whether the present gentleman will remain Secretary of War. He may die or resign before a great length of time, and therefore it is better that the measure should be repealed. I have no reflections to cast on anybody, and I have no doubt that the committee of conference when they concurred in this clause believed that my then colleague and myself agreed to this provision.

Mr. WINDOM. That was certainly the understanding; and the information given to the committee by the Senators and the Members satisfied them that this was the right thing to do.

The Senator from Illinois raises the question how it came that when the Senate has inserted this affirmative proposition several times, it has always been lost. I will answer the Senator, and it enables me to illustrate a point which has been under discussion sometimes in the Senate. The Senate put on this affirmative appropriation. The House said, "We will defeat this bill before we will allow it to pass appropriating this money." Under the lead of Mr. Hewitt, of New York, who was a member of the House conference committee, we were plainly told, "We will not pass this bill with this appropriation of money for the Moline water-power in it;" and the Senate was bound to back out, as the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] suggests, upon the principle that neither House has the right to insist upon one provision to the defeat of an entire appropriation bill. And that enables me to refer to some remarks made by the honorable Senator from Ohio, now in the chair, [Mr. THURMAN,] just at the close of the last session. I wish I had them before me.

The Senator then informed the Senate that if he had any particular forte in legislation it was logic, and in illustration of that logic he went on to say that there was no difference between putting an item of appropriation on a bill and an item of legislation and insisting upon it. I admit that fully, but this illustrates just exactly what we mean by it. The Senate had inserted this affirmative proposition. If it had insisted upon it to the defeat of the bill it would have stood precisely where the last House of Representatives stood when it put legislation upon the bill and insisted that it would defeat that bill unless we agreed to that amendment. Now, I say that an item of appropriation and an item of legislation which either House insists upon and says it will defeat a bill if that affirmative item is not agreed to stand in precisely the same relation to each other. I do not deny the right of either House to put legislation upon an appropriation bill, provided they submit it to the judgment of the other House to accept it or not; but when they insert provisions in the bill, either legislative or otherwise, and say to the other House, "you shall pass this particular item of appropriation," or "you shall pass this particular provision of legislation, or if you do not we will defeat the bill," the position is indefensible. We have never stood upon any such ground in the Senate, and we yielded, I will say, for the benefit of the Senator from Illinois, this item as to the Moline water-power appropriation rather than defeat the appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there is no demand for a vote on these amendments separately, the vote will be taken on them in gross.

Mr. EATON. Perhaps a word ought to be said in regard to the last paragraph in relation to the settlement of the accounts of Henry C. De Ahna, late collector of customs at Sitka, Alaska. I simply want to say to the Senate that this appropriation is made unanimously by the Committee on Appropriations under the action of the Finance Committee of the Senate, and we understand it to be unanimous in favor of this claim, and have no doubt it ought to be paid.

Mr. LOGAN. I have not examined the proposition, but from what my colleague has stated to me and to the Senate, I desire to know from the Senator having the measure in charge whether or not if this repeal is effected there is any remedy now in law for the parties denominated the Moline Water-Power Company against the Government for their failure to provide properly for this water-power according to their contract?

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I can answer my colleague that there is no provision now. The Government has not appropriated the necessary amount of money. The executive department of the Government has uniformly requested that it be done, but in some way it has not got on the appropriation bills in the House, and when they came into the Senate the appropriation was put on here but has been struck off as the Senator from Minnesota has said, so that if this provision is repealed the rights of the parties remain just as they were.

Mr. LOGAN. As they were prior to the act of last session?

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. Yes, sir.

Mr. LOGAN. There is then now no new remedy; that is, no law authorizing them to proceed against the Government? That will have to be done after.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. If after my colleague and myself try to get an appropriation we do not succeed, then we must ask Congress to let the parties litigate their rights.

Mr. LOGAN. I merely wish to say now that if this is the case, as it is doubtless from the statement of the Senators both from Connecticut and Illinois, it certainly is the duty of the Congress of the United States to provide and give some authority to this company under which it may proceed against the Government for the purpose of recovering damages or the enforcement of its contract.

Mr. ALLISON. One word before the vote is taken. I opposed the provision in the sundry civil bill at the last session when it was reported from the conference committee, because I believed then, as I believe now, that the Government should not surrender the great advantage it has in holding this water-power through a contract with the Moline Water-Power Company; and while I believe that, I am not one of those who oppose a proper remedy to the company. I feel certain that this Government is bound to make appropriations to improve this water-power in accordance with the contract made in 1867. The Government not only failed to do what it obligated itself then to do, but it has, by the interference of the Government in reference to the main channel, absolutely destroyed the water-power unless this proposed improvement is made. When this contract was made with the Moline Water-Power Company the Mississippi River had across it chains or blocks, which to a certain degree dammed up the water and enabled the water to pass around this island. Since that time large appropriations have been made by which the main channel of the Mississippi River at this point has been cleared out, thus lowering the water during the low-water period, so that there is a double obligation on the part of the Government to improve this water-power. But I objected at the last session to this provision, because I do not desire under any circumstances that the Government shall give up a great advantage which it has of this water-power, which in my judgment will save the Government annually from $100,000 to $120,000 in the portions of the arsenal at Rock Island. Therefore I am in favor of its repeal as proposed, and I shall sustain my friend from Illinois and his colleague in securing a sufficient appropriation at the next session of Congress to make this improvement what it ought to be.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendments reported from the Committee on Appropriations.

The amendments were agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the joint resolution to be read a third time.

The joint resolution was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MORRILL. There should be an amendment to the title by adding the words "and for other purposes."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection, and that amendment will be made.

DEPARTMENT OFFICERS ON THE FLOOR OF CONGRESS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair now lays before the Senate the first bill on the Calendar, which is the bill (S. No. 227) to provide that the principal officers of each of the Executive Departments may occupy seats on the floor of the Senate and House of Representatives, on which the Senator from Ohio [Mr. PENDLETON] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. HARRIS. I wish to give notice that when the Senator from Ohio shall have concluded his remarks I will ask that the bill named be informally laid aside in order that I may ask the Senate to take up for consideration the bill (S. No. 108) to prevent the introduction of contagious and infectious diseases into the United States.

Mr. PENDLETON. Mr. President, I do not propose to make an elaborate examination of this measure to-day. I intend only to state, as briefly and comprehensively as I can, the leading considerations which have brought me to the conclusion that it ought to be adopted. I am glad, in the midst of this heated political debate which we have had now for many days, to be able to remind the Senate that this is in no sense a party measure. It appeals to no partisan interest; it trenches upon no partisan susceptibility; it awakens no party spirit. It touches the relation of two great Powers in the State, and seeks to improve their methods of communication with each other. In the rapid alternations of success all parties will soon feel its effects. I therefore appeal with confidence to Senators on both sides of the Chamber for their impartial consideration of the subject. That consideration, I know, will be wise; and the conclusion, I believe, will be correct. I have not long had the honor of a seat here. I served for many years in the House of Representatives with many of the most eminent and honored of those who sit opposite me in this Chamber to-day; and I there learned by actual experience that, mere partisan politics and actions aside, a body of men fairer, juster, abler, wiser, cannot be selected in the whole country than those who are sent to represent the States and the people in the two Houses of Congress.

The bill provides:

First. That the Secretary of State, the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, the Secretary of the Interior, the Attorney-General, and the Postmaster-General shall be entitled to occupy seats on the floor of the Senate and House of Representatives, with the right to participate in debate on matters relating to the business of their respective Departments, under such rules as may be prescribed by the Senate and House respectively.

Second. That the said Secretaries, the Attorney-General, and the Postmaster-General shall attend the sessions of the Senate on the opening of the sittings on Tuesday and Friday of each week, and the sessions of the House of Representatives on the opening of the sittings on Monday and Thursday of each week, to give information asked by resolution, or in reply to questions which may be propounded to them under the rules of the Senate and House.

The first section provides for a voluntary attendance to take part in debate. The second section provides for a compulsory attendance to give information. Whether the scope of the debate allowed by the first section should be more or less restricted; whether the compulsory attendance provided in the second section should be on two days in each week or only on one day; whether all the officers should attend on the same day, are questions touching the details of the scheme. They can be settled now on consideration according to the judgment of the Senate, or hereafter when actual trial shall have given us experience, or they can be arranged by the standing orders of each House. They in no wise affect its essential merits.

In order to carry the bill into effect, rules somewhat like the following should be adopted by each House, mutatis mutandis:

1. That the Secretary of the Senate shall keep a notice-book, in which he shall enter, at the request of any member, any resolution requiring information from any of the Executive Departments, or any question intended to be propounded to any of the Secretaries, or the Postmaster-General, or the Attorney-General, as to facts relating to public affairs or to the business pending before the Senate, together with the name of the member and the day when the same will be called up.

2. The member giving notice of such resolution or question shall, at the same time, give notice that the same shall be called up in the Senate on the following Tuesday or Friday; provided that no such resolution or question shall be called up, except by unanimous consent, within less than three days after notice shall have been given.

3. The Secretary of the Senate shall, on the same day on which notice is entered, transmit to the principal officer of the proper Department a copy of the resolution or question, together with the name of the member proposing the same, and of the day when it will be called up in the Senate.

4. In the Senate on Tuesday and Friday of each week, before any other business shall be taken up, except by unanimous consent, the resolutions and questions shall be taken up in the order in which they have been entered upon the notice-book for that day.

5. The member offering a resolution may state succinctly the object and scope of his resolution and the reasons for desiring the information, and the Secretary of the proper Department may reply, giving the information or the reasons why the same should be withheld, and then the Senate shall vote on the resolution, unless it shall be withdrawn or postponed.

6. In putting any question to the Secretaries, or the Attorney-General, or Postmaster-General, no argument or opinion is to be offered, nor any fact stated, except so far as may be necessary to explain such question; and, in answering such question, the Secretary, the Attorney-General, or Postmaster-General shall not debate the matter to which the same refers, nor state facts or opinions other than those necessary to explain the answer.

These rules do not make unreasonable exactions on the time of the Secretaries as has been feared by a most respectable friend of the bill. No question can be called up unless after three days' notice to the Secretaries. On days when no questions are voted to be called up there need be no attendance. These rules relate only to the execution of the last section of the bill—to giving information, to putting and answering questions; and here questions and answers ought to be limited to specific points that accuracy may be attained. They in no wise affect the debate permitted and invited by the first section. Our experience does not permit us to doubt that when once these officers have acquired the habit of coming on the floor to give information, they will eagerly come to participate in debate, which has been well said to be the life of legislation, and a wholesome instructor of both the members and the people. That debate may be unlimited. These rules may be amended as experience shall show their defects.

The object of the bill is to secure to members of Congress all the information which the heads of Departments may have on the matters committed to their charge. Its object is to establish an easy, open, public channel of communication between those to whom are confided the great subdivisions of public business into which the whole has been by your law distributed. Its object is to increase the closeness of the connection between them—no, I have used the words unadvisedly, not to increase the closeness of the connection, it is close enough now, but to put that connection which now exists, which is now in all aspects awkward and incomplete, and in some aspects unauthorized, private, secret, concealed, or if not concealed at least denied and therefore illegitimate, under the sanction and guardianship of the law that it may be made convenient, may be avowed before all men, be used in public, and be regulated by a scrutinizing public opinion.

Its method is to permit the Secretaries to come before the two Houses and debate pending legislation touching the matters within their Departments and to compel them to come at convenient times to give information accumulated in the execution of their trusts. Its method is to permit them to give opinions and require them to give facts for the benefit of Congress, and both under such reasonable regulations that their efficiency in administration and our independence in legislation may be greatly increased.

I avow at the outset that I do not propose an amendment to the Constitution; I do not seek either immediately or eventually to substitute Parliamentary for Presidential government; I do not seek either to aggrandize or impair the executive power as defined by the Constitution and vested in the President. The President, and the President alone, is the constitutional executive; he and he alone is the co-ordinate executive branch of the Government; he and he alone is the "Commander-in-Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States, and of the militia of the several States when called into the actual service of the United States." He and he alone "shall have power to grant reprieves and pardons for offenses against the United States;" to make treaties with the advice and consent of the Senate, provided two-thirds of the Senators present concur; to nominate and by and with the advice and consent of the Senate to appoint embassadors and other public ministers and consuls, judges of the Supreme Court and all other officers of the United States whose appointments are not otherwise provided for; "to give to Congress information as to the state of the Union;" on extraordinary occasions to convene and adjourn Congress; "to receive embassadors and other public ministers; to take care that the laws be faithfully executed; to commission all the officers of the United States;" and to exercise the veto power. These are the functions of the executive power which is vested in the President by the Constitution. They can be performed neither in whole nor in part by another; neither the President nor the Congress nor both can delegate them or abridge them. Both the President and the Congress are bound to maintain and protect them. The Departments and their principal officers are in no sense sharers of this power. They are the creatures of the laws of Congress, exercising only such powers and performing only such duties as those laws prescribe.

The Constitution recognizes the power and duty of Congress to organize Executive Departments and charge them with specific duties, itself imposing only the simple duty upon the principal officers to furnish to the President their opinion, in writing, upon any subject relating to the duties of their offices.

The First Congress, after long debate, decided that the President should have the power of appointment and removal, unimpaired, except as in all other cases, by impeachment; and that the Secretaries should perform all the duties imposed upon them by law and by the constitutional power of the President to call for written opinions. The Secretaries were made heads of Departments; they were charged by law with certain duties, and invested by law with certain powers to be used by them in the administration confided to them by the laws. They were in no sense ministers of the President, his hand, his arm, his irresponsible agent, in the execution of his will. There was no relation analogous to that of master and servant or principal and agent. The President cannot give them dispensation in the performance of duty, or relieve them from the penalty of non-performance. He cannot be impeached for their delinquency; he cannot be made to answer before any tribunal for their inefficiency or malversation in office; public opinion does not hold him to stricter responsibility for their official conduct than that of any officer. They are the creatures of law and bound to do the bidding of the law. I do not seek to change their legal relation either to the President or the Congress. I do not seek to make their tenure of office in any wise dependent on the will of congressional majorities or on adverse votes of either or both Houses. I seek only to confer upon them a new privilege and to impose upon them a new duty. The privilege is to give us their advice in debate by word of mouth; the duty is to give us information face to face.

Has Congress the power to grant this privilege? Have both Houses either separately or jointly the power to admit persons not members to their floors with the privilege to address them? The question answers itself. "Each House may determine the rules of its proceedings." Under this power each House admits a chaplain to open its proceedings with prayer. Under this power the House of Representatives constantly admits contestants to argue their title to membership, and sometimes has admitted counsel to argue in the same behalf. Nobody would doubt the power of the Senate to extend the same privilege to a claimant or his advisers.

By the act of 1817 it was provided that "every Territory shall have the right to send a Delegate to the House of Representatives of the United States to serve during each Congress, who shall be elected by the voters in the Territory qualified to elect members of the Legislative Assembly thereof. * * * Every such Delegate shall have a seat in the House of Representatives with the right of debating but not of voting." No question has ever been raised as to the existence of this power. No doubt has ever been hinted. It is the same power whose exercise I invoke now.

A precedent directly in point has stood unchallenged for ninety years. The act of 1789, organizing the Treasury Department, passed within three months after the organization of the Government, provided that "the Secretary of the Treasury shall from time to time digest and prepare plans for the improvement and management of the revenue, and for the support of the public credit; * * * shall make report and give information to either branch of the Legislature in person or in writing, as may be required respecting all matters referred to him by the Senate or House of Representatives, or which shall appertain to his office, and generally shall perform all such services in relation to the finances as he shall be required to perform." That law stands on the statute-book to-day unchanged. It covers this case exactly. It was called into exercise repeatedly in the early history of the Government. When Hamilton made his great report on the public credit in 1790, he was on motion, after argument, required to make it in writing, because the details delivered orally would not remain in the memory of his hearers; but the power and the propriety of requiring the personal presence of the Secretary were not then called in question, nor have they been questioned at any time since. In the acrimonious debate after the removal of the deposits in 1833, Mr. Clay cited this law with approbation, and used it as proof of the absolute power of Congress over the Department and the officer. This view prevailing in the Senate cost Taney his confirmation on his first nomination as judge of the Supreme Court. This bill only permits and enjoins that to be done by all the Secretaries at convenient times, that which the law of 1789 required and permitted to be done at any time by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Can Congress enjoin the duty? The constitutional provisions in relation to the Executive Departments are very simple. The President "may require the opinion in writing of the principal officers upon any subject relating to the duties of their respective offices," and Congress may vest the appointment of such inferior officers as they think proper in the heads of Departments. All other powers and duties are, by inevitable implication and necessarily, prescribed by Congress. This was fully settled by the First Congress. Accordingly, every act organizing every Department has defined the duties of the principal officer. And very pertinent to the inquiry I am now making is the fact that the head of every Department is required to report directly to Congress in reference to the discharge of the duties thus imposed upon his office. I have quoted the language of the law organizing the Treasury Department. I will not weary Senators by reading the others. They may be found in the early pages of the Revised Statutes.

If by a line of precedents unquestioned and unbroken since the first year of the Government, Congress has established its power to require the heads of Departments to report to it directly, and also its power to admit persons to the floor of either House to address it, I submit the argument is perfect that Congress may require the report to be made or the information to be given by them in person on the floor and orally. I know full well that "no person holding any office under the United States shall be a member of either House during his continuance in office." But the head of Department does no more become a member of Congress by reporting in person and orally and by being admitted to certain debates than does your chaplain, or the contestant or his counsel, or the Delegate. He has no official term of two or six years. He is neither elected nor appointed to either House. He has no participation in the power of impeachment, either in the institution or the trial. He has no privilege from arrest. He has no power to vote in any case.

It has been suggested that this argument is too technical; that though the power claimed may exist in the letter, a change is involved which would violate the spirit of the Constitution and in some way disturb the system of government established by it; that it would in some way merge the co-ordinate departments of the Government or give undue ascendency to the one or the other. But when I ask for a more specific statement of the dangers to be apprehended gentlemen cannot agree among themselves. Some assert very strongly that the executive power will be brought into entire subjection to the influence of Congress, while others are equally confident that the independence of the Legislature will vanish before this immense aggrandizement of the presidential office. In my opinion neither effect will follow. I repeat, this bill proposes a change of methods only, not of powers. I submit to the candor of Senators, if the uniform duty laid on the heads of Departments for now nearly a hundred years to report annually and as often as required, directly to Congress and the regular performance of that duty, have not impinged on the powers of the President, have not affected the independence of Congress, have not merged the executive and legislative branches of the Government, have indeed only demonstrated the necessity for a more easy method of communication, so neither will requiring these reports and recommendations to be made orally instead of in writing, on the floor instead of from the office, tend to produce these injurious results.

And now, Mr. President, what is the practical inconvenience and evil which I propose to remedy?

The communications of the Secretaries to Congress are all in writing, and are made in pursuance of law at stated periods, or in response to special calls for information by either House. I may admit for the sake of the argument that these reports are full, exact, comprehensive, and that the opportunity and temptation never suffice to cause either an intentional coloring or omission of troublesome matter. They are accompanied by detailed statements of facts and figures and reports of subordinates, very necessary to be preserved in the archives, very necessary to be studied by the thorough political economist. I do not propose to dispense with them. They are voluminous; they are not always lucid, they do not always give the information desired; they are mines in which men will not dig through the waste possibly to find the ore; they must be pored over to be understood, and they must be pored over by each man for himself. Not one in ten of the members of Congress thoroughly reads them. The condensed statement of a few minutes delivered orally would give more intelligible information to the whole Senate than half a volume, the careful reading of which would cost every Senator many hours.

Special calls for information are answered slowly, because the Secretary has something which he deems more important, or is negligent, or the necessity of much copying takes time.

Calls are made improvidently, and pages of manuscript are copied and printed which are utterly useless for the purpose contemplated by the caller—useless, perhaps, for any purpose whatever.

Calls are evaded by the officer. He takes a long time to answer, then answers insufficiently, and the session expires before a new call can receive attention.

I do not desire to cite examples which might seem invidious They will occur to every Senator. I remember distinctly that during the war a resolution was passed by the House asking information as to the exchange of prisoners. A month elapsed, and a second resolution passed. Then the Secretary of War responded in a few lines that the whole subject had long before been confided to General Grant. Meanwhile the hearts of mothers and wives were bleeding, and sick, emaciated prisoners, despairing because they believed they had been deserted, were dying, to whom this gleam of hope would have brought comfort and strength and health.

During the last Congress an acrimonious debate occurred in the Senate on the subject of depredation on the timber of the public lands. It lasted several days. The animadversions on the Secretary were very severe. It resulted in a resolution of inquiry. A very brief answer satisfied the disputants. An explanation occupying ten minutes would have saved much misapprehension, much misrepresentation, and days of bitter debate.

On the whole, our present system of communication with the Departments is cumbrous, awkward, and insufficient—better than none—but susceptible of great improvement if supplemented by the addition I propose. A brief question put and answered within three days would in very many cases furnish satisfactory information, or show its irrelevancy, or show that for reasons involving the public good it ought not to be given. One-half of the resolutions of inquiry would not be offered. This would cause an immense saving of time and money—the time of Senators and Secretaries—the money of the public for copying and printing. May I illustrate even by the most imperfect comparisons?

Suppose the partners of a great manufacturing establishment, each having charge of a separate department, seeing each other every day, should communicate only in writing upon the matters of common interest committed to them.

Suppose the physician of a great hospital should require the nurse of each patient to report in writing, and if the report were insufficient, to correct it in writing, before he would attempt to relieve the sufferer.

Suppose corps commanders acting under instructions given alike to both, requiring co-operating action in the sight and hearing and actual presence of each other during varying emergencies, should refuse personal and oral communication, and consult exclusively in writing.

Suppose trustees of a great enterprise, having charge of interests which, though different, were so interwoven that the past, present, and future daily management and disposition of each were essential to the best management of the whole, should confine themselves to written communications.

Such a course would be tolerated, such parties would escape the penalty of criminal delinquency, only on the ground that partners, physicians, officers, trustees, were deaf and dumb and incapable of using the sign language.

And shall we, Congress and the Departments, trustees of these great public trusts, of legislation and execution confided to us by the people for their benefit, adhere to methods so incomplete and insufficient that they would not be tolerated in the management of private interests?

To this cumbrous, inconvenient, unsatisfactory method of writing and printing, which may possibly be necessary sometimes, let us add the plain, direct, satisfactory, convenient method of oral question and oral answer in the presence of the whole Senate.

But there is another phase of this question. There is another influence exerted by another kind of communication. The subjects and principles of legislation are comparatively few; the details of applying those principles to those subjects in all their phases are of infinite variety. The thorough information acquired by the practical administration in the Departments alone can fully comprehend them and wisely discriminate. By reason of this information the heads of Departments must necessarily exert great influence on the legislation. Members defer greatly to their opinions founded on facts and experience. Every man who feels the responsibility of legislation seeks the advice of the Secretaries; every Secretary who desires earnestly the good of the service seeks to impress on the members the result of his thought, his knowledge, his experience. It must be so; it is inevitable; it arises from the best motives. Gentlemen need not affect to deceive themselves or others; every man on this floor knows that he seeks privately the advice of the Secretaries. Nay, more; every man knows that the secrets of executive session are disclosed to the Secretaries and advice and counsel as to confirmation of appointments and ratification of treaties are asked.

Having no open communication between the Secretaries and the whole body of the Senate, the Secretaries seek the members, the members seek the Secretaries, and in the privacy of the Department or of a whispered talk at the member's seat or of personal intercourse elsewhere, the information, the argument, the persuasion, the consideration pass between them which ought to pass in the broad light of day under the full glare of public observation between two great officials of the Government.

It is not within the rules, certainly not within the custom, to allude to these conversations in debate; they are not available for argument in the Senate. If they were, the certain inaccuracy of repetition would make them valueless.

It is not necessary that I should assert the influence thus exerted is corrupt. It is private; it is unauthorized; it is liable to great abuse; it is not acknowledged; it is the fair subject of suspicion. Therefore I have ventured to call it illegitimate. Possibly it can never be abolished entirely. But if you will adopt this plan you will destroy the necessity, the excuse, for this secret communication and suspicious influence. Among all men this will go far to destroy the practice. If you will substitute public argument for private conversation an enlightened public observation will detect whether other inducement has been used.

I have seen a Secretary and his assistants come on the floor of the House of Representatives, and, by a process of private conversation, in two hours reverse a large majority by a succeeding vote, and not a man would declare the reasons for his change. I have seen that same Secretary retreat rapidly from the Hall when it was suggested to apply the provisions of the law of 1789, and to require him then and there publicly to give information on the matter pending before the House. Well may the people, distrustful of these hidden ways, exclaim with the confused and blinded warrior of old—

Give but to see, and Ajax asks no more.

Some persons have asserted that the measure I propose does not go far enough—that it loses all its value unless the Secretaries are made to retire on an adverse vote; and yet these same objectors oppose its adoption on the ground that it will unduly increase the influence of the Executive and stimulate the Secretaries to extraordinary efforts to secure a majority on the pending vote. I am not sure the effect would be to increase the influence of either the President or the Secretaries. It might stimulate them to increased exertion, but if the result of this increased exertion were defeat, and defeat carried the expulsion of the Secretaries from office, there would seem to be an undue increase of the power of Congress. However that may be, I propose to avoid either result. The plan proposed avoids the danger and secures the advantage.

Keep the midway, the middle way is best.

Its tendency will be to diminish the illegitimate influence of the Secretaries, not their legitimate influence. Its tendency will be to increase the practical knowledge and inform the judgment of Congress, not to diminish its independence. I do not expect that it will bring a higher order of intellect or morals into the public service. Men of the highest ability and purest morals are now in the public councils. I resent the intimation too flippant and common that mediocrity only is willing to take part in our politics. It may sift out the strongest to be heads of Departments, and require them to be well equipped with the knowledge of their offices. In that event it will also sift out the strongest to be the leaders of Congress and participants in debate. It will bring these strong men in contact, perhaps into a struggle to advance the public weal and thus stimulate their abilities and their efforts. The conflict of competing and exalted aspirations will certainly improve both the officer and the service.

Parliamentary government, ministerial responsibility, require that the Chief of state should belong to no political party. He must rise above all party divisions, and be able to mark with entire serenity their success and defeat; to note, without the sense of personal discomfiture, the installation and the fall of ministries. The Executive Power, the dignified part of the government as it has been called, around which cluster the traditions and affections of the people, is thereby made permanent. When death removes an incumbent, another designated by inheritance or by some other chance previously provided by law instantly takes his place. This gives stability, a certain rigidity, to the government. The ministry, nominally appointed by this stable executive, but really suggested by the parliament, is changed day by day according to the changes of majorities in parliament. They are supposed to respond instantly to the popular will. This furnishes the elasticity which is necessary. The fusion of the real executive power and the real legislative power, through the agency of a cabinet, constitutes the efficient working power of the government.

The Presidential system seeks to find in fixed terms and elections by the people at once this stability and elasticity. The Executive and Congress are not responsible to each other. They are both responsible to the people. They both return to the people at short intervals the several trusts they have received from the people; and they are like Antæus of old, who renewed his strength at the touch of his mother earth.

This very difference between the parliamentary and the presidential systems enables us to adopt this measure with perfect safety. It will prevent the permanent aggrandizement of either power. The Secretaries cannot assume undue leadership in Congress, because success will not prolong, as defeat will not terminate, their tenure of office. They may be removed by the President at any moment, notwithstanding their success. They may be maintained in office by him during his whole term notwithstanding their defeat. At the end of his term they will almost certainly leave office and soon have place in Congress. Their independence of Congress will prevent their succumbing to its will, and will rouse the natural jealousy of Congress to resist their power becoming too great. The concurrence of opinion between the President and Congress is not essential, perhaps is not possible. Neither will be broken down by the assertion of the will of the other in its own department, because both will soon be called to judgment by the people, and the people will correct any antagonism which threatens the effective working of the Government.

An intelligent French gentleman recently said to me that the French Republic is dying because of the weakness of the executive power. If this be true, the cause lies near at hand. The President is elected by the two Chambers, convened in joint meeting at a few hours' notice for that purpose. Although nominally elected for a term, he is responsible to the Legislature. Each of the two Presidents, Thiers and MacMahon, has found himself forced to resign his term before an adverse majority in the Legislature. There is no stability—neither that of the permanent executive, as in England, nor that secured by popular election, direct responsibility to the people, and short fixed terms, as in the United States.

In Europe every government which moves at all tends to the parliamentary system, because that system consists with the accustomed and cherished monarchy. In the new governments of this new continent, where "old things have passed away and all things have become new," each drifts to the presidential system, because the people fear the idea of monarchy and kingly prerogative. I seek to confirm this drifting. I seek to maintain an elective executive power by establishing the easiest communication of experience and knowledge with an elective legislature. I seek to prevent the consolidation of two great powers in one department by making each of two departments more worthy to possess its respective powers than one could possibly be to possess all powers.

The adoption of this measure will not in any degree impair the efficiency of the present system of committees. Their duties, functions, and methods will not be materially different. They will examine, investigate, and prepare legislation for a more general, intelligent, comprehensive consideration and debate than measures ever have had. Nor will it increase their labors that all the members will have with great ease to themselves the information which the committees usually dig out of ponderous communications at great labor.

It is asserted that the Secretaries are even now overworked, and will not have time to attend the sittings of the Houses even for a few minutes four days in each week. I have said before, if two days in each House are unnecessary or inconvenient, one day in each House may suffice. If it shall be inconvenient for all the heads of Departments to attend on the same day, it may be provided that they attend on different days. These are matters of detail merely, as I have said, and can be easily modified. The officers of other governments have time. Even those with portfolios and charged with the details of administration have time to attend the sittings of the Chambers. If by reason of the immensity of our territory or the variety of our interests the Secretaries in fact have not time to perform this additional duty, the force in their offices should be increased. An undersecretary should be appointed, to whom could be confided the appointment of clerks and that routine of administration which requires only order and accuracy. The principal officers could then confine their attention to those duties which require intellectual activity and wise discretion; and then they would have abundance of time for their duties under this bill. Indeed, I believe the best interests of a sound civil-service reform would be subserved if the Secretaries were relieved of the harrowing and harassing cares of distributing clerkships and oiling the mere machinery of the Departments.

Fears have been expressed that unseemly controversies and painful badgering of Secretaries by sharp cross-examiners might result. But it might be our ox that is gored. The Secretaries are well able to take care of themselves. This present Cabinet is fully equal in debate to any like number of members of Congress. Most of them have tested their strength here, and one of them at least has not failed in conflict either here or in Europe. It will always be so. Any man fitted by business qualifications to take charge of a Department can tell clearly what he understands thoroughly. The rules which I have suggested would hardly admit of such unseemly wrangle. The enlightened sense of decency and dignity on the part of Secretaries and members would effectually prevent it. The decorum which has attested the keen sense of responsibility in both Houses should dispel such apprehensions, and if Secretaries or members should once forget themselves, the just public indignation would prevent a repetition.

If the Secretary should refuse to obey this law, the power of impeachment would suffice to punish him, even if it could not coerce obedience, as in all other cases of official delinquency.

I have not chosen to bring to my aid the authority of great names. Mr. Clay scouted the idea that the Departments were part of the constitutional executive. He declared they were the creatures of congressional enactment, and therefore were absolutely bound to obey its provisions. Professor Lieber declared that while members of Congress cannot be made heads of Departments, yet that heads of Departments can be admitted to the floor with the right of debate. Judge Story, with that fullness of learning and copious eloquence which marks all his works, has stated the argument which maintained the constitutionality and the expediency of a law such as I propose.

"Aping British ways," I see it sometimes written. No, it is not a British way; it is the way of the government of every civilized nation in the world which has a legislature and executive except our own. The republics of France and Switzerland, and Mexico and Central and South America, have adopted it. The limited monarchies of England and Holland and Denmark and Sweden and Spain and Belgium and Italy and Brazil have established it. The stern imperialism of Germany and Austria have admitted it. It is the reasonable, intelligent, progressive way; the way of improved legislation. No nation has ever abandoned it for the old way, more than a farmer has given up the mower and reaper for the scythe and the sickle.

But if it were a British way! The parliamentary history of England is the chief glory of the Anglo-Saxon race. It is the history of freedom, the history of human progress, the history of the amelioration of the evils of barbarism and the substitution of the blessings of the greatest liberty and the least law. It is the history of Magna Charta, the Petition of Rights, the Bill of Rights, the great remonstrance, the Habeas Corpus, the statutes of treason, the extension of suffrage. It is the history of Strafford beheaded, of Clarendon banished, of Danby imprisoned, of Oxford committed to the tower, of Bolingbroke and Ormond attainted, of Bute disgraced, of North, the beloved favorite of the haughtiest king who has sat on the throne of England since the imperious Henry, driven from power. It is the history of Somers and Russell and Bolingbroke and Walpole and Townshend and Chatham and Fox and Burke and Pitt and Sheridan and Canning and Brougham and Peel and Gladstone and Bright and Disraeli. It is the history of those immortal victories in the great struggle of liberty against prerogative, of the rights of the individual against the power of the community, whose glories will shine resplendent with undimmed brilliancy when the victories of mere force will have lost their effect and when Cœur de Lion and the Black Prince and Marlborough and Wellington will have become but the shadows of great names. Whose heart does not thrill at this thought of the Parliament? And the chief cause of its transcendent influence was that it opened the dark doors of ministerial cabinets; that it exposed to broad day the connection of the Crown and the Commons; that it substituted for the hidden corruption which bought votes the open influence of intelligence, character, information, intellect, argument, and thus stimulated at once its own and the nation's aspiration for a larger liberty and a purer life.

I would have our Congress emulate this notable example and surpass this wonderful success. I would have it gain all the benefits of the Parliamentary system without losing any of the advantages of Presidential government.

APPENDIX.

Constitutional provisions of various countries on this subject.

AUSTRIA.

Fundamental law of December 21, 1867.—Article 23: The members of the ministry are authorized to take part in all the deliberations of the delegates in the Reichsrath, and to submit their propositions personally or through the medium of a delegate. They have the right to be heard whenever they demand it. The delegates have the right to address questions to the ministry or to any one of its members, to call for answers and explanations, and to nominate committees of inquiry, to which the ministers must furnish the necessary information.

BELGIUM.

Constitution of 1831.—Section II, article 88: The ministers have no deliberative voice in either chamber of the legislature except where they are members thereof. They have the right to be present in each of the chambers and to be heard whenever they demand it. The chambers may require the presence of the ministers.

BRAZIL.

Constitution of 1824.—Chapter IV, article 53: The executive power exercised through one of the ministers of state, the right to propose laws; and it is only after an examination made by a committee of the Chamber of Deputies, in which the law is to originate, that such proposition can be converted into a bill.

Article 54: The ministers may discuss and defend the proposition after the report of the committee, but they cannot vote unless they are senators or deputies.

DENMARK.

Fundamental law of 1865.—V, 59: The ministers, in virtue of their duties, have admission to the Rigsdag, and have the right during discussions to participate in the debate as often as they please, while observing the established rules. They have no vote except when they are members of the Rigsdag.

FRANCE.

Constitutional law of July 18, 1875.—6: The ministers have the right of being present in the two chambers, and may be heard whenever they demand. They may cause themselves to be assisted by commissioners designated by decree of the president of the republic for the discussion of any bill proposed.

GERMANY, (EMPIRE OF.)

Constitution of 1871.—The Bundesrath is presided over by the chancellor of the empire, who has also the right to be present at the deliberations of the Reichstag or house of representatives, which is an elective body.

GREAT BRITAIN.

While the executive government is vested nominally in the Crown, it is practically in a committee of ministers known as the cabinet. All the acts of the ministry are liable to be questioned in Parliament; and as they may require prompt explanation, it is essential that the members of the cabinet should have seats either in the upper or lower house, where they may constantly answer for the policy and action of the government.

GREECE.

Constitution of 1864.—VII, 78: The ministers are admitted to the sessions of the chamber, and may be heard whenever they demand it. The ministers have no deliberative voice in the chamber, except when they are members of the same. The chamber may require the presence of the ministers.

ITALY.

Constitution of 1848, (extended over the annexed provinces of the Kingdom of Italy.)—66: The ministers have no deliberative voice in either chamber, except when they are members thereof. But they have constantly the right of being present, and may be heard as often as they demand.

NETHERLANDS.

Fundamental law of 1815, as amended in 1848.—Section IV, 89: Heads of the ministerial departments have the right of admission to the two chambers. They have only a deliberative share in legislation, unless they are members of either house. They communicate to the chambers, either verbally or in writing, the information demanded, whenever its communication is not judged contrary to the interest and safety of the kingdom or of its possessions and colonies in the other parts of the world. They may to that end be invited by each of the two chambers to be present at their sessions.

NORWAY.

Fundamental law of 1814.—Section 76: Every law must be first proposed to the Odelsthing [house of representatives] either by its own members or the government, and in the latter case through the medium of a counselor of state.

PORTUGAL.

Constitutional charter of 1826, as amended in 1852.—IV, 46: The executive power exercised by one of the ministers of state, the right of proposing bills, which belongs to it in the preparation of laws, and it is only after an examination in that chamber which must originate it that such a proposition can take the form of a bill.

47: The ministers may discuss and defend a proposition after the report of a committee, but they cannot vote unless they are peers or deputies.

PRUSSIA.

Constitution of 1850.—IV, 60: The ministers, as well as the state functionaries who represent them, have admission to both chambers, and may be heard whenever they demand it. Each chamber may require the presence of the ministers.

SPAIN.

Constitution of 1845, readopted in 1856.—IX, 64: The ministers may be senators or deputies, and may take part in discussions of the legislative assemblies; but they have no right to vote except in that chamber to which they belong.

SWEDEN.

Constitutional law of 1809, as amended up to 1866.—II, §53: The members of the council of state may assist at the sittings of each chamber, with the right of taking part in its deliberations, but not of voting, unless they are members of the chamber.

SWEDEN AND NORWAY.

Act of union of 1815.—V: The minister of state of Norway, and the two counselors of state who accompany the King, shall have a seat and a deliberative voice in the Swedish council of state whenever affairs relative to the two kingdoms are in question. If affairs relative to the two kingdoms are brought before the King in the Norwegian council of state, at whatever time or place it may be assembled, three members of the Swedish council of state shall also have seats and right of deliberation thereon.

SWITZERLAND.

Constitution of 1874, article 101.—The members of the federal council have a consulting voice in the two sections of the federal assembly, as well as the right to introduce propositions upon subjects under deliberation.

CHILI.

In the deliberations of the national assembly it listens to the orators of the senate and of the government, who must be one minister, one counselor of state, and one secretary of state.

COLOMBIA.

It is the duty of the ministers to communicate to both chambers, with the approbation of the executive power, all the information which may be demanded of them, orally or in writing, on the affairs of their respective departments, except in cases where publicity would be improper.

COSTA RICA.

The secretaries of state may be present at the discussions in congress or at either of the two houses, and they may take part in the same discussions, but they shall retire before the votes are cast.

GUATEMALA.

In Guatemala they may fill both positions, and in fact they always go together; so that the secretaries of government fully share in the discussion and have both voice and vote.

NICARAGUA.

In Nicaragua there is absolute incompatibility, and practically the secretaries leave the cabinet in order to go to congress at the time of meeting, returning, often, to the secretaryship as soon as the congress finally adjourns.

HONDURAS.

In Honduras the secretaries cannot be members of congress, but they may take part in discussions of all measures pending before them.

SALVADOR.

The practice and the law are the same as in Honduras.

HAYTI.

The secretary of state and the grand judge are the orators charged with representing the executive power, by oral communication, on the floor of the senate and the chamber of representatives.

Story on the Constitution, section 869 et seq.:

"The heads of the Departments are, in fact, thus precluded from proposing or vindicating their own measures in the face of the nation in the course of debate, and are compelled to submit them to other men who are either imperfectly acquainted with the measures or are indifferent to their success or failure. Thus that open and public responsibility for measures which properly belongs to the executive in all governments, and especially in a republican government, as its greatest security and strength, is completely done away. The Executive is compelled to resort to secret and unseen influences, to private interviews, and private arrangements to accomplish its own appropriate purposes, instead of proposing and sustaining its own duties and measures by a bold and manly appeal to the nation in the face of its representatives. One consequence of this state of things is, that there never can be traced home to the executive any responsibility for the measures which are planned and carried at its suggestion. Another consequence will be (if it has not yet been) that measures will be adopted or defeated by private intrigues, political combinations, irresponsible recommendations, and all the blandishments of office, and all the deadening weight of silent patronage. The Executive will never be compelled to avow or to support any opinions. His ministers may conceal or evade any expression of their opinions. He will seem to follow, when, in fact, he directs the opinions of Congress. He will assume the air of a dependent, when, in fact, his spirit and his wishes pervade the whole system of legislation. If corruption ever eats its way silently into the vitals of this Republic it will be because the people are unable to bring responsibility home to the Executive through his chosen ministers. They will be betrayed when their suspicions are most lulled by the Executive under the disguise of an obedience to the will of Congress. If it would not have been safe to trust the heads of Departments, as representatives, to the choice of the people as their constituents, it would have been at least some gain to have allowed them seats, like territorial Delegates in the House of Representatives, where they might freely debate without a title to vote.

"In such an event their influence, whatever it would be, would be seen and felt and understood, and on that account would have involved little danger and more searching jealousy and opposition; whereas it is now secret and silent, and from that very cause may become overwhelming. One other reason in favor of such a right is, that it would compel the Executive to make appointments for the high departments of government, not from personal or party favorites, but from statesmen of high public character, talent, experience, and elevated services; from statesmen who had earned public favor and could command public confidence. At present gross incapacity may be concealed under official forms, and ignorance silently escape by shifting the labors upon more intelligent subordinates in office. The nation would be, on the other plan, better served, and the Executive sustained by more masculine eloquence as well as more liberal learning. * * * There can be no danger that a free people will not be sufficiently wakeful over their rulers and their acts and opinions when they are known and avowed, or that they will not find representatives in Congress ready to oppose improper measures or sound the alarm upon arbitrary encroachments. The real danger is when the influence of the rulers is at work in secret and assumes no definite shape; when it guides with silent and irresistible sway, and yet covers itself under the forms of popular opinion or independent legislation; when it does nothing, yet accomplishes every thing."

THE EARLY USAGE IN THIS COUNTRY.

Our early history has not been without illustration of the necessity and of examples of this practice. In the early days of the Government the Secretaries were repeatedly called to the presence of either House for consultation, advice, and information.

"Wednesday, July 22, 1789.—The Secretary of Foreign Affairs (Mr. Jefferson) attended, agreeably to order, and made the necessary explanations."—Annals of Congress, First Congress, volume 1, page 51.

"Saturday, August 22, 1789.—The Senate again entered on executive business. The President of the United States came into the Senate Chamber, attended by General Knox, Secretary of War, and laid before the Senate the following statement of facts, with the questions thereto annexed, for their advice and consent."—Annals of Congress, First Congress, volume 1, page 66.

And again on the Monday following the President and General Knox were before the Senate.

"Friday, August 7, 1789.—The following message was received from the President of the United States, by General Knox, the Secretary of War, who delivered therewith sundry statements and papers relating to the same."—Proceedings of House of Representatives, Annals of Congress, volume 1, page 684.

"Monday, August 10, 1789.—The following message was received from the President, by General Knox, [Secretary of War,] who delivered in the same, together with statement of the troops in the service of the United States."—Proceedings of House of Representatives, Annals of Congress, volume 1, page 689.

Instances of this kind might be almost indefinitely multiplied, but these serve sufficiently to exhibit the practice established at an early day by those who framed the Constitution.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. President, this measure was proposed by the distinguished Senator from Ohio [Mr. PENDLETON] while he was a member of the House in 1864, with this difference, that the proposition now includes the admission of the members of the Cabinet into the Senate as well as into the House of Representatives, and enjoins peremptory attendance each week for four days instead of two.

At that time it was my duty as one of the select committee to consider the subject; but the speech I then made upon it I do not intend now to repeat, although it possibly may be found, if my friend, the Senator from Ohio, will pardon me for saying so, to have at least as much vitality as the resurrected bill which died fourteen years ago in the House, and died then not from any lack of ability, as it will not now, on the part of the mover, but because the bill was an unfragrant exotic, which here found no congenial soil or climate.

That measure, tending to assimilate our form of government to such monarchies as are mainly controlled by cabinets, notwithstanding its advocacy by an eloquent expounder of the ultra theories of strict construction, will now find no new bulwarks erected in the Constitution for its support and none of the old removed that for almost a century have here barred and still bar its entrance.

It appears a little remarkable while many of the leading minds of Great Britain and of Europe seem eager to copy more and more of American principles and methods that we should find any one in the Senate of the United States, whether a student of Hamilton or of Jefferson, seeking to copy that feature of the British government through which the Crown maintains its pomp and prerogatives, and which dates first from the so-called "junto" and later from the "cabal" formed by Charles I wholly from his most devoted personal adherents. It is true that Charles lost his head, but the Crown has not lost the cabinet of the privy council. For some years after the revolution of 1688 these servants of the executive were by law excluded from seats in Parliament, but King William soon followed the management of the Stuarts and the law was repealed. Among the leaders of British cabinets who followed the notorious Jeffreys such names appear as Lords Bute, Walpole, and North. America was not unmindful of their despotic career during their lives, heeded the lesson in our organic law, and will be slow to offer opportunities for kindred ambition to imitate their example.

If I venture to call the attention of the Senate to the constitutional objections to the measure presented it is because they stand out so prominently as to be plainly read by plain men, and not because I do not know there are many other Senators here who by more extensive constitutional learning would be able to state these objections more clearly and with greater force. The first point to be considered is whether the Constitution offers any warrant for the adoption of this measure. If not, its inexpediency will the less need to be elaborately unfolded. Certainly a proposition which is to effect a grave and radical change in the executive and legislative branches of the Government as to the conduct of public affairs cannot receive favor without a clear and distinct grant of power appears. This should stand out visibly to all eyes where it can be seen, and seen without a compound microscope. But where is the article or section which covers it? Where is the substance of the idea even remotely hinted at? It may surprise even some of the friends of the new measure to learn the humble place where its residence is said to be located in the Constitution. Here it is:

Each House may determine the rules of its proceedings, punish its members for disorderly behavior, and, with the concurrence of two-thirds, expel a member.

That is the whole of the slender opening pointed out for the entrance of seven persons not members-elect into the House and Senate to take part in the debates and to bring as the heads of the Executive Departments executive influence more directly to bear upon the legislative branch of the Government. It was once supposed not to be easy for a camel to go through the eye of a needle, but the aperture here through which a whole ponderous Cabinet is to crawl is surely far more diminutive than a needle's eye.

Undeniably, "each House may determine the rules of its proceedings," but rules are determined by members for members and not for outsiders, especially not for executive officers. They concern its orderly proceedings, threaten to punish disorderly members, and guide the presiding officer in the daily routine of business; but rules are not laws reaching beyond the respective Houses unless their privileges have been invaded, and can have neither force nor relevancy in determining proceedings elsewhere. Rules may be one thing today and another to-morrow, depending upon the judgment or caprice of a partisan or non-partisan majority; but the Constitution remains fixed, whoever may make parliamentary rules. The power of each House over its rules has no more to do with the heads of the Executive Departments than with the justices of the Supreme Court; and a law attempting to compel the attendance of the justices, based upon the power to determine rules, would be no greater stretch of the Constitution, no more gross and even grotesque perversion of its letter and spirit, than a similar compulsion of the members of the Cabinet or even of the members of the New York Chamber of Commerce.

Whenever parties are hard pressed to find constitutional power for what they propose to do, they often resort to that clause of the Constitution which grants power "to make all laws necessary and proper for carrying into execution" the other vested powers of the Constitution. This, like the clause relating to the "common defense and general welfare," is the usual unfailing fountain, always bubbling, where latitudinarians are sure to find authority to do whatever was never done before. But instead of finding any powers of Congress or of the Executive in abeyance or which have not been discovered and fully and completely exercised as originally designed, it will be generally conceded that the extreme limits of the Constitution have been explored and occupied, possibly sometimes overleaped. Powers not delegated are "reserved to the States respectively or to the people," and cannot, under the mere forms of law, be appropriated by either the Executive or by Congress. If any have slumbered for ninety years, there is no magician who will be likely to wake them into life. No laws, of course, can be necessary or proper to carry an ungranted power into execution.

Another argument sometimes faintly brought into this discussion is one from analogy, derived from the law which permits territorial Delegates to have seats without votes in the House of Representatives. This law, however convenient it may be, finds its sole support in the "power to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory or other property of the United States." This, as the foundation for the creation of territorial Delegates, is at best so thin and shadowy that all must wish it could have been a little more substantial, and it can no more be seriously contended that it is broad and sound enough to be cited as a precedent wherever the word "rules" happens to be repeated in the Constitution than it can be cited as enough of itself to bear the additional weight of the seven heads of the Executive Departments, and it would be little or no worse to claim that such heads may be disposed of as "the property of the United States."

Again, it is claimed that the whole constitutional question was settled by the law of 1789 organizing the Treasury Department, which provided that the Secretary of the Treasury should "make report and give information to either branch of the Legislature in person or in writing as may be required." The words "in person" do not appear in the acts establishing either of the other Departments, and if they had so appeared no simple law could have added to or subtracted from the Constitution one jot or tittle. These Departments are not creations of Congress to be expanded at its will, but creations of the Constitution and subject to its limitations. But the whole of the debate at the time the act was passed, as reported in the Annals of Congress, furnishes a conclusive refutation of the groundless assumption that it was ever the purpose of Congress to give the Secretary of the Treasury a seat or a right to participate in the debates in either House. No one suggested or contemplated the idea. They were all very warmly in earnest against mingling the functions of the Executive with those of the Legislature, and abundantly cautious about granting even what power was accorded to the Secretary, objecting to "being led by him." They would not let him, when submitting information only, "obtrude his sentiments perpetually."

Fortunately almost instantaneous contemporaneous construction of the act referred to shows that, for whatever purpose the words "in person" were inserted, they were not used to give the Secretary any power to submit reports, or plans, or information, except in writing. Secretary Hamilton notified the House January 9, 1790, that, in obedience to its request, he was ready to make his financial report, that report which has made his name forever famous; and his friends, for that grand occasion only, attempted to obtain leave for him to appear in person and address the House, but instantly objections were made on all sides, and it was formally resolved, after full debate, but finally without even a division, that the communication must be in writing. It was thus that the question was disposed of by the very same House which framed the law organizing the Treasury Department and immediately thereafter. He must be a bold reformer who would reverse the decision of the First Congress as to the meaning of the most important act of its first session.

Once more the question appeared, and was bluntly and squarely settled. The Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Treasury, feeling that a report of a committee of the House on the defeat of General St. Clair had done them great injustice, a resolution was offered November 13, 1792, by one of their friends, inviting them to attend and furnish such information as would be conclusive in the investigation of the subject. This met with the same fate, of course, that befell the first attempt; but it has a further importance in having furnished the occasion for Madison, the father of the Constitution, to express his views on the constitutional merits involved in the question. He spoke as follows:

> Mr. Madison objected to the motion on constitutional grounds, and as being contrary to the practice of the House. He had not, he said, thoroughly revolved the matter in his own mind, and therefore was not prepared to state fully the effects which would result from the adoption of the resolution; but he would hazard thus much, that it would form an innovation in the mode of conducting the business of this House, and introduce a precedent which would lead to perplexing and embarrassing consequences, as it involves a conclusion in respect to the principles of the Government which at an earlier day would have been revolted from. He was decidedly in favor of written information.

These brief words bristle from beginning to end with the constitutional objections of Mr. Madison, even to a single dose of what the Senator from Ohio now proposes shall be our daily food; and the mere lapse of time has neither diminished the force nor the pertinency of his vigorous denunciations. Since Alexander Hamilton, that matchless Secretary of the Treasury, failed to obtain admission to the floor of the House to speak for once only, no one of his successors has ventured to allow his friends to apply for the privilege, and the statesman who contests a constitutional interpretation of Madison should husband his resources, and with that authority arrayed against him need not feel too much mortified if he should suffer defeat.

Having shown that the words "in person" in the law of 1789 did not, in the judgment of the same men who made the law, give any such authority as is now claimed for them, any further explanation is perhaps uncalled for; and yet, it should be observed that these words apply as much to the Senate as to the House. The Senate, so far as its advice and consent is required in appointments and treaties, possesses an executive character, and Washington, in the first months of his Presidency, was in the habit of going in person to the Senate, in company with one of the secretaries, on executive business; but this practice quickly ceased, and all subsequent communications were made in writing. The Senate, at the time referred to, was a small body of men, but little larger than a committee might be now, and its advice, therefore, was sought in an informal manner. There is not the slightest evidence that any secretary, though there "in person," ever opened his lips in the Senate except to deliver "a message in writing."

Having shown, as it appears to me, that there is no affirmative power granted in the Constitution by which the heads of the Executive Departments can have seats and participate in the debate of either branch of Congress it may not be without some profit to examine briefly the negative of the question, or where the power would seem to be directly or indirectly denied.

What is proposed here is nothing less than a qualified membership in both Houses of Congress, and the qualification is the withholding the right to vote. They are to have seats, participate in debate, and be present, but may not vote. In courts of justice the attorneys are not allowed in the jury-room when the verdict is made up; but here the attorneys of the Executive, when the vote is taken, are not to be excluded. Any man of talents, capable of persuasive argument, "round, unvarnished truth," and worthy of his place in the Cabinet of the President, would lose much less to be deprived of his vote than of his speech, and might fairly expect his facts and logic to count much more than a single vote, and to count as here and now proposed, not in one House alone, but in both. A membership of this sort would be of the very highest grade, higher than any ever dreamed of by Clay or Calhoun, Webster or Seward.

Some minor questions possibly, after all, are left by the bill a little mixed. Would these executive members be privileged from arrest, not liable to be questioned for any speech or debate in either House, or to punishment or expulsion for non-attendance or for disorderly behavior? Must they have attained the age of twenty-five years for the House and thirty years for the Senate? Would the acting Secretaries, or acting Postmaster-General, or acting Attorney-General have seats in Congress as they do in the Cabinet in case of the absence of the heads of the Executive Departments? The various parts of the machinery, it will be seen, would be likely to require constant amendment and very frequent lubrication.

The Constitution declares that "the Senate shall be composed of two Senators from each State, chosen by the Legislature thereof for six years; and each Senator shall have one vote." And it further declares that "the House of Representatives shall be composed of members chosen every second year by the people of the several States." In the face of these plain provisions it is now proposed to admit men, appointed by the President, with the most valuable privileges of membership, to both the Senate and the House. That membership may be estimated high or low, at half or at double the value of the ordinary voting member, but it would be the admission of a class of members unknown to the Constitution and with all of the prerogatives of potential leadership.

There is another stubborn provision in article 1, section 4, of the Constitution, that "no person holding any office under the United States shall be a member of either House during his continuance in office." The heads of the Executive Departments hold offices of the very highest order, and cannot, therefore, lawfully be either whole or half members of either House. If all other constitutional objections were removed, this would be insurmountable.

The President of the United States, it is provided, shall, "from time to time, give to the Congress information of the state of the Union, and recommend to their consideration such measures as he shall judge necessary and expedient." In order that he might be the better prepared to discharge this duty he was empowered by the Constitution to "require the opinion in writing of the principal officers in each of the Executive Departments upon any subjects relating to the duties of their respective Departments." They are not required to give information of any sort to Congress on any subject, but to the President alone; and the only channel by which they are allowed to reach Congress appears to be through the President in writing. But the high functions thus conferred exclusively upon the President, and much more, it is now proposed shall be devolved upon seven subordinates, and each one of them, like Wolsey, "in full-blown dignity," is to stand, with "law in his voice and fortune in his hand," to give information, participate in debate, and show to both the Senate and the House what each one may judge necessary and expedient. This would seem to be an innovation of some magnitude, and yet wholly unauthorized by the Constitution.

The members of the Cabinet in charge of the Executive Departments are appointed, with the advice and consent of the Senate, by the President, and during his term hold office at his will, his power of removal of these officers being rarely contested, but by the change now urged they would be speedily brought under the absolute control of the House, practically dismissed at its will, and a fundamental change in the form of the Government would be thereby consummated.

It will be admitted, I suppose, that the highest authority as a commentator on the Constitution is that of Story; and while he maintains much reverence for British precedents, he shows that the heads of the Departments are, in fact, properly precluded by the Constitution from seats in Congress. He says:

> The restrictions upon executive connection with the Legislature were founded in deference to State jealousy and a sincere desire to obviate the fears, real or imaginary, that the General Government would obtain an undue preference over State governments.

Again he says:

The other part of the clause, which disqualifies persons holding any office from being members of either House during their continuance in office, has been still more universally applauded and has been vindicated upon the highest grounds of public policy.

I will read further:

The heads of the Departments are, in fact, thus precluded from proposing or vindicating their own measures in the face of the nation in the course of debate.

Again:

Still, however, the reasoning from the British practice has not been deemed satisfactory by the public; and the guard interposed by the Constitution has been received with general approbation, and has been thought to have worked well during our experience under the National Government.

These words of Story, added to those of Madison, would justify me in holding the constitutional argument concluded.

It cannot be pretended by any accurate interpretation of the language that there is any positive provision of the Constitution which grants power, direct or implied, for the admission of executive officers to seats and to participation in debate in either House of Congress; and the provisions where such a theory is unmistakably negatived are many, and the exclusion of these officers is made necessary in order to preserve unity in the construction of all parts of the Constitution.

I will trespass upon the time of the Senate with only a few words more as to the expediency of the measure. Under aristocratic forms of government, or those least under the control of the people, where the legislature, if any exists, is merely expected to register the will of the autocrat, king or emperor, the presence of cabinet ministers—like Disraeli or Bismarck—to initiate measures, may be indispensable; but the American Congress, it is to be hoped, is not so dull and so unambitious or wanting in capacity that all proper measures cannot be initiated, sufficiently debated, and matured, without calling for the constant presence and aid of the heads of the Executive Departments. It is no argument that Spain, Portugal, and Brazil, or that Hayti and Costa Rica, admit cabinet ministers into their legislative assemblies. We may indulge the hope without much vanity that it would be better for them to look up to our example than for us to be looking to them for leadership in the methods of free government.

One of the possible and most serious dangers which would follow the adoption of this measure would be the practical discovery and use of a new and facile method of changing the Constitution by an act of Congress, or possibly by a mere change of parliamentary rules. The tendency of Parliament and of Congress is ever towards aggrandizement, and from limited and obscure beginnings to advance their privileges and powers with regular and never ceasing steps. They would even claim power to extort or win concessions from the executive and judiciary by grants or by the refusal of grants. The Congress, if disposed to wage a contest with the Executive, might follow in the footsteps of the British House of Commons,* and aided by time, audacity, and connivance, gradually absorb the chief power of the Government and that sovereign power, without any increase of the power of the people, would be held by the House of Representatives uncurbed and responsible only to the dominant majority.

A legislature, with power to vary or modify the Constitution, would be a despotism, and none the less a despotism with three hundred tyrants than with one. Liberty and self-government, according to all American traditions, can be sustained only by a system of written fundamental laws, and are as sure to be undermined by popular absolutism under the leadership of an Alcibiades or a Mirabeau, as by a Cæsar or Napoleon. If the object aimed at here were ever so good, and not as our fathers thought, odious, it would be a dangerous experiment to have it introduced by a law made paramount to and in spite of the Constitution. Our people are not yet ready to exchange a constitutional government for a congressional government.

The preservation of the just and precise constitutional powers of both the executive and the legislative branch is equally essential to the health and longevity of the Government. Neither of them should obtain the mastery. It was the omnipotence of Parliament, where no law could strictly be denounced as unconstitutional, that led to the war with the American colonies, and much earlier would that war have ended if the Parliament had not been ruled by the King's cabinet. As early as 1780 Fox exclaimed that "as the members of Parliament walk through this room to take their places, you may ask each one of them what he thinks of the measures of the ministry, of their honorable character, or their wisdom, and he will answer 'that he despises and abominates them;' one may rest assured that no sooner has the member taken his seat than he votes in favor of a question for which the minister seems to interest himself." Not until nearly three years after this was Lord North allowed by King George to talk of peace, though the diary of the Premier shows that he would not have been unwilling to offer peace long before. Whether the Cabinet in Congress would exalt or degrade the power of the President, or of Congress, its presence cannot be safely tolerated, and would be equally disastrous to one as the other, as well as to the people.

That there might be some advantages in having members of a cabinet on the floor to explain and defend their own acts, or the measures proposed by them, or to answer inquiries for further information, may be readily conceded; but the framers of our Constitution were not ignorant of these advantages, and decided that they were not weighty enough to overcome the disadvantages which such a feature would bring into the practical workings of our republican form of government. Among them all it never had a friend to propose it. That honor appears to belong exclusively to my friend, the Senator from Ohio. The great principle in our early days that the executive, legislative, and judicial branches of our government should be forever kept distinct and independent was everywhere sacredly preserved.

Obviously, any cabinet of seven members with only tolerable ability, when admitted to the privileges of the floor, would largely magnify and increase executive influence in Congress, and surround the Executive with a much stronger support, with a more alert legislative bodyguard, than that regularly accorded to it in the popular branch of the Government by the votes of the people. Instead of suppressing what has been styled private or clandestine influence, greater opportunities would be opened for its grosser exercise, and a constant and more persuasive, if not dictatorial force, made bold by all the robes of official authority, would be superadded. Too great temptation would be ever present to enlist support by the distribution of patronage where politically it would take root and bear fruit; and whether so distributed or not, even Cæsar's wife would always be suspected.

Let me quote the recent words of an orator elsewhere, who, not afraid of the General-in-Chief of the Army, but still afraid, exclaimed:

What provision of the Federal Constitution, what law enacted by any preceding Congress, undertakes to clothe anybody, either the President himself or one of his privy council, even including his premier, his Secretary of State, to sit as he did on the floor of this Chamber on Saturday of last week and by his presence and his indications of approval seek to intimidate, overawe, and browbeat an American Congress?

That Secretary's power is certainly masculine, and suggestive no doubt of browbeating and of the club of Hercules; but he may have intended to seduce Congress; and it will be better not to expose such orators to the perils of a sevenfold multiplication of the premier's "indications of approval."

If it be the opinion of the distinguished Senator from Ohio [Mr. PENDLETON] that the executive power, as one of the co-ordinate branches of the Government, is waning, or too weak when contrasted with that of the House of Representatives or with that of the Senate, either in open or secret session, then I must respectfully suggest that a law or rule permitting a trained band of orators upon the floor of each House is not a legitimate way of re-enforcing that power; and further, if it is to be done, it should be done by a constitutional amendment submitted to and ratified by the people. How much of a chance think you, Mr. President, would such an amendment have before the people? If I might answer, I should say its support would be limited to the Marine Band.

If the pending or an equivalent proposition should ever be adopted, Cabinets would be selected with primary reference to their popular reputation as ready debaters, and not as to the possession of any wide information and sound judgment tending to fit them to conduct the important affairs of their respective departments. Such men as Jefferson, Gallatin, and Monroe, having few gifts of speech while on their legs, would be wholly excluded. The members of the Cabinet for the most part are now and must ever be heavily overtasked by their daily official duties. The great questions of finance, commerce, foreign relations, Army and Navy, Indian policy, public lands, pensions, patents, and postal service are all constantly in the forefront, with new and daily problems of national gravity pressing for immediate solution. The never-ending supervision over officials holding responsible trusts and the proper selection of those who are to fill important public stations are irksome and joyless fields of illimitable labor. Those who faithfully discharge these duties have neither time nor strength for anything more, and, if participating in debate, dual heads of Executive Departments would be at once demanded—one for congressional service and another for departmental; or, as in France, one minister with a portfolio and one without, or an upper and an under secretary. What, perhaps, is most indispensable in officers of the Cabinet after capacity and integrity is administrative or executive energy; and while that is not inconsistent with manly eloquence in debate, the combination is not so common as to be at all times obtainable; and consequently the field under the new programme from whence such officers could be supplied would be inconveniently restricted.

It is not just now proposed to attach any responsibility to the attendance of Cabinet officers upon the legislative branches of the Government. Whether their views shall coincide with those of the majority or not, or whether with or without its confidence, so far as it now appears, they are still to retain their places. They may talk four days in the week, but not vote, nor be displaced by the votes of the others.

In Great Britain the ministers, taken from members already belonging to Parliament, are held responsible for measures when introduced, and, of course, for their ultimate success. If belonging to the House of Commons, an acceptance of place in the cabinet vacates their seats until that elevation has been approved by their constituents and they are again elected. When defeated upon a parliamentary division as ministers, they resign, and surrender the administration of the government to the victorious party, but still hold their places as members. They may also be dismissed by a direct vote of a want of confidence, or by the loss of confidence on the part of the Crown. The ministers are made the scape-goats for all the faults and mishaps of the government. The Queen reigns, but the ministers govern, and in turn they are governed by the Premier. When defeated in the House of Commons, the ministers may dissolve Parliament and appeal to the people. If this appeal fails, as it sometimes has failed, they give place at once to their opponents.

*For the last one hundred and fifty years the public power is in the Parliament, and since then it has become more and more unpopular; in 1830 it endeavored by an innovation to uphold the public well-being, but in truth the more powerful parliament has become, the more is it hated.—Conningsby, (written by Disraeli before he became the Earl of Beaconsfield.)

The British constitution is the slow growth of usage. There is no written or organic law which retires the ministers when they are unable to command a majority of the House of Commons; but the long and almost unvarying practice makes the rule imperative. The younger Pitt, it is true, supported by George III, defied it, until at last by his perseverance, eloquence, and official power he secured a parliamentary majority. No minister, not even Gladstone or Disraeli, now dares to brave public opinion by clinging to office in the face of a hostile vote. Three changes of premiership have occurred in one year, 1834, when Viscount Melbourne superseded Earl Grey; then came the Duke of Wellington, and then a brief episode of Sir Robert Peel, followed by the restoration of Melbourne in 1835. The question to be pondered, perhaps decided, is whether or not we can properly import this prominent feature of the British constitution, or any portion of it, into our republican form of government. The first step here, and it is always the first step that costs, would of course limit the appearance of the Cabinet, as members in the Senate and House, to debate only; but it is unlikely that those who are enraptured with the British example would long be content with so tame a copy cut short of its original proportions. Whenever an American Cabinet thus introduced should meet with an adverse vote their position would become embarrassing, a proud and sensitive member would soon feel called upon to resign, and usage or partisan clamor would ere long make resignation the common law and ingraft upon our Constitution in its fullest extent one of the marked characteristics of the unwritten constitution of England as it has already done in relation to appropriation bills. Our Constitution provides that only bills for raising revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives; but the House, without a shadow of authority except the authority of the British House of Commons, which claims the exclusive right to originate all money bills, now appears to insist, not only upon the exclusive right to originate all "bills for raising revenue," but equally as much that of its disposal in all general appropriation bills.

If, by a similar disregard of the Constitution, the official tenure of the heads of the Executive Departments should be made dependent upon their ability to secure and maintain a majority in Congress, our presidential contest would be repeated every two years instead of every four. It is questionable whether or not this might not add to the oscillations and instability of our popular elections, and prove injurious to the prosperity and business interests of the country.

The British Parliament, meeting only when convened by the Crown, is yet transcendent in its power, unconfined to metes and bounds as to subjects or persons. It has made and may unmake the British constitution. It assumes whatever power it pleases, and may change the succession to the crown or alter and amend the religion of the country. There is no article of the British constitution which can be quoted; and its obligation rests on tradition, and on concessions obtained from the Crown by pecuniary subsidies to carry on foreign wars. By act 1, in the reign of George I, triennial Parliaments were changed to septennial, and the members though elected for only three years held office for seven. De Lolme says:

> Parliament can do anything which is not impossible. Hence it cannot make a woman a man or a man a woman.

More soberly it was said by Sir Edward Coke:

> True it is, that what the Parliament doth no authority on earth can undo.

Our institutions are widely different; and while much was copied from British example much was also rejected. If we looked in that direction for things wholesome, we also looked for things monitory. What was not safe for a people in earnest for the self-government of mankind was refused. Congress was created by the Constitution, meets every year, and has no powers save those conferred by the Constitution. Any new article must be ordained by a vote of the States or of the people. The choice of a speaker by the House of Commons may be negatived by the Crown, and their clerk and sergeant-at-arms are appointed for life by the Crown. We have as much constitutional authority to incorporate these features into our system, by law or by rules, as we have to give seats in the House and Senate to the heads of the Executive Departments.

Wherever the system of executive representation invades legislative assemblies it will be found that the executive representatives take possession of the majority and conduct all business of importance, while the nominal representatives of the people must content themselves mainly in the lonely industry of voting members. The opposition, also, is thus equally driven to put forward those only who are expected to fill the government places whenever the existing administration can be overturned. It happens, therefore, that a few men monopolize the honors, lead their party, and guide the assembly, while the many, coming from all parts of the country and better acquainted with its wants, but never called upon for patient study or laborious investigation, sink into ciphers that only add value to the figures in their front. Whatever distinction the ministers of the Crown may achieve, the degradation of the main body of the legislative assembly closely follows the presence and the dominance of the ministers. The heads of the Executive Departments, no matter how brilliant may be their intellectual equipments, can bring here no compensation for the loss Congress would suffer by the contact. Congress cannot afford to drop to the plane of a theater for star performers drawn from the President's Cabinet.

Congress, under the Constitution, was designed to be, whether it is so or not, a council of sages, assembled from every part of a wide continent, to regulate liberty by law; to correct public abuses, if any should exist, and to frame laws, in harmony with American institutions, to meet the wants of advancing civilization; but it is not omnipotent, and cannot make members of Congress out of any or all the materials to be found among the heads of the Executive Departments.

Mr. President, I must frankly own that I was unwilling to have one side of this important question strongly presented to the Senate, as it was sure to be presented by the Senator from Ohio, without having something said on the other side, and, fortunately for me, solid reasons for the right require less skill than plausible reasons for the wrong. Having maintained only what the fathers of our Government believed would best uphold its principles of freedom and most surely transmit our institutions unimpaired to future generations, I shall confidently rely upon the future action of the Senate to show that I have been right in objecting to the introduction of the heads or tails of the Executive Departments into Congress.

Mr. PENDLETON. If no other Senator now desires to take the floor for the discussion of the bill I move that it lie on the table, and I shall call it up hereafter when the convenience of Senators may require.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. WITHERS in the chair.) To this the Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

PREVENTION OF EPIDEMIC DISEASES.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to proceed now to the consideration of Senate bill No. 108.

Mr. CONKLING. I ask the Senator from Tennessee whether his wish be to take up the bill to-day that it may be unfinished business for to-morrow, or to proceed to vote upon it to-day?

Mr. HARRIS. I shall be perfectly satisfied, I will state to the Senater from New York, to take either course. I simply want to take the bill up for consideration so that we may proceed with it to-day, or to-morrow, as may be most agreeable to the Senate.

Mr. CONKLING. I suggest then, having no objection to the bill being taken up, having been able only at this moment now since I rose, for the first time to see it, that its importance is such, and the apprehensions felt in regard to it in respect of its effect upon commercial interests are such, that if the Senator has no objection to its being made the unfinished business for to-morrow, giving such others as would an opportunity to examine it in connection with letters which have been received meanwhile, I for one should prefer that to having it come up for consideration now.

Mr. HARRIS. I shall most cheerfully adopt the suggestion of the Senator from New York in that respect. I simply desire that the bill shall be taken up so that it will be the pending business; and it would suit me quite as well to proceed to-morrow as to-day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion to take up the bill, to which the Chair hears no objection.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I hope the Chair will put the question, for I am opposed to taking up anything at this session except appropriation bills. This is a bill to which I do not object, but I hope the Chair will put the question; I do not wish to be committed by unanimous consent to any sort of legislation.

Mr. HARRIS. Then I move to postpone the pending and all prior orders in order that I may move to take up the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. There are no prior orders. The motion to take up the bill is in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The only motion required is a motion simply to take up the bill.

Mr. HARRIS. I supposed that the bills before this on the Calendar were prior orders.

Mr. EDMUNDS. No, sir.

Mr. HARRIS. That being the case, I move simply to take up the bill for consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 108) to prevent the introduction of contagious or infectious diseases into the United States.

The motion was agreed to.

SUPPLEMENT TO REVISED STATUTES.

Mr. WALLACE. I ask the Senator from Tennessee to yield the floor to me.

Mr. HARRIS. I have no objection to informally laying aside Senate bill No. 108 in order that the Senator from Pennsylvania may proceed with the matter he has in hand.

Mr. WALLACE. My purpose is to move to proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution (S. R. No. 19) to provide for the publication and distribution of a supplement to the Revised Statutes.

Mr. CONKLING. I hope that will be done; it is important it should be done.

Mr. WALLACE. The measure was considered at the last session, and it seems a matter rather for the convenience of Senators and Representatives than a part of the legislation of the session.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania asks that the pending bill be laid aside informally, subject to the call of the Senator from Tennessee, for the purpose of considering the joint resolution which he has indicated. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

Mr. WALLACE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution (S. R. No. 19) to provide for the publication and distribution of a supplement to the Revised Statutes.

Mr. WALLACE. This joint resolution is the same as the one that passed the Senate at the last session of Congress, and commends itself in terms to Senators. I think I need not explain its provisions; Senators understand very well what it is. It came from the Committee on the Revision of the Laws at the last session, and they have reported again the joint resolution. I think it ought to be passed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to ask the Senator from Pennsylvania whether this is a part of the general legislation that he intends to go into, or is it supposed to be an exception?

Mr. WALLACE. This is no part of any general legislation; I assume it to be an exception. It is a measure intended for the benefit and convenience of Senators and Members rather than as a part of the general legislation of the country.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. CONKLING. May I ask, if this is the same resolution, in the same form, which passed at the last session?

Mr. WALLACE. It is in exactly the same words.

Mr. CONKLING. Which fell by accident for want of time.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENT TO A BILL.

Mr. PLUMB submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. No. 1343) to provide for certain expenses of the present session of Congress, and for other purposes; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. PLUMB, it was Ordered, That John Bowles have leave to withdraw his papers from the files of the Senate.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After one hour and thirty-five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at five o'clock and fifteen minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

IN SENATE.

TUESDAY, April 29, 1879.

Prayer by Rev. A. W. PITZER, D. D., of the city of Washington.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. WITHERS presented the petition of Franciska Keitel, widow of Anton Keitel, late quartermaster-sergeant Fifty-second New York Volunteers, praying for a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia, presented a copy of a letter addressed to the Speaker of the House of Representatives from the Secretary of the Navy, recommending the passage of the bill (S. No. 453) to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to fit a new propeller to the United States torpedo-boat Alarm, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. KERNAN presented the petition of Phebe A. Grinet, of New York, praying for the passage of a law increasing her pension from $20 to $40 per month; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. WHYTE presented the memorial of James L. Barbour and others, in favor of an appropriation for the purchase of a site and the erection of a new city post-office in the city of Washington, and submitting a plan for the location of the same; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. WHYTE asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 525) to establish upon a permanent footing the professorships of modern languages and of drawing at the United States Naval Academy; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 526) granting a pension to Esther E. Lieurance; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. VANCE asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 527) to provide that all persons senteneed to imprisonment by the United States courts shall be confined in the prisons of the States wherein they were tried and convicted; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. ROLLINS (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 528) to abolish the office of water registrar of the District of Columbia, and transfer the charge and control of the water supply to the Chief of Engineers in charge of the Washington Aqueduct; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. PLUMB asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 529) to provide for the better care and protection of quartermasters' supplies; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. BAYARD asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 530) for the relief of James P. W. Neill; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. BAYARD. I desire to accompany the bill with a memorial of Captain Neill stating the reasons why relief should be granted to him. I move its reference also to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

AMENDMENT TO AN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HARRIS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. No. 2) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HARRIS. I accompany the amendment with a letter from the commissioners of the District of Columbia, which I move be also referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The motion was agreed to.

EXPENSES OF EXTRA SESSION, ETC.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there are no "concurrent or other resolutions" the morning hour has expired.

Mr. WALLACE. I ask the Senate to take up and consider the bill (H. R. No. 1343) to provide for certain expenses of the present session of Congress, and for other purposes. It is a small deficiency appropriation bill which came from the House, was considered by the Committee on Appropriations, and reported, and is now on our table.

Mr. HARRIS. If the bill suggested by the Senator from Pennsylvania be taken up will it displace the unfinished business of yesterday?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The unfinished business of yesterday will be laid before the Senate at one o'clock. It is in order to move to take up another bill during the morning hour.

Mr. HARRIS. So I supposed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If that is disposed of, however, before one o'clock and no other business is proposed the morning hour will be at an end and the unfinished business will come up. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 1343) to provide for certain expenses of the present session of Congress, and for other purposes.

Mr. WALLACE. Let the bill be read.

The Chief Clerk read the bill.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania desire that the amendments shall be considered in gross, or shall they be considered separately?

Mr. WALLACE. I presume they will have to be considered separately, in order that Senators may understand the various items.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments will be reported in their order.

The first amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations was, after line 5, to insert:

SENATE.

To meet certain expenses of the Senate during the current fiscal year, as follows, namely:

For the payment of Lycurgus Dalton, as clerk to the Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate, from the 1st day of April to the 30th day of June, inclusive, at the rate of $2,200 per annum, $368.70.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to hear that explained, Mr. President.

Mr. WALLACE. This is made necessary by the fact that in the sundry civil bill of the last session the clerk of the Sergeant-at-Arms was paid by name until the expiration of the fiscal year. The new Sergeant-at-Arms has had this man Dalton in his employ. His services are necessary to conduct the business of the department, and it is unfair that he should not be paid. It was considered by the committee necessary to insert this provision.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It makes one addition to the force, then, for the time being?

Mr. WALLACE. Until the 30th of June.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment reported from the Committee on Appropriations was, to insert after line 13, under the heading "Senate:"

For horses and mail wagons for mail and document purposes, $1,200.
For furniture and repairs of furniture, $3,000.
For miscellaneous items, exclusive of labor, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, to insert after line 19:

That the employés of the Senate who have served during the present session of Congress shall be paid their respective salaries out of the fund already appropriated for such service from the time they entered upon their duties until the time of their taking the oath required by law.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What does that mean, Mr. President?

Mr. WALLACE. In words it is what was in an appropriation bill of last year. Clerks were employed in one or two, or in three or four cases and went upon duty; they performed the duties of their offices; but they were not sworn, and when they came to draw their pay under the law they could only receive pay from the date of taking the oath. Having performed the service this provision, which is in accordance with precedents, is included in the bill in order that they may get their pay from the date at which they commenced work.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Why do they not take the oaths required by law if they have been appointed?

Mr. WALLACE. The only answer to the inquiry of the Senator from Vermont is the fact that neither they nor the chairmen of the committees of which they were clerks knew that it was necessary in the specific instances referred to. This provision was in one of the bills of last year, resulting from the same cause.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to see that; but while we are looking that up, I want to know if this language is intended to excuse anybody from taking the oaths required by law and having the officers of the Senate hereafter paid without being sworn?

Mr. WALLACE. It certainly is not.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then, if I shall not be deemed intrusive, I move in line 24 to strike out the words "of their taking" and to insert the words "they took," so as to make it in the past tense. I suppose they have found out what the law is, or will have found it out by the time this bill is signed.

Mr. WALLACE. I have no objection whatever to that amendment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Without it the legal construction, I submit to the Senator, would be that it does not oblige them to take the oath at all, and they could continue as long as they like without taking it.

Mr. WALLACE. There is no objection to the amendment whatever. I am entirely satisfied with the amendment of the Senator from Vermont.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the amendment to the amendment will be considered as adopted.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I understand, then, from the honorable Senator from Pennsylvania that this provision is not to cover constructive service, but merely to cover a period of time where in one or two cases, by accident, a person actually and legally employed otherwise than by taking the oath, failed to take the oath of office?

Mr. WALLACE. That is the fact; and it is also the fact that there is not double service paid for, the provision applying to a case where a vacancy in the position of clerk was filled by a man who performed the duty but failed to take the oath; and there is but one clerk paid during that time.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I understand, speaking of the performance of the duties, that the clerks in these instances were actually and lawfully appointed but that they failed to qualify, but still went on with their duties?

Mr. WALLACE. That is correct.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If that is the case, of course there is no objection.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The next amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations was, after line 24 to insert "House of Representatives," and in line 27, after the word "Representatives," to insert "during the current fiscal year;" so as to read:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

To meet the miscellaneous expenses of the House of Representatives, during the current fiscal year, to be disbursed by the Clerk of the House, $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 29 to strike out "H. A. Alcot" and insert "H. A. Olcott."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 46, after the word "April," to strike out "fourth" and insert "first;" so as to read:

To pay eight messengers in the post-office of the House, from and including April 1, 1879, until the conclusion of the present session of Congress, at the rate of $800 each for seven months.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 49, to insert:

MINTS AND ASSAY OFFICES.

To provide for deficiencies in the appropriations for mints and assay offices for the current fiscal year, as follows, namely:
Mint at Philadelphia:
For contingent expenses, $10,000.
Mint at Denver, Colorado:
For wages of workmen, $800.
For contingent expenses, $700.
Assay office at Charlotte, North Carolina:
For wages and contingent expenses, $375.
Assay office at Boisé City, Idaho Territory:
For wages and contingent expenses, $2,000.
Assay office at Helena, Montana Territory:
For wages of workmen, $2,000.
For contingent expenses, $3,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there is no demand for a separate vote on any specific amendment, the question will be taken on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole in gross.

The amendments were concurred in.

Mr. PLUMB. I offer an amendment to the bill. I move to add to the bill the following:

For mileage of Senators at the extra session, $36,000.
For mileage of Members of the House of Representatives and Delegates from Territories at the extra session, $100,000.

Mr. WALLACE. I raise the point of order on the amendment that it does not come from a standing committee of the body, or from the head of any Department, and is therefore not in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If that is the case, the point of order is well taken.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is this a general appropriation bill? I think not.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will submit the question to the Senate, if the Senator desires it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not care anything about it; I do not think it is a general appropriation bill, however.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the opinion of the Chair the same rule prevails in regard to this bill that applies to a general appropriation bill, and the amendment is contrary to the rule. But the Chair will submit the question to the Senate, if the Senator desires it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not know what the amendment is; I did not hear it read; but in order to have a decision of the Senate whether one of these little special tail bills, as they may be called, falls within the rule, so that it shall stand as a decision, I wish the Chair would submit the question to the Senate, so as to have a decision upon it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will be glad to do it, so as to have an understanding. The question is whether this bill is a general appropriation bill within the meaning of the rules, so that an amendment not reported by any standing committee nor estimated for, and which increases the appropriation made by the bill, is in order. The Chair believes that is a correct statement of the question.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is the question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Senators, as many as are of opinion that the amendment is in order will say "ay;" those of a contrary opinion "no." [Putting the question.] The Chair is unable to decide.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask for the yeas and nays. That will settle it.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. What is the question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state the question once more, and read the rule.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish the Chair would have the rule read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is what the Chair proposes to have done. The Chair begs the attention of Senators to this question. The twenty-eighth rule reads as follows:

All amendments to general appropriation bills moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate, proposing to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill, or to add new items of appropriation, shall, at least one day before they are offered, be referred to the Committee on Appropriations; and when actually proposed to the bill no amendment proposing to increase the amount stated in such amendment shall be received; in like manner, amendments proposing new items of appropriation to river and harbor bills shall, before being offered, be referred to the Committee on Commerce; also amendments to bills establishing post-roads, proposing new post-roads, shall, before being offered, be referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. Please state what the question is?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is whether an amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas, which is not reported by any standing committee nor estimated for in the estimates of any of the Departments, can be received to this bill. That question depends upon whether the bill is a general appropriation bill within the meaning of the rule.

Mr. HAMLIN. Without indicating at all what may be my vote if the Senate should declare the amendment in order, I wish to say that I shall vote that it is in order, and I shall do so upon the plain reason, or what seems to me to be a very plain one, that this is not an appropriation bill coming within the scope and meaning of the rule which has just been read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair begs to interrupt the Senator a moment to say that another rule, perhaps, is the proper rule that should have been read, Rule 27, which provides that—

All general appropriation bills shall be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, except bills making appropriations for rivers and harbors, which shall be referred to the Committee on Commerce; and no amendments shall be received to any general appropriation bill, the effect of which will be to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill, or to add a new item of appropriation, unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law, or treaty stipulation, or act, or resolution previously passed by the Senate during that session; or unless the same be moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate; or proposed in pursuance of an estimate of the head of some one of the Departments.

That is the rule which the Chair intended to read.

Mr. HAMLIN. The decision to which the Senate should come, in my judgment, depends upon the construction which the Senate gives to the rules which have been read. Those rules all apply to general appropriation bills. Is this a general appropriation bill? What is a general appropriation bill? Within the meaning of the rule, in my judgment, it is a bill pertaining to the several Departments or some one of the several Departments and branches of the public service for which estimates and appropriations have been made and submitted to the Senate for its consideration. The Post-Office appropriation bill, the bill for the support of the Army, the bill for the support of the Navy, the sundry civil bill—all these various bills are general bills and have a distinct and a positive connection with some one of the Departments; and the Department with which that bill is connected furnishes to Congress its estimates and recommendations for the same. In my judgment, this bill has none of these properties and is not a general appropriation bill. To be facetious, I would say that it does not amount to a corporal.

I think under that rule I shall vote that the amendment is in order, without indicating how I shall vote upon the amendment itself on its merits.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, this is an occasion probably when we can decide this point of order without any ulterior fears as to its effect. This bill is entitled "An act to provide for certain expenses of the present session of Congress, and for other purposes;" so that by the title of the bill it is not a general appropriation bill, but a particular appropriation bill for certain specified and particular objects, not for the fiscal year ending on the 30th of June, 1880, or to provide for deficiencies for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1879, but it is special and particular in its character. In that view, undoubtedly the Committee on Appropriations reported the amendment found on page 2, the last one of any consequence, which contains legislation, and general legislation in the sense of covering all the general objects to which it refers. It does not speak of any one man, but provides in general that all the employés of the Senate who have served during the present session of Congress and who have not taken the oath required by law shall be paid nevertheless. There is a provision of law which alters the existing law; it is a legislative provision which would be just as well in a separate bill as on this bill; and naturally if it were a matter of any consequence it ought to be in a separate bill. The committee must have proceeded upon the ground that they were not infringing the rule of moving a legislative amendment to a general appropriation bill, when that amendment was attached. In that view I did not make the point of order that I always endeavor to do in reference to putting legislation on general appropriation bills, because it appeared to me plain that it would be a point of order not well taken. If this is a general appropriation bill within the meaning of the rule, then this provision which has been reported from the Committee of the Whole is not in order, and I wish to make a point of order upon it, not because I am opposed to it, but because it is legislation. I thought I was not entitled to make the point of order for the reason I have stated.

Therefore it appears to me plain, as it does to the honorable Senator from Maine, who is much wiser than I am about this matter, that the bill is not a general appropriation bill within the meaning of the rule, just as its title describes it to be not a general appropriation bill, but one for certain, few, particular purposes relating to the present session of Congress.

Mr. PLUMB. Mr. President, I read the title of this bill, which is "to provide for certain expenses of the present session of Congress, and for other purposes." On looking it over yesterday I observed that the particular item for which my amendment provides had not been incorporated in the bill. Without having in mind particularly the terms of the rule quoted by the President, I considered that that was an omission which ought to be remedied. I am not prepared to say that these expenses which are provided for are all of them of a character which would not have been incurred if this extra session of Congress had not been called; but some of them are of that character no doubt, and a part of the expenses of this session is undoubtedly the mileage of the members of the Senate and House of Representatives.

This amendment certainly comes, whatever may be the interpretation of the rule, within the title and purposes of the bill, which is to provide for the expenses that have been made necessary, and have thereby been incurred, on account of this session. It seems to me, although I do not feel competent to add anything to what has already been said on the point of order, that if this is a general appropriation bill, then the bills which provide for the regular sessions of Congress are something entirely different from general appropriation bills. This is a bill which provides for an emergency which has been created, or which has come about. That emergency was evidenced by the issuance of the proclamation of the President convening us here and by our coming here at this time, which made these expenses necessary. This certainly is not a general appropriation bill in the sense that these appropriations are provided for inevitably and come about by reason of the existing law every year; but it has arisen by reason of our coming here at this time on an extraordinary occasion.

It would seem to me, therefore, that this amendment ought to be in order. It seems to me that this is an appropriation bill to provide a part of the expenses of this extra session, and as such the amendment is in order just as fully as the other expenses which are covered by the bill.

Mr. WALLACE. Being in charge of this bill, I felt it my duty to make the point of order which I have made. It seems to me that if the amendment is not within the plain technical words of Rule 27 it is certainly within its meaning and spirit:

All general appropriation bills shall be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, except bills making appropriations for rivers and harbors, which shall be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

As is stated by the Senator from Maine and the Senator from Vermont, the question is whether this is in its real meaning a general appropriation bill. It is certainly not a specific appropriation bill. It is an appropriation bill. It is general in the sense that it appropriates money for several purposes, to the Senate to pay certain expenses, to the House to pay certain expenses, to the Treasury Department or the Mint, for contingent expenses surrounding the conduct of the Mint. These are, so far as they go, certainly general appropriations; and is it to be said because it contains but half a dozen different heads of appropriations that therefore it is not general in its character? How are you to apply the rule? May not an appropriation bill cover a hundred or a thousand items of appropriation, or may it not cover six? Is not the real test the question as to whether it is general in its character and not specific and pointed in the appropriation that the bill makes? It seems to me that is the only test that can be applied to such a bill.

Hence it is, in my judgment, an appropriation bill within the meaning of the rule. Take the amendment that is proposed. Suppose it is embodied in the bill, what follows? That Congress has appropriated $136,000 in what is a specific and not a general appropriation bill under the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas. It seems to me the very fact that this bill is a vehicle upon which such an appropriation can be put and passed through brings it within the rule, and it is general in its character.

But, sir, the Senator from Kansas says that the amendment he proposes is a measure that ought to be passed now. We have had the subject under consideration in committee, and we think it ought not to be done now. On the contrary, we think the statute which provides for the payment of mileage only for regular sessions, and under which the Representatives and Senators have been paid only for regular sessions, should continue to be held to be the law. It is true that for extra sessions of the Senate mileage has been appropriated to the new Senators who came to those extra sessions; but the law does not cover cases in which there has been an extra session of Congress called, because the statute of 1866, which is now the law, provides that mileage shall only be paid for each regular session. This is certainly not a regular session. The proposition, then, is to repeal the statute as it stands to-day, and under which mileage has always heretofore been paid, and to add to the expenses of the Government $136,000. But upon the other ground that the amendment is clearly not in order, I think the Senate ought to refuse to pass it.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. President, we are too apt in this body to decide parliamentary questions according to the views of Senators upon the main question involved. I am opposed to this amendment, but I think it clearly in order. This bill is not a general appropriation bill. A general appropriation bill is defined in the rules, and embraces appropriations for a general period and for general purposes. This is a specific appropriation for a specific period and for a specific purpose. I have no doubt that the amendment is in order.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, I may be wrong, but the view I took of this question, as a member of the Committee on Appropriations, was that specific appropriation bills are those which are limited to a particular purpose, and generally either to a particular person or to a particular corporation, or for something outside of the general maintenance of the Government. All appropriation bills are general which in their character are intended to carry on the Government, whether in the shape of deficiencies to supply defects in the original bills or in bills that are sent by heads of Departments, or to the general purposes, as I said, of carrying on the Government. This bill is of that character. The committee did not see fit to make it a great deficiency bill, although we were applied to by very many of the Departments of the Government to make it more general than it is. The fact that it is a bill of such a character that we could with propriety under the rules, it being a bill sent to us to supply deficiencies for one branch of the Government, have made it cover deficiencies in every other branch of the Government, seems to me to make it a general appropriation bill in its scope. It is certainly not limited to any specific purpose, nor to any particular individual, nor to the accomplishment of any one thing; but it is a bill as comprehensive in its character as any other deficiency bill which could be laid before the Senate. The very fact that we do not make it as large as we make many other deficiency bills does not alter the nature or character of the bill or narrow it down to a specific appropriation bill.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Mr. President, the twenty-seventh rule requires that all general appropriation bills shall be referred to the Committee on Appropriations. Although this bill was less in size and in the number of items it contains than appropriation bills usually are when it came to the Senate from the House, under the rule it was referred, without a word of objection, to the Committee on Appropriations, as being the proper committee to whom it should be referred. There were probably fifty items or more sent to the committee for consideration. The committee, believing that this is an extra session and not a general one, confined itself as closely as possible to the actual necessities of the Government, and, therefore, made the bill as small as possible. But it will be noticed that there are, perhaps, twenty different items for various Departments of the Government in this bill. In its character, therefore, the bill must be general, or how could so many different objects be provided for in it? It has been considered and treated both at this end and at the other end of the Capitol as a general appropriation bill.

Each and all of us know that we have had appropriation bills called general appropriation bills which have probably not one-tenth of the various items that this bill contains. Take for instance the fortification bill. Perhaps two items make up the entire bill; yet it is a general appropriation bill. This bill contains items estimated for and specially recommended by the different Departments. Here you will find on the third page, under the head of "mints and assay offices," six or eight items specially asked for by the head of the Department, he coming to the committee and asking to have them put upon this bill. In my judgment it cannot be treated as anything else than a general appropriation bill, because it contains general matters.

What does the Senator from Kansas now propose to put on? Another and a different matter. How does it come here if this is not a general appropriation bill? How was it that that Senator or other Senators offered amendments to this bill and sent them to the Appropriations Committee within a few days? It appears to me that this can be treated as nothing else than a general appropriation bill. It was treated so by the House and by the Senate, and it has been acted upon as such. The increased amount of work in the mints caused the committee to put on the sundry amendments you find here for that purpose. The Committee on Appropriations probably considered fifty other items to ascertain whether or not they were of such urgent character that they ought to be put upon this bill, and no thought occurred to the committee that it was not a general appropriation bill and that for that reason the amendments could not go on this bill, if they were proper in themselves.

The Senator from Vermont has spoken about general legislation. It is true that there are items here that look something like general legislation; but that Senator knows that we have no jurisdiction over it. The matter referred to came from the House in the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. No; I am speaking of what was put in coming from the committee, lines 20 to 24 on page 2.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Nothing could be more plain. That is not in the nature of general legislation, in my judgment, by any means. But the Senate, if that be so, has decided over and over in favor of such legislation; and at the very last session we put on wholesale legislation—I believe my friend from Vermont did not vote for it, but a great majority of that side of the Chamber did vote for it—legislation to repeal laws and to re-enact others upon a general appropriation bill. This was done only at the last session. I refer to the provision as to the Eads jetties.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I hope the Senator from West Virginia did not vote to put it on. He thought it was legislation, and so did I. I hope he will stick to his opinion. This, Mr. President, if it is a general appropriation bill, has become so since it got into the Senate. The argument of the Senator from West Virginia is, and I believe that of the Senator from Kentucky is, that it is a general appropriation bill, because it contains so many items. If the Senators will take the trouble to count—and even a moderate amount of education in arithmetic will enable you to count the House part of it—they will find that there are only five items in the House bill for specific objects, the pay of a particular person. It begins with one Boyle and one Olcott, and the next is to pay one Douglass, and the next is to pay the person employed in indexing the Journals of Congress. The next is to pay eight messengers in the post-office of the House from the 1st of April, 1879, until the conclusion of the present Congress. That is the whole of the House bill. I have cited every item now.

That came over here with a title which stated exactly what it was for, "to provide for certain expenses of the present session of Congress." It went to a committee, and it comes out of the committee, they say, a general appropriation bill, having gone there a special appropriation for five particular objects of the present time, not even called a deficiency, but to provide for the present moment, and pay four persons by name and a lump of eight messengers; those make up the whole five items. The Senate committee has added eleven items, making sixteen in all, and thereby the bill has become a general appropriation bill! Mr. President, in the language of an eminent statesman from Ohio, who is now deprived of the privilege of speaking, I submit that that argument won't do. "It won't do at all." [Laughter.]

Now, Mr. President, to come to this amendment put in by the committee, it could not have been put in in the judgment of the Senator from West Virginia, if he is true to his former opinions, as he generally is, had this been a general appropriation bill:

That the employés of the Senate who have served during the present session of Congress shall be paid their respective salaries out of the fund already appropriated for such service from the time they entered upon their duties until the time of their taking the oath.

That is not an amendment which relates to any appropriation contained in the bill, but by name relates to a different appropriation already on the statute-book. Therefore it is not guarding the expenditure of the money that this bill appropriates. It is not directing the expenditure of the money that this bill appropriates at all; but it is a separate, distinct, and general declaration that every employé of this Senate, whether clerk or messenger or Sergeant-at-Arms, or whatever he may be, who happens to need the benefit of this provision of law which changes existing statutes, shall be paid. As I said, the only ground on which it can stand is that this is not a general appropriation bill, for if it be one, this amendment cannot be in order, because it does not relate to any appropriation contained in the bill; it cannot be squeezed in under that head; and it provides universal legislation, lays down a rule of conduct, and is just as much an act of general legislation as any other act that can be passed that from its nature covers only a particular class of persons, like the providing for jurors or whatever it may be.

Mr. WITHERS. In my view of the subject, Mr. President, a deficiency bill is the most general form of appropriation bill that can be presented. The character of the bill is decided, not by the number of specific appropriations which it may embody, but by the general scope and purpose of the bill. The object of a deficiency bill is to provide for any deficiency in existing appropriations, whether they apply to one department of the Government or to all the departments of the Government; and we have been constantly in the habit of regarding the deficiency bills which are annually passed in this body as general appropriation bills. The points of order which have been successfully made in regard to the introduction of amendments have been those applicable to general appropriation bills. The rule has been so administered by the presiding officer of the body and by a majority of the Senate ever since I have been a member of it.

Therefore the bill under consideration is, in my view of the question, clearly a general appropriation bill, and of course, as such, amenable to the rule of order. The argument of the Senator from Vermont it seems to me does not meet the case, because whether there be five items in the original appropriation bill or whether there be five hundred, it makes no difference, provided the object of the bill is general in its character; and that is the purpose of this bill, to supply deficiencies in appropriations applicable to any department of the Government, and that is what this bill purports to do, and therefore in my view it is a general appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair invites the attention of Senators to this question, as it involves an important interpretation to be given to this rule. The Senator from Kansas moves as an amendment to this bill to add the following:

For mileage of Senators at the extra session, $36,000.
For mileage of members of the House of Representatives and Delegates from Territories at the extra session, $100,000.

It is objected by the Senator from Pennsylvania that the amendment is not in order, that it is forbidden by this clause of Rule 27:

No amendments shall be received to any general appropriation bill, the effect of which will be to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill, or to add a new item of appropriation, unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law, or treaty stipulation, or act, or resolution previously passed by the Senate during that session; or unless the same be moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate; or proposed in pursuance of an estimate of the head of some one of the Departments.

And it being admitted that this amendment was not reported by any standing committee or estimated for, the Senator from Pennsylvania says it is out of order, to which it is replied on the other side that this is not a general appropriation bill. If it is a general appropriation bill, the amendment is out of order. If it is not a general appropriation bill within the meaning of the rule, the amendment is in order. The question submitted to the Senate is, Is this amendment in order? Upon that question the yeas and nays have been ordered. Senators, as many as are of the opinion that the amendment is in order, will answer "yea" as your names are called, and as many as are of the contrary opinion will answer "nay."

Mr. BAYARD. I should like to ask from some gentleman in charge of this measure whether any of the appropriations thereby made are under estimates from the Departments in the usual and ordinary method of transacting business. As I understand, the general appropriation bills of the Government are based upon the estimates made by the several Departments that are sent in through the Appropriations Committees of the different Houses, distributed to the proper committees from which appropriations are reported. These form the general appropriation bills of the Government. I have the idea that perhaps a bill containing various appropriations not confined to a special subject might, therefore, be termed a general appropriation bill; but the suggestion of the honorable Senator from Maine [Mr. HAMLIN] strikes me with much force that there are general appropriation bills which are not multifarious; for instance the pension bill. This is recognized as one of the general appropriation bills of the Government, and yet it is but a single subject, and frequently is passed, I believe, in a single item.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning hour has expired.

Mr. WALLACE. The Senator from Tennessee, I hope, will allow this matter to be finished.

Mr. HARRIS. I have no objection to the unfinished business being informally laid aside to complete this matter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the unfinished business will be considered laid aside informally, subject to the call of the Senator from Tennessee. The Senator from Delaware will proceed.

Mr. BAYARD. Upon what distinction, then, are we proceeding in the present case? I do not understand that this bill had its original suggestion in any of the Executive Departments, that this bill was based upon the ordinary and usual estimates for the support of the Government in its different branches, but that it is a supplementary bill, growing out of the exigency of this session to supply which the Appropriations Committee have brought in the present measure. I do not think we have any adequate expression for such bills as contradistinguished from the general appropriation bills; we have no such phrase known to our parliamentary law as special appropriation bills; but for a bill to come within the general character of general appropriations, it strikes me that it must provide for the general, usual expenses of the Government. Upon those general bills amendments may be ingrafted provided those proposing them have complied with the terms of our three rules upon the subject,—the twenty-sixth, twenty-seventh, and twenty-eighth standing rules of the Senate. By compliance with those rules measures may be ingrafted upon the general appropriation bills which are not based upon estimates by the different Departments. In the present case my present inclination of opinion is to believe that this is not one of the general appropriation bills referred to by the rules, but that it is a bill supplementing a defective civil service discovered in the extra session of Congress, that it is not based upon general estimates, and not being based upon general estimates does not come within the category of general appropriation bills.

Mr. HAMLIN. Will the Senator from Delaware allow me to call his attention to a single point in connection with what he has been saying? If the Senator will cast his eye on the bill he will notice that it comes to us from the House, making provision for nothing else, I believe, save that which is connected with the House alone. Therefore the Senator is right; it could have had its origin in none of the estimates or none of the recommendations of any of the Departments; and after it gets into this body and is referred to the Committee on Appropriations there come several amendments which may be regarded as a sort of codicil. They come from the Departments, but they cannot change the character of the bill or make it an appropriation bill within the terms of the rule.

Mr. BAYARD. I apprehend that the bill which we are to consider was embraced in lines 1 to 25 on the first and second pages.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will interrupt the Senator to receive a message from the House of Representatives.

DEATH OF REPRESENTATIVE RUSH CLARK.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. GEORGE M. ADAMS, its Clerk, communicated to the Senate the intelligence of the death of Mr. RUSH CLARK, late a member of the House from the State of Iowa, and transmitted the resolutions of the House thereon.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I ask that the message from the House be reported.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The action of the House will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
April 29, 1879.

Resolved, That the House has heard with sincere regret the announcement of the death of Hon. RUSH CLARK, late a Representative from the State of Iowa.

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring,) That a special joint committee of seven members and three Senators be appointed to take order for superintending the funeral and to escort the remains of the deceased to his late residence in Iowa, and the necessary expenses attending the execution of this order shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

The Speaker announced the appointment of Mr. HIRAM PRICE of Iowa, Mr. JOHN H. REAGAN of Texas, Mr. WILLIAM H. HATCH of Missouri, Mr. HENRY S. NEAL of Ohio, Mr. THOMAS J. HENDERSON of Illinois, Mr. MARK H. DUNNELL of Minnesota, and Mr. PHILIP COOK of Georgia, the said committee on the part of the House.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate the foregoing resolutions to the Senate.

Resolved, That as a mark of respect to the memory of the deceased this House do now adjourn.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I offer the following:

Resolved, That the Senate agree to the resolution of the House of Representatives providing for the appointment of a joint committee to take order for superintending the funeral and to escort the remains of Hon. RUSH CLARK, late a member of the House of Representatives from the State of Iowa, to his late residence, and that the committee on the part of the Senate be appointed by the President pro tempore of the Senate.

The resolution was agreed to unanimously.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair appoints Mr. KIRKWOOD, Mr. PLATT, and Mr. HEREFORD the committee on the part of the Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, as a further mark of respect for the memory of the deceased, I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at one o'clock and nine minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, April 29, 1879.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. P. HARRISON, D. D.

The Journal of Saturday last was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. PRUDEN, his private secretary.

DEATH OF HON. RUSH CLARK, OF IOWA.

Mr. PRICE. It becomes my mournful and painful duty, Mr. Speaker, to announce this morning to the House of Representatives the death of my colleague, Hon. RUSH CLARK, which occurred at his rooms at the National Hotel in this city yesterday afternoon, after a brief illness of only a few hours.

At some future time I may ask the indulgence of the House to submit some extended remarks in reference to the life and character of my colleague. I think it proper to say at this time that after full consultation with the delegation from the State of Iowa and with the friends of the family, and in view of the time when the train will start, also in view of the fact that when the remains shall arrive at his old home his neighbors, acquaintances, and friends will hold funeral ceremonies, we have concluded to dispense with any funeral ceremonies in this Hall. It is due to the House and it is due to the friends that this explanation should be made.

I now offer the resolutions which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the House has heard with sincere regret the announcement of the death of Hon. RUSH CLARK, late a Representative from the State of Iowa.

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring,) That a special joint committee of seven Members and three Senators be appointed to take order for superintending the funeral and to escort the remains of the deceased to his late residence in Iowa; and the necessary expenses attending the execution of this order shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate the foregoing resolutions to the Senate.

Resolved, That as a mark of respect to the memory of the deceased this House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The House has heard the resolutions read by the Clerk. The question is upon the adoption of the resolutions.

Mr. GARFIELD. May it not be necessary to wait until an announcement can be received from the Senate that they have adopted the resolution? If there is no practical difficulty we can adjourn now.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks there is no practical difficulty about it.

The resolutions were then adopted.

The SPEAKER, in obedience to the second resolution, announced as the committee on the part of the House the following:

Mr. PRICE of Iowa, Mr. REAGAN of Texas, Mr. HATCH of Missouri, Mr. NEAL of Ohio, Mr. HENDERSON of Illinois, Mr. COOK of Georgia, and Mr. BENNETT of Dakota.

And then, in accordance with the foregoing resolution, (at twelve o'clock and fourteen minutes p. m.,) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions, &c., were presented at the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as stated:

By Mr. ACKLEN: Papers relating to the Calcasieu, Louisiana, log seizures—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. BUCKNER: The petition of Samuel C. Reid, in behalf of the officers and crew of the late United States private armed brig General Armstrong, for compensation for the destruction of said vessel in the port of Fayal, Azores Islands, during the war with Great Britain in 1814—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. CHALMERS: The petition of W. H. Andrews & Brothers, for the repeal of section 7 of the revenue law relating to wine and distilled and fermented liquors—to the Committee of Ways and Means.

Also, the petition of certain committee clerks and pages of the House of Representatives, who are paid during the session only, that their pay begin on the 18th of March, 1879—to the Committee of Accounts.

Also, the petition of Samuel Ullman, of Natchez, Mississippi, that Congress take some action relating to the treatment of American Jews in Russia—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. COX: The petition of S. S. Cox, for an investigation into the affairs of the Ocean National Bank of New York City—to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Also, the petition of John Ross and others, that article 17 of Cherokee treaty of 1835–'36 shall be adjudicated by commissioners appointed by the President and shall remain in force until the stipulations of the treaty are equitably adjusted—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Also, the petition of 1,212 ship-masters, officers, seamen, engineers, firemen, and others, of the United States merchant marine, for the passage of the Cox bill to amend title 53 of the Revised Statutes, relating to merchant seamen—to the Committee on Commerce.

Also, the petition of Samuel M. Shaw, of Cooperstown, New York, for the retirement of the one and two dollar Treasury and bank notes—to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Also, the petition of Warren L. Fish, for the extension of his patent on lamps—to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. DEUSTER: Memorial of Charles Louis Fleischmann, relating to the restoration of the exhausted soil by means of a natural fertilizer found in inexhaustible quantities in the United States—to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. LOUNSBERY: The petition of Miss Maggie Freer and 64 others, members of the Women's Christian Temperance Union, not to make any change in the revenue laws that will promote the interest of dealers in spirituous liquors—to the Committee of Ways and Means.

By Mr. RUSSELL, of Massachusetts: The petition of Mary J. Eldredge, for a pension—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a paper relating to granting authority to the Light-House Board to test Mann's automatic signal-buoy for seacoast purposes—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. STEVENSON: Resolution of the Legislature of Illinois, relating to swamp and overflowed lands—to the Committee on Public Lands.

By Mr. WHITTHORNE: The petition of J. N. Carpenter, pay inspector United States Navy, for relief—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

IN SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, April 30, 1879.

Prayer by Rev. JOHN CHESTER, D. D., of the city of Washington.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

FUNERAL SERVICES OF REPRESENTATIVE CLARK.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has been requested by the Senator from Iowa, [Mr. KIRKWOOD,] who was appointed one of the Senators to attend the remains of the late Representative Clark to his home, to announce to Senators that funeral services over the remains of Mr. Clark will take place at the National Hotel to-day at six and a half o'clock p. m., after which the remains will be removed to the depot. Senators are invited to attend.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. LOGAN presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of Illinois, in favor of the passage of the bill (S. No. 272) to authorize the Commissioner of the General Land Office to adjust and settle the claim of the State of Illinois for indemnity for swamp lands sold by the United States in accordance with the provisions of section 2482 of the Revised Statutes; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. INGALLS presented the petition of Mary E. Miller and other women, of McPherson County, Kansas, praying for the passage of an act making effective the anti-polygamy law of 1862; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. BUTLER asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 531) to re-establish the office of assistant treasurer of the United States at Charleston, South Carolina; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. PLUMB (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 532) for the relief of Eliza Howard Powers; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. MORGAN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. No. 24) providing for sixty days' pay to officers and employés of the United States Senate removed from office since the 4th day of March, 1879; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

AMENDMENT TO AN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. McDONALD submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. No. 2) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

EXPENSES OF EXTRA SESSION, ETC.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there are no "concurrent or other resolutions" the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business taken up in the morning hour yesterday.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 1343) to provide for certain expenses of the present session of Congress, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending question is whether an amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] is in order. Is the Senate ready for the question? The Chair will state the question once more before the vote is taken. The Senator from Kansas moves as an amendment to this bill to add the following:

For mileage of Senators at the extra session, $36,000.

For mileage of members of the House of Representatives and Delegates from Territories at the extra session, $100,000.

It is objected by the Senator from Pennsylvania that the amendment is not in order, that it is forbidden by this clause of Rule 27:

No amendment shall be received to any general appropriation bill, the effect of which will be to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill, or to add a new item of appropriation, unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law, or treaty stipulation, or act, or resolution previously passed by the Senate during that session; or unless the same be moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate; or proposed in pursuance of an estimate of the head of some one of the Departments.

And it being admitted that this amendment was not reported by any standing committee or estimated for, the Senator from Pennsylvania says it is out of order, to which it is replied on the other side that this is not a general appropriation bill. If it is a general appropriation bill, the amendment is out of order. If it is not a general appropriation bill within the meaning of the rule, the amendment is in order. The question submitted to the Senate is, Is this amendment in order? Upon that question the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. BAYARD rose.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, before that question is decided, I desire to call the attention of the Senate to a rule of the House of Representatives, which I think bears upon this question. The Senator from Delaware yesterday——

Mr. BAYARD. I did not have an opportunity to conclude my remarks yesterday.

Mr. ALLISON. I only desired to call attention to the rule. I did not know the Senator from Delaware was on the floor. I beg his pardon.

Mr. BAYARD. I merely say to my friend from Iowa that, if he desires to reply to the few remarks I made yesterday, I was not able to conclude my statement by reason of the announcement of the death of the late Representative Clark. I might say one thing further, which will take but a moment, if my honorable friend will yield.

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly; I yield to the honorable Senator.

Mr. BAYARD. I submit to the Senate that the proper test as to whether this bill is or is not a general appropriation bill within the purview and meaning of our three rules which relate to the amendment of appropriation bills, Rules 26, 27, and 28, is this: to take the bill, I do not say merely by its title, because I am aware that recurrence to the title of a bill is not one of the strongest methods of determining its status, but to take the bill as it came to us from the House, in the shape in which we found it for its first consideration, and ask then whether, without the amendments put upon it by the Senate committee, it is or is not a general appropriation bill. Let us test it by that rule.

The title of the bill is "to provide for certain expenses of the present session of Congress, and for other purposes." In the first four lines is an appropriation of money; and on page 2, beginning at line 26 and ending at line 49 on page 3, is the bill, the corpus of the bill. The question is whether that is a bill of general appropriation, or whether it is a bill of specific appropriation for certain expenses of Congress extraordinary in their character. Tested by that rule I am unable to describe this bill as a general appropriation bill.

Then the second question would be, can the Senate by adding multifarious expenses to the House bill change its nature and character so as to bring it within the description of our rules; that is, to make it a general appropriation by altering its character, and let the bill therefore draw its name, its description, and its character from the amendments of the Senate and not from its original framing by the House.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Will my friend allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BAYARD. Certainly.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Does the Senator deny the right of the Senate to amend the bill?

Mr. BAYARD. Oh, not in the least on earth; I deny nothing of the kind.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Then I ask the Senator how is it that he makes a comparison of the bill as it came from the House? Why not consider it as it is now? We are considering the bill as it is now before us by the action of the Senate, not the bill as it came from the House.

Mr. BAYARD. I will answer my friend. I do not know that it is in the power of the Senate to change the character of the bill as it came from the House by amendments put upon it in the Senate. If it is not a general appropriation bill when it comes from the House, it will not be made one by the amendatory action of the Senate.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I ask my friend why not?

Mr. BAYARD. My answer is that the bill will take its character from the corpus of the bill and not from its amendments. In other words, the principal will not be governed by the incident, but the incident will be governed by the principal. That is the way I understand it.

Mr. EATON. While I agree that this may not amount to a general appropriation bill, let me suggest to my friend from Delaware that if the Senate should attach to this very bill one of the general appropriation bills, it would by that action of the Senate change the original character of the bill.

Mr. BAYARD. And yet would not that be open to the objection that general appropriation bills, revenue bills, or money bills, as they are called, must originate in the other House? I should doubt the power of the Senate to change the character of a bill from a bill of general legislation into an appropriation bill by making amendments to it.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. But the bill is not before us as it came from the House.

Mr. BAYARD. It came from the House not in the form of a general appropriation bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I wish to add a word on the point to which the Senator from Delaware has just been speaking. What is put on in the Senate does not become a part of the bill until the House has agreed to it; it is merely a proposition from the Senate. All our amendments, even after they are agreed to here, are not part of the bill; they are merely propositions to the House of Representatives inviting them to make them part of the bill and so enact them into law.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I ask the Senator whether the bill as it came from the House is not in exactly the same condition? It is not a bill in the proper sense of the word until it has passed both Houses.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I thought it was a bill while pending between the two Houses and became an act after it was passed; and the rule is speaking of bills. An amendment does not become a part of the bill, when the bill is from the other House, until the other House has agreed that it may become a part of it. There is the difficulty. Therefore, if there were no other answer to the idea that this has become a general appropriation bill by some circumstance that has occurred after it entered here and was not a general appropriation bill when the House sent it here, that is a complete answer in my judgment to that.

But to that also may be added that these amendments are not yet, even if this were a Senate bill, a part of the bill, because they are not yet agreed to. It is true they have been agreed to in Committee of the Whole and reported to the Senate; but it remains for the Senate to determine; and the question must be put affirmatively whether the Senate will agree to make these amendments any part of the bill, even if it were a Senate bill, or as it is, whether the Senate will agree even to propose to the House of Representatives to add these things to it and thus enact their bill into a law.

Therefore the Senator from Delaware, in my opinion, is quite right in saying that the question whether this is a general appropriation bill must be tested and tested solely by the nature of the bill as it was when it entered our doors and was laid upon our table.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I desire to call attention for a moment to the rules upon this question. The proper action here seems to depend upon the meaning of the words "general appropriation bill." As I understand, we have no definition in our Senate rules of what shall constitute a general appropriation bill. I do not think I am mistaken in that. I find in our rules reference made to what are called general appropriation bills, but we have no rule in the Senate defining what a general appropriation bill is. Therefore we are left to ascertain, if we can, what we mean by a general appropriation bill. In the House of Representatives there is a distinct definition of what is understood there to be a general appropriation bill.

Mr. BECK. Will not the Senator from Iowa find some solution of that difficulty in the fact that all general appropriation bills are required to go to the Committee on Appropriations? Could this bill have gone to any other committee? Was it not necessary for it to go to that committee?

Mr. EDMUNDS. That begs the very question.

Mr. ALLISON. It being an appropriation, properly under our rules it would necessarily go to that committee. But in the House there are, I believe, now twelve bills known as general appropriation bills; the legislative, executive, and judicial, and so on.

Mr. BECK. The deficiency bill.

Mr. ALLISON. The deficiency bill is not one, I find; and that is the point to which I desire to call attention. I cannot find in the rules of the House that a general deficiency bill is regarded there as a general appropriation bill. But even if a general deficiency bill should be so regarded, this bill would not then come under the rule of a general appropriation bill. Rule 77 of the House of Representatives provides that—

> It shall also be the duty of the Committee on Appropriations, within thirty days after their appointment, at every session of Congress, commencing on the first Monday of December, to report the general appropriation bills for legislative, executive, and judicial expenses, for sundry civil expenses, &c.

Going on at length and naming distinctly what are regarded there as general appropriation bills. When those bills come to the Senate our rules provide that all general appropriation bills shall be referred to the Committee on Appropriations. Having no definition of our own as to what a general appropriation bill is, it seems to me we can recur for this purpose to the rule of the House.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator from Iowa allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOAR. I ask the Senator if he does not remember that this very question was ruled upon by the Senate either at the last winter session or the session previous, and in precise accordance with what he is now stating? I was in the chair at the time, and I am sure that either there was a ruling of the Chair acquiesced in by the Senate or, as I think was the case, a vote of the Senate itself on this very question.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. May I ask the Senator to what bill he refers?

Mr. HOAR. I cannot remember the bill. If the Senator from Iowa will pardon me a moment, I will state that there was before the Senate a bill which was not one of the twelve general appropriation bills as defined in the House rules. The question came up of the right to move a certain amendment to that bill without first referring it to the committee under the rule applicable to general appropriation bills in the Senate. The Chair held that the term "general appropriation bill" was a technical term, a name which had come to be applied to certain bills in our legislative practice, a name which it derived originally from the rule of the House of Representatives which had been established for more than forty years, and accordingly that amendment was held in order. I am very strongly inclined to the belief that that question was submitted to the Senate and that the vote of the Senate was by a large majority in accordance with that suggestion. At any rate of the action of the Senate I am sure.

Mr. ALLISON. I had forgotten the occurrence of which the Senator from Massachusetts speaks, but I am very certain that the words "general appropriation bill" now have a distinct meaning; they certainly have in the House; because all the rules of the House in reference to appropriation bills apply to those general bills. When they come here, our rule says that this character of bills so considered in the House shall not be subject to amendment unless the amendment shall come from a standing committee or be estimated for by a Department. Therefore, it seems to me quite clear that this is not a bill which comes within Rules 26 and 27.

Mr. WITHERS. If I understand the argument of my friend from Iowa, it is that the term "general appropriation bill" is designed to be restricted entirely to the bills so enumerated by the rules of the House, and that no other bill can be regarded as a general appropriation bill except the twelve enumerated in the House rules.

Mr. ALLISON. Not precisely that. I mean to say that we have under our rules no definition of what are general appropriation bills. Therefore we recur to the rules of the House to see what is a general appropriation bill.

Mr. WITHERS. My friend still comes back to the same proposition, that inasmuch as we have no rule by which we can define exactly what constitutes a general appropriation bill we are compelled to resort to the House rule for a definition. The House rule enumerates twelve distinct bills under the definition of general appropriation bills. An amendment which may be offered here to supply any deficiency which might be found to exist with regard to the service of the Army or the Navy, or pensions, or the legislative bill, or any other appropriation act, must of necessity be regarded as a general appropriation bill, because, being an amendment to a general appropriation act, it would partake of the character of the measure to which it was an amendment.

Therefore, assuming that to be true, it seems to me that the position taken by gentlemen who hold that this is not a general appropriation bill at last resolves itself into this, that amendments which may be designed to provide for deficiencies in general appropriation bills, if applied to each bill separately, would be regarded as a general bill; but if applied to all or half of the general appropriation bills, then it is not a general appropriation bill. It seems to me that that position is scarcely tenable. A deficiency bill which is designed to supply a want in the appropriations made by the general appropriation acts, it appears to me, is wider in its scope and bearing and more truly should be regarded as a general appropriation bill than any bill making a specific appropriation for one branch of the service.

Mr. DAWES. It seems to me that the question is not whether the amendment is in the nature of a general appropriation, but the question is whether the bill to which the amendment is proposed is a general appropriation bill. If the bill to which the amendment is proposed is not a general appropriation bill, then the amendment may be in order. The amendment itself does not change the character of the bill to which it is proposed. The bill is the substantive matter upon which the Senate passes, whether that bill, without regard to the character of the amendment, is a general appropriation bill. You may propose an amendment which, when it is adopted and made a part of the bill, might possibly change the bill into one of another character; but the question is whether the bill as it came from the House is a general appropriation bill. If that is a general appropriation bill, I should like to inquire of the Senator from Virginia what is a special appropriation bill? What kind of a bill would be a special appropriation bill?

Mr. WITHERS. There is no such thing known to parliamentary law—at least as controlling this body—as a special appropriation bill.

Mr. DAWES. Then I suppose there is no effect to be given to the word "general" in the term "general appropriation bill." What is the necessity of styling certain bills "general appropriation bills" if it is not for the very purpose of distinguishing them from some other kind of bills which may be called special, or by any other term? What is to distinguish them? I suppose that every bill for the payment of claims or anything of that kind which contains within it an appropriation of money to carry it out would be a special appropriation, and a bill which contains several of those items would still be a special appropriation bill; that is, a bill appropriating money for special purposes, not for general purposes for which there is necessity annually for an appropriation provided by law—the annual appropriations. The character of the bill itself must determine whether we can apply amendments of this character to it, and not the character of the particular amendment itself.

Mr. WITHERS. Guided by the standard which is laid down by the Senator from Massachusetts, this would be, then, a general appropriation bill, because the original bill which came here from the House of Representatives proposes amendments to what would be properly the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

That is a general appropriation bill, under the definition of the rules of the House, and therefore this amendment to that bill must be a general appropriation bill.

Mr. DAWES. I understand the bill as it came from the House to make provision for a special case, not a general appropriation, not an ordinary appropriation, not that which comes around every year, provided by law, in the ordinary operations of the Government. That is what I understand by a general appropriation bill; but here are specific special appropriations proposed by the House of Representatives required by an exigency that comes round of itself, that comes round under the proclamation of the President calling a special session. It is not anything provided by law; that could not be the case in the expenses of a special session of Congress. There is nothing provided by law that the extra expenditure consequent upon an extra session of Congress shall be defrayed in any particular manner or shall be measured by any particular sum.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. President, in discussing the rules which govern this body, I think you will agree with myself that we find opinions sometimes influenced very much by the vote the respective Senators may desire to give upon the question pending, and very properly minds are so influenced, and we cannot help being so influenced. In this question which is now submitted to us by the Chair, fortunately for myself at least, I do not occupy that position. I stated yesterday that I did not mean to intimate how I would vote upon the amendment itself. I will state now distinctly that I should vote against the amendment if it were before the body. Being against the amendment, my opinion upon the question of order certainly can have no influence upon my mind as to the vote which I shall give on the amendment; and I am led to the conclusions at which I have arrived only and solely because I would have the rules of this body so administered as to best subserve the interests of the public and the rights of every Senator on this floor.

I hold, first, that every rule of this body for the interest of the public service and for the right of every Senator should be, must be, strictly construed. There is no latitude either for the Chair in his decision or for the Senator in his vote, because when you undertake to draw analogies, when you undertake to say that the principle of one rule will apply to another case, you are widening the scope of that rule which was designed and intended to be clear and explicit in its terms as to the power which is to be exercised by the Chair under it and what may be done by the Senate under it.

With that general view of the design of rules, (and I think no Senator will disagree with me that I am right in that,) I say that by the strict language of this rule there cannot by possibility be any reasonable doubt that this is not what comes within the terms of the rule as a general appropriation bill. It cannot be.

It was argued yesterday by my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALLACE] that this was a general appropriation bill, because it provided for a variety of subjects, it covered general topics, it contained general appropriations; thereby it was a general appropriation bill. I think I can satisfy the Senator that he is mistaken in the construction which he thus seeks to place upon the rule. Is it general because it has several items and they are different in their character? By no manner of means; because, if that be the description of a general appropriation bill, your bill for fortifications would drop out; it has but a single section in it; it has got, I think, but a single item. Then it would not be general, because it has only a single item. I think your bill for the Pension Bureau is in one or two sections, and confined to but one distinct subject. I think your bill for the support of the Military Academy at West Point has but a single section, unless you add on some explanatory section by which the moneys are to be disbursed under that additional section. Here are at least three or four of the twelve bills known as general appropriation bills that have but a single section in them. Now, if it takes a generality of subjects to make a general appropriation bill, every one of them fails to come within the category.

But I stated very briefly yesterday, and I repeat it to-day, and it has been stated by others, that we must draw the construction strictly upon the rule and find other reasons why certain bills are general appropriation bills. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] this morning has called our attention to the action of the House, and we learn distinctly by the language of the House rules what they know and understand there to be general appropriation bills, and this is not one of them. But coming to our own rules, what is it that gives to certain bills their general designation of general appropriation bills?

Every bill you pass in this body that makes an appropriation is an appropriation bill to that extent. If it be a general appropriation bill, of course it has a variety of items. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] has already this morning alluded to a bill that contained for aught I know a hundred items—the Senator from Minnesota can tell me; you may take the bill that comes from the commissioners of southern claims, composed of various items, all different; you will find perhaps not two cases alike in the hundred, if there are a hundred——

Mr. HOAR. More than fifteen hundred.

Mr. HAMLIN. More than fifteen hundred, my friend from Massachusetts suggests. You will find no two of the items alike. That is a general appropriation bill, according to the idea now advanced, and yet it has never been subject to the rules of this body as such, and it cannot be one because it lacks the merit of an appropriation bill, which I wish again to state. General appropriation bills are those named in the House rule which are introduced and passed into laws for the support of the various branches of the Government, and are based upon the estimates that those several branches and bureaus furnish to us.

Now, why should we have such a rule in the Senate? For this very good reason: it is utterly impossible that any member of the House or any Senator shall know what are the proper appropriations to be made for the Army or Navy or the civil service; we must gather that from all the different Departments and they make their estimates with the best knowledge that can be had; and then the Senate have said "upon these bills we will vary our rule and no Senator shall rise in his place and move either to reduce or increase those appropriations." Why? Because we can rely with more certainty upon the bureau and Department officers as possessing better information and evidence than ourselves. But, says the rule, if a Senate committee will investigate that subject and will report upon investigation that the items ought to be reduced or increased and will report to the Senate and they in turn send it to the Appropriations Committee, then it is a matter which comes appropriately before us. That it is in my judgment which marks the distinction between the general appropriation bills and all other bills. We will not allow amendments to be put upon those because we believe we may more safely rely upon the estimates of the proper Departments after they have undergone the investigation of the Appropriations Committee, than we can upon any Senator. If the committee examine and report, then an amendment shall come in there, while as to all other bills, where we have not thus got the estimates, it is well known that any Senator may offer his amendments to increase or to diminish the amount appropriated; not so with the general appropriation bills; and it is that which makes a bill a general appropriation bill as applicable to the support of the Government, it being reported, examined by the committee upon estimates made. It is that, and not the variety of subjects, which decides the question. It seems to me, sir, that is very clear.

Mr. WITHERS. Will the Senator give me information upon one point? I know that his experience is very large on this subject and his authority very high; it stands high with me certainly. I wish to ask him if the general deficiency bills which are passed here every session have not been regarded in the practice of the Senate as general appropriation bills and subject to the rule of order which is now under consideration.

Mr. HAMLIN. I will answer very promptly and very frankly I think they have been so considered. I have no recollection that they have been otherwise considered.

Mr. WITHERS. That is my experience.

Mr. HAMLIN. Nor have I any doubt that if the question were raised and carefully examined, my friend from Virginia and myself would come to the conclusion that they were not general appropriation bills; and yet they verge very near it because they are made upon the estimates of the Departments. That is a distinct appropriation bill from what I call the general appropriation bills that are called such within the rule.

Now, another thing. The Committee on Appropriations have charge of all these various bills, and they have done and will, I have no doubt, do the duties well and to the general acceptance of the Senate; but I can call to my mind no session of Congress since I have had any acquaintance with it when other bills than the general appropriation bills have not been referred to that committee. There is no session when we do not find reported or asked for appropriations for specific subjects, and such matters are referred to the Committee on Appropriations. Why? Such a reference does not make the bill referred a general appropriation bill, but it is so referred because that committee is charged with the appropriations generally, and ought to have better information than any other committee of this body as to the condition of the finances of the Government, and how much or how little we can properly appropriate. This bill might just as well have gone to the Committee on Finance, or the Committee on Commerce, or the Committee on the Contingent Expenses of this body would have been still more appropriate, because it relates more to contingent expenses than anything else. But it went to the Committee on Appropriations. That does not make it a general appropriation bill. The Senator from Pennsylvania said it was read and referred without objection. So it was; but the fact that it was so referred did not change the bill at all or its character in any degree.

Pardon me, sir, a few words further. The love of power is inseparable from the nature of man. Senates and committees are made of men and partake of the desires and dispositions of men. It is the most natural thing (and I illustrate it by the Committee of Ways and Means, and I might just as well illustrate it by any other committee) that each committee should be somewhat tenacious of the field and scope of its own powers. I insist that that may influence minds as well as the opinion a man may hold on the very amendment that is sought to be presented. If we have been occupying a field and if we have been exercising a power with no objection, it is the most natural thing—it will apply to every committee of this body—that that committee should seek to hold and exercise the powers which it had formerly done or which had been conceded, whether they came within the strict rules of parliamentary law or the rules that govern the body or not. I do not care the snap of my finger, individually, what is the decision of this question so far as the amendment is concerned; but as a general principle applying to what is for the best interests of the Government and the right of every Senator on this floor, I do think it is wise that we adhere to what is the strict letter of the rule. That is my judgment, and for that reason I certainly shall vote to admit the amendment as in order.

I have not a distinct recollection—if it were distinct I could answer the question put by the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. HOAR]—as to the bill, but I have a recollection, and it is clear, that while the Senator from Massachusetts was in the chair, (I cannot say whether it was the past winter or a year ago,) this question or another very nearly like it came up, and the Chair promptly ruled that the bill then pending was not a general appropriation bill. I am like the Senator, I cannot remember whether that was acquiesced in generally by the Senate, or whether it was put to the Senate by the Chair and affirmed. My impression rather is that the Chair did submit the opinion he had given to the Senate, and that it was affirmed by the Senate. I think therefore, Mr. President, that it is a right thing to do to define our rules, and to define the powers and duties of the committees that act under them. Some Senator here or there, if he holds a seat on this floor for six years, will find that the claim now made will affect what he may believe an interest of his constituents that he is representing, and he will be excluded from presenting it if this broad latitude is given to the construction of this rule. I hold that the amendment is in order, because the bill is not a general appropriation bill within the meaning of the rule.

Mr. PLUMB. Mr. President, this has been spoken of all the time by members of the Appropriation Committee as a deficiency bill. Inasmuch as deficiency bills have come to be standing regular things in Congress, from that fact it is sought to argue that this is a general appropriation bill within the meaning of the rule. I have in my hand the public acts of the Forty-fifth Congress, 1877–'78. Chapter 3 is a deficiency appropriation bill, and is so entitled: "An act to provide for deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1878, and for prior years, and for other purposes." Chapter 191 of the same volume is entitled as follows: "An act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1878, and prior years, and for those heretofore treated as permanent, for reappropriations, and for other purposes." And following the enacting clause is this:

That the following sums be, and they are hereby, appropriated, to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1878, and for former years, and for other purposes, &c.

That, according to the examination I have given this morning, is the usual method of entitling the acts to supply deficiencies in appropriations. It accords with what I believe to be the fact; that is to say, appropriate deficiencies are for the purpose of simply supplying omissions or oversights in the regular appropriation bills. To some extent they may be considered as tenders to the regular appropriation bills; and probably, to some extent, their character as being regular appropriation bills might be fixed by that fact.

But this bill, I call the attention of the Senate to the fact, is not so entitled, and I think the title may be fairly resorted to for the purpose of determining the opinion which the committee who reported the bill to the House and the House itself in passing the bill had of it. It is entitled a bill "to provide for certain expenses of the present session of Congress, and for other purposes," taking it out of the category of deficiency bills, I think. It is a bill the passage of which has been made necessary by the fact that an unexpected emergency has arisen, to wit, the assembling of Congress in extra session at this time; and as such I do not think it is fairly entitled to be called a deficiency bill, whatever effect might be given if it were entitled a deficiency bill. In that view it seems to me that the amendment which I have offered is entirely germane as being for the purpose expressed in the title of the bill, to wit, an appropriation for expenses made necessary by the present session of Congress.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is the Senate ready for the question? Senators, as many of you as are of opinion that the amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas is in order will, as your names are called, answer "yea;" those of the contrary opinion will answer "nay." The Secretary will call the roll.

Mr. HOUSTON. The vote now to be taken, as I understand it, is whether this is really a general appropriation bill or not.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is the effect of it.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President, I shall vote that this amendment is in order. I wish I could vote otherwise, because I should be glad if the question of order and the merits of the motion tallied with each other. If I understand the purpose and effect of this amendment, I shall vote against it, whenever that vote comes to be taken; but on the question now proposed to the Senate, whether this be one of the general appropriation bills nominated in the rule, or stating it otherwise whether this amendment without a report from a standing committee be in order, I cannot vote as has been argued by Senators who insist that this is one of the regular general customary standing appropriation bills which I understand as being embraced by the rule.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. McDONALD, (when his name was called.) I am paired on all political questions with the Senator from Wisconsin, [Mr. CARPENTER.] I see my political friends are voting on one side of this question and my political opponents on the other, and consequently I shall decline to vote.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. My colleague [Mr. CARPENTER] left with me the right of deciding whether a question was political or not, and I being the umpire decide that this is not a political question, so that the Senator from Indiana is at liberty to vote notwithstanding the pair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The decision is a very correct one.

Mr. McDONALD. I will state to the Senator from Wisconsin that his colleague before leaving here left the pair entirely with me; but here he is now himself, and I vote "nay."

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 33, nays 23; as follows:

YEAS—33.

Allison,	Conkling,	Ingalls,	Saunders,
Anthony,	Dawes,	Kellogg,	Slater,
Bell,	Eaton,	Kirkwood,	Teller,
Booth,	Edmunds,	McMillan,	Vance,
Bruce,	Ferry,	Maxey,	Williams,
Burnside,	Hamlin,	Morgan,	Windom.
Cameron of Pa.,	Hill of Georgia,	Morrill,
Cameron of Wis.,	Hoar,	Plumb,
Chandler,	Houston,	Rollins,

NAYS—23.

Bailey,	Garland,	Kernan,	Vest,
Beck,	Hampton,	McDonald,	Voorhees,
Butler,	Harris,	Pendleton,	Walker,
Call,	Hereford,	Ransom,	Wallace,
Coke,	Johnston,	Saulsbury,	Withers.
Davis of W. Va.,	Jonas,	Thurman,

ABSENT—20.

Bayard,	Farley,	Jones of Florida,	Paddock,
Blaine,	Gordon,	Jones of Nevada,	Platt,
Carpenter,	Groome,	Lamar,	Randolph,
Cockrell,	Grover,	Logan,	Sharon,
Davis of Illinois,	Hill of Colorado,	McPherson,	Whyte.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate decides that the amendment is in order, and the question is, Shall the amendment be adopted?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am not in favor of the amendment as it stands; but I rather think I should favor it if it were amended. I move to amend it by inserting in the first line of the amendment, after the word "session," in line 1, these words:

Whose term of office began on the 4th day of March, 1879, and who actually traveled from their respective States to attend the present session of Congress.

So that it will read:

For mileage of Senators at the extra session, whose term of office began on the 4th day of March 1879, and who actually traveled from their respective States to attend the present session of Congress, &c.

That confines it to the new Senators who actually came from their States. Some were re-elected and did not travel, being here. If that amendment is agreed to, of course a similar amendment should be made to the next clause as to members of the other House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Vermont to the amendment of the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I ask the Senator from Vermont whether the effect of his amendment, if adopted, will be to give only to the new Senators whose term of service began on the 4th day of March mileage for the present session; and will they also be entitled to mileage for the next regular session?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think so.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. Then those Senators whose term commenced on the 4th of March last would get mileage twice during the year and the old Senators only once.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That would be true.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. With my present opinions I shall vote against this whole amendment, but I shall certainly vote against the amendment to the amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont. I cannot see any reason for that amendment whatever, because it goes upon the idea that the Senators holding over from the Forty-fifth Congress were here already. Quite a number of them were not here. The extra session was called for some time after the 4th of March, and some went home. It was called for the 18th of March; and some went home and did not remain, and those who did remain had to pay their expenses. I can certify that the expense of staying here during those two weeks paying my regular board was twice the sum it would have cost me to go home and come back. I did not go home; I remained here solely because of the extra session. I could have gone home, but I remained here solely because of the extra session, and my board bill was twice as much during the interval as the expense of going home and returning would have been. Now, is there any justice in that? All I want is justice and equality. You are giving the gentlemen whose terms began on the 4th of March double mileage for the year. A Senator gets $5,000 a year and one mileage. That is his regular salary. If a portion of the Senators must attend more than one session of Congress and yet be content with one mileage, there is no reason on earth why the other Senators should not be content with the same salary. That is my judgment. You must make it so much salary for the year, or otherwise there is inequality.

Now, Mr. President, I am inclined to think that for myself I shall vote against this whole proposition. My own judgment is that the salary of a member of Congress is too high anyway. I have always thought so; and I think, therefore, I shall vote against the whole amendment. That is my present impression and belief; but if a portion of the Senators are to have mileage, then all ought to have it; if all ought not to have it, then none ought to have it.

Mr. KERNAN. Mr. President, the law under which we act is quite plain unless we change it by this amendment. The act of 1866 is:

That the compensation of each Senator, Representative, and Delegate in Congress shall be $5,000 per annum, to be computed from the first day of the present Congress, and in addition thereto mileage at the rate of twenty cents per mile, to be estimated by the nearest route usually traveled in going to and returning from each regular session.

Therefore, we are, if we adopt this amendment, appropriating these $136,000 as extra pay given by this act, which we are not entitled to by the law as it stands on the statute-book. I do not think that we, who are charged with dealing with others who are constantly wanting more pay, should adopt this amendment. There may be some hardship upon those who came here at this session for the first time, but it is difficult to make a distinction between them and the many continuing Senators who did go home. I think, therefore, that it is both right and wise to vote down the entire amendment. We were elected under this law, which says that if there be an extra session at any time we are not to get mileage for it. If we give it in all cases of extra session, some times some persons may get constructive mileage where the extra session follows immediately the regular session. I think that Congress had better adhere to the law and not be voting anything extra on account of the extra session.

Mr. MORRILL. I shall vote against the original amendment, because it gives constructive mileage to certain members, and I shall vote against all amendments of the proposition, because I believe that if you vote to give extra mileage to one portion of the Senate a claim will be made at the next session to equalize the mileage of Senators, and it will virtually result in a doubling of the amount of mileage now allowed by law. Therefore, I shall vote against the original proposition and against all amendments.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I should like to ask the Senator from Vermont who offered the last amendment, if this amendment will give to the old Senators who were re-elected and qualified on the 4th of March, mileage.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Not unless they went home.

Mr. BURNSIDE. Then why should not every Senator who went home have his mileage?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not know that any very good answer can be given to that, but the idea is that the Senators who are in the middle of a term get their general average, while here is an extraordinary occasion which has called new Senators from their respective States; and a man being called from his State as a new Senator came here it looked to me as if perhaps he ought to be paid for that travel. It may be that the amendment as it is is too broad and ought to exclude those who were re-elected whether they went home or not.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I would then move to amend the amendment of the Senator from Vermont by inserting the word "new," so as to apply to "new Senators."

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is not in order now because we have an amendment in the second degree.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state to the Senator from Rhode Island that the word "Senators" does not occur in the amendment of the Senator from Vermont; so there is no place for the word "new."

Mr. EDMUNDS. I suggest to the Senator from Rhode Island that the amendment I have offered in order to mitigate the extent of the original amendment is an amendment in the second degree; and therefore if my amendment is not satisfactory it can be voted down and a new one then can be offered, but it is not in order to move to amend my amendment. We have got to the second degree already.

Mr. BURNSIDE. As I propose to vote against the whole proposition, I shall content myself by voting against this amendment to the amendment.

Mr. BECK. I desire to ask the Senator from Vermont if there is any reason why Representatives should not be embraced as well as Senators?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Not the slightest; they should be included if this is agreed to; but as they are in separate clauses in the amendment of the Senator from Kansas, I had to begin with the first one. If the sense of the Senate is that this ought to be agreed to, then I shall move it next on the members of the House, of course.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Vermont to the amendment of the Senator from Kansas.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas, [Mr. PLUMB.]

Mr. CONKLING. May we hear that read, Mr. President?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to insert:

For mileage of Senators at the extra session, $36,000.

For mileage of members of the House of Representatives and Delegates from Territories at the extra session, $100,000.

Mr. BAYARD. If I rightly comprehend the amendment of the honorable Senator from Kansas it is to give two mileages this one year to the entire Senate and House. Is not that the effect?

Mr. PLUMB. The effect of the amendment is to give mileage to every member of the Senate and of the House of Representatives for the extra session of Congress.

Mr. BAYARD. Very well. I am willing that all the gentlemen who came to Congress and took their seats here on the 18th of March should receive the same mileage as if they had been in their seats here on the first Monday of last December; in other words, that the single mileage provided by law should be received by them as it has been by those persons who were here during the last session, but not more. I do not propose to vote in favor of doubling my own mileage; but I am willing to vote in favor of their receiving a single mileage as we have done.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I cannot agree with the view favored by those who sustained the amendment of the Senator from Vermont. The members who came here on the 18th of March will receive during this Congress for the two regular sessions the same mileage that the rest of us get. I am not willing to discriminate and say that Mr. A, a member of the Senate, shall have three mileages and Mr. B, a member of the Senate, shall have only two. I think we had better vote down the whole proposition. We are paid annually for our services, in the estimation of some gentlemen very liberally, in the estimation of others not enough, but the law is that we shall get $5,000 a year and mileage. Perhaps the country thinks it is much more than we earn. In my judgment we had better vote down this whole proposition.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I hope the Senate will vote down this whole amendment. I think it is all wrong. Members of Congress get $5,000 a year and mileage for one regular session. I do not propose to accumulate the expenses because of extra sessions. I know that some noise is sometimes made that an extra session of Congress costs the Government so much. I think, when members of Congress are paid by the year, if the interests of the country require that they should attend here a dozen times, they ought to attend upon their regular salary and not be increasing their pay on account of the number of extra sessions. I do not think anybody ought to have anything extra. That is my judgment about it. Half the year we are getting pay without service any way. That ought to be satisfactory. I hope this amendment will be voted down, and that everybody will be content with his regular salary and not ask for extra allowances because of extra sessions.

Mr. PLUMB. I desire simply to say in response to what the Senator from Georgia has stated, that I am in favor of every Senator coming here for the extra session and all extra sessions, present and prospective, that may be called by the President; but if he will study carefully the terms of my amendment he will find that there is nothing in it which prohibits any Senator declining to take mileage if he so desires; but the question as to whether we shall come and keep coming without additional allowance, is the question to be decided on this amendment. That question is distinctly before the Senate, and each Senator will of course decide it according to his own views of the policy and propriety of it.

Mr. WALLACE. The Committee on Appropriations considered this subject, as I have already stated, and rejected the proposition. Heretofore when there were extra sessions of the Senate called, commencing on the 4th or 5th of March, in perhaps three cases there was money voted to pay the mileage of Senators who came in anew to the Senate. That is the only basis upon which this proposition can hang. Here is an entirely different proposition. Here is a proposition now to vote mileage to Senators and members of the past Senate and of the present and past House who are now in the House and Senate for the extra session, when the law provides that mileage shall be given only for one regular session. This proposition gives mileage for two sessions this year, and of course it increases largely the expenditures of the Government, and we think it ought not to prevail.

Mr. PLUMB. Let me ask the Senator from Pennsylvania a question. Is it not really a violation of the law to give two mileages to a man whose term happened to commence on the 4th or 5th of March as to a Senator whose term commenced two years or four years ago?

Mr. WALLACE. Two wrongs never made one right; and if a past Congress gave to Senators under those circumstances mileage it is no reason why those who did not come here should get additional pay, or why we should extend over the wide field of the whole of the House this provision to give them an additional mileage. The law is that we shall have mileage for each regular session. This proposition is to repeal the law and to give mileage for two sessions this year.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I hope it will be my fortune to spend one Congress in public life without having the members of either branch engage in a discussion about their own pay. Congress, from the necessity of the case, is intrusted with the power of fixing its own compensation; no other public officer is intrusted with that power. If it were possible to help it, Congress would not be, I suppose. The discussion is always a disagreeable one. It is disagreeable to the public. It involves the charge upon the members of each branch of being governed by low, personal motives in their action in regard to a public question; and it seems to me the only wise policy is when the matter has once got fixed by a general law, as the Senator from Pennsylvania has so well said this has, to let it pass into ancient history and not to touch it. The public mind is content reasonably with the present compensation which is established by law. If we undertake to disturb it in any particular, it will be disturbed and discussed in other particulars, and we shall have a repetition of, I will not say the scandals, but the disagreeable and unfortunate public discussion and public excitement which attended the bill known as the back-pay bill a few years ago.

Congress has fixed the rule of one mileage a year and a stated salary. The public has acquiesced in it; and I hope we shall pass from that question, and that it will not be touched again for a hundred years in this country.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Kansas, [Mr. PLUMB.]

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I offer the following amendment to come in at the end of the bill:

To pay C. W. Brink for compensation and expenses as bearer of dispatches from the United States minister in Mexico in the year 1869, $552.69, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

The payment of this named sum, or of whatever sum may be necessary in order to compensate Dr. Brink for the services rendered at the time mentioned in the amendment, is recommended by the Secretary of State. I will send his communication, addressed to my colleague, to the desk to be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The letter will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, April 22, 1879.

SIR: Your letter of the 9th instant, relative to the claim of Dr. C. W. Brink for compensation and expenses as bearer of dispatches from the United States minister in Mexico, in the year 1869, has been received. In reply, I have the honor to inform you that, agreeably to your request, letters have been addressed to the chairmen of the Appropriation Committees of the Senate and House of Representatives, requesting that the necessary appropriation for the payment of Dr. Brink may be recommended in the deficiency bill, which, it is understood, is to be reported during the present session of Congress.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant,

WM. M. EVARTS.

Hon. MATT. H. CARPENTER,
United States Senate.

Mr. WALLACE. This amendment the Committee on Appropriations has never heard of before. I suppose it is germane; it is in order under the ruling of the Senate a few minutes ago; and that decision opens the door to the interposition of every special amendment or private claim, and I cannot do anything else at this time except to ask the Senate to vote it down.

Several SENATORS. Move to lay it on the table.

Mr. WALLACE. I cannot move to lay this amendment on the table, for that would carry the bill with it. This is not, under the decision of the Senate, a general appropriation bill, and so the bill would go to the table with the amendment. The proposition is, in effect, a private claim, which is forbidden under Rule 30. I cannot raise the point of order there because this is not a general appropriation bill. I know nothing about the merits of the case; it may be a perfectly just and proper claim; but it has not been considered by the committee, and I can only ask, on behalf of the committee, that it may not be put upon this bill.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. It appears from the communication just read by the Clerk from the Secretary of State that he communicated to the Committee on Appropriations the fact that there was this claim, and I understand from that communication that the matter either was or should have been brought before the committee. I know nothing of the facts except from the statement made by the Secretary.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I should like to ask the Senator a question. When did this claim arise?

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. In 1869.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Ten years ago?

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Yes, sir.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. What is the amount?

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. A little over $500. It is brought up by a very recent letter from the State Department. I understand that Dr. Brink performed this service at the request of the then minister in Mexico, and that he has not been paid. It appears that he has not been paid, from the communication which has been read. I know nothing further in regard to the merits of the claim. He performing the service at the request of the minister, the Government had the benefit of the service, and he has not been paid for that service. Why the matter has not been presented to Congress before this, or whether it has or has not been presented, I do not know.

The PRESIDENT, pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. FARLEY. I offer the following amendment to be added to the bill:

PUBLIC LANDS.

Office surveyor-general of California:

1. For furnishing township plats, maps, and descriptive notes of lands surveyed in former years but not furnished to local land offices, $8,000.
2. For representing one thousand mineral surveys on official township plats, $5,000.
3. For making maps, &c., in arrears under act of 1866, swamp and school lands, $6,000.
4. For bringing up arrears in drafting and other work in relation to private land claims, $3,000.
5. To enable the Secretary of the Interior to pay William L. McKim the balance due on his surveying contract, approved September 15, 1873, $2,065.14.

Total of deficiency, $24,065.14.

Mr. WALLACE. I am compelled to interpose the same objection to this amendment that I did to that of the Senator from Wisconsin. I must treat both Senators alike. This was not considered by the committee. The claim may be entirely just and proper, but I think it ought not to be placed on this bill. I shall have to ask the Senator to defer it to some other occasion.

Mr. FARLEY. I will only say that these deficiencies appear from recommendations made by the Treasury Department and also by the Commissioner of the General Land Office. A large amount of labor has been performed by the surveyor-general of California, for which he has received no compensation. He had a number of clerks in his office preparing these maps and doing actual necessary labor that has been entirely unprovided for. The result will be to stop the business of that office unless some appropriation is made by which the surveyor-general will be enabled to carry on the business of the office.

I confess that I did not receive this information until it was too late to present the matter to the committee. I received a communication on the subject from the surveyor-general of California a day or two ago and referred it to the Treasury Department and also to the Secretary of the Interior. These appropriations are important to the interests involved in the public lands of that State. My judgment is that unless some appropriations are made such as I ask for in the amendment I have offered the business of the surveyor-general's office in the State of California will entirely cease for the time being, and parties who have rendered service to the Government will be deprived of their pay entirely for three or four years.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from California.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. WALLACE. I ask leave to make a verbal amendment restoring the word "fourth" in line 4, page 3, and also inserting after the word "House," in line 45 "two of them from and including April 1, and the remaining six;" and in line 48, after the word "Congress," inserting "during the present fiscal year;" so as to make the clause read:

To pay eight messengers in the post-office of the House, two of them from and including April 1, and the remaining six from and including April 4, 1879, until the conclusion of the present session of Congress during the present fiscal year, at the rate of $800 each for seven months.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Will the Senator explain that?

Mr. WALLACE. It lessens the amount of appropriation made, and is brought here by the committee of the House to correct the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It seems to be all right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Pennsylvania.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BAYARD. I offer the following amendment:

For mileage of Senators and Members of the House of Representatives and Delegates from Territories, whose term of office began on the 4th day of March, 1879, and who actually traveled from their respective States and Territories to attend the present session of Congress, $100,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

I desire to say, Mr. President, one word in explanation of the amendment. Either my friends on this side of the Chamber who have spoken on the subject misapprehend the facts, or I do. It is my desire that the gentlemen who took their seats here on the 18th of March and who have not received mileage this year shall receive the same mileage as I and the others of us who took our seats on the first Monday of December previous. I cannot understand how that will make the mileage unequal. We received mileage on the first Monday of December and were entitled to it. They took their seats on the 18th of March. They will receive but one mileage for this year. We were paid in December; they are to be paid in March. They are not to be paid oftener than we, or more in proportion than we. Suppose the present session of Congress ends, and on the 1st day of next December it reconvenes in regular session; what happens then? They will receive mileage the same as the rest of us. But my idea is that gentlemen who have lately come into the Senate or into the House should receive the same mileage that they would have received had their terms of service commenced in December. I believe that this amendment accomplishes that; and if I am right in my theory, then it is just that this amendment should be adopted.

Mr. MCDONALD. I would suggest to the Senator from Delaware that there ought to be this added, that it shall not be construed as repealing the present law in regard to the mileage of Senators and Representatives.

Mr. BAYARD. If that cautionary amendment will protect against a second payment of mileage to anybody, I assent to it. Will the Senator put his words in form, as "Provided, That nothing herein contained shall repeal the present law on the subject of mileage?"

Mr. KERNAN. Necessarily it must change the present law. That only provides for paying mileage for coming to and going from regular sessions. That is the very language of the law.

Mr. WALLACE. I must interpose my objection to this as I did to the former amendment. This proposition is in effect to pay mileage to every member of the House who was at home between the 4th of March and the 18th of March, whether he was of the last Congress or of the present Congress. That is the inevitable effect of it. Or if he came in on the 4th of March, as all members came in on the 4th of March, and actually traveled, then every member of the House who went home who was a member of the last Congress is entitled to mileage. That is the inevitable result. So, practically, double mileage goes to the gentlemen who were in the former House and who went home after the 4th of March and returned on the 18th of March if they are members of this Congress and were of the past Congress.

It seems to me that the only safety is to stand by the law, and pay Senators and Representatives mileage for each regular session. That is the law, and this being an extra session we ought not to change the law.

Mr. HOAR. There have been three or four amendments moved to this bill, to which the Senator from Pennsylvania replied when they were offered that they had not been submitted to the committee, and he thought very likely they were perfectly just in themselves, and if they came up at a proper time might be adopted; but he appealed to the Senate to stand by him in not putting anything on to this bill, however just, which had not been submitted to the committee, as it would have been if this had been a general appropriation bill. The Senate concurred in that view, and without a division, with substantial unanimity voted down propositions for the benefit of persons not members of the Senate, which had the authority in one case of the Department of State and one of the Senators on this floor for their justice. Now, how, with what face can any Senator who voted down those amendments without even inquiring into their justice, vote to put on an amendment which has not been submitted to the committee because it is for the interest of members of Congress?

Mr. THURMAN, (Mr. EDMUNDS in the chair.) I hope my friend from Delaware will withdraw this amendment. If I am not entirely mistaken the inevitable effect of it, although I do not think he intends it, is to double the mileage of every Senator and Representative except those few Senators and Representatives who did not leave Washington City between the end of last session and the beginning of this.

I think if there ever was anything that was obnoxious to the people of the United States it was the increase that was made in the pay of members of Congress several years ago, and which very soon passed from the statute-book. Now, to begin this Congress by doubling the mileage (which in the case of some Senators would put three or four or five thousand dollars in their pockets) of all Senators and Representatives, except a few who happened to stay here in Washington instead of going home, it does seem to me would be extremely obnoxious.

It is said that Senators who have just come in and did not belong to the last Congress stand on a somewhat different footing from others. That is a mistake. They all get their mileage at the same time we get our mileage; that is, at the first regular session. The law is precisely the same in respect to them as it is with respect to us. They get their mileage at the first regular session, and, although it may have been some inconvenience to them to be at the expense of traveling here to this extra session, that is an expense to which we are all subjected when an extra session is called. The language of the statute is expressly that mileage for extra sessions shall not be paid, but only one mileage in a year for the regular session. I hope, Mr. President, that that will not be changed, and I am quite sure that my friend from Delaware cannot mean that there shall be this double mileage, but yet that is the inevitable effect of his amendment if it should be adopted. I hope he will withdraw it.

Mr. HEREFORD. I ask that the amendment be reported.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. EDMUNDS in the chair.) The amendment will be again read.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment of Mr. BAYARD.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, the Senator from Ohio is very just in supposing that I have no idea of double mileage as to any one. The only object of my amendment is that gentlemen who were absent at their homes and were summoned to and came to this session of Congress should be put on an equal footing with those of us who were in the Senate and equally summoned last December, and that there should not be a double mileage to any one. If my friend will consider for a moment, I think he will admit that this is not a case of double mileage to the new Senators. It by its terms excluded those who took their seats here before the 4th of March. There can be no double mileage, therefore, to those who may be termed old Senators; they are expressly excluded. Then the question is simply whether this extra session which called them from their homes to attend here on the 18th of March should entitle them to mileage for that actual service or not. I did not design that any benefit of one dollar should accrue to the old Senators, if I may describe them as such, those who were in Congress prior to the 4th of March last, but only those who came to Congress on the call of the Executive on the 18th of March. I have no desire whatever that there should be anything like a double mileage or extra gain by any one; but I hold that a man who came here originally from his home on the 18th of March ought to be paid as much mileage as one who came here on the 1st of December last. If I had been unable to attend here in my place on the 1st of last December, but had come here on the 18th of March, I would have received my mileage in March just as I would have received it in December if here; one mileage and no more. There is no double mileage about it. This amendment expressly excludes members who took their seats prior to the 4th of March, 1879.

Mr. HAMLIN. I wish to ask the Senator from Delaware a question. Suppose that this amendment is adopted, and members are all paid in pursuance of its provisions, what is there to prevent their getting another mileage next December under the general law? There is no limitation, if I can read it or understand it when it is read. That is the trouble.

Mr. BAYARD. A proviso was suggested by the honorable Senator from Indiana, that the law prescribing but a single mileage in each year should not be altered by this amendment.

Mr. HAMLIN. But if this amendment should be adopted, and Senators and Representatives should be paid under it, if I understand the force of language at all, the existing statute will apply to us all alike next December; therefore the new members elected for this Congress get three mileages, while the old ones get but two.

Mr. MCDONALD. I did suggest such an amendment, but my present impression is that it is better to let the new members wait until the first Monday in December to draw their mileage like the rest of us.

Mr. HEREFORD. I am opposed to the amendment of the Senator from Delaware for this reason: if the amendment shall prevail Senators of the United States and members of the House of Representatives get pay which they do not get as the law now stands. That is very clear. If it were not so there would be no use in offering the amendment at all.

The argument of the Senator from Delaware seems to be that if this amendment should not prevail those whom he terms the new Senators would be dealt by unjustly. In what way? Congress adjourned on the 4th of March. The Executive called us here for the 18th. Those Senators knew when they were elected that if there should be an extra session they would have to come to it at their own expense. We all knew when we were elected that if there should be any extra sessions we should receive no mileage for them. Now, why change the law?

Again, if this amendment of the Senator from Delaware shall prevail, what will be the result? It will be that those whom he terms the new Senators will get mileage for the extra session; they will get mileage again when they come in December next, and they will get mileage the third time when they come in the December following; so that the members of the House of Representatives and the new Senators will get three mileages during this Congress, while under the law as it stands they can only get two. That is the length and breadth of this amendment, that the new Senators will receive mileage three times during one Congress, and the other Senators will not, and the members of the House of Representatives will receive three mileages during one Congress, while as the law now stands they can only receive two.

For these reasons, Mr. President, I am opposed to this amendment and all amendments of any nature or kind that shall in any way tend to pay the Senators or members of the House of Representatives more than that which they were entitled to receive at the time they were elected.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, this amendment seems open to very different interpretations. My design is that no one shall receive double mileage; but I am satisfied that at this session injustice has been done. Under the circumstances, however, I desire to withdraw the amendment I offered

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Delaware is withdrawn.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. F. KING, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 67) providing for a new propeller for the United States ship Alarm;

A bill (H. R. No. 609) to prescribe the times for holding the circuit and district courts of the United States in the district of Kentucky;

A bill (H. R. No. 1152) to extend the time for the payment of preemptors on certain public lands in the State of Minnesota and Territory of Dakota;

A bill (H. R. No. 1376) making appropriations for constructing jetties and other works at South Pass, Mississippi River; and

A bill (H. R. No. 1377) to amend section 5440 of the Revised Statutes.

REFERENCE OF A DOCUMENT.

Mr. TELLER. I move that Senate Executive Document No. 18, of this session, being a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in answer to a Senate resolution of April 23, 1879, information in relation to balances audited and due for the transportation of mails prior to July 1, 1878, unprovided for by existing appropriations, be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The motion was agreed to.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills from the House of Representatives were severally read twice by their titles, and referred as indicated below:

A bill (H. R. No. 1152) to extend the time for the payment of preemptors on certain public lands in the State of Minnesota and Territory of Dakota—to the Committee on Public Lands.

A bill (H. R. No. 67) providing for a new propeller for the United States ship Alarm—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

A bill (H. R. No. 609) to prescribe the times for holding the circuit and districts courts of the United States in the district of Kentucky—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

A bill (H. R. No. 1376) making appropriations for constructing jetties and other works at South Pass, Mississippi River—to the Committee on Transportation Routes to the Seaboard.

A bill (H. R. No. 1377) to amend section 5440 of the Revised Statutes—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

PREVENTION OF EPIDEMIC DISEASES.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, being the bill (S. No. 108) to prevent the introduction of contagious or infectious diseases into the United States. The bill will now be read at lenth, it being before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole. The Chair will ask the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] whether he desires the original bill read or only the substitute.

Mr. HARRIS. The substitute for the bill need only be read. It is not necessary to read the original bill at all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection the substitute reported by the committee will be treated as the original bill for the purposes of reading and amendments. Is there objection? The Chair hears none and the substitute will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment reported by Mr. HARRIS, from the select committee to investigate and report the best means of preventing the introduction and spread of epidemic diseases, to the bill (S. No. 108) to prevent the introduction of contagious or infectious diseases into the United States, namely:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

That it shall be unlawful for any vessel engaged in the transportation of goods or persons from any foreign port to enter any port of the United States, except in accordance with the provisions of this act and all rules and regulations made in pursuance thereof; and any such vessel which shall enter or attempt to enter a port of the United States in violation thereof shall forfeit to the United States a sum, to be awarded in the discretion of the court, not exceeding $5,000, which shall be a lien upon said vessel, to be recovered by proceedings in admiralty in the proper district court of the United States. And in all such proceedings the United States district attorney for such district shall appear on behalf of the United States, and all such proceedings shall be conducted in accordance with the rules and laws governing similar cases in admiralty.

SEC. 2. All such vessels shall be required to obtain from the consul, vice-consul, or other consular officer of the United States at the port of departure or from the medical officer, where such officer has been detailed by the President for that purpose, a certificate in duplicate setting forth the sanitary history of said vessel, and that it has in all respects complied with the rules and regulations in such cases prescribed and herein authorized for securing the best possible sanitary condition of the said vessel, its cargo, passengers, and crew; and said consular or medical officer is required, before granting such certificate, to be satisfied the matters and things therein stated are true; and for his services in that behalf he shall be entitled to demand and receive such fees as shall by lawful regulation be allowed, to be accounted for as is required in other cases.

That upon the request of the National Board of Health the President is authorized to detail a medical officer to serve in the office of the consul at any foreign port for the purpose of making the inspection and giving the certificates hereinbefore mentioned: Provided, That the number of officers so detailed shall not exceed at any one time six: Provided further, That any vessel sailing from any such port without such certificate of said medical officer entering any port of the United States shall forfeit to the United States the sum of $500, which shall be a lien on the same to be recovered by proceedings in admiralty in the proper district court of the United States. And in all such proceedings the United States district attorney for such district shall appear on behalf of the United States, and all such proceedings shall be conducted in accordance with the rules and laws governing similar cases in admiralty.

SEC. 3. The National Board of Health shall make all needful rules and regulations authorized by the laws of the United States for the prevention of the introduction into, and spread within, the United States of contagious or infectious diseases, which shall be uniform, and subject to approval by the President, and shall be charged with the execution of the same, and of the provisions of this act and all other laws of the United States for the prevention of the introduction and spread of contagious or infectious diseases, and all quarantine regulations established under the authority of said laws in respect to all vessels and vehicles engaged in commerce with foreign nations and among the several States, whether by land or water.

SEC. 4. It shall be the duty of the National Board of Health to obtain information of the sanitary condition of foreign ports and places from which contagious and infectious diseases are or may be imported into the United States, and to this end the consular officers of the United States at such ports and places as shall be designated by the National Board of Health shall make to said Board of Health weekly reports of the sanitary condition of the ports and places at which they are respectively stationed, according to such forms as said Board of Health may prescribe; and the Board of Health shall also obtain, through all sources accessible, including State and municipal sanitary authorities throughout the United States, weekly reports of the sanitary condition of ports and places within the United States; and shall prepare, publish, and transmit to the medical officers of the Marine Hospital Service, to collectors of customs, and to State and municipal health officers and authorities weekly abstracts of the consular sanitary reports and other pertinent information received by said board; and shall also, as far as it may be able, by means of the voluntary co-operation of State and municipal authorities, of public associations and private persons, procure information relating to the climatic and other conditions affecting the public health; and shall make to the Secretary of the Treasury an annual report of its operations, for transmission to Congress, with such recommendations as it may deem important to the public interests; and said report, if ordered to be printed by Congress, shall be done under the direction of the board.

SEC. 5. That the National Board of Health shall from time to time issue to the consular officers of the United States and to the medical officers serving at any foreign port, and otherwise make publicly known, the rules and regulations made by it and approved by the President, to be used and complied with by vessels in foreign ports for securing the best possible sanitary condition of such vessels, their cargoes, passengers, and crews, before their departure for any port in the United States, and in the course of the voyage; and all such other rules and regulations as shall be observed in the inspection of the same on the arrival thereof at any quarantine station at the port of destination, and for the disinfection and isolation of the same, and the treatment of cargo and persons on board, so as to prevent the spread of cholera, yellow fever, or other contagious or infectious diseases; and it shall not be lawful for any vessel to enter said port to discharge its cargo or land its passengers except upon a certificate of the health officer at such quarantine station, certifying that said rules and regulations have in all respects been observed and complied with, as well on his part as on the part of the said vessel and its master, in respect to the same and to its cargo, passengers, and crew; and the master of every such vessel shall produce and deliver to the collector of customs at said port of entry, together with the other papers of the vessel, the said certificates required to be obtained at the port of departure, and the certificate herein required to be obtained from the health officer at the port of entry.

SEC. 6. That the rules and regulations made and approved as herein authorized shall be promulgated, so that when cholera, yellow fever, or other contagious or infectious disease shall be ascertained by the Board of Health to exist in any port or place within the United States, in such form as threatens its spread, the communication of the same to other ports and places within other States, by means of vessels and vehicles engaged in the transportation of goods or passengers between two or more States, shall, as far as practicable, be prevented; and in that case the Board of Health shall select suitable localities for establishing stations on the rivers and other lines of interstate commerce and travel, and may cause to be erected necessary temporary buildings for the disinfection of passengers, baggage, cargoes, vessels, and vehicles, and may enforce such rules and regulations relating thereto as may have been prescribed therefor.

SEC. 7. That it shall be the duty of the National Board of Health, so far as it may, in the execution of the powers conferred upon it by law, to invite the co-operation of, and to correspond and co-operate with, local sanitary officers, boards, and authorities, acting under the laws of the States, in sanitary measures, to prevent the introduction and spread of contagious and infectious diseases from foreign countries into the United States, and from one State into any other State, by means of commercial intercourse upon and along the lines of interstate trade and travel; and to that end it shall be lawful for said Board of Health to confer upon any such local officer or board within or near the locality where his or its authority is exercised, power also to enforce the provisions of this act, and all rules and regulations made in pursuance thereof. And in case such local officer or board shall refuse to execute and enforce the laws of the United States, and the rules and regulations of the National Board of Health made in pursuance thereof, for the inspection, disinfection, and treatment of vehicles and vessels, their cargoes, passengers, and crews, or, in the opinion of the National Board of Health, shall neglect or fail to do so, it shall be the duty of the President, upon the application of the National Board of Health, to detail from the medical staff of the Army or Navy, or the Marine Hospital Service, a suitable officer to execute and enforce said laws, rules, and regulations, or to appoint some suitable person for that purpose. And it shall be the duty of the National Board of Health to report the facts to the governor of such State, with such sanitary advice as the board may think proper in the premises.

SEC. 8. That to pay the necessary expenses of placing vessels in proper sanitary condition, to be incurred under the provisions of this act, the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, authorized and required to make the necessary rules and regulations fixing the amount of fees to be paid by vessels for such service, and the manner of collecting the same.

SEC. 9. That the National Board of Health is hereby directed to make, or cause to be made, an investigation into the contagious or infectious diseases of domestic animals in the United States intended for interstate transportation, and especially such as tend to interfere with the supply of wholesome animal food, and into the best means of controlling or preventing such diseases, and to report the result of its investigations to the Secretary of the Treasury, to be by him transmitted to Congress at its next session.

SEC. 10. That the National Board of Health is also directed to cause a thorough inspection to be made of all animals arriving at, or expected from the different shipping ports of the United States, and to cause the owners or shippers of such cattle to be promptly notified of the results of such inspection, with such recommendations as may be proper in each case. It shall also notify State and local sanitary authorities of the existence of such diseases of domestic animals as it deems proper to bring to their notice, with such recommendations as may be deemed expedient in each case.

SEC. 11. That the President is authorized, when requested by the National Board of Health and when the same can be done without prejudice to the public service, to detail officers from the several departments of the Government, for temporary duty, to act under the direction of said board, to carry out the provisions of this act; and such officers shall receive no additional compensation except for actual and necessary expenses incurred in the performance of such duties.

SEC. 12. That to meet the expenses to be incurred in carrying out the provisions of this act, the sum of $650,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, to be disbursed under the direction of the National Board of Health, which shall make to the Secretary of the Treasury a full and accurate report of its operations under this act, and of all expenditures connected therewith, to be by him reported to Congress.

SEC. 13. That all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act be, and they are hereby, repealed.

Amend the title so that it shall read: "A bill to increase the efficiency of the National Board of Health, and to prevent the introduction into, or spread within, the United States of contagious and infectious diseases."

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, anxious as I am to secure the earliest action which may be convenient or possible, and believing that nothing in the form of a general explanation of the pending bill will probably lessen or diminish the amount of debate that will arise upon it, I am inclined to proceed with its consideration without even attempting a general explanation. The committee will be glad to give at any moment such explanations as they may be able to give of whatever questions may arise or be suggested by Senators while the bill is under consideration.

While up I will propose an amendment suggested to me by the honorable Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] that I think proper to be adopted. In line 12 of section 1, I move to strike out the words "in admiralty;" so as to read:

Which shall be a lien upon said vessel, to be recovered by proceedings in the proper district court of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. I rise merely to ask a question of the Senator from Tennessee, and that is, What other contagious or infectious diseases mentioned in the third line of the sixth section are within the contemplation of the committee as giving rise to this power? The section gives this great power over the commerce of the whole country to this Board of Health when they ascertain "cholera, yellow fever, or other contagious or infectious disease" to exist in any place in the country. What are the "other contagious or infectious diseases" which the committee had in mind?

Mr. HARRIS. I can mention small-pox as one of the diseases that the committee had in mind. Yellow fever, cholera, and small-pox were the diseases that were chiefly considered as perhaps the most important and dangerous to the public health of the country. I suggest to the Senator from Massachusetts and to the Senate that perhaps the better mode of proceeding would be to take the bill section by section, and let us dispose of the various sections and whatever amendments may be offered to those sections as we proceed.

In line 17 of section 1, I move to strike out the words "similar cases in admiralty" and insert "the seizure of vessels for violation of the revenue laws of the United States;" so as to read:

And all such proceedings shall be conducted in accordance with the rules and laws governing the seizure of vessels for violation of the revenue laws of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. President, I trust I feel the importance of doing, or attempting to do, something to prevent contagious diseases of an aggravated character from being brought here from foreign countries as much as any Senator in this body; but I want it done in the proper way. It seems to me that the provisions of this bill are unnecessarily harsh and severe, and are altogether too broad for the just rights of the commerce of the country, taking into account everything that should be done to prevent the spread of contagious diseases.

The first section of the bill imposes a fine not exceeding $5,000, to be a lien upon the vessel, against every vessel which shall enter or attempt to enter a port of the United States in violation of "the provisions of this act." The "act" is to go into effect immediately on its passage and approval. What notice is to be given to the flag that floats in the Mediterranean or the Indian Sea? How are the masters of those vessels to know that this is to be the law to-morrow, if the President should approve the bill to-morrow; and how are they to avoid the penalties of this measure if they should honestly and innocently enter one of our ports before actual knowledge shall reach them? Yet by the terms of the bill they would be subject to these penalties.

Again, turning to the third section of the bill we find that this Board of Health is made a legislative body co-ordinate with Congress. They are to make rules and regulations ad libitum; there are no restrictions, except that their measures are to be based upon the laws of the United States. I insist that in a wise and well-prepared scheme or bill designed to affect and remedy the evils complained of, we ought to know a little ourselves what are to be the rules and regulations which are to apply to all the vast commerce and navigation of this country. It is not too much to say to the commercial and navigating interest "we want to put restrictions upon your commerce and your navigation which shall prevent the spread of these diseases," but it is too much to say "we wish to delegate the power to a body of men who, while they are eminent for their medical knowledge and science, know no more of commerce than the remotest man on earth." There are two great interests to be harmonized. I insist that when we have such a bill before us we ought to know precisely ourselves what are the rules and regulations which are to be imposed and what are the restrictions which are to be placed upon our commerce. I say nothing about the general exercise of a power in derogation of State rights, because I believe we have the power, and I am for exercising it to the full extent that it shall be proper, taking into regard the just interests of all.

I think the committee that have reported this bill have omitted one duty. Instead of giving this full power to a board of men eminent, I repeat, for their skill and science in medicine, I think the committee should have given to us, that we may examine and look and judge for ourselves, the rules by which the commerce of the country is to be governed. Perhaps it may be said that that cannot be done in full, ample, and entire detail; but most assuredly the great and the leading rules that shall be necessary may easily be drawn, and they should be drawn, in my judgment, on consultation not only with medical men but with men of high commercial integrity and experience.

This bill is the reflex, I take it, of this medical board. They speak well undoubtedly from their stand-point, but there are at least two aspects in which this subject is to be viewed, two in which we are to consider it; first, to prevent as far as is practicable the spread of these contagious diseases, and to prevent their being brought here by our vessels; and next, that should be done in accordance with all the rights and with all the facilities that can be appropriately conceded to the commerce of the country. The two are together. Your bill has sought to treat the subject only from a single stand-point and on a single side.

It is too grave a power, I submit, to place in the hands of a few men, however eminent—too grave when it is known that interests great and important are to be considered, of which we may affirm that they are not experts and do not understand as well as other men in the community.

In placing restrictions like these upon our commerce, and in passing a law for a national system of quarantine like this, I ask the Senate if it is not simple, even-handed justice to let the mighty commerce of our country be consulted. When I speak of the commerce of the country I speak of the commerce of the prairies of the West; I speak of the commerce of the savannas of the South; I speak of the commerce that comes from the manufacturing interests of the North; I speak for all, and for no locality; because all which is the production of this country, whether it be raised upon the prairies of the West, or upon the savannas of the South, or in the shops of the North, all that finds a market in a foreign land, the owner has just the same interest in the navigation and commerce of the country as the man who owns or the man who sails the ship.

My attention has been only hastily called to this bill, and I have submitted these very brief remarks on what presents itself as important in my judgment. I ask the attention of the Senate to the consideration of the bill, and I trust that it will not be hastily passed.

I am beginning to doubt a little in the infallibility of the eminent men who constitute this Board of Health. They told us the other day that they were going to have a system that would expel all that was contagious from the holds and around vessels by forcing with proper machinery air that had been chilled by manufactured ice. I said then that we had to take very much of the plan by way of experiment, and I am for it now; but since the case of the Plymouth, which had been frozen up among the icebergs of New England during the last winter, the contagion of yellow fever having appeared upon it immediately on her going to sea, and before she had reached even a mild latitude, my faith in freezing yellow fever out of a vessel is very much shaken.

Still it is a most dreadful calamity; it appeals to us all; and I am one who is willing to try every reasonable experiment and to go every appropriate length. I do not feel that I am called upon to support a bill which shall put the whole navigation of this country in the hands of a class of men who are to frame the rules and regulations by which it is to be governed with no word of advice or counsel from the eminent mercantile and commercial men of the country.

Mr. HOAR. And the railroads as well.

Mr. HAMLIN. My friend suggests "and the railroads as well." Yes, the railroads as well; and I will go further; not only the railroads, but all that traffic which will necessarily come from the adjacent provinces by means other than railroads or sailing-vessels.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Maine whether he has examined this bill sufficiently to answer the question whether there are not some provisions in the bill that might possibly conflict with the rights of other nations to carry on commerce with this country under commercial treaty stipulations?

Mr. HAMLIN. I was coming to that very point, if the Senator had listened but a single moment, although I cannot answer the Senator's question satisfactorily. I have not had time to examine our treaties, and I cannot therefore give an opinion as to how this measure may conflict with the stipulations in our treaties where we have guaranteed certain rights and accommodations to foreign powers. I am not able to state that, but it was a query which I had in my mind and which I was about to submit to the Senate, whether this broad, unqualified exercise of power over our own navigation and over our own commerce will not be found to be in contravention of stipulations which we have entered into with some of the foreign powers. I have not looked into that question; and I was myself going to put the inquiry as the Senator from Delaware has put it to me. This is a matter which ought to be a little more carefully examined than I have had the time to examine it, and I shall be very glad to hear from the distinguished Senators who have had charge of the bill, and with whom I am in entire sympathy, in trying to do what they themselves I think will say should be done. It is an important question; it is one which invokes the attention of the Senate and ought to receive it. Before we shall pass the bill, it certainly ought to be very wisely, very carefully, and very fully considered.

Mr. KERNAN. Mr. President, I can say for myself with entire sincerity, as was said by the Senator from Maine of himself, that I sympathize with any effort to protect the community, where they are not already protected by proper regulations, from these infectious diseases; but I think that every gentleman who has a constituency where there is a seaport town or city and a large commerce must have heard his constituents express a good deal of solicitude lest we needlessly under this measure embarrass commerce.

I wish to make one or two suggestions about the proposed law. It does not prescribe regulations as we do in revenue cases, but the third section provides that—

The National Board of Health shall make all needful rules and regulations authorized by the laws of the United States for the prevention of the introduction into, and spread within, the United States of contagious or infectious diseases, which shall be uniform, and subject to approval by the President.

By looking at this measure and other laws it will be seen that what is needful is really submitted to this Board of Health at Washington, who are far away from the experience of our ports. Then the bill provides that any vessel which does not observe the rules and regulations made by the board shall be subjected to very severe penalties. Then when you come to the seventh section, it provides that this board shall co-operate with the local sanitary officers. But the same section provides:

And in case such local officer or board shall refuse to execute and enforce the laws of the United States, and the rules and regulations of the National Board of Health made in pursuance thereof, for the inspection, disinfection, and treatment of vehicles and vessels, their cargoes, passengers, and crews, or, in the opinion of the National Board of Health, shall neglect or fail to do so, it shall be the duty of the President, upon the application of the National Board of Health, to detail from the medical staff of the Army or Navy, or the Marine Hospital Service, a suitable officer to execute and enforce said laws, rules, and regulations, or to appoint some suitable person for that purpose.

Therefore, if this board, with the best intention, shall make rules and regulations which are at war with the rules and regulations which have been found by long experience in a port like New York to be best and entirely effective, the local officer, with all the experience of his office of fifty years, is to be swept aside and some other person put there to place other rules and regulations in force.

I am speaking now as to the local officer being most qualified to decide what is best to keep out disease from the community living around the port; but take another view of the case. The board here, in making general rules and regulations for vessels engaged in the merchant marine, may subject them needlessly to restrictions that will embarrass and be very detrimental to commerce. I have received letters from merchants expressing apprehension on the subject. I have in my hand an article which I cut from the New York Journal of Commerce of the 24th of March, 1879, by the editor, prefacing a letter from Dr. Vander Poel addressed to that journal in reference to the workings of an order which had recently been issued.

I beg gentlemen to realize the fact that the Journal of Commerce is as intelligent, as reliable, and as much devoted to the health and the commerce and the prosperity of the mercantile marine and the mercantile community of New York as any other paper in the country. I beg the Senate to hear what the editor says prefacing the letter, and then the letter itself, with a view to directing attention to the danger there is of doing needless injury to the commerce of the country. I ask the Clerk to read it, beginning with what the editor says, and then to read the letter which follows. It is an open letter from Dr. Vander Poel.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

There is danger that the well-meant efforts of the Treasury Department to prevent the introduction of the plague at this port will prove a serious embarrassment to our foreign commerce. We presume that "the power behind the throne" which has moved the Secretary to this effort has less in view the public safety than the strong desire of certain officials and political partisans to transfer this whole quarantine establishment to government control. There is no occasion for any such interference. Our health officer has as high regard for the safety of our city as prevails at Washington, and what is of far more importance, an experience and skill that cannot be matched by any one in the service of the General Government. When Dr. Vander Poel sends a vessel up to the city to discharge, the Secretary of the Treasury need not interfere in behalf of the public safety. The following from the head of our State establishment will be heartily indorsed by our citizens:

QUARANTINE, March 22, 1879.

Editor of the Journal of Commerce:

DEAR SIR: The recent order from the Treasury Department, marked "Marine Hospital Service No. 1, series 1879," is so remarkable in character, and affects so vitally large commercial interests at this port, that I desire to call your attention to what I regard its defects.

The paragraph in question is as follows: "Until further orders, no vessel from any port in the Black Sea or the Sea of Azof, conveying any rags, furs, skins, hair, feathers, boxed or baled clothing or bedding, or any similar articles liable to convey infection, nor any vessel from any port of the Mediterranean or Red Sea having on board such articles coming from Southern Russia, shall enter any port of the United States," &c.

The above quotation contains the essential part subject to criticism.

First. If the intent of the order is to prevent the access of plague, it betrays such an ignorance of the channels of trade by which Russian rags would reach this country that it is perfectly useless. I am safe in asserting that not a Russian rag has been imported into this country by way of the Black Sea or the Sea of Azof for ten years past. The last were from Taganrog, on the Sea of Azof, about that length of time ago.

Russian rags reach here by entirely different routes than those specified in the circular.

Second. Admitting, however, that rags came from Black Sea ports, they would not reach them from the infected district. Taganrog, on the Sea of Azof, is the nearest seaport to the seat of the plague, and is distant over four hundred miles, with no large route of travel and no regular line of communication.

Third. All ports on the Mediterranean have quite as vital an interest in protecting themselves from the incursions of the dread scourge as the people of this country. It is known also that the quarantine restrictions are rigid, and oftentimes superstitious in the extreme. Is it to be supposed for a moment they would permit the entry of infected rags or rags coming from suspected localities, to be reexported, particularly when we state the manner those rags are gathered for export. Now, when the Mediterranean ports all established quarantine against the ports of the Black Sea and Sea of Azof, these quarantines have in every instance been raised. Are we more endangered than the nearer and denser populations?

Fourth. A statement of the methods by which rags are gathered is legitimate in this discussion. Without exception, in all ports of Europe from which rags are sent they are gathered as follows: The coasting vessels in the Mediterranean pick them up in small quantities at the different places of trade. They are brought loosely packed to the place of export. Here they are all sorted, washed, and then baled in solid bales, seldom reaching this country in less than three years from the time of gathering.

Fifth. No case of sickness has ever occurred in this country traceable to imported rags. Sporadic cases of small-pox occur among persons assorting, but in every instance it has been traced to rags gathered in the vicinity or from some part of this country. This statement derives importance when it is considered there are nine hundred and forty-eight paper mills in the United States, and that there was imported in New York alone in 1878 121,348 bales of rags and paper stock. Shall this immense interest be jeopardized by the enforcement of an order based on wrong premises?

The practical workings of this order are now to be enforced at this port.

First. In a vessel which on her arrival some ten days since was one hundred and twelve days from Trieste, having left there before the plague appeared on the Volga. After a careful consideration of all the facts of the voyage and those specified I gave the vessel "pratique."

Second. A vessel from Leghorn, ninety days on passage. On the smallest estimate of time over a year has elapsed since the rags were gathered, and pratique was also granted.

The order from Washington is, I understand, mandatory that the cargo of both vessels shall be discharged at a distance from the city, and either destroyed or the bales broken open and the rags aired, disinfected, &c.

If my statements are correct would such a course be considered a "rational quarantine," or just to the commercial interest of the port?

Very respectfully,

S. OAKLEY VANDER POEL,
Health Officer of the Port.

Mr. KERNAN. I desired that article to be read in order to call attention to what an intelligent commercial paper and a very experienced quarantine officer say in reference to these orders thus made.

You will observe that there has never been, as Dr. Vander Poel says, any disease brought to the country in any such cargoes, and he gives the reason why. He authorizes the vessel to come up and discharge its cargo, and yet under the order of the Treasury, well meant, all its cargo substantially must be destroyed.

What I fear under this bill is that without any necessity, acting from Washington here, by general orders on commerce, our commerce will be greatly injured and some of our merchants, as they think, almost ruined. This should not be the case. If we attempt to prescribe regulations here, we should prescribe them in the statute and get all the information we can to show that we do nothing needlessly detrimental to commerce; or we should have a law by which we confer authority on the State officers, the local quarantine officers, so that they may exercise their judgment when these regulations are to be enforced and when not.

As I said once before, no people are so solicitous in regard to this matter as the local officers. Nearly a million and a half of people live right around the harbor of New York. They are to be scourged if any infectious disease of a virulent character comes in; and they have for seventy-five years been guarding themselves so carefully that for forty or fifty years nearly we have kept everything of the kind out that was seriously dangerous to the community. Now, it is proposed to have all that overridden by well-meaning men who are not familiar with the system in operation there, and who have not had the experience which has been had there. First we run the risk that they will not protect our community from infectious diseases as well as they have been protected by the local officers and by the Legislature making regulations upon the subject, with changes made from time to time to perfect the system; and, secondly, from a well-meant zeal to protect health, I fear there will be needless serious detriment and injury to the commerce of that great port and to the people who are engaged in that commerce.

Mr. MORGAN. If the Senator will allow me, I desire to say that I propose to offer an amendment, to come in at the end of the thirteenth section of the bill, which possibly may modify if not remove some of the objections which he urges.

Mr. KERNAN. I will wait and see when that is proposed.

Mr. CONKLING. Let the Senator from Alabama read his amendment now.

Mr. KERNAN. Certainly.

Mr. MORGAN. I propose to add the following proviso:

Provided, That nothing in this act contained shall be so construed as to supersede or impair any sanitary or quarantine law of any State.

Mr. KERNAN. That would improve the bill very much. I desire now not to discuss the measure at any length, but to call attention to the danger of a general bill like this, giving this board authority to make regulations which shall bind anybody under penalties as to ports like New York, Boston, Baltimore, and other places.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President, not meaning at this moment to make any comments upon this bill, I rise to beg the Senator from Alabama, who has read for information an amendment which he proposes, to state, if he will, what in his judgment will be the legal effect of sections like these which do transplant from the State authorities to the national authorities here named absolute power, which do repeal all sections conflicting with these sections, and which do thus deposit powers such as my colleague has referred to with the authorities here proposed, supplemented by a provision like his, that nothing therein shall be construed to interfere with the quarantine laws of States or their execution?

Mr. MORGAN. If I understand the question of the Senator from New York, I will say in answer that I think the bill as reported by the committee would virtually repeal all the sanitary laws and regulations of the States. The bill, as I understand it, must be based upon the idea that Congress has the right to legislate over the entire subject included in this bill, and having this right of legislation over the subject, as is conceded in the bill, it has the supreme power to legislate in a plenary way on the subject. The necessary result will be that any enactment of Congress coming in conflict with the sanitary laws and regulations of the States would abrogate those laws.

My purpose is, as far as possible, to restrain or remove such an effect as that from this proposed statute. I do not know that my amendment fully accomplishes that purpose; but it does, so far as I can now see my way, restrain this act or limit its operation so as not to come in conflict with the sanitary and quarantine regulations of the States.

The legislation of Congress heretofore upon this subject since the first organization of the Government has been directly upon a reverse principle than that which is embodied in this bill. Congress by express enactment heretofore has required all its sanitary officers, and indeed all its revenue officers and all its officers who may be connected in any way with quarantine or sanitary regulations, to yield support and assistance to the authorities of the States. That is the express nature of the legislation now existing upon the statute-book. Up to this time Congress has never assumed jurisdiction to exercise the powers of quarantine even upon the coast, unless it might be in special instances where it has an exclusive right of possession, such as at the ports and dock-yards and places of that description. I do not remember now that Congress has passed any special law even upon that subject; but surely the general legislation up to this time has been just the reverse of what is now proposed, as I will proceed to show very briefly by calling attention to some of the statutes. The first act was that of the 23d of February, 1799, which provides that—

The quarantines and other restraints established by the health laws of any State, respecting any vessels arriving in, or bound to, any port or district thereof, shall be duly observed by the officers of the customs revenue of the United States, by the masters and crews of the several revenue-cutters, and by the military officers commanding in any fort or station upon the sea-coast; and all such officers of the United States shall faithfully aid in the execution of such quarantines and health laws, according to their respective powers and within their respective precincts, and as they shall be directed, from time to time, by the Secretary of the Treasury. But nothing in this title shall enable any State to collect a duty of tonnage or impost without the consent of Congress.

This is followed by other provisions in the same statute and by some provisions also in the amendatory statutes, all in the very same line of procedure, enjoining upon the officers of the United States Government of every description who may have any connection whatever with the import or export trade or commerce of the country to aid the States and the sanitary officers of the States in the enforcement of their rules and regulations for the preservation of the public health.

It has always seemed to me that under that species of legislation Congress might well go further and make certain contributions of money, wherever it might be considered necessary for the purpose of giving still further assistance to the local authorities in the enforcement of their quarantine regulations. But surely the bill as it is now presented totally reverses this line of action, and takes from the States that power and authority which Congress has hitherto been very careful to protect. It breaks down, as I understand, all the quarantine laws and sanitary laws of every description in the States which perchance may come in conflict with the provisions of this proposed act of Congress.

These are my impressions of the general nature of this proposed enactment. I may be mistaken in regard to it; and the Senators in charge of this subject may have it in their power to easily explain the difficulties which have presented themselves to my mind. I of course from the situation that I occupy in the country, living in a Southern State, an exposed State, most heartily sympathize in every measure that may be supposed in any way well adapted to the preservation of the health of that State and of all other States against the introduction of the yellow fever or any other epidemic. I would with great reluctance vote against any proposition which had that purpose for its object. I trust that the committee will cheerfully adopt the suggestion which I propose in this amendment, which is not now in order exactly, when it shall be reached, for the purpose as far as possible of limiting the effect of this legislation.

Mr. GARLAND. I do not know whether I understood the Senator from Maine [Mr. HAMLIN] to offer any amendment to the bill yet or not?

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. FERRY in the chair.) There is no pending amendment.

Mr. GARLAND. Then the Senator from Maine did not offer any amendment.

Mr. HAMLIN. If the Senator will allow me I will submit a motion; I will say nothing. I move that the bill be recommitted with instructions for the committee to report a code of rules and regulations by which the provisions of the bill are to be enforced.

Mr. KERNAN. Will the Senator from Maine yield to me a moment?

Mr. HAMLIN. Certainly.

Mr. KERNAN. I desire to call the attention of the committee and of the Senator from Alabama, who has taken an interest in the subject, to the law passed on the 29th of April, 1878. It is "an act to prevent the introduction of contagious or infectious diseases into the United States." There is to be found in that act a provision much similar to one in the bill before us. And I will read it:

And the said Surgeon-General of the Marine-Hospital Service shall, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, be charged with the execution of the provisions of this act, and shall frame all needful rules and regulations for that purpose, which rules and regulations shall be subject to the approval of the President.

That is much the language of this bill. Then follows this clause:

But such rules and regulations shall not conflict with or impair any sanitary or quarantine laws or regulations of any State or municipal authorities now existing or which may hereafter be enacted.

And then at the close of the fifth section the following proviso was put on in the House:

Provided, That there shall be no interference in any manner with any quarantine laws or regulations as they now exist or may hereafter be adopted under the State laws.

I call attention to this in order that the committee, if the bill should be recommitted, may look at this law. I think they will find also a provision as to railroads and persons passing from State to State, requiring them to comply with State laws on the subject of health. I merely wanted the committee to have the benefit of this law if the bill should be referred back to them.

Mr. GARLAND. The question now is upon the motion of the Senator from Maine to recommit the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. To recommit the bill with instructions.

Mr. GARLAND. With instructions that the committee report back a code of rules and regulations to carry this proposed measure into effect. This motion has grown out of an objection suggested by the Senator from Maine himself in reference to the first and the third sections, the third section particularly, applying to the machinery of the bill. From that objection of the Senator from Maine the further suggestion of the Senator from New York, enlarging it, goes a little further than the mere machinery of the bill, and goes to its substance. That suggestion still enlarging, the Senator from Alabama has read for information an amendment which he proposes to offer which goes still further, to the very substance of the bill; in fact it goes to the whole merits of the measure as presented by the committee.

As one member of the committee, I should dislike very much to have the bill recommitted, for after a very painful and a very long examination of this subject the committee have done the very best they can with the proposition, and I think the Senate is competent to take the measure up and either pass it or pass some one that is better, or at least that will be more acceptable to them.

The National Board of Health—

Says section 3, from which all this trouble starts—shall make all needful rules and regulations authorized by the laws of the United States for the prevention of the introduction into, and spread within, the United States of contagious or infectious diseases, which shall be uniform, and subject to approval by the President.

It will be seen from that, Mr. President, that this Board of Health has not the plenary powers over this subject that is claimed by the Senator from Maine. These rules and regulations must be submitted to the President of the United States for his approbation, and besides that, running through several sections of the bill, as will be seen by an examination of it, the Secretary of the Treasury, as the financial officer of the Government, has supervision over all this matter himself. Therefore these rules and regulations are doubly guarded, much more so than the rules and regulations put in force every day, with which the Senator from Maine is more familiar than I am, in the different parts of the United States in collecting and disbursing its revenue.

More than that: as was read by the Senator from Alabama, the statute of 1799, so far as it is a health statute at all, subjects your health officers now to thirty-eight different sets of rules and regulations, if all the different States have what are called quarantine laws and rules and regulations prescribed under them. We preferred in the committee to make this uniform, to make it certain, and to place it beyond all dispute.

If the National Health Board are not the proper parties to do this duty, if that fact has been discovered by the Senator from Maine, he owes it to himself, to the Senate, to the committee, and to the great measure that we have here, to propose some set of persons who are better qualified for the duty.

But the objection does not hold for another reason. The Senator from Maine says that there is no notice to these vessels. Section 6 provides for the publication of the rules and regulations; that they shall be published and promulgated; and nobody is taken unaware. No vessel can be accused of being seized innocently so far as the vessel is concerned; and every proper opportunity is afforded that the owners and masters of vessels shall know these rules and regulations.

In the commercial regulations of the country we know that the President has vast powers. We know that the Secretary of the Treasury has vast powers as to approving and putting in force those rules and regulations. I say to the Senator from Maine, and to any other Senator agreeing with him, that this is not the proper place to frame what he calls a code of rules and regulations to enforce this measure. The committee for a purpose fixed the duty upon the Board of Health, subject to these two approvals, in order to have some certain and some essential power to do this work, and not have them itinerating all over the country to see every corps of State officers that might be established here and there in order to set up the necessary rules and regulations.

Mr. MORGAN. Would it disturb the Senator if I should interrupt him?

Mr. GARLAND. Certainly not.

Mr. MORGAN. I ask the Senator whether, in his opinion, after this bill has become a law the adoption of the rules and regulations provided for in the section from which he has just read would repeal the State laws on the subject of health quarantine where they came in conflict?

Mr. GARLAND. I can answer the question without any difficulty so far as my own judgment goes. The bill was framed by the committee for a purpose—to have one general system of quarantine in this country, to prevent if possible the terrible scourges from which the country has so recently suffered. The inquiry propounded by the Senator from Alabama goes to the very center of the whole question. The committee claim that in establishing this system of national quarantine, except as affecting the health of the State proper, the State health laws must give way under the system; and that raises the very question at the foundation of the whole matter, which I suppose the Senate is not ready to go into a discussion of to-day; but of course the committee expected to meet it before the Senate shall have finished the consideration of the bill.

That I may not be misunderstood, let me say that if Congress will legislate upon the subject at all it can legislate upon it entirely; it can take charge of it, except so far as the health regulations of the State affect the people of the State within the territory of that State. If the Senate determine that the committee is wrong as to this proposition, the amendment of the Senator from Alabama of course will meet with my approbation, for I want to do, as the committee wants to do, the best thing that can be done now, and if we cannot do just what we desire we are willing to do the next best thing. But if the Senate sustains the committee in its view of the proposition lying at the bottom of this question, the amendment of the Senator from Alabama, as I think he will see at once, will be unnecessary and of course will be in conflict with the bill, for the question must be met; if you are to have a national quarantine it must be a national one, and the State health laws conflicting with that, except so far as its own territory is concerned, must give way. That is the theory upon which we proceed.

The Senator from New York read from the statute of 1878 the last little health act which we passed in the last days of a session; the Senator from Alabama read the act of 1799, and we are living under twenty or more different rules and regulations in the country in reference to this matter.

To go back to the proposition upon which I was commenting when the Senator from Alabama asked me a question, section 7 of the bill provides:

> That it shall be the duty of the National Board of Health, so far as it may, in the execution of the powers conferred upon it by law, to invite the co-operation of, and to correspond and co-operate with, local sanitary officers, boards, and authorities, acting under the laws of the States, in sanitary measures, to prevent the introduction and spread of contagious and infectious diseases from foreign countries into the United States, &c.

That is a recognition of the local boards, of the State laws, and of the State rules and regulations as far as they may be consistent with the general regulations which we propose to make under the action of this Board of Health; but where they conflict with them, if they affect merely the State in which they operate, of course the Board of Health will have nothing to say.

The measure is based—and there is where it must stand if it stands at all—upon the right of Congress to regulate commerce with foreign countries and among the different States. If the measure cannot stand upon that proposition, it has no standing at all before the Senate and before the country. That is my answer to the question propounded by the Senator from Alabama, and that goes to the very center of this whole subject.

I would prefer as one of the committee, if such a course would suit the Senate, that we go forward with this bill and perfect it as far as possible now, and consider all these far-reaching questions as to the constitutionality of the measure and as to its widespread operation when we reach the question on the passage of the bill. Prior to that, however, on an amendment which may be offered by the Senator from Alabama, that discussion may be forced on us. But until some question shall be presented to raise these issues, I hope we shall not anticipate them. The committee do not desire to have the bill recommitted. I believe I can speak for the committee when I say that we have done all in reference to the measure that we are capable of doing, with the best lights that we had before us.

Mr. MORGAN. The Senator from Arkansas has somewhat elaborately presented his views and those of the committee on this bill, and I ought to say to him that I have intended to offer an additional amendment limiting the operation of this bill to a period of four years, trying this as an experiment and confining it at all events to that period of time.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, it seems to me that the Senate must determine the general principle upon which this bill is to go before undertaking to perfect its mechanism, because a bill to accomplish one object will require a very different local arrangement and very different machinery from that to accomplish another object. Now, what I suppose the country wants, what I suppose the committee principally want, is some measure that will prevent the spread of a single scourge, which has in the past, during the last year especially, afflicted one section of the country, to wit, the yellow fever. It is desirable to prevent the introduction of yellow fever from abroad, so far as it can be prevented by sanitary measures, and its spread, if introduced from abroad, from one State into another; and it will undoubtedly be found convenient in any mechanism provided for that purpose to include other disorders, like the cholera, which pass rapidly at stated periods over the surface of the globe and then disappear and go from country to country to spread and to be traced and measured. But this bill goes very much further than that. It puts into the power of a board of doctors, a board not containing a single lawyer, a board not containing a single merchant——

Mr. HARRIS. Will the Senator allow me to suggest to him a fact he has overlooked?

Mr. HOAR. I am told there is one lawyer.

Mr. HARRIS. The Department of Justice is represented upon the Board of Health.

Mr. HOAR. One lawyer; but a board, the large preponderance of which, the only persons whose sole official duties are to deal with the subjects named in this bill, are doctors; and everybody knows that physicians clothed with quarantine powers will expand those powers to the utmost. I do not believe I am uttering anything which is opposed to the common experience and information of observing men, when I say that more discomfort, more injury, more sickness even has been occasioned in the course of the last century to mankind by quarantine regulations than would have been by any disease which these quarantine regulations would have stopped.

That being the case, what do this committee undertake to do by this bill? They undertake to deal with the whole country, not merely those parts of the country where such diseases spread usually; they undertake to extend the power of this quarantine board to every kind of contagious disorder whatever—diphtheria, scarlet fever, any disease of infants or grown persons, of men or women, which may be communicated by contagion. These doctors are to have these vast national powers put in their hands to deal with.

The Senator from Maine [Mr. HAMLIN] and the Senator from New York on the other side of the Chamber [Mr. KERNAN] spoke of the power over foreign commerce which the bill gives; but the bill does not stop with putting foreign commerce into the power of this tribunal. All communication between New York and Jersey City, all communication between the two parts of the city of Fall River that lie on different sides of State lines, all communication between Boston and Providence, Philadelphia and Trenton, Boston and Portland, every communication by stage, omnibus, ferry-boat, or of any other kind, between the most compact portion of the settlements in this country is to be removed, so far as is necessary in the opinion of this board to prevent contagious diseases, from the local authority and exercised hereafter by a board of physicians sitting at Washington; and that proposition comes from the quarter where State rights and local self-government are supposed to be chiefly and principally cherished. Now, it seems to me the Senate must settle, before it provides its machinery, whether it proposes to do that thing or not.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President, whoever objects to this bill or to a bill on this subject must feel himself awkward and constrained if he also feels, as I am sure every Senator does, earnestly inclined to vote for anything likely to prevent or mitigate the scourge against which this measure is aimed; and therefore I feel—no doubt other Senators have felt—the ungraciousness of seeming to resist a measure so well intended. And yet, regarding the sanitary purpose alone, discarding entirely the consequences to commerce, and confining the view to the effect to be produced in the present season alone, I should speak uncandidly did I not say that I should hesitate then to vote for this bill.

I know, Mr. President, the great difficulty under which the committee has labored, a difficulty which illustrates the features and as I think the wisdom of the Constitution of the United States. The committee has invoked, has been compelled to invoke the vagrant clause of the Constitution, as it is called, the right of Congress to regulate commerce, commerce—it is material to exercise and emphasize that word for my meaning—with foreign nations and among the several States. They have no provision of the Constitution under which to proceed aimed at sanitary regulations, but regulations of commerce are those to which they were compelled to resort. I observed that some Senator mentioned that the committee had dealt not with a part of the country, but with the whole country. Yes, and because proceeding under this provision they were so compelled to embrace the whole country:

> No preference shall be given by any regulation of commerce or revenue to the ports of one State over those of another.

When you consider commerce alone, the aptitude and reasonableness of that ordinance is very manifest; but when, under the commercial clause, you attempt to deal with diseases endemic, depending largely upon latitude and location, you have invoked an inconvenient, a rigorous, I will not say an impossible in the sense of convenience, provision of the Constitution. Very early and in a very famous case which grew out of the attempt of the pioneers in steam navigation to navigate the Hudson River and out of regulations which Connecticut and New York attempted to establish, a judgment was given by the Supreme Court, Chief-Justice Marshall being the organ of the court, which dealt with and distinguished between the faculty of this provision of the Constitution when exerting itself upon commerce and commercial regulations and when applied or an attempt was made to apply it to kindred considerations, pilot laws, health laws, inspection laws, and other instances of like kind. The court held, (and in a much more recent case, that of Cooley vs. The Port Wardens of the port of Philadelphia, the decision was followed,) that although the commercial clause of the Constitution did take from the States the power of commercial regulation, although it does occupy the ground and draw to itself and repose in Congress all the power which it speaks for, yet a vast residuum of power occupying the same domain covered by this bill had been left, and appropriately left, to the several States. Judge Marshall called them "police powers," the power to establish ferries, the power to build bridges. He did not say in so many words the power to build bridges, but his successors have inferred that he included that power; but he did speak of pilot laws, of health laws, of inspection laws, and so on, and termed them "police powers" properly left to the States to be exercised by the States, certainly in the absence of congressional interference.

Proceeding under this view, in the State of New York for one—I speak of that State not because in reference to a topic like this I would speak for one State more than another, but only because I am better acquainted with the facts to which I mean to refer—in the State of New York, among other police regulations to facilitate commerce, to protect health, to guard all the included interests concerned in the port of New York, a quarantine establishment has been founded and perfected. More than a million and a half dollars have been expended upon it. I am told that it is regarded not only by scientific but by sea-going men as the model establishment of its kind on the globe. There has been no year in recent years when yellow fever has been absent always from the harbor and the bay of New York. It is always there; but so thorough, so perfect are the modes and the instrumentalities of dealing with it that I am told that never in a single case has it advanced beyond the shores or reached the shores, coming from the sea. The honorable Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] cannot wish, I know he does not wish anything more effectual there in this regard than already exists. But proceeding under the commercial clause of the Constitution, commanded and compelled to deal with all parts of the country share and share alike when establishing regulations of commerce, that port as much as New Orleans or Mobile falls within the reach and disposition of this bill.

I said, Mr. President, that I should hesitate, looking at sanitary results alone, without further instruction, to vote for the pending measure; and I recur to it again to explain. It is now the first of May. The hot season is here. Everywhere, from the Saint Lawrence to the Gulf, in a very few weeks it will be as hot as it will be at any time during the summer. We are, therefore, in the immediate presence of the threatened calamity. The small-pox is raging in South America and in the West Indies; the plague ravages Russia; and the yellow fever is hovering about still nearer. What is the proposition? That not for next year, not for some future time, not after an interval of preparation and adjustment, but forthwith, instantly, an abrupt and radical change shall be made, a change of responsibility, a change of accountability, a change of methods, a change of the blanks and forms by which this business is to be carried on, new requisitions, unaccustomed conditions. And that to apply not only to all sea-going vessels, not only to all coastwise vessels, but, as has been said, I think truly, under this bill, to all vehicles whatsoever, however trivial or exceptional, by which merchandise, traffic, commerce is carried or may be carried across State lines. The Erie Canal which traverses the State of New York from Lake Erie to the Hudson is a continuous channel, receptive of other channels both by land and by sea, and the continuous artery of which that canal is a part overpasses many State lines; so that it, the railways, the ferries, the innumerable instances of carriage and transportation all over the country are to be immediately subjected to national scrutiny and that by modes untried and unknown.

Dealing still for a moment only with the sanitary quality of the measure, are Senators sure it is wise? Suppose it should occur at the single port of which I know most that the existing regulations, ample and sufficient because proved to be so over and over again, being superseded by novel modes, yellow fever should find its way into that port where the ships of all nationalities come to ride at anchor; suppose a plague, more cogently I might inquire suppose the small-pox, prevalent now in the West Indies (from which flotillas come all the time bringing fruit and other merchandise) should be brought in, not in an exceptional case, but in many cases, and the other infectious or contagious disorders to which reference is made, what then?

Mr. President, that is one aspect of this case. Another is that to which the Senator from Maine spoke with so much force, and to which other Senators have addressed themselves. I should be sorry to give a political turn, even in the largest and highest sense of the term "political," to a debate upon such a measure. I trust I shall not be misunderstood, however, if I say this much: Centralization and the tendency to centralization of power in Congress and in the National Government finds few theaters in the Constitution for illustration and for possibility so good as the commercial clause now in question. I venture to ask Senators who do not hold the political faith which I hold, who regard as more limited than I have been taught to regard them the attributes and powers of the National Government, whether it is safe, more especially whether it is wise, until we are satisfied that the necessity is absolute, to establish a precedent a cannon-shot beyond the frontiers of any actually exerted power under this provision?

This is an emergency; it appeals to all; but emergencies do not measure power; at least they do not measure representative and constitutional power. No court would ever hold null an act of Congress because the Congress which enacted it mismeasured, overrated, or underrated the inducements for enacting it. The Constitution, the charter, the source of legislative power, remains the same all the time. It neither contracts by cold nor expands by heat. If now we hold that, for the purpose of fighting a dread disease national authority may pragmatically investigate, grasp, legally dispose of all the topics embraced in this bill and all identical topics, I ask Senators whether we do not put our fingers between the belt and the wheel, and whether in progress of time we shall not be wholly drawn in? Where is the frontier of power discoverable in this bill? This is to be done:

In respect to all vessels and vehicles engaged in commerce with foreign nations and among the several States, whether by land or water.

That is very capacious language, and if it be competent, if we are authorized, without even being able to plead commercial reasons, but upon allegations of sanitary reasons or any other reasons dehors the very gravamen of the section of the Constitution itself, to wit, commerce, if we can go beyond commercial inducements and exert powers like these, I hope the honorable Senator from Arkansas [Mr. GARLAND] whose attainments as a lawyer I respect, or the honorable Senator from Tennessee, [Mr. HARRIS,] who is equally competent, or some other Senator will at some time do me the favor to denote and point out distinctions, demarcations, landmarks, for I confess on reading this bill I have great difficulty in discovering them.

Now, Mr. President, my fear is, as I have perhaps quite sufficiently indicated already, first that somewhat in haste should this bill pass we are to try a rash experiment, and more upon conjecture and hope and expectation than upon any solid ground of forecast; second, that we are to do that which may inflict very large injury upon the commerce of the country, not in one quarter of the country more than in another, except so far as one section of the country may be more largely than another engaged in it; and further that we are to put upon the statute-book an affirmation of power in respect of subjects like these which will require hereafter to be denied and disowned or which will be an authority drawing to Congress almost any conceivable scheme of legislation which is connected with commerce on the land or on the sea between ourselves and foreign powers or between the States of the Union.

I shall vote for the motion made by the Senator from Maine, [Mr. HAMLIN,] because I cannot doubt that a committee of Senators so able as this, after hearing such suggestions, (not very accurate, I suppose I may say without impropriety,) as have been made on the spur of the moment, can produce something which will avoid, measurably at least, the more conspicuous objections to be found to this bill.

Mr. GARLAND. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator from New York before he takes his seat where the decision of Chief-Justice Marshall to which he refers is. Is it in 9 Wheaton, the case of Gibbons vs. Ogden?

Mr. CONKLING. Yes, sir, that is the case.

Mr. GARLAND. The Senator from New York suggests that he will vote for the motion to recommit. The motion to recommit, as submitted to the Senate now, is with instructions to the committee to report a code of rules and regulations. That does not raise, if I understand the purport of the motion, the constitutional question presented by the Senator from New York.

Mr. CONKLING. If my honorable friend will pardon me, that depends entirely upon what those instructions shall be. If they are instructions to eradicate, to tear up by the roots the establishments of the States, they will no doubt leave the whole question of the power and the expediency of its exercise which I have ventured to suggest; but if on the contrary they be instructions prepared in the spirit of the amendment indicated by the honorable Senator from Alabama they will certainly avoid partly, if they do not wholly, the objections that I have suggested.

Mr. GARLAND. The Senator from New York now makes two different questions. As I stated before, the amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama or which he intends to offer goes to the very center of this whole question; and of course if the Senate favors that this bill, so to speak, is eviscerated; there is nothing left of it. But the motion to recommit by the Senator from Maine, with instructions, arose under his view of section 3 of the bill as to the mere regulations to be prepared and submitted by the Board of Health to the President for his approval, and to be enforced if he does approve. So there are two distinct questions. We wish, of course, the Senate to determine before the bill goes back to the committee whether the general aspect of this bill is going to be received favorably by the Senate.

Mr. CONKLING. I dislike to interrupt the Senator again.

Mr. GARLAND. It is no interruption.

Mr. CONKLING. The Senator does not understand section 3 as I understand it, which certainly raises a reasonable inference that I am wrong——

Mr. GARLAND. Oh, no.

Mr. CONKLING. Therefore I will, by permission of the Senator, read it:

The National Board of Health shall make all needful rules and regulations authorized by the laws of the United States for the prevention of the introduction into, and spread within, the United States of contagious or infectious diseases, which—

That is which regulations and rules—shall be uniform, and subject to approval by the President,— and shall be charged—

Now—

Not the rules shall be charged, but the board shall be charged—with the execution of the same, and of the provisions of this act and all other laws of the United States for the prevention of the introduction and spread of contagious or infectious diseases, and all quarantine regulations established under the authority of said laws in respect to all vessels and vehicles engaged in commerce with foreign nations and among the several States, whether by land or water.

I need not remind the Senator from Arkansas that should this act be passed and be a competent act—I mean thereby in the language of the Constitution, an act passed in pursuance of this Constitution.—

it is the supreme law of the land, anything in the statutes of the States to the contrary notwithstanding, and, therefore, I submit to him that under this section this is very overriding and all-occupying power.

Mr. GARLAND. The speech the Senator from New York has just made enlarges upon the motion as well as the suggestions made by the Senator from Maine. If he laps over the suggestion made by the Senator from Maine and runs into the question of the constitutionality of the act as distinguished from mere rules and regulations by which the act is to be enforced, as a matter of course that is submitting a different proposition, a different question for the consideration of the Senate. But I see, from the various statements made, and especially from the suggestions of the Senator from New York, that the question on which this whole measure is based as to the power of Congress to make laws, as this bill purports to do, regulating the quarantine, the health of the country, as between the States, has to be met, and must be met in advance. To be a little more specific, if the Senate rules against the idea of the committee in its instructions, when this measure goes back the bill will have to be recast entirely.

In response to the question of the Senator from New York as to showing him the dividing line in this measure, or where the frontier of power is, as he expressed it, I believe that can be done; and if I had not thought so, not only to the satisfaction of the Senator from New York, but of a majority of the Senators, I would not have agreed to report this measure. I think we can show that from the case to which he referred, from the very language of that decision, to say nothing of the many cases that have been decided since in which this question has probably come before the Supreme Court more directly than it did in that case. But we do not propose to enter into that question now. I wish the Senate would dispose of this great leading question first, that it may be debated properly and the Senate pass upon it before any action is had on the motion to recommit.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After seventeen minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at four o'clock p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, April 30, 1879.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. P. HARRISON, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

Mr. ACKLEN. I call for the regular order.

VETO OF ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States:

To the House of Representatives:

I have maturely considered the important questions presented by the bill entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes," and I now return it to the House of Representatives, in which it originated, with my objections to its approval.

The bill provides in the usual form for the appropriations required for the support of the Army during the next fiscal year. If it contained no other provisions, it would receive my prompt approval. It includes, however, further legislation, which, attached as it is to appropriations which are requisite for the efficient performance of some of the most necessary duties of the Government, involves questions of the gravest character. The sixth section of the bill is amendatory of the statute now in force in regard to the authority of persons in the civil, military, and naval service of the United States "at the place where any general or special election is held in any State." This statute was adopted February 25, 1865, after a protracted debate in the Senate, and almost without opposition in the House of Representatives, by the concurrent votes of both of the leading political parties of the country, and became a law by the approval of President Lincoln. It was re-enacted in 1874 in the Revised Statutes of the United States, sections 2002 and 5528, which are as follows:

SEC. 2002. No military or naval officer, or other person engaged in the civil, military, or naval service of the United States, shall order, bring, keep, or have under his authority or control, any troops or armed men at the place where any general or special election is held in any State, unless it be necessary to repel the armed enemies of the United States, or to keep the peace at the polls.

SEC. 5528. Every officer of the Army or Navy, or other person in the civil, military, or naval service of the United States, who orders, brings, keeps, or has under his authority or control, any troops or armed men at any place where a general or special election is held in any State, unless such force be necessary to repel armed enemies of the United States or to keep the peace at the polls, shall be fined not more than $5,000, and suffer imprisonment at hard labor not less than three months nor more than five years.

The amendment proposed to this statute, in the bill before me, omits from both of the foregoing sections the words "or to keep the peace at the polls." The effect of the adoption of this amendment may be considered—

First. Upon the right of the United States Government to use military force to keep the peace at the elections for members of Congress; and—

Second. Upon the right of the Government, by civil authority, to protect these elections from violence and fraud.

In addition to the sections of the statutes above quoted, the following provisions of law relating to the use of the military power at the elections are now in force:

SEC. 2003. No officer of the Army or Navy of the United States shall prescribe or fix, or attempt to prescribe or fix, by proclamation, order, or otherwise, the qualifications of voters in any State, or in any manner interfere with the freedom of any election in any State, or with the exercise of the free right of suffrage in any State.

SEC. 5529. Every officer or other person in the military or naval service who, by force, threat, intimidation, order, advice, or otherwise, prevents, or attempts to prevent, any qualified voter of any State from freely exercising the right of suffrage at any general or special election in such State, shall be fined not more than $5,000, and imprisoned at hard labor not more than five years.

SEC. 5530. Every officer of the Army or Navy who prescribes or fixes, or attempts to prescribe or fix, whether by proclamation, order, or otherwise, the qualifications of voters at any election in any State, shall be punished as provided in the preceding section.

SEC. 5531. Every officer or other person in the military or naval service who, by force, threat, intimidation, order, or otherwise, compels, or attempts to compel, any officer holding an election in any State to receive a vote from a person not legally qualified to vote, or who imposes, or attempts to impose, any regulations for conducting any general or special election in a State different from those prescribed by law, or who interferes in any manner with any officer of an election in the discharge of his duty, shall be punished as provided in section 5529.

SEC. 5532. Every person convicted of any of the offenses specified in the five preceding sections, shall, in addition to the punishments therein severally prescribed, be disqualified from holding any office of honor, profit, or trust under the United States; but nothing in those sections shall be construed to prevent any officer, soldier, sailor, or marine from exercising the right of suffrage in any election district to which he may belong, if otherwise qualified according to the laws of the State in which he offers to vote.

The foregoing enactments would seem to be sufficient to prevent military interference with the elections. But the last Congress, to remove all apprehension of such interference, added to this body of law section 15 of an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1879, and for other purposes," approved June 18, 1878, which is as follows:

SEC. 15. From and after the passage of this act it shall not be lawful to employ any part of the Army of the United States, as a posse comitatus or otherwise, for the purpose of executing the laws, except in such cases and under such circumstances as such employment of said force may be expressly authorized by the Constitution or by act of Congress; and no money appropriated by this act shall be used to pay any of the expenses incurred in the employment of any troops in violation of this section, and any person willfully violating the provisions of this section shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be punished by fine not exceeding $10,000 or imprisonment not exceeding two years, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

This act passed the Senate, after full consideration, without a single vote recorded against it on its final passage, and, by a majority of more than two-thirds, it was concurred in by the House of Representatives.

The purpose of the section quoted was stated in the Senate by one of its supporters, as follows:

Therefore I hope, without getting into any controversy about the past, but acting wisely for the future, that we shall take away the idea that the Army can be used by a general or special deputy marshal, or any marshal, merely for election purposes as a posse, ordering them about the polls or ordering them anywhere else, when there is no election going on to prevent disorders or to suppress disturbances that should be suppressed by the peace officers of the State, or if they must bring others to their aid they should summon the unorganized citizens and not summon the officers and men of the Army as a posse comitatus to quell disorders and thus get up a feeling which will be disastrous to peace among the people of the country.

In the House of Representatives the object of the act of 1878 was stated by the gentleman who had it in charge in similar terms. He said:

But these are all minor points and insignificant questions compared with the great principle which was incorporated by the House in the bill in reference to the use of the Army in time of peace. The Senate had already conceded what they called, and what we might accept, as the principle, but they had stricken out the penalty, and had stricken out the word "expressly," so that the Army might be used in all cases where implied authority might be inferred. The House committee planted themselves firmly upon the doctrine that rather than yield this fundamental principle, for which for three years this House had struggled, they would allow the bill to fail, notwithstanding the reforms which we had secured, regarding these reforms as of but little consequence alongside the great principle that the Army of the United States, in time of peace, should be under the control of Congress and obedient to its laws. After a long and protracted negotiation, the Senate committee have conceded that principle in all its length and breadth, including the penalty, which the Senate had stricken out. We bring you back, therefore, a report with the alteration of a single word, which the lawyers assure me is proper to be made, restoring to this bill the principle for which we have contended so long and which is so vital to secure the rights and liberties of the people.

* * * * * * *

Thus have we this day secured to the people of this country the same great protection against a standing army which cost a struggle of two hundred years for the Commons of England to secure for the British people.

From this brief review of the subject it sufficiently appears that under existing laws there can be no military interference with the elections. No case of such interference has, in fact, occurred since the passage of the act last referred to. No soldier of the United States has appeared under orders at any place of election in any State. No complaint even of the presence of United States troops has been made in any quarter. It may therefore be confidently stated that there is no necessity for the enactment of section 6 of the bill before me to prevent military interference with the elections. The laws already in force are all that is required for that end.

But that part of section 6 of this bill which is significant and vitally important is the clause which, if adopted, will deprive the civil authorities of the United States of all power to keep the peace at the congressional elections. The congressional elections in every district, in a very important sense, are justly a matter of political interest and concern throughout the whole country. Each State, every political party, is entitled to the share of power which is conferred by the legal and constitutional suffrage. It is the right of every citizen possessing the qualifications prescribed by law to cast one unintimidated ballot and to have his ballot honestly counted. So long as the exercise of this power and the enjoyment of this right are common and equal, practically as well as formally, submission to the results of the suffrage will be accorded loyally and cheerfully, and all the departments of Government will feel the true vigor of the popular will thus expressed.

Two provisions of the Constitution authorize legislation by Congress for the regulation of the congressional elections.

Section 4 of article 1 of the Constitution declares:

> The times, places, and manner of holding elections for Senators and Representatives shall be prescribed in each State by the Legislature thereof; but the Congress may at any time by law make or alter such regulations, except as to the places of choosing Senators.

The fifteenth amendment of the Constitution is as follows:

> SECTION 1. The right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude.
> SEC. 2. The Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.

The Supreme Court has held that this amendment invests the citizens of the United States with a new constitutional right which is within the protecting power of Congress. That right the court declares to be exemption from discrimination in the exercise of the elective franchise on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude. The power of Congress to protect this right by appropriate legislation is expressly affirmed by the court.

National legislation to provide safeguards for free and honest elections is necessary, as experience has shown, not only to secure the right to vote to the enfranchised race at the South, but also to prevent fraudulent voting in the large cities of the North. Congress has, therefore, exercised the power conferred by the Constitution, and has enacted certain laws to prevent discriminations on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude, and to punish fraud, violence, and intimidation at Federal elections. Attention is called to the following sections of the Revised Statutes of the United States, namely:

Section 2004, which guarantees to all citizens the right to vote without distinction on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude.

Sections 2005 and 2006, which guarantee to all citizens equal opportunity, without discrimination, to perform all the acts required by law as a prerequisite or qualification for voting.

Section 2022, which authorizes the United States marshal and his deputies to keep the peace and preserve order at the Federal elections.

Section 2024, which expressly authorizes the United States marshal and his deputies to summon a posse comitatus whenever they or any of them are forcibly resisted in the execution of their duties under the law, or are prevented from executing such duties by violence.

Section 5522, which provides for the punishment of the crime of interfering with the supervisors of elections and deputy marshals in the discharge of their duties at the elections of Representatives in Congress.

These are some of the laws on this subject which it is the duty of the executive department of the Government to enforce. The intent and effect of the sixth section of this bill is to prohibit all the civil officers of the United States, under penalty of fine and imprisonment, from employing any adequate civil force for this purpose at the place where their enforcement is most necessary, namely, at the places where the congressional elections are held. Among the most valuable enactments to which I have referred are those which protect the supervisors of Federal elections in the discharge of their duties at the polls. If the proposed legislation should become the law there will be no power vested in any officer of the Government to protect from violence the officers of the United States engaged in the discharge of their duties. Their rights and duties under the law will remain, but the National Government will be powerless to enforce its own statutes. The States may employ both military and civil power to keep the peace, and to enforce the laws at State elections. It is now proposed to deny to the United States even the necessary civil authority to protect the national elections. No sufficient reason has been given for this discrimination in favor of the State and against the national authority. If well-founded objections exist against the present national election laws, all good citizens should unite in their amendment. The laws providing the safeguards of the elections should be impartial, just, and efficient. They should, if possible, be so nonpartisan and fair in their operation that the minority—the party out of power—will have no just grounds to complain. The present laws have, in practice, unquestionably conduced to the prevention of fraud and violence at the elections. In several of the States members of different political parties have applied for the safeguards which they furnish. It is the right and duty of the National Government to enact and enforce laws which will secure free and fair congressional elections. The laws now in force should not be repealed, except in connection with the enactment of measures which will better accomplish that important end. Believing that section 6 of the bill before me will weaken, if it does not altogether take away, the power of the National Government to protect the Federal elections by the civil authorities, I am forced to the conclusion that it ought not to receive my approval.

This section is, however, not presented to me as a separate and independent measure, but is, as has been stated, attached to the bill making the usual annual appropriations for the support of the Army. It makes a vital change in the election laws of the country, which is in no way connected with the use of the Army. It prohibits, under heavy penalties, any person engaged in the civil service of the United States from having any force at the place of any election prepared to preserve order, to make arrests, to keep the peace, or in any manner to enforce the laws. This is altogether foreign to the purpose of an Army appropriation bill. The practice of tacking to appropriation bills measures not pertinent to such bills did not prevail until more than forty years after the adoption of the Constitution. It has become a common practice. All parties when in power have adopted it. Many abuses and great waste of public money have in this way crept into appropriation bills. The public opinion of the country is against it. The States which have recently adopted constitutions have generally provided a remedy for the evil by enacting that no law shall contain more than one subject, which shall be plainly expressed in its title. The constitutions of more than half of the States contain substantially this provision. The public welfare will be promoted in many ways by a return to the early practice of the Government, and to the true principle of legislation, which requires that every measure shall stand or fall according to its own merits. If it were understood that to attach to an appropriation bill a measure irrelevant to the general object of the bill would imperil and probably prevent its final passage and approval, a valuable reform in the parliamentary practice of Congress would be accomplished. The best justification that has been offered for attaching irrelevant riders to appropriation bills is that it is done for convenience' sake, to facilitate the passage of measures which are deemed expedient by all the branches of government which participate in legislation. It cannot be claimed that there is any such reason for attaching this amendment of the election laws to the Army appropriation bill. The history of the measure contradicts this assumption. A majority of the House of Representatives in the last Congress was in favor of section 6 of this bill. It was known that a majority of the Senate was opposed to it, and that as a separate measure it could not be adopted. It was attached to the Army appropriation bill to compel the Senate to assent to it. It was plainly announced to the Senate that the Army appropriation bill would not be allowed to pass unless the proposed amendments of the election laws were adopted with it. The Senate refused to assent to the bill on account of this irrelevant section. Congress thereupon adjourned without passing an appropriation bill for the Army, and the present extra session of the Forty-sixth Congress became necessary to furnish the means to carry on the Government.

The ground upon which the action of the House of Representatives is defended has been distinctly stated by many of its advocates. A week before the close of the last session of Congress the doctrine in question was stated by one of its ablest defenders, as follows:

> It is our duty to repeal these laws. It is not worth while to attempt the repeal except upon an appropriation bill. The republican Senate would not agree to, nor the republican President sign, a bill for such a repeal. Whatever objection to legislation upon appropriation bills may be made in ordinary cases does not apply where free elections and the liberty of the citizens are concerned. * * * We have the power to vote money; let us annex conditions to it, and insist upon the redress of grievances.

By another distinguished member of the House it was said:

> The right of the Representatives of the people to withhold supplies is as old as English liberty. History records numerous instances where the Commons, feeling that the people were oppressed by laws that the Lords would not consent to repeal by the ordinary methods of legislation, obtained redress at last by refusing appropriations unless accompanied by relief measures.

That a question of the gravest magnitude, and new in this country, was raised by this course of proceeding, was fully recognized also by its defenders in the Senate. It was said by a distinguished Senator:

> Perhaps no greater question, in the form we are brought to consider it, was ever considered by the American Congress in time of peace; for it involves not merely the merits or demerits of the laws which the House bill proposes to repeal, but involves the rights, the privileges, the powers, the duties of the two branches of Congress and of the President of the United States. It is a vast question; it is a question whose importance can scarcely be estimated; it is a question that never yet has been brought so sharply before the American Congress and the American people as it may be now. It is a question which, sooner or later, must be decided, and the decision must determine what are the powers of the House of Representatives under the Constitution, and what is the duty of that House in the view of the framers of that Constitution according to its letter and its spirit.
>
> Mr. President, I should approach this question, if I were in the best possible condition to speak and to argue it, with very grave diffidence, and certainly with the utmost anxiety, for no one can think of it as long and as carefully as I have thought of it without seeing that we are at the beginning, perhaps of a struggle that may last as long in this country as a similar struggle lasted in what we are accustomed to call the mother land. There the struggle lasted for two centuries before it was ultimately decided. It is not likely to last so long here, but it may last until every man in this Chamber is in his grave. It is the question whether or no the House of Representatives has a right to say, "We will grant supplies only upon condition that grievances are redressed. We are the representatives of the tax-payers of the Republic; we, the House of Representatives, alone have the right to originate money bills; we the House of Representatives have alone the right to originate bills which grant the money of the people; the Senate represents States: we represent the tax-payers of the Republic; we, therefore, by the very terms of the Constitution, are charged with the duty of originating the bills which grant the money of the people. We claim the right, which the House of Commons in England established after two centuries of contest, to say that we will not grant the money of the people unless there is a redress of grievances."

Upon the assembling of this Congress, in pursuance of a call for an extra session, which was made necessary by the failure of the Forty-fifth Congress to make the needful appropriations for the support of the Government, the question was presented whether the attempt made in the last Congress to ingraft, by construction, a new principle upon the Constitution should be persisted in or not. This Congress has ample opportunity and time to pass the appropriation bills, and also to enact any political measures which may be determined upon in separate bills by the usual and orderly methods of proceeding. But the majority of both Houses have deemed it wise to adhere to the principles asserted and maintained in the last Congress by the majority of the House of Representatives. That principle is that the House of Representatives has the sole right to originate bills for raising revenue, and therefore has the right to withhold appropriations upon which the existence of the Government may depend, unless the Senate and the President shall give their assent to any legislation which the House may see fit to attach to appropriation bills. To establish this principle is to make a radical, dangerous, and unconstitutional change in the character of our institutions. The various Departments of the Government, and the Army and the Navy, are established by the Constitution, or by laws passed in pursuance thereof. Their duties are clearly defined, and their support is carefully provided for by law. The money required for this purpose has been collected from the people, and is now in the Treasury ready to be paid out as soon as the appropriation bills are passed. Whether appropriations are made or not, the collection of the taxes will go on. The public money will accumulate in the Treasury. It was not the intention of the framers of the Constitution that any single branch of the Government should have the power to dictate conditions upon which this treasure should be applied to the purposes for which it was collected. Any such intention, if it had been entertained, would have been plainly expressed in the Constitution.

That a majority of the Senate now concurs in the claim of the House adds to the gravity of the situation, but does not alter the question at issue. The new doctrine, if maintained, will result in a consolidation of unchecked and despotic power in the House of Representatives. A bare majority of the House will become the Government. The Executive will no longer be what the framers of the Constitution intended, an equal and independent branch of the Government. It is clearly the constitutional duty of the President to exercise his discretion and judgment upon all bills presented to him without constraint or duress from any other branch of the Government. To say that a majority of either or both of the Houses of Congress may insist upon the approval of a bill under the penalty of stopping all of the operations of the Government for want of the necessary supplies, is to deny to the Executive that share of the legislative power which is plainly conferred by the second section of the seventh article of the Constitution. It strikes from the Constitution the qualified negative of the President. It is said that this should be done because it is the peculiar function of the House of Representatives to represent the will of the people. But no single branch or department of the Government has exclusive authority to speak for the American people. The most authentic and solemn expression of their will is contained in the Constitution of the United States. By that Constitution they have ordained and established a government whose powers are distributed among co-ordinate branches, which, as far as possible, consistently with a harmonious co-operation, are absolutely independent of each other. The people of this country are unwilling to see the supremacy of the Constitution replaced by the omnipotence of any one department of the Government.

The enactment of this bill into a law will establish a precedent which will tend to destroy the equal independence of the several branches of the Government. Its principle places not merely the Senate and the Executive, but the judiciary also, under the coercive dictation of the House. The House alone will be the judge of what constitutes a grievance, and also of the means and measure of redress. An act of Congress to protect elections is now the grievance complained of. But the House may, on the same principle, determine that any other act of Congress, a treaty made by the President with the advice and consent of the Senate, a nomination or appointment to office, or that a decision or opinion of the Supreme Court is a grievance, and that the measure of redress is to withhold the appropriations required for the support of the offending branch of the Government.

Believing that this bill is a dangerous violation of the spirit and meaning of the Constitution, I am compelled to return it to the House in which it originated without my approval. The qualified negative with which the Constitution invests the President is a trust that involves a duty which he cannot decline to perform. With a firm and conscientious purpose to do what I can to preserve, unimpaired, the constitutional powers and equal independence, not merely of the Executive, but of every branch of the Government, which will be imperiled by the adoption of the principle of this bill, I desire earnestly to urge upon the House of Representatives a return to the wise and wholesome usage of the earlier days of the Republic, which excluded from appropriation bills all irrelevant legislation. By this course you will inaugurate an important reform in the method of congressional legislation; your action will be in harmony with the fundamental principles of the Constitution and the patriotic sentiment of nationality which is their firm support; and you will restore to the country that feeling of confidence and security and the repose which are so essential to the prosperity of all of our fellow-citizens.

RUTHERFORD B. HAYES.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, April 29, 1879.

Mr. SPARKS. I offer the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the message of the President just read be entered at large on the Journal as required by the Constitution of the United States; and that the House will to-morrow proceed to consider the said message and to reconsider the bill entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes," and that said message be printed.

Mr. SPARKS. I call the previous question.

Mr. GARFIELD. I ask the gentleman to fix in his resolution the hour when the House will proceed to consider the message; for instance, after the reading of the Journal.

Mr. SPARKS. I do not think that necessary. I apprehend it will be taken up immediately after the reading of the Journal.

Mr. ACKLEN. Or after the morning hour.

Mr. SPARKS. Or perhaps after the morning hour. I insist upon the previous question.

Mr. CONGER. I desire to ask whether the word "reconsider" is the proper constitutional term to be used in reference to a bill returned by the President without his approval?

The SPEAKER. That is the very word used in the Constitution with regard to this matter.

Mr. SPARKS. It is precisely the constitutional expression.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the resolution was adopted.

Mr. SPARKS moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

EXPLANATION IN REGARD TO A VOTE.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. On last Saturday, when the vote was taken on the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, I omitted to announce that my colleague, Mr. LAY, was paired with the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. DICK; that Mr. LAY, if present, would have voted "ay," and Mr. DICK, I presume, "no."

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. I ask unanimous consent to introduce a bill for reference, by request of my colleague, Mr. LAY, who is absent, sick.

Mr. KELLEY. I object. If the bill has any merit, it will not spoil before Monday.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. I hope the gentleman will withdraw his objection. My colleague is absent, sick, and is likely to be absent for the remainder of the session.

Mr. KELLEY. If there be any merit in the bill it will keep until Monday next, when it can come in under the rules of the House.

FUNERAL OF HON. RUSH CLARK.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. BURCH, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had concurred in the resolution of the House providing for the appointment of a joint committee to take order for superintending the funeral and to escort the remains of Hon. Rush Clark, late a member of the House of Representatives from the State of Iowa, to his late residence; and that the President pro tempore had appointed Mr. KIRKWOOD, Mr. PLATT, and Mr. HEREFORD as the committee on the part of the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires, in this connection, to announce that the funeral services of Hon. Rush Clark will take place at half past six o'clock this evening, at the National Hotel, and the remains will be removed to the cars at seven o'clock. Members of this House are respectfully invited to attend and to accompany the remains to the depot.

Mr. COX. I move that the House adjourn.

ELECTION CONTEST—CURTIN VS. YOCUM.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to state that the Clerk of the House has received certain additional testimony in relation to the contested-election case of Curtin vs. Yocum, from the twentieth district of Pennsylvania, which, if there be no objection, will be referred to the Committee of Elections.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

BUSINESS OF DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. HENKLE. In the absence of the chairman of the Committee for the District of Columbia, [Mr. HUNTON,] I am directed to ask unanimous consent that next Tuesday, after two o'clock, be set apart for the reception and consideration of reports from that committee.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that yesterday, by the consent of the House, was fixed for the consideration of business from this committee, but the order was necessarily interrupted. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

Mr. KELLEY. I object.

Mr. GARFIELD. I hope the gentleman from Maryland will name Monday next after two o'clock, which will allow time for the introduction of bills; and after that I presume the consideration of District business is about the best disposition we can make of the day.

Mr. HENKLE. I shall be satisfied to accept the first day that the House shall be in session next week. We have named Tuesday, fearing that the House may not be in session on Monday.

Mr. KELLEY. And I object just for that reason. I want the House to be in session on Monday.

Mr. GARFIELD. I suggest that the gentleman from Maryland name Monday. I presume the House will sit on that day for the purpose of considering this business.

Mr. HENKLE. I modify my motion then by substituting "Monday" for "Tuesday."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland asks unanimous consent that Monday next at two o'clock be assigned for the consideration of reports from the Committee for the District of Columbia, such business to have the privileges given to it under the rules.

Mr. GARFIELD. That is fair.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection, and the order is accordingly made.

EXPENSES OF AN ELECTION CONTEST.

Mr. CALKINS presented the petition of R. H. Cain, of South Carolina, for expenses of contest as Representative of second congressional district of that State; which was referred to the Committee of Elections.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. COX. I made a motion to adjourn. I will withdraw that motion if I be permitted to offer a resolution for reference to the Committee of Accounts.

The SPEAKER. The Chair cannot take a conditional withdrawal of a motion to adjourn. If the gentleman withdraws the motion, the Chair announces the morning hour, which begins at a quarter before one o'clock. The call rests with the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. WARNER. I have a report from the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour has commenced. The Chair will recognize the gentleman immediately after the morning hour, or in all probability the gentleman's committee will be called during the morning hour.

JETTIES, ETC., AT SOUTH PASS, MISSISSIPPI RIVER.

Mr. CLYMER, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported a bill (H. R. No. 1376) making appropriations for constructing jetties and other works at South Pass, Mississippi River; which was read a first and second time.

The bill appropriates, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the requisite amount to pay all money that may become due and owing to James B. Eads and his associates, or that may become payable to said Eads, his assigns or legal representatives, in accordance with the provisions of the act approved March 3, 1875, and the acts amendatory thereof, and to continue the monthly payments in the manner and to the full extent of the amount specified in the act approved June 19, 1878, chapter 313, Statutes at Large; provided that nothing herein contained shall be held or construed as waiving or impairing any right which the United States may have under the original act hereinbefore referred to, or the several acts amendatory thereof; and provided further that nothing in this act shall be construed as making an appropriation for the payment of the $1,000,000 which, by the provisions of the act of March 3, 1875, are to remain as security in the possession of the United States, and only to become payable one-half at the end of ten years and the residue at the end of twenty years after the completion of the work provided for in said acts as ascertained and determined by the Secretary of War.

Mr. CLYMER. The bill makes an appropriation of money out of the Treasury, and no doubt is liable to the point of order that it must have its first consideration in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union; and therefore I ask by unanimous consent that it be now considered in the House.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. CLYMER. Mr. Speaker, in explanation of the pending proposition I desire to state what perhaps is already well known to a majority of the members of the House, that the act approved March 3, A. D. 1875, (original jetty act,) provided for the following payments to Mr. Eads when a channel was obtained:

20 feet deep, 200 feet wide,	$500,000 cash.
22 feet deep, 200 feet wide,	500,000 cash.
24 feet deep, 250 feet wide,	500,000 cash, and for maintaining same 1 year,	$250,000
26 feet deep, 300 feet wide,	500,000 cash, and for maintaining same 1 year,	250,000
28 feet deep, 350 feet wide,	500,000 cash, and for maintaining same 1 year,	250,000
30 feet deep, 350 feet wide,	500,000 cash, and for maintaining same 1 year,	500,000
Cash	3,000,000	Deferred	1,250,000
	1,250,000
Total	4,250,000

The act also provided for the payment of the further sum of $1,000,000 when the maximum channel had been maintained ten and twenty years respectively. This made the total compensation for the work amount to $5,250,000.

The amendatory act of June 19, A. D. 1878, in no wise increased the total compensation to be paid for the work. It simply gave an advance to Mr. Eads of $500,000 cash, and set apart a further fund of $500,000 to be drawn by Mr. Eads in monthly installments to "pay for labor done, materials furnished, and expenditures incurred in the construction of the work." All of these monthly payments were provided to be drawn upon the requisitions of Captain Eads, duly certified by the Government officer in charge of the work and approved afterward by the Secretary of War. Mr. Eads was required by the act, as these monthly sums were drawn, to relinquish to the United States similar amounts of the payments provided by the act of 1875 to be paid to him.

The amendatory act of March 3, A. D. 1879, did not in any wise increase the total compensation to be paid to Mr. Eads for the work. It provided as follows:

Money advanced in cash	$750,000
For obtaining a channel 25 feet deep, 200 feet wide	500,000
For obtaining a channel 26 feet deep, 200 feet wide	500,000
For obtaining a channel 30 feet deep, without regard to width	500,000
	2,250,000

The $1,000,000 provided to be paid in ten and twenty years and all sums for maintaining the work were left to be paid at the times and in the manner provided by act of A. D. 1875.

The account between the Government and Mr. Eads now stands as follows. Mr. Eads has received—

Twenty-foot payment under act of A. D. 1875	$500,000
Twenty-two-foot payment under act of A. D. 1875	500,000
Cash advanced under act of A. D. 1878	500,000
Moneys received and to be received monthly by act 1878	500,000
Cash advanced under act of A. D. 1879	750,000
	2,750,000
Payments yet to be made for channel 25 × 200, (act 1879)	500,000
Payments yet to be made for channel 26 × 200, (act 1879)	500,000
Payments yet to be made for channel 30 feet deep, (act of 1879)	500,000
	4,250,000

It will be seen by the above figures that the ultimate compensation to be paid to Mr. Eads has been in no way increased. The Secretary of War in his recent official communication called attention of Congress to the fact that there was a payment about to become due to Mr. Eads and that other payments might soon follow. Since that communication the certificate of the inspecting United States officer has reached the Secretary, setting forth that the twenty-five by two hundred foot channel has been obtained. The Secretary of War recommended that Congress should make an appropriation to cover all moneys which might under existing law fall due and become payable to Mr. Eads. The importance of complying without delay with this request becomes apparent when reference is had to one of the provisions of the act A. D. 1875. The provision referred to is as follows:

> The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to issue the bonds of the United States bearing 5 per cent. interest, of the character and description set out in the act entitled "An act to authorize the refunding of the public debt," approved July 14, 1870, to said Eads, or his legal representatives, in payment at par of the aforesaid warrants of the Secretary of War, unless the Congress of the United States shall have previously provided for the payment of the same by the necessary appropriations of money.

The bonds thus required to be issued, unless there is an appropriation made, are now much above par; but Mr. Eads has no desire to demand the same if Congress will promptly appropriate the necessary money. The amounts to be covered by the present appropriation are the three payments provided to be made by the act of March 3, A. D. 1879, aggregating the sum of $1,500,000, and such remaining gross sum as Mr. Eads may be entitled to draw upon monthly under the provisions of the act of June 19, A. D. 1878.

The act of A. D. 1875 makes provision for the obtaining and maintaining of a channel between the South Pass of the Mississippi River and Gulf of Mexico, and also of a channel through the South Pass, including the shoal at its head. Before the twenty-foot payment was made to Mr. Eads, the Secretary of War (Mr. CAMERON) obtained from a board of United States engineers (appointed by the President and sent down to examine the work and make report) an opinion as to the true construction of the provisions of the act relating to the depths and widths of channel to be secured. The opinion of this board, when given, was submitted to the Attorney-General, who also submitted an opinion thereon.

The substance of these opinions was that, while the act required an ultimate channel to be secured and maintained between the South Pass and the Gulf, 30 feet deep by 350 feet wide, (the width, however, was modified by act of 1879,) the maximum channel required through the shoal at the head of the pass was only 26 feet. Although no specific width was mentioned to accompany this twenty-six-foot depth, it was held that the intent of the act was that a navigable width should be secured. The language of the board in reference to the channel through the shoal is as follows:

> The second proviso to section 4 of the act demands a navigable depth "through said pass," and of course through this shoal, of "twenty feet," within thirty months, and "an additional depth of not less than two feet during each succeeding year thereafter, until twenty-six feet shall have been secured." We deem these depths to be satisfactory; and, considering that an inland channel requires less depth for equal facility of navigation than a sea-exposed bar, that they are fairly equivalent to the greater depths demanded by the act in its fifth section for the "wide and deep channel connecting the pass with the Gulf of Mexico."

In this opinion the Attorney-General concurred, and the decision is further fortified by a recent opinion of the present Attorney-General in the premises.

I can only say to the House that this bill has been fully considered by the Committee on Appropriations, and I believe I have the right to say that it has received the unanimous recommendation of that committee. If there be any question any gentleman of the House desires to ask for further information on the subject, I will be happy to yield for that purpose.

Mr. MONROE. I would suggest to the gentleman from Pennsylvania it might be well to remind the House that we have already had one experience of failure to make appropriation in time to meet one of these payments, and that, as a consequence, we lost forty or fifty thousand dollars.

Mr. CLYMER. I can only say, in reply to the suggestion of the gentleman from Ohio, that, the Forty-fifth Congress having failed to make appropriation for payment when a depth of twenty-two feet was reached, Captain Eads claimed payment in 5 per cent. bonds, which bonds at that time were worth a premium of between 11 and 12 per cent., so that failure to make appropriation to meet the payment under the contract in that instance caused the Government a loss of some $55,000. I now demand the previous question.

Mr. ROBINSON. I should like to hear the bill again read.

The bill was again read.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I should like to ask my friend from Pennsylvania whether in the progress of his investigation in regard to this matter any suggestion has been made as to the durability or permanency of the work; whether there is any probability the work done is of such a character that in a short time it will be so impaired as to be utterly worthless?

Mr. CLYMER. Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Appropriations had no right to deal with that question. But there was no intimation, no suggestion, no hint that a condition of affairs such as that exists. On the contrary, from all they could gather from official sources—that is, from the engineers of the Army who have had this matter in charge—there seems to be no doubt of the success or final permanency of the work. But of that we are not the judges. We merely authorize the Secretary of War to make payments where they become due under the law; and that depends upon the certification of a member of the Engineer Corps, who certifies as to the depth and width of the channel. The payment then becomes absolutely due; under that certificate we must either provide for the payment in money or Captain Eads has the right to demand five per cent bonds. Hence it is that the Committee on Appropriations deemed it necessary to present the bill in the shape it is.

Mr. BUCKNER. If the gentleman will permit me, I will state that some time last year a commission of engineers appointed by the President examined this work and reported that it was thoroughly and successfully done, and that it would in all probability answer for years and years to come.

Mr. CLYMER. The board of engineers referred to by the gentleman from Missouri consisted of General Barnard, General Wright, General Tower, General Macomb, and Colonel Merrill. General Barnard was at the head of the commission and made the report.

Mr. GARFIELD. I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania to yield to me for a moment.

Mr. CLYMER. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. GARFIELD. I am in favor of paying all our debts and obligations, whether the matter for which we have incurred them be a failure or not. But I would be glad to know for my own information something as to the probable success of the Eads jetty plan. Of course the gentleman from Pennsylvania knows there was a great controversy on the subject, some saying the work must be a failure. I think the House would like to know what is the probability of the work succeeding.

Mr. CLYMER. As I have stated, the Committee on Appropriations did not deem that inquiry to be within their province or their duty. I will repeat, however, what I said a moment ago, that there was no intimation or suggestion before us tending to lead to any suspicion that the work would not be permanently a success.

Mr. REAGAN. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania will permit me, I will say a word in answer to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. CLYMER. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. REAGAN. Under the act of 1878 a commission of five engineers of the highest rank of the United States were charged with the duty of examining this work and answering, among other things, the very questions which the gentleman from Ohio puts; and they report that in the ordinary sense of the term the work is permanent.

Mr. CLYMER. If the gentleman will permit me, I will read from the report a statement of the conclusion arrived at by that commission:

The works at the South Pass are declared by the board to be of substantial and permanent character, free from danger of injury by wave action or destruction by the teredo.

Mr. WHITE. I appreciate the answer of my colleague as to the difficulty of knowing whether this work is to be permanent or not. Of course that is a mere matter of speculation. I understand, however, that the bill before us merely relieves the Government from the requirements of the contingency of issuing 5 per cent. bonds, and provides for paying what may be due under the terms of the contract in 1875 out of the money in the Treasury.

Mr. CLYMER. That is precisely the effect of the bill; nothing more nor less; and I will add this at the suggestion of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, that the bill changes no rights, affects nothing in which the United States is interested, and allows all remedies the United States may have now to enforce its rights to the fullest extent.

Mr. GIBSON. I desire to say a word on this subject. When this great public work at the mouth of the Mississippi River was undertaken by Captain Eads the chief objection made to it by the engineers of the Army was that the deposit would be transferred by the current just beyond the jetties and dumped into the Gulf of Mexico; in other words, that the location of the bar would be changed. This was the only objection made to this great undertaking. Now, last spring a number of engineers of the United States Army under instructions from the War Department made a critical examination of these works at the mouth of the Mississippi River, and they report in the language which I shall quote:

The question of the formation of a bar at the sea-ends of the jetties is most satisfactorily settled by the board. In reference to this it uses the following language:

"The actual results, therefore, so far as we know them, do not justify the predictions of accelerated bar advance. On the contrary, they show a disappearance of bar material from the front of the jetties."

Therefore, if we avail ourselves of the only means by which this House can possess itself of official and exact information, we learn from the board of engineers of the United States Army that there is no appearance whatever of the bar advancing at the mouth of the Mississippi River, but that the jetties have given to the valley of the Mississippi River a deep and unimpeded outlet to the Gulf of Mexico. I reside in the vicinity of these jetties, and I say that no objection has been urged by any of the eminent engineers who have been consulted with reference to this work, or by any of the eminent engineers from any part of the world who have visited these works, against the permanency of the works themselves. A great rampart is formed in rear of the jetties and they are as immovable as if put there by nature itself and made of granite. There is now reported a minimum depth in the jetties themselves of twenty-seven feet of water where in the year 1861 I made the survey myself of the mouth of the river and ascertained there were only seven, eight, and nine feet of water, and to-day in the same places there are twenty-seven, twenty-nine, thirty, forty, and fifty feet of water. I say there never was presented to this House a public work that commended itself more to its judgment and its favor.

Mr. CLYMER. I must insist on my demand for the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CLYMER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

RIGHTS OF PRE-EMPTORS.

Mr. WASHBURN, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported back with an amendment the bill (H. R. No. 1152) to extend the time for the payment of pre-emptors on certain public lands in the State of Minnesota and Territory of Dakota.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the time at which pre-emptors on the public lands in the State of Minnesota, including the lands within the Fort Ridgely and Sioux Indian reservations, are now required to make final proof and payment be, and the same is hereby, extended two years from October 1, 1878.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Insert after the word "reservations" in line 5 the words:

"And the old Sioux Indian reservation in the county of Grant, Territory of Dakota."

Mr. BLOUNT. Is that reported from the Committee on Public Lands?

Mr. WASHBURN. It is; and I would like to have it considered at the present time. It is a bill for the relief of settlers whose crops have been destroyed by grasshoppers. The last House passed a similar bill.

Mr. HUMPHREY. What is the purport of the amendment?

Mr. WASHBURN. To extend the provisions of the bill to one county in Dakota where the crops were destroyed under similar circumstances.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WASHBURN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. WASHBURN. I move to amend the title of the bill by adding the words "and Territory of Dakota."

The amendment was agreed to.

UNITED STATES COURTS IN KENTUCKY.

Mr. KNOTT, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back the bill (H. R. No. 609) to prescribe the times for holding the circuit and district courts of the United States in the district of Kentucky, with the recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the regular terms of the circuit and district courts of the United States in the district of Kentucky shall be held at the times and places following, to wit: At Covington, on the second Monday in May and the first Monday in December; at Louisville, on the third Monday in February and the first Monday in October; at Frankfort, on the first Monday in January and the second Monday in June; and at Paducah, on the first Monday in April and the third Monday in November.

SEC. 2. Either of said courts may be adjourned from time to time to meet the necessities and convenience of business.

SEC. 3. The terms of said courts shall not be limited to any particular number of days, nor shall it be necessary to adjourn by reason of the intervention of term elsewhere; but the court intervening may be adjourned till the business of the court in session is concluded.

SEC. 4. By consent of all parties interested, either of said courts may be held at any time or place for the trial of civil suits at law or in equity.

SEC. 5. Nothing herein contained shall be construed to repeal section 578 of the Revised Statutes.

Mr. OSCAR TURNER. I would like to ask my colleague if that change is in accordance with the petition of the members of the bar from Paducah, Kentucky?

Mr. KNOTT. I do not know.

Mr. CARLISLE. I will state for the information of my colleague [Mr. OSCAR TURNER] that this bill was prepared at the last session of the Forty-fifth Congress in accordance with the suggestions of his predecessor and the wishes of the members of the bar asking that the time fixed in the bill be so fixed.

Mr. CONGER. I would ask whether this bill provides that the courts may be held at any place for the trial of any particular case?

Mr. KNOTT. No, sir.

Mr. CONGER. I understood, from hearing the bill read, that the court might be held at any place for the trial of particular issues.

Mr. KNOTT. The gentleman misunderstood the bill.

Mr. CONGER. I would like to have that part of the bill again read.

The Clerk again read section 4 of the bill, as follows:

SEC. 4. By consent of all parties interested, either of said courts may be held at any time or place for the trial of civil suits at law or in equity.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. KNOTT moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. BURCH, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed a joint resolution of the following title; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 19) to provide for the publication and distribution of a supplement to the Revised Statutes.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed, with amendment, the joint resolution (H. R. No. 1) to repeal certain clauses in the sundry civil appropriation act approved March 3, 1879; in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House.

AMENDMENT OF THE REVISED STATUTES.

Mr. HERBERT, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported as a substitute for House bill No. 423 a bill (H. R. No. 1377) to amend section 5440 of the Revised Statutes; which was read a first and second time.

The bill was read. It provides that section 5440 of the Revised Statutes of the United States of America be amended so as to read as follows:

If two or more persons conspire either to commit any offense against the United States, or to defraud the United States in any manner or for any purpose, and one or more of such parties do any act to effect the object of the conspiracy, all the parties to such conspiracy shall be liable to a penalty of not more than $10,000, or to imprisonment for not more than two years, or to both fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court.

Mr. HERBERT. This is the unanimous report of the Committee on the Judiciary. The committee have instructed me to ask the consideration and passage at this time of this bill, and I now call the previous question upon it.

Mr. CONGER. Let the section of the Revised Statutes be read which this bill proposes to amend.

Mr. HERBERT. I have sent for the Revised Statutes, and I will explain the only change made in the section. The section now provides that—

If two or more persons conspire either to commit any offense against the United States, or to defraud the United States in any manner or for any purpose, and one or more of such parties do any act to effect the object of the conspiracy, all the parties to such conspiracy shall be liable to a penalty—

Up to that point the section of the Revised Statutes is not changed at all; the definition of the offense is left precisely as it now stands. The punishment now provided in this section of the Revised Statutes is a fine of not less than $1,000 and not more than $10,000, and imprisonment. The amendment proposed by this bill is to strike out the limitation of $1,000. That leaves the punishment so that it may still be as great as now provided by law. But the statute as it now stands provides that the punishment shall not be less than $1,000 fine in any case, however trivial. There are many offenses against the United States which in themselves are very trivial, such as the cutting of a stick of timber from the public lands.

The punishment now provided for the cutting of timber from the public lands is a fine of not less than three times the value of the timber cut. If the district attorney sees proper, as he sometimes does, to indict not for the cutting of the timber but for the conspiracy to cut timber from the public lands, if two or more persons are engaged, one in cutting the timber and the other in hauling it from the public lands, the indictment or information under the statute as it now stands would make them liable to a penalty of not less than $1,000 fine. By striking out the words "not less than $1,000" the punishment is left so that it shall not exceed $10,000 fine, in the discretion of the court.

One other change is proposed to be made, and that also ought to be explained. The punishment now provided by the section is not only fine but also imprisonment, connected by the copulative conjunction "and;" necessitating both fine and imprisonment. This bill proposes to amend the statute so as to leave it in the alternative, so that the court may impose imprisonment if it sees proper without fine, or fine without imprisonment, or in a proper case it may impose both fine and imprisonment.

This is the unanimous report of the Committee on the Judiciary, and I call for the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HERBERT moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CATTLE DISEASE.

Mr. HATCH, from the Committee on Agriculture, reported a bill (H. R. No. 1378) to prevent the exportation of diseased cattle and the spread of infectious or contagious diseases among domestic animals; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. COVERT. I ask leave to present on behalf of the minority of the Committee on Agriculture their views upon the subject embraced in the bill just reported, with a proposed substitute therefor.

The SPEAKER. Is there any report from the majority of the committee?

Mr. HATCH. There is not; but I am instructed by the committee to move that the bill be printed and recommitted.

Mr. COVERT. I ask that the views of the minority, with their proposed substitute, be also printed and recommitted.

There being no objection, the bill, with the views of the minority and the proposed substitute, was recommitted to the Committee on Agriculture, and ordered to be printed.

ENLISTMENT IN THE NAVY.

Mr. WHITTHORNE, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported back with amendments the bill (H. R. No. 286) to amend sections 1417, 1418, 1419, 1420, and 1624 of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to the Navy.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That section 1417 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 1417. The number of persons who may at one time be enlisted into the Navy of the United States, including seamen, ordinary seamen, landsmen, mechanics, firemen, and coal-heavers, and including seven hundred and fifty apprentices and boys, hereby authorized to be enlisted annually, shall not exceed eight thousand two hundred and fifty: Provided, That in the appointment of warrant officers in the naval service of the United States, preference shall be given to men who have been honorably discharged upon the expiration of an enlistment as an apprentice or boy, to serve during minority, and re-enlisted within three months after such discharge, to serve during a term of three or more years: Provided further, That nothing in this act shall be held to abrogate the provisions of section 1407 of the Revised Statutes of the United States."

That section 1418 be amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 1418. Boys between the ages of fourteen and eighteen years may be enlisted to serve in the Navy until they shall arrive at the age of twenty-one years; other persons may be enlisted to serve for a period not exceeding five years, unless sooner discharged by direction of the President."

That section 1419 be amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 1419. Minors between the ages of fourteen and eighteen years shall not be enlisted for the naval service without the consent of their parents or guardians."

That section 1420 be amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 1420. No minor under the age of fourteen years, no insane or intoxicated person, and no deserter from the naval or military service of the United States, shall be enlisted in the naval service."

That article 19 of section 1624 be amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 1624. ARTICLE 19. Any officer who knowingly enlists into the naval service any deserter from the naval or military service of the United States, or any insane or intoxicated person, or any minor between the ages of fourteen and eighteen years, without the consent of his parents or guardian, or any minor under the age of fourteen years, shall be punished as a court-martial may direct."

The amendments reported from the committee were to strike out the word "fourteen" and insert the word "fifteen" as the age of the boys to be enlisted in the Navy, wherever that word occurs in the bill.

Mr. BLOUNT. It seems to me that this bill involves a large increase of expenditures. It increases the number of enlisted men in the Navy, and I think it should receive its first consideration in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. One word as to that. Nominally it is an increase of the number of men, the number of apprentices and boys in the Navy. Practically, however, in the administration of the Navy it will reduce rather than increase expenditures.

For instance, a class of men called landsmen are now employed, who are paid at the rate of $15.50 per month. Apprentices are paid at the rate of $10.50 per month Recent experience in the naval service has demonstrated the fact that these boys perform, and more intelligently and better, the service of landsmen than do the landsmen themselves; and these boys are being used for that purpose. In that way, in the opinion of the officers of the Navy, a very large amount will be saved to the Government of the United States, estimated by some officers as high as $45,000 per annum. Practically, therefore, the bill does not involve any increase of expenditures or any additional appropriation.

Besides, I am assured by the Secretary of the Navy that if the bill passes—and he is very urgent in his request that it shall pass, stating that the needs of the service demand it—he will not ask a single dollar of additional appropriation. In view of these facts, I trust my friend from Georgia will withdraw his point of order, which in fact, I think, is not well taken.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Georgia insist on the point of order?

Mr. BLOUNT. No, sir. The bill seems to be a unanimous report, and from the statement of the gentleman I do not think it involves a great deal of expense. Therefore I will not obstruct the wishes of the committee.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is withdrawn.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I call the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the amendments reported by the committee were adopted.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WHITTHORNE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PROPELLER FOR THE UNITED STATES SHIP ALARM.

Mr. WHITTHORNE, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 67) providing a new propeller for the United States ship Alarm.

The bill was read. It provides that, in order to enable the Secretary of the Navy to fit a new propeller to the United States torpedo-boat Alarm and to conduct experiments as to the best mode of propelling and steering said vessel, $20,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated; the same to be available immediately on the passage thereof.

Mr. BLOUNT. This bill involves an appropriation, and I raise a point of order upon it.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. If my friend will reserve the point of order for a moment I will state to the House the reasons on which this bill is founded. This torpedo-boat Alarm is deficient, according to the general estimation, in only one regard—she lacks speed. She now lies in an inefficient condition. Heretofore the Navy Department has asked of Congress an appropriation for new engines, amounting to hundreds of thousands of dollars. The Secretary of the Navy now comes to Congress and says that, in his judgment, if new propellers are provided for this vessel the only substantial defect existing will be removed. If there is given to this vessel speed—such speed as has been given to vessels recently built within the United States—she will then become the most formidable war vessel in any navy of the world.

This is an experiment (I will deal honestly with the House)—an experiment to be made with this new propeller. If the experiment should prove a success it will result largely in economy. The people of the country will save a large expenditure of money; otherwise heavy and expensive machinery must be put into the vessel to make her efficient, or she must be abandoned as useless. These are the propositions before the House. Inasmuch as the people are now taxed for the support of officers and watchmen on board this vessel, it behooves us either to make this experiment, or to provide at once large and efficient machinery, or to abandon the vessel. I trust my friend will withdraw his point of order.

Mr. BLOUNT. I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. BRAGG. I renew it.

Mr. HAWLEY. I would like to say a word.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection the point of order will be reserved to give the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] an opportunity to speak on the subject.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Speaker, I happen to be familiar with both the propellers in question—the one now in the gunboat Alarm and the one it is proposed to put in her. There is a most extraordinary effect obtained by either of them, something that engineers have been searching after for a generation. It is possible with the wheel now in the Alarm to turn the vessel in a moment in any direction—to exert the whole power of the engine by a simple movement of the hand, so as to send her forward or backward or at any angle. The vessel can be made to whirl around upon her own center. She can be driven ahead at full speed until she comes near the vessel to be attacked, and then at a signal the whole power of the enginery can be reversed so as to draw the vessel back. Thus there is obtained a marvelous command of the vessel, of very great value in a torpedo-boat or a ram, as any engineer must see in a moment.

Now, the wheel at present in the Alarm has certain defects, partly of construction, and partly, I am afraid, inherent in the character of the wheel itself, so that there is waste of power and a loss of perhaps 10 or 15 per cent. in speed—I do not know the precise loss. It is proposed to substitute for that another wheel which secures precisely the same effect with increased speed. This is a new invention, it is true; but it has been tried. It has been applied to the running of a vessel five thousand miles, a vessel over ninety feet long; and it has also been tried for a year in a launch thirty-seven feet long. The British government, upon two hours' examination, asked proposals for the construction of three vessels with this wheel; and one is to be completed for that government in about six weeks. Reports very favorable to the invention have also been made by engineers of our own Navy.

Now, if they will permit this substitution to be made as the gentleman from Tennessee proposes, the Alarm will perhaps be the most formidable fighting ship in the world. She is now crippled by the imperfect character of the old wheel, and as to the character of the proposed new wheel we have the testimony of Mr. Isherwood and other naval engineers in favor of it. If there be delay at this time this will go over to the next session, and one year of experiment will be lost. I do not, however, regard it as a risky experiment. That I do not pretend to speak positively about, but if the delay should take place a year will be lost, and this vessel will be comparatively useless. If this bill be passed the experiment can be made this autumn, before the winter season comes on. I do not think there is anything in the nature of a job in the whole affair; I know the history of it.

Mr. BRAGG. If $20,000 is going to make our Navy formidable to anybody, I will withdraw the point of order. [Laughter.]

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WHITTHORNE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MONETARY CONVENTION, ETC.

Mr. WARNER, from the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, submitted notes of a conference with Mr. Sherman, Secretary of the Treasury, and Mr. Burchard, Director of the Mint, together with the translation of a monetary convention concluded December 23, 1865, between France, Belgium, Italy, and Switzerland, ratified at Paris, July 23, 1866; which were ordered to be printed, and recommitted.

Mr. CONGER. I reserve all points of order on reports from the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

COIN AND BULLION CERTIFICATES.

Mr. WARNER also, from the same committee, reported back, with amendments, a bill (H. R. No. 564) to amend certain sections of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to coinage and coin and bullion certificates, and for other purposes; which were ordered to be printed, and recommitted.

Mr. WARNER. I now report from the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, under the privilege granted to that committee, the following resolution, on which I demand the previous question.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That House bill No. 564, and the amendments thereto, reported from the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, be made the special order for consideration in the House on Saturday next after the morning hour, and from day to day thereafter until disposed of.

Mr. GARFIELD. I suggest to my colleague to add to that resolution the proviso "not to interfere with appropriation bills." That has always been done in such cases, and is only a fair proposition.

Mr. WARNER. I do not yield for any amendment, but insist on my demand for the previous question.

Mr. GARFIELD. I wish to move, as an amendment, that this bill shall not interfere with appropriation bills.

The SPEAKER. The previous question has been demanded.

Mr. CONGER. I ask for the reading of the bill and amendments.

The SPEAKER. The bill and amendments will be read.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. The bill is not pending, but only a resolution on which the gentleman from Ohio has demanded the previous question.

The SPEAKER. Under the rules any gentleman has a right to have read a bill on which action is demanded, such as is proposed by the pending resolution.

Mr. COX. Has not the morning hour expired?

The SPEAKER. This is not in the morning hour, but is under the right given to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures by the new rule, which the Clerk will read.

Mr. COX. I thought it was in the morning hour.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the Committees of Ways and Means, Banking and Currency, and Coinage, Weights, and Measures shall have leave to report at any time; and on motion of any member a majority of the House may fix a day for the consideration of any public bill reported by either of said committees, and the House may continue the consideration of such bill from day to day until disposed of.

The SPEAKER. From this it is right that the House should know what is contained in the bill before they are asked to consider it.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. The only point I wished settled is this: whether or not it is proper to call for the reading of a bill when the bill is not under consideration, but merely a resolution fixing the time for its consideration.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it might control the vote of a member to know the provisions of the bill the consideration of which was proposed to be fixed for a certain day.

The bill and amendments were read.

Mr. FORT. Is it proposed to open the bill to discussion and amendment when it comes up for consideration?

Mr. WARNER. The bill will be open to debate and amendment.

Mr. STEPHENS. Such is the intention of the committee.

The SPEAKER. The whole subject will be under the control of a majority of the House at the time it comes up for consideration. The pending question is on seconding the demand for the previous question.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 97, noes 92.

Mr. GARFIELD demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. GARFIELD and Mr. WARNER were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 102, noes 102.

The SPEAKER. The tellers report ayes 102, noes 102. The Chair votes in the affirmative, and the previous question is seconded. [Applause.]

Mr. GARFIELD. I demand the yeas and nays on ordering the main question to be now put.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. ATKINS. Has the morning hour expired?

The SPEAKER. This is not being considered in the morning hour.

Mr. ATKINS. Is a motion to adjourn in order?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. HOUSE. I move the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Before announcing the adjournment leave of absence by unanimous consent was granted in the following cases:

To Mr. PHELPS, till the end of next week, on account of sickness in his family.

To Mr. CLARDY, for eight days, on account of important business.

To Mr. HULL, indefinitely, on account of important business.

PETER M. WARD.

On motion of Mr. GARFIELD, by unanimous consent, leave was granted for the withdrawal from the files of the House of papers in the case of Peter M. Ward, no adverse report having been made.

ADMISSION TO THE FLOOR.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS asked by unanimous consent that Hon. George F. Danford, one of the judges of the court of appeals of the State of New York, be granted the privilege of the floor for the few days of his stay in the city.

Mr. MCKENZIE objected.

The House (at two o'clock and fourteen minutes p. m.) adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions, &c., were presented at the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as stated:

By Mr. ACKLEN: A letter from the Secretary of the Interior relative to the Calcasieu log seizures—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. AIKEN: The petition of citizens of Oregon, for the passage of the Reagan interstate commerce bill—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. BARBER: A paper relating to the pension claim of Hiram Graves—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BENNETT: The petition of F. F. Gerard, Elijah Boley, and 24 others, to have annulled an act of the Dakota Legislature annexing a portion of Morton to Burleigh County, in said Territory—to the Committee on the Territories.

By Mr. BRIGGS: The petitions of Lewis Page and 15 others, members of Stark Grange, Merrimack County, and of Kimball Webster and 11 others, members of Hudson Grange, Hillsborough County, and of 24 members of Wyoming Grange, Hillsborough County, New Hampshire, for the passage of the Reagan interstate-commerce bill—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. COFFROTH: Papers relating to the pension claim of Dr. Mary E. Walker—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. FARR: The petition of George E. Street and 69 others, of the Women's National Temperance Union, against any amendment of the internal-revenue laws that will promote the interest of dealers in spirituous liquors—to the Committee of Ways and Means.

By Mr. FORNEY: The petition of John Pratt, of Cherokee County, Alabama, to be relieved from the forfeiture of a patent issued to him August 11, 1868, for improvements in type-writing—to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. GARFIELD: The petition of J. C. W. Stetson and 63 others, citizens of Harpersfield, Ohio, against the extension of the Birdsell clover-huller patent—to the same committee.

By Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia: The petition of John A. Parker, for the passage of a bill to readjust the claims of certain States for interest on advances of moneys made for the United States during the war of 1812—to the Committee on the Revision of the Laws.

By Mr. HAWK: Papers relating to the claim of Edward T. Brownell, for payment of two lost drafts, issued by a pension agent—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HOUK: The petition of Edwin N. Parham, for compensation for quartermaster stores taken by the United States Army—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. LAPHAM: The petition of J. M. Bull, Mary F. Harris, and 176 others, citizens of Ontario County, New York, against any change in the revenue law that will promote the interest of dealers in spirituous liquors—to the Committee of Ways and Means.

By Mr. MILLER: Papers relating to the war claim of William S. Stevens—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. MURCH: The petitions of J. B. Danforth, William Wells, and 172 others, of the United States arsenal, Rock Island, Illinois; of Nicholas McKeone and 80 others, of Cape Ann, Massachusetts; of H. Richards and 72 others, of Dix Island, Maine; and of M. A. Magriel, Charles McLeod, and 40 others, of Spruce Head, Maine, for the passage of the bill to enforce the eight-hour law—to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Also, the petition of Horace Budwell and 65 others, of Athens, Maine, that Congress prohibit the issue of money by corporations, and that a further issue of United States legal-tender paper money be made, and to instruct the Secretary of the Treasury to buy and cancel bonds with the same—to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. OVERTON: The petition of Charles N. Warner (accompanied by draught of bill) to be restored to his former relative rank and position in the Army—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. PIERCE: The petition of Mary Cane, for arrears of pension—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. ROSS: The petition of women of Roselle, New Jersey, for such legislation as will make effective the anti-polygamy law of 1862—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. SPRINGER: The petition of women of Christian County, Illinois, against any change in the revenue laws that will promote the interest of dealers in spirituous liquors—to the Committee of Ways and Means.

Also, resolution of the Legislature of Illinois, relative to the swamp lands in that State—to the Committee on Public Lands.

By Mr. STEPHENS: The petition of the administrator of William H. De Groot, deceased, for compensation for work and labor done by said decedent under a contract with the Government—to the Committee of Claims.

Also, the petition of G. E. W. Sharretts, of similar import—to the same committee.

Also, papers relating to the war claim of Samuel I. Gustin—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. TUCKER: Papers relating to the claim of Edwin De Leon, for a balance due him on adjustment of his accounts as consul-general of the United States in Egypt—to the Committee of Claims.

Also, papers relating to the war claim of R. M. Miller—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. OSCAR TURNER: The petition of Mrs. Belle M. Baker, for a pension—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WHITEAKER: The petition of Martha F. Woodrum, for a pension—to the same committee.

By Mr. WILLITS: The petitions of A. Bennett and 35 others, and of C. A. Stacey and 22 others, citizens of Michigan, against the extension of the Birdsell clover-huller patent—to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. FERNANDO WOOD: Papers relating to the pension claim of Margaret Brewster—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

IN SENATE.

THURSDAY, May 1, 1879.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. J. BULLOCK, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. T. KING, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R.

No. 286) to amend sections 1417, 1418, 1419, 1420, and 1624 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to the Navy; in which the concurrence of the Senate was asked.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting for the information of the Senate copies of reports from Captain M. R. Brown, Corps of Engineers, showing the progress of the work of improving the South Pass of the Mississippi River; which, on motion of Mr. BECK, was referred to the Committee on Transportation Routes to the Seaboard.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. FERRY presented the petition of Mrs. G. W. Green and 79 other women of Michigan, praying for the passage of a law prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors in the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. COCKRELL presented a joint and concurrent resolution of the Legislature of Missouri, in favor of an appropriation by Congress for the improvement of White River in that State; which was referred to the Committee on the Improvement of the Mississippi River and its Tributaries.

He also presented a concurrent resolution of the Legislature of Missouri, in favor of the passage of a law by Congress repealing certain statutes and modifying the existing laws relating to the removal of causes from the State courts to the circuit courts of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. MAXEY. I am instructed by the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to which was referred the bill (S. No. 516) to extend the time of special postal service until service can be obtained by advertisement, to report it without amendment and to submit a favorable report thereon. I desire to state in this connection that a communication from the Postmaster-General accompanying the report of the committee shows an exigency that should be met at once. For that reason the committee have instructed me to report the bill to the Senate for consideration. I ask that the accompanying report be printed, and I give notice that so soon as the report shall be printed I will at the earliest moment call the bill up and ask for final action upon it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be printed and the bill will be placed on the Calendar.

REPORT OF THE NATIONAL ACADEMY OF SCIENCES.

Mr. ANTHONY. The Committee on Printing, to which was referred a resolution to print 750 additional copies of the report of the National Academy of Sciences, has instructed me to report it without amendment and recommend its passage. I ask for its present consideration.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That 750 additional copies of the report of the National Academy of Sciences be printed for the use of the National Academy of Sciences.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. DAWES asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 533) for the relief of Charles W. Abbott, a pay-director, and W. W. Barry, a passed assistant paymaster in the United States Navy; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. PLUMB asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 534) granting a pension to Caroline Treckell; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 535) granting a pension to William H. Miller; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois, asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 536) placing the name of Walter F. Halleck upon the retired list of the United States Army; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. KERNAN (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 537) to refer the claim of Alice E. De Groot and Theodore R. B. De Groot, administrators of William H. De Groot, deceased, to the United States Court of Claims; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. WALLACE asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 538) to authorize the payment of certain claims for arrears of pay and bounty; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

AMENDMENT TO AN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PLUMB submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. No. 2) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. WITHERS, it was Ordered, That the papers in the case of Virginia Gardner, widow of the late Commodore W. H. Gardner, United States Navy, be taken from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Ordered, That the papers in the following cases be taken from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Claims: George D. Harwood, D. T. Madigan, A. S. Lee, and Garret F. Watson.

On motion of Mr. INGALLS, it was Ordered, That the petition of George J. Webb, of Company C, One hundredth Regiment New York Volunteers, be taken from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

On motion of Mr. BUTLER, it was Ordered, That the papers in the case of Abram Vansant, petitioner for pension, be taken from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

SITE FOR WASHINGTON CITY POST-OFFICE.

Mr. DAWES submitted the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds be instructed to inquire into the expediency of purchasing, for the purposes of a city post-office, square No. 406 in the city of Washington.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Massachusetts ask for the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. DAWES. I desire simply that it be adopted, to give the committee an opportunity to inquire as to this site among others.

Mr. COCKRELL. Why should the inquiry be confined to one site alone?

Mr. DAWES. There are two or three that have been submitted to the committee. This is one among them, and this resolution gives them an opportunity simply to inquire about this one.

Mr. COCKRELL. Why not, then, give authority to inquire as to other sites that may be offered?

Mr. DAWES. Most certainly. I have no desire to confine the inquiry.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the resolution be amended, then, so as to include other sites which may be offered or proposed.

Mr. DAWES. I have no objection to such an amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Will the Senate proceed to the consideration of the resolution? Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the resolution is before the Senate.

Mr. COCKRELL. I suggest an amendment to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. DAWES. To any amendment of that kind I have no objection.

Mr. COCKRELL. After naming the place indicated in the resolution, say "or any other place or places which may be offered."

Mr. EDMUNDS. "Or otherwise."

Mr. MORRILL. "Or any other lots owned by the United States."

Mr. DAWES. We do not want to purchase any lot that is owned by the United States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be reported as modified.

The Secretary read the resolution as modified, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds be instructed to inquire into the expediency of purchasing, for the purposes of a city post-office, square No. 406, in the city of Washington, as well as other sites which may be proposed.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. Where is square 406?

Mr. DAWES. It is opposite the Patent Office, on which the Le Droit building is.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution as modified.

The resolution, as modified, was agreed to.

COLLECTION OF DIRECT TAXES.

Mr. BELL submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to inform the Senate of the amounts due and uncollected, if any, under section 8, act of August 5, 1861, entitled "An act to provide increased revenue from imports, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes," and to state reasons, if any exist, why the same have not been collected or should not now be collected, agreeably to the provisions of said act.

PROPOSED ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. BAYARD. I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day, it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

Mr. EDMUNDS and others. No, no.

Mr. HARRIS. I desire to appeal to the honorable Senator from Delaware to withdraw the motion for the present at least. I should like very much as early as the Senate can do so with convenience to itself to finish the consideration of the bill now pending. Whatever its fate may be, I desire to reach it just as soon as the Senate can conveniently reach it; and I hope the Senate will not adjourn over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is the Senate ready for the question? The Senator from Delaware moves that when the Senate adjourns to-day, it be to meet on Monday next.

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 22, noes 17.

Mr. EDMUNDS called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 23, nays 26; as follows:

YEAS—23.

Allison,	Cameron of Wis.,	Grover,	Plumb,
Anthony,	Chandler,	Hamlin,	Randolph,
Bayard,	Cockrell,	Hampton,	Thurman,
Beck,	Coke,	Ingalls,	Williams,
Burnside,	Davis of W. Va.,	Kernan,	Withers.
Butler,	Groome,	Morrill,

NAYS—26.

Bailey,	Ferry,	Maxey,	Vance,
Bell,	Garland,	Morgan,	Voorhees,
Call,	Harris,	Ransom,	Walker,
Davis of Illinois,	Houston,	Rollins,	Wallace,
Dawes,	Kellogg,	Saunders,	Windom.
Eaton,	Logan,	Slater,
Edmunds,	McMillan,	Teller,

ABSENT—27.

Blaine,	Gordon,	Jones of Florida,	Pendleton,
Booth,	Hereford,	Jones of Nevada,	Platt,
Bruce,	Hill of Colorado,	Kirkwood,	Saulsbury,
Cameron of Pa.,	Hill of Georgia,	Lamar,	Sharon,
Carpenter,	Hoar,	McDonald,	Vest,
Conkling,	Johnston,	McPherson,	Whyte,
Farley,	Jonas,	Paddock,

So the motion was not agreed to.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 286) to amend sections 1417, 1418, 1419, 1420, and 1624 of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to the Navy, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

PREVENTION OF EPIDEMIC DISEASES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there is no further morning business the morning hour is at an end and the unfinished business is next in order.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 108) to prevent the introduction and spread of contagious or infectious diseases into the United States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending question is on the motion made by the Senator from Maine [Mr. HAMLIN] to recommit the bill with instructions.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, from the course of debate——

Mr. EDMUNDS. Before the Senator addresses the Senate, would he have any objection to having the instructions read, so that we can understand what the motion is precisely?

Mr. HARRIS. Certainly not.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The instructions will be read.

The Chief Clerk read from the Journal of yesterday's proceedings as follows:

That the bill be recommitted to the select committee to investigate and report the best means of preventing the introduction and spread of epidemic diseases, with instructions to report a code of rules and regulations by which the provisions of the bill are to be enforced.

Mr. LOGAN. I desire to offer an amendment to the bill, so that it may be printed and referred to the select committee, if the bill should be recommitted. It is an amendment to the law of 1878, striking out a portion of the second section and inserting a part of the present substitute reported by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] from the select committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will lie on the table for the present.

Mr. LOGAN. I propose to offer it, and I present it now that it may be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The order to print will be made.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, from the course of the debate on yesterday upon the bill under consideration, I am inclined to think there is some misapprehension as to the scope of the bill. The object and purpose of this bill is to so regulate commerce with foreign nations as to prevent the importation into the United States of contagious or infectious diseases, and to so regulate the commerce among the several States as to prevent the importation of contagious diseases into one State from another State. These are the precise objects and the only objects that the committee propose to accomplish by the bill that it framed and reported to the Senate.

But at the threshold we are met with at least the suggestion if not the assertion that there is no constitutional power to enact such a law as this bill proposes. No Senator doubts the power of Congress to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States; but if it be true that the regulations prescribed by this bill are not commercial regulations in the sense of the Constitution, then I grant that there is no constitutional power in Congress to pass this bill or any bill accomplishing the objects proposed to be accomplished by the bill under consideration.

But, Mr. President, is it true that this is not a legitimate commercial regulation in the sense of the Constitution? For what purpose was the power delegated to Congress to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States? Was it not in order that the regulation should be uniform and should be such as would not only promote the best interests of the whole people of the United States, but would be such as would render commerce harmless and safe to the American people?

I beg Senators to remember that the evil that is apprehended, the evil that is proposed to be remedied by this bill, is one which is connected with commerce. It is one which springs directly from commerce, and one that would not exist but for commerce. The evil is purely commercial. It exists in commerce, and exists not elsewhere, because it is commerce alone that endangers the importation of contagion from foreign countries. It is commerce alone that endangers the transportation of contagion from one State to another State.

Mr. WITHERS. Not alone.

Mr. HARRIS. My friend shakes his head and says not commerce alone. I beg to assure my honorable friend from Virginia that commerce is defined to mean not only traffic, buying, selling and interchange of commodities, but it means also intercourse, navigation and transportation. Transportation and intercourse are commerce. Hence I repeat that the evil complained of here is one which has its origin in commerce. It is connected with commerce, and it is impossible to deal with it at all except by the regulation of commerce.

The board of scientific experts recently organized under the authority of Congress have reported to Congress that seventy-seven out of eighty-eight yellow-fever epidemics with which this country has been afflicted were the result of imported contagion, and with regard to the remaining eleven there is proof, more or less conclusive, which tends to show that they too, originated in the same manner. Those epidemics which result from importation, it will not be denied are directly chargeable to commerce, having been brought to the country through the channels of commerce.

The epidemic of 1878, it is shown satisfactorily, if not conclusively, was the result of imported contagion, and is therefore directly chargeable to commerce, with its appalling catalogue of fearful consequences, which may be approximately summed up in the death of over twenty thousand people, in the impaired health of more than two hundred thousand people, in the expenditure and loss of material wealth amounting to hundreds of millions of dollars. Yet it is argued that you cannot subject commerce to such inconvenience and delay as may be necessary to strip it of this alarming liability to inflict these great evils upon the whole people.

The honorable Senator from New York [Mr. CONKLING] yesterday appealed to the committee to fix the outside limit of this power of Congress to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the States. With my view of this power and of the objects and purposes of this bill, it is wholly unnecessary to enter upon any such inquiry, or to undertake to settle the somewhat vexed and unsettled question as to exactly where the power of Congress to regulate commerce ends, and the police powers of the States begin, because in my opinion the power to so regulate commerce as to make it harmless, and render it powerless for evil, stands at the very threshold and in the foreground. Hence, we need seek for no outside limit of power to justify the passage of this bill.

But upon the question suggested by the honorable Senator from New York [Mr. CONKLING] I have taken the trouble to look at a large number of cases decided by the Supreme Court of the United States discussing the power to regulate commerce, and what are termed the police powers of the States. I will briefly refer to three of the more recent, in which the former cases are reviewed with the hope of deducing from them support to the view I take of the constitutional power of Congress to legislate upon the question presented in this bill.

First, I refer to the case of Henderson vs. The Mayor of New York. The Legislature of New York passed a bill providing that the master of every vessel which brought to the port of New York passengers not citizens of the United States, should make a report under oath in writing to the mayor of the city, of the name, the age, the occupation, and the last place of residence of every passenger of that character; the mayor was required to indorse upon that report the requirement that the master, owner, or consignee of the vessel shall, within twenty-four hours from the time such passengers are landed, give a bond with two or more good and sufficient sureties in the penal sum of $300 conditioned to save harmless every county, city, town, and village of the State of New York from such passenger becoming a public charge. It provided further that the mayor should be authorized to commute these three-hundred-dollar bonds by the payment by the master, the owner, or consignee of the vessel of a tax of $1.50 for each passenger; and it was provided further that if the bond was not given or the commutation tax paid within twenty-four hours from the time the passenger was landed, the vessel should forfeit $500 in the case of each passenger, which was declared a lien upon the vessel. The owner of an English ship contested the right of the mayor of New York to demand such bond or such tax. The Supreme Court of the United States decided that the act was a regulation of commerce, and therefore void, because repugnant to the eighth section of article 1 of the Constitution, which delegates to Congress the power to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States, and no such power existed in the States; that Congress had the power——

Mr. KERNAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. HARRIS. Yes, sir.

Mr. KERNAN. As my friend is looking at that case, and I speak from memory alone, I will state my recollection. It is that the court put the decision upon the ground that carrying passengers was commerce; that although it was put in the manner it was, it was in substance and effect a tax on commerce so much a head, and therefore void. They say very much on a point that was not in judgment, that a State could do what was sought to be done by that act in another way, that they could protect themselves against paupers, but that they could not do it by exacting from everybody, rich and poor, a dollar and a half tax, for that was a tax on commerce.

My impression is that in the Passenger case and in this case, which is referred to, and in other cases, the Supreme Court do recognize the rights of the States to protect themselves against sickness, pestilence, paupers, criminals, and all that class as a part of the police powers which the States have. I only call my friend's attention to the opinion; I have not looked at the case recently.

Mr. HARRIS. The honorable Senator is quite right in his statement that the Supreme Court put the decision upon the ground that in effect the act of the New York Legislature imposed a tax upon the importation of persons when the State had no power to impose it. The court puts it upon the ground that the requirement of this bond of $300 for each passenger, with two good and sufficient sureties, the cost of making, acknowledging, and executing which would be greater than the dollar and a half which was demanded, was a mere device in order to make it appear that the payment of the dollar and fifty cents on each passenger was voluntary, when in fact it was extorted by the method stated. But as to the other point suggested by the honorable Senator from New York, so far from the court in that case declaring that in the exercise of the police powers of the State a State may protect herself against vagrants, paupers, criminals, and diseased persons, the language of the court, as I remember it from a very recent examination of the case, is that whether the State can protect herself against criminals, paupers, vagrants, and diseased persons, or how far she can where Congress has wholly failed to legislate upon the subject, leaving the field unoccupied so far as legislation is concerned, the court expressly declined to express an opinion. But certain it is that the Supreme Court held in that case that the State of New York had no power to impose such restrictions upon the importation of persons from foreign countries, because of the fact that the power to regulate commerce was by the Constitution confided to Congress. Here is an adjudication of the principle that Congress alone has constitutional power to impose the terms, restrictions, and conditions upon which persons from foreign countries may be permitted to enter the United States. The act of the State of New York applied to persons generally; it included all classes, and was not by its terms made applicable to that objectionable class known as paupers, criminals, &c., but included every passenger who was not a citizen of the United States.

In the same volume, 2 Otto, is the recent case of Chy-Lung vs. Freeman. In that case the Legislature of the State of California passed an act requiring the commissioner of emigration to board every vessel that landed at San Francisco with passengers and ascertain and determine as to whether or not passengers so arriving were idiots, lunatics, paupers, criminals, lewd or debauched women, specifying various objectionable classes, but the statute of California applied to none other than objectionable classes. It specified the various classes of persons, such as my honorable friend from New York [Mr. KERNAN] referred to a few moments ago as persons that the State had a right to exclude from her boundaries in the exercise of those powers generally characterized and known as the police powers of the State. It was these classes, and these classes alone, that the act of California referred to and proposed to fix the terms upon which they should be admitted to the State, if admitted at all.

The act proceeded to provide that when this commissioner of emigration had determined how many paupers, how many idiots, how many lunatics, how many lewd or debauched women were upon the vessel, he was required to demand that the master, owners, or consignees of the vessel give a bond with two or more sureties, and no two sureties to go upon more than one bond, the bond to be in the penal sum of $500 for each passenger, conditioned that the passenger should never become a charge upon any city, town, or county of the State. But it provided further that the commissioner of emigration after he had required these bonds of $500, with two sureties on each bond, and no two allowed to go on more than one bond, and who were required to be freeholders and citizens of the State of California, and fixing the fee for the execution and acknowledgment of these bonds, amounting in each case to about $5, the act provided that the commissioner might commute these bonds with the master of the vessel by the master paying to the commissioner such sum of money in each case as the commissioner thought proper to exact.

The constitutionality of this act was tested, and the court held that the State of California had no power to pass such act because it was a regulation of commerce, and the power to regulate commerce having been delegated to Congress, the State did not possess and could not exercise it, and therefore the act was void—the power to determine the rules, regulations, and restrictions upon which even this, the most objectionable class of persons that can be imported should be admitted within the limits of the United States being vested in Congress alone.

There is one other case to which I will briefly refer, the case of the Railroad Company vs. Husen, in 5 Otto. The State of Missouri passed an act making it unlawful for any person to bring within the limits of the State of Missouri any Texan, Mexican, or Indian cattle from the 1st of March to the 1st of November in each year, provided that cattle loaded on a railroad car or on a steamboat may be passed through the State without unloading; provided further, however, that the owner of the steamboat or the railroad company transporting such cattle shall be liable for any injury resulting from disease that may be contracted by the cattle of the citizens of Missouri from the cattle so passing through.

The constitutionality of that act was tested, and the Supreme Court held in that case, as in the other cases, that it was a regulation of commerce, that the power to regulate commerce among the several States was delegated to Congress, that Congress possessed the power to regulate, determine the rules, the restrictions, and conditions upon which cattle from Texas or elsewhere may be introduced or may be passed through on the lines of railroad or of water communication of the several States of the Union; that Congress had the power to determine what class of cattle, what character of merchandise might be admitted into the United States, and the terms upon which such merchandise should be admitted within the boundaries of the United States.

Now, Mr. President, if Congress may by commercial regulation determine what classes of persons may be admitted within the United States or rejected, what characters of merchandise may be admitted and what forbidden admission into the United States, it cannot be denied that in the exercise of the same power Congress may prohibit the importation of contagion, and that is what this bill proposes to do.

Mr. President, I beg to inquire of Senators who question this power, under what power is it that Congress passed that volume of navigation laws with which your statute-book is teeming? Under what clause of the Constitution is it that Congress prescribes rules for every sea-going vessel or every vessel that plies the waters of your rivers? Under what clause of the Constitution is it that Congress prescribes one set of rules for those vessels that carry passengers, and a different set of rules for those that are known as purely freight vessels? Most clearly the authority to pass all of these laws is found in that clause of the Constitution that delegates to Congress the power to regulate commerce. If in the exercise of this power Congress can require, under heavy penalties, the inspection of the hull, boilers, and machinery of every steam-vessel which floats upon your waters, and forbid the use of such vessels and machinery as are found unseaworthy; can require one set of rules to be observed by vessels carrying passengers and another set less stringent for freight vessels; can say to the ocean or river steamer that carries passengers, "You shall not endanger the lives of your passengers by carrying gun-powder, camphene, nitro-glycerine, or other explosive fluids or articles, or by carrying loose hay, loose cotton, or loose hemp, which may cause a conflagration," and yet cannot say, in the exercise of the same power, "You shall not endanger the health and lives, not only of your passengers but of millions of other people by carrying contagion more dangerous than all combustibles and explosives that your vessels will contain." If Congress has the power to so regulate commerce as to promote the safety of the passenger upon the vessel from the dangers of fire or the dangers of explosion or the dangers of defective machinery, can it be denied, can it be doubted, that it has the power under the same clause of the Constitution to so regulate commerce as to strip it of that contagion which so seriously threatens human life and health and the prosperity of the country?

To my mind, Mr. President, the proposition is too clear to admit of argument. I regret that it is not so to the minds of other gentlemen. But how Congress can constitutionally pass the navigation laws which are found in our statutes, how Congress can legislate with an eye single to the safety of the lives and property of passengers on board of vessels from the dangers of explosion, the dangers of fire, and all that class of dangers incident to a voyage, and not possess the power to ascertain, if it can, whether upon that vessel contagion lurks with all of its dangers to human health and human life and human prosperity, I may say, is what I cannot understand.

The pending question, Mr. President, is the motion of the honorable Senator from Maine [Mr. HAMLIN] to recommit this bill with instructions to report a code of rules and regulations. I shall oppose the motion of the Senator, first, for the reason that in my opinion the National Board of Health, a board of scientists, familiar with the questions with which its members have to deal, is better qualified, in my opinion much better qualified than any member of the committee, perhaps than any Senator, to prescribe the rules and regulations for the accomplishment of the objects sought by this bill. But, however that may be, I am sure that the committee should not undertake to prescribe the rules and regulations that are to be observed in the enforcement of this act. I think the dangers apprehended by the Senator from Maine are greatly overrated. He fails to observe, I think, the limitations upon the power of the board in making rules and regulations for the enforcement of this act. The first limitation is found in the fact that the board can make only such rules and regulations as are authorized by the laws of the United States; they can make none other. The next limitation is found in the fact that they are authorized to make all needful rules and regulations for the accomplishment of a specific object, the prevention of the importation of contagious diseases from foreign countries into the United States and the prevention of the importation of contagious diseases from one State into another State. The power is limited to the precise object they have in view; the board can make rules and regulations necessary to that end, and can make no others.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to ask the Senator a question with his permission.

Mr. HARRIS. Certainly.

Mr. TELLER. I suppose, then, if they are to make all needful regulations, they are to be the judges of the regulations?

Mr. HARRIS. Of course they are to be the judges of the regulations they will make; that is, they are to be judges so far as the making of them is concerned, but the President is to sit in judgment on them afterward, because the rules and regulations are void until they are approved by the President of the United States. But suppose they are made and suppose they are approved, and suppose they should transcend the limits of the power that is delegated to the Board of Health in respect to their making, the rules and regulations made in excess of the power of the board would occupy no higher position and have no higher authority or validity than an unconstitutional act passed by Congress or an unconstitutional act passed by the Legislature of a State.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to inquire if there is any restriction put upon them at all. If the President approves their regulations, does not everything that they do become the law of the land?

Mr. HARRIS. Everything that they do within the scope of their power does become authoritative and binding; but any act of theirs beyond the limit of their power would be a regulation or rule in violation of the act of Congress, and therefore void.

Mr. TELLER. Where is the limit? I do not see any limit in the bill.

Mr. HARRIS. The limits are that the board can make no rule or regulation except such as is authorized by the laws of the United States; that is one limit, and they must confine themselves strictly within it. Another limit is that they can make no rules or regulations except such as are needful to the accomplishment of a precise and specific object; that is, a rule and regulation that is necessary for the purpose of preventing the importation of disease from foreign countries or preventing the importation of disease from one State into another State. That is another limit.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. COCKRELL in the chair.) Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. HARRIS. For a question? Yes; but not for a speech.

Mr. DAWES. I observe upon the point which the Senator from Tennessee is discussing that these "needful rules and regulations" must be such as are "authorized by the laws of the United States." Does the bill mean by that such as find express authority in the laws? Who shall define what is "authorized by the laws of the United States?" Shall this board, that make the regulations, themselves pass upon the question whether those regulations are authorized by the laws of the United States? Shall they look for express authority to pass those laws? If so, the rules and regulations will be found in the law itself. If they make rules and regulations which go further than is found in the statutes, then they must look for some implied authority, and they are the judges of that implied authority, so far as I can derive it from the bill, and there is no other appeal from them than such redress of grievances as an action of tort, or something of that kind, will give a party claiming to have suffered under their administration. It is setting these commissioners up with some sort of absolute authority. They can adopt any regulations they please. I hope I do not interrupt the Senator too much.

Mr. HARRIS. Not at all.

Mr. DAWES. They can adopt any regulations they deem needful and authorized by the general laws of the United States, and they can impose any penalty that they may deem necessary. Now, the first thing that a national board of health would be likely to do would be to declare something a nuisance to the public health. All boards of health do that. A board of health that is worth anything, that has any efficiency must have that power. That is a needful power in a board of health. Now, they do not seem to have any limit except their own discretion, their own judgment.

Mr. HARRIS. Will the Senator from Massachusetts allow me to interrupt him, not to take him off the floor, but to call his attention to this fact while he is arguing the question? The whole structure of this bill looks to the accomplishment of one single object, the prevention of the importation of contagion into this country and the prevention of the importation of contagion from one State into another. That is the whole case.

Mr. DAWES. Now if the Senator will allow me to occupy the floor——

Mr. HARRIS. Of course I shall allow you; but I want to say that under the authority given by this bill, under the authority given by any and all other acts so far as I know, there would be no pretense of authority in the National Board of Health to undertake to abate a nuisance. The scope of its operations is confined to the one single object.

Mr. DAWES. I see the difficulty in this committee reporting a code of rules and regulations. The rules and regulations must arise out of the exigency, and must be suited to it. And I see a great deal of propriety in having a board of general application to the different States, but the difficulty in the bill with which I labor is that it is proposed to make a legislature, if I may so call it, of this Board of Health, to give them the power to decide both what is needful and what is authorized. I have the utmost confidence in the men who constitute this board, and I have every desire to co-operate with the purpose of the committee; but it does seem to me that we are clothing them with an absolute power, a power that has no restriction upon it whatever, except that the judgment of the President of the United States may differ with that of the board, and the only redress a man can obtain is by some sort of action in which he claims that his rights have been infringed upon, and he must reach the Supreme Court of the United States before he ascertains that fact.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. HAMLIN. Only for one minute.

Mr. HARRIS. Certainly.

Mr. HAMLIN. I dislike to interrupt any Senator when speaking; it is my rule not to do so; but I do it only for the purpose of saying to the Senator from Tennessee that when I submitted this motion I presumed the committee would avail itself of the information and of the services of this very Board of Health and that this Board of Health would prepare its rules and regulations so far as they can be applicable to the law when it starts, and we should gather something from that of what would be the scope which they would seek to exercise, answering to a certain extent the suggestion of my friend from Massachusetts. I did not suppose the committee themselves could adopt the rules, nor did I deem it proper; neither did I think it appropriate to call upon the board; it would be the work of the committee and the committee would avail themselves of the board and the board would tell us just what they propose to do in starting this law in its operation.

Mr. HARRIS. I can tell the Senator from Maine now that the board will only undertake to form such rules and regulations as in its opinion are necessary to prevent the importation of contagious diseases.

Mr. HAMLIN. Let us have its opinion.

Mr. HARRIS. That is the whole matter. I am obliged to the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] for his interruption, because I am satisfied he can discuss this question much more interestingly and with much more ability than I can; but I am not sure that I remember the precise question he asked me, at the beginning of a question which ripened into an interesting speech of some length. But, so far as I remember the question, it was whether the board and the President, who are the only parties this bill requires to make these rules and regulations, shall judge for themselves as to the character of rules and regulations and the extent to which those rules and regulations shall go. I answer unquestionably yes, just as the Senator from Massachusetts is the judge of how far his power as a Senator upon this floor extends in the framing of any statute, any law, any rule or regulation that it may become his duty as a Senator to act upon.

Mr. DAWES. Then I am to understand the Senator to state that quoad hoc this is a Legislature, and its rules and regulations are to have the force of law, and there is the same redress and no other redress than lies against a statute of the United States which may infringe upon a constitutional right.

Mr. HARRIS. Just such a Legislature as is the Secretary of the Treasury. Your statute-book is groaning under the authorities given to that officer to make rules and regulations affecting some of the most important interests of the whole people of the country, and, as I think, wisely delegating the power to him to frame those rules and regulations and to enforce them. But if the Board of Health, with the approval of the President of the United States, shall transcend the limits of its power, and shall make rules and regulations not authorized by the laws of the United States—rules and regulations not needful to the accomplishment of the precise object that the act of Congress had in view—every citizen has the same remedy against the enforcement of such rules and regulations that he has against the enforcement of an unconstitutional act of Congress or an unconstitutional act of a State Legislature.

Mr. KERNAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. HARRIS. Yes, sir.

Mr. KERNAN. Under the language of this bill, is there not the discretion given to them, so that if they exercise it, no matter how erroneously, they are not liable?

> The National Board of Health shall make all needful rules and regulations authorized by the laws of the United States for the prevention of the introduction into, and spread within, the United States of contagious or infectious diseases, which shall be uniform.

When you clothe a board with power to make such regulations and rules as they shall deem necessary, if they honestly exercise their judgment, surely they will not be liable; and therefore I think it is dangerous.

Mr. HARRIS. Oh, Mr. President, I do not think there can be any construction that can be broader than I have given. The rules must be such as are authorized by the laws of the United States; they must be such as are necessary to the accomplishment of the specific object.

Mr. TELLER rose.

Mr. HARRIS. I will hear the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. TELLER. I ask now what laws are referred to? Is not this bill, if it becomes a law, their authority? Is not this the law under which they will act; and if they keep within this act which says they shall make all regulations that in their judgment are necessary, are they not justified?

Mr. HARRIS. Necessary for what purpose? Does not the bill specify?

Mr. TELLER. The purpose of carrying out the provisions of this act.

Mr. HARRIS. They must be needful rules, rules necessary to the accomplishment of the specific object named. But what I had intended to say on the amendment of the Senator from Maine is that

I think the National Board of Health the safest tribunal in America with which to lodge the power to make the rules and regulations necessary for the enforcement of this law. If, however, it is not sufficiently guarded, if there be danger of great wrong being done by the Board of Health transcending the limits of its power, danger of great interests being prejudiced or prostrated by reason of the unauthorized use of power, I have not the slightest objection, speaking for myself, to make the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury necessary to the validity of the rules, and if deemed necessary the approval of the Attorney-General of the United States may be required also. I have no objection to the adoption of any reasonable suggestion that any Senator may think it necessary to make in this respect. I want rules and regulations that will accomplish the object, and in accomplishing it, that will embarrass commerce just as little as it is possible to embarrass it, consistent with the object that I think paramount in importance to all other considerations, that of preventing the importation of contagion.

Mr. DAWES. May I make another inquiry of the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. HARRIS. Certainly.

Mr. DAWES. I should like to inquire what would be the remedy for any violation of the rights of individuals by these regulations? Would it be a remedy against the commissioners, against this Board of Health, against them individually, against them and the President, against them and the President and the Attorney-General if he be made a party, or would it be a remedy against the United States? They are officials, they discharge a duty, they act in good faith; and acting in good faith they cannot be personally liable. Will the United States assume to redress a grievance under these circumstances?

I was supposing they would act in the capacity of abating a nuisance. Suppose they order a man's house to be torn down because they think it is infected with small-pox, and it turns out that the rules and regulations were not authorized by the laws of the United States, where is the remedy? This is a complex subject, full of difficulties, and I ask these questions in all good faith.

Mr. HARRIS. The party might enjoin any one who proposed to enforce a rule and regulation that was inconsistent with the laws of the United States, and thus save his house from being torn down under it. There may, perhaps, be other remedies; perhaps there are abundant remedies in the form of actions for damages against the party who executes a void ordinance; but I do not propose to waste my own time or that of the Senate in rambling out into a wild field of speculative inquiry as to every possible remedy that might be resorted to in the event you authorize the Board of Health to make rules and regulations and in making them it goes far beyond the power and authority delegated to it, and then undertake to enforce them to the great injury and prejudice of the rights of citizens. I do not presume that there is any probability of any such case arising; but if there be such probability, it will be time enough to inquire into the remedy when a remedy has become necessary.

Now, Mr. President, the honorable Senator from Maine admits that this Board of Health should be consulted as to the framing of these rules and regulations. Why not allow them to make the rules and regulations? And if the honorable Senator thinks it is wise and proper to require the approval of other officers of the Government than the President, I have no objection to such addition; I have no objection to any amendment reasonable in itself and practical, that will not defeat or materially impair the object and purpose of the measure. I desire to make it as perfect as it is possible to make it, to confine as accurately and as nearly as it is possible to confine these rules and regulations to the accomplishment of the one object, which is to me and a large proportion of the people of this country so desirable and so important, the object of preventing the importation of contagion. Confine it as strictly to that as you please; but whatever power is necessary, whatever rules and regulations may become necessary, whatever inconvenience and burdens may be imposed upon commerce, important as that great interest is to the country, for myself I can say that I am ready to subject commerce to such delays, to such inconveniences, to such burdens as may be absolutely necessary to render commerce safe to the health and to the lives of the American people.

I hope the Senate will not recommit the bill. Let the Senate perfect it, throw additional restrictions upon the making of rules and regulations such as are reasonable and will not defeat the main object, and I will not object; but that the power to make rules and regulations should be lodged in the Board of Health is absolutely necessary in my opinion, if for no other reason, for the reason that rules and regulations may become necessary from time to time when Congress is not in session and when Congress cannot sit in judgment upon the question of the propriety or impropriety of the rules and regulations that may be so necessary under the emergencies and exigencies of the hour.

Mr. President, in regard to the amendment read for information by my friend the Senator from Alabama, [Mr. MORGAN,] I desire to say that for myself I have never yet been able to see the probability or even the possibility of any serious conflict between this bill and the sanitary laws of any State; and believing as I have believed and as I do believe that there is not only no probability but I scarcely see how there is a possibility of serious conflict between those authorities, I was willing at the last session of Congress, when a bill very similar to this was under consideration, to incorporate as an amendment upon it the precise language that the Senator from Alabama has presented.

Where can there be a conflict between the State authorities and the authorities of the Federal Government acting under the authority of this act?

This bill deals with commerce with foreign nations and among the several States. With these States cannot deal. It does not pretend to enter upon the broad and general duties of sanitary measures. It is not pretended that Congress has the power to enter upon that large and important field of sanitary work so necessary in every city, town, and village, such as the abatement of nuisances and general cleansing, purifying, and disinfecting, a work over which Congress has no power, but clearly within the powers and duties of States and municipalities.

In connection with his amendment my friend from Alabama refers to the fact that in the whole legislative history of this country there has been no such proposition as the one now pending before the Senate, that in all other acts on the subject of quarantine Congress has deferred to the States Congress has contented itself with relying upon the State regulations of quarantine for the protection of the lives and the health of the American people. I admit it. It is a sad and a melancholy fact that Congress has so relied, and the results that have followed that reliance are more eloquently announced by the appalling death-roll of the yellow-fever epidemics of 1867, 1873, and 1878—a system, if it can be called a system, which is utterly inefficient, and without uniformity or reliability. There are in a few given localities State or city quarantine regulations as perfect, I imagine, as any quarantine regulations can be made.

They have in the city of New York a system as perfect, as efficient, as safe as any system that the ingenuity of the human brain can devise; but New York happens to be the exception. There are only, I believe, seventeen States in the Union that pretend to quarantine regulations at all. The enforcement of State quarantine regulations is always embarrassed and rendered more or less uncertain by commercial rivalry and commercial jealousy. Each city and town will be reluctant to shut out its commerce until its rival has done the same, and in this way risks will be incurred fatal to safety.

Quarantine necessarily imposes restraints upon commerce, with which commerce is rarely if ever patient. I would not willingly impose a single burden or a single restraint upon that great interest that deserves to be fostered and cherished to the fullest extent that we legitimately can foster and cherish it. No restraint or burden would I impose upon it, except so far as absolutely necessary to protect the health and the lives of the people of the country; but to that extent, however great the burden or restraint may be, the protection of the lives and the health of the people is a consideration so immeasurably above all considerations of mere pecuniary interest that I am ready to go as far in that direction as may be necessary.

If this bill passes you will have a uniform quarantine system not interfering with the sanitary laws or the administration of the sanitary laws of the various States. The boards of health and health organizations from one end of the Union to the other are left unharmed and untouched to go on with all the sanitary work which in their judgment their various localities make necessary. We do not propose to enter upon that field of labor. We have no power to enter upon it; I mean that class of sanitary work that is found in abating nuisances, in general cleansing, purifying, and disinfecting cities, towns, villages, and crowded localities. That field of labor is occupied by and belongs legitimately to the States. We do not propose to interfere, nor do I think this bill if it passes will interfere with the sanitary regulations of any State. My theory of this bill is that it establishes a national quarantine as an outpost.

When a vessel from Liverpool comes to the national quarantine station, which is the frontier line, and before the vessel has reached the jurisdiction of the State of New York, the Federal Government says "Round to; let us see your papers; let us inspect your sanitary condition; let us see whether it is safe to allow you to enter an American port." If, upon inspection, the vessel, her cargo, her passengers, and her crew are found to be in such sanitary condition as to render it safe to admit it to an American port, she receives a certificate from the quarantine officer at that station and is permitted to go forward. She goes on to the New York quarantine station. There is nothing in this bill that forbids or attempts to forbid the State of New York or the State of Massachusetts from saying to that vessel when she reaches the State quarantine station "Stop here; show us your papers; let us inspect you." Let the State determine for itself whether her sanitary condition is such that she will admit the vessel to the port. There is nothing in this bill inconsistent with that. It leaves the whole machinery of the State quarantine intact, in full operation, and with all the rights that it possessed before, in my opinion.

But so far from conflicting, this bill requires the National Board of Health to co-operate with sanitary associations and State and municipal boards of health throughout the whole country, and to invite the co-operation of every State and municipal board of health in the land to co-operate with it. It not only proposes to co-operate and invites co-operation, but it authorizes the quarantine or health officers of the various States and municipalities to act as the agents of this Government to enforce the provisions of the laws of the United States and the rules and regulations made in pursuance thereof. They are invited as agents of the Federal Government to take charge of this law with its rules and regulations, and to enforce them, while it enforces the sanitary rules, regulations, and laws of the State so far as the State may require her laws in this respect to be enforced.

Practically, I have no doubt that if this bill becomes a law the result will be in less than eighteen months from to-day this act, with all the rules and regulations that may be made for its execution and enforcement, will be in the hands of the health officers of the States, acting as agents of the Federal Government, enforcing our regulations and laws, while they are also enforcing such of their own regulations as their local necessities may require. There will be perfect harmony between these associations and organizations. In my judgment there is nothing to be apprehended from conflict between them, but most perfect harmony may be expected to exist between them.

Mr. President, all that I desire is that the Senate shall give the bill and its various provisions a fair and full consideration. The object proposed to be accomplished is second in importance to no question that presents itself to the consideration of this Congress. The committee may have been unfortunate in shaping their bill. They may not have done the wisest and best thing. All that the committee can say is that it did the best it could; we have given the bill just such shape as in our judgment was the best thing to do under all the circumstances. It meets the unanimous approval of the committee; it meets the unanimous approval of the National Board of Health. The committee of the Senate unanimously present it to the Senate and ask for a fair and full consideration. If it be defective let us remedy the defects as far as it is possible to remedy them, and then let it be passed or defeated upon its merits; and I hope that that result may be reached at the earliest moment that it can be accomplished with convenience to the Senate. Of course I do not desire the Senate to subject itself to unreasonable hours or any personal inconvenience in order to hasten the consideration of the bill, but I do desire that it shall be disposed of just so soon, and it is important that it should be disposed of just so soon, as the Senate can conveniently dispose of it.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President——

Mr. VOORHEES. Will the Senator from Alabama yield to me for a personal explanation?

Mr. MORGAN. Certainly.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. VOORHEES. Mr. President, I rise for the purpose of noticing a little fictitious newspaper literature—a thing I seldom do. Writers of fiction have entertained and amused the world a great deal. In a paper known as the National Republican, this morning, there is a very prominent and quite a long article headed "A Day of Democratic Demoralization," wherein a description of what is said to be a caucus of democratic Senators is given, and in that description a speech is made for me and put in my mouth. Several other Senators are noticed as speaking, and then the article proceeds to say:

> Of these speeches, all of which were very short, that of Senator VOORHEES is described as the most violent and plain-spoken, as well as unguarded, harangue ever uttered in such an assemblage. He said, in effect, that there would be no use in trying to carry Ohio, Pennsylvania, and New York (especially New York) for the democrats next year unless the political riders in the Army bill are enacted into law in some way or another. This admission was made in such plain-spoken words as to convey the intimation that an honest count under the existing national election laws would prove disastrous to the democrats, and that a dishonest count under the repeal of those laws was an absolute prerequisite to democratic success. The murmurs of disapproval of this style of argument were not so loud nor so emphatic as to show that the practical politics of the Tall Sycamore of the Wabash was wholly unpopular among his hearers, and even the great presidential aspirant [THURMAN] himself, the "President de jure," is reported to have yielded an assent to VOORHEES's logic.

Inasmuch, Mr. President, as I was not there at all, was not in the caucus, and did not know of it until after it was over, not having received my notice, the accuracy and truthfulness of this writer will be appreciated by all the Senators present.

As a matter of course we are all at the mercy of persons of this kind, and it is hard to overtake a lie when the word "go" has been given to it; but I thought I would take as even a start as I could and have a race on this subject. That is all I have to say about it.

PREVENTION OF EPIDEMIC DISEASES.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 108) to prevent the introduction of contagious or infectious diseases into the United States, the pending question being on the motion of Mr. HAMLIN to recommit the bill with instructions.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, I have desired, as I have already indicated by the suggestion that I would offer some amendments to this bill, to follow the wish of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] and other members of the committee to try to perfect the bill here as far as possible; and yet I confess that I was very much impressed yesterday with the remarks of the Senator from New York [Mr. CONKLING] in reference to the lateness of the season and the probable hazard of venturing upon such a course of legislation at this time of the year—a course of legislation which, if it is understood by some of the members of the committee, as I have no doubt it is understood by them all, to be one that would abrogate to some extent, if not to every extent, the laws of the States on the subject of quarantine and other sanitary regulations, would be extremely hazardous at this time.

It has been said here that there are thirty-eight States all of which have been dealing with this subject, and for a good many years too, and it has been urged as one of the reasons why the National Government should take hold of this subject that these States in their dealings with this matter have got the subject into great confusion, each adopting for itself its own quarantine and sanitary regulations. These States have been going on, some of them for a hundred years, some of them for largely the greater period of a hundred years, in building up of quarantine and sanitary systems for their own regulation and the protection of the health of their own people. I think it must be conceded that in that space of time there has been a great accumulation of practical experience, and there has been the application of the wisdom of a great many very able men, both physicians and laity, upon this subject. For one, I would not rudely dispose of all this mass of collected wisdom and collected information on this very important subject; and certainly if I were to do so I would not venture at this time of the year to do it. I would not venture now to deprive any part of the United States and especially the endangered parts of the United States of those quarantine systems which for so many years have been considered sufficient in the protection of the health of the people.

Unless this extra session of Congress had been called the people would have been compelled to go on with their local regulations and to use them as far as they were available for the purpose of protecting the health of the different localities in the United States. We did not know at the time of the adjournment on the 4th day of March that this extra session of Congress would be called; and yet I heard no great clamor, no great outcry in the country because Congress had adjourned without having provided a national system of quarantine and sanitary regulations. While we all appreciate very fully the danger through which we passed during the last calamitous season, and while we apprehend of course with some keenness of expectation that these dangers may be renewed and increased during the present season, or some future season, yet it seemed to me that the people were at least satisfied with what Congress had done, or rather with what it had omitted to do, because I did not hear any clamor, as I have remarked, in favor of enacting a system of general sanitary regulation by Congress.

We are approaching the hot season, the epidemic season, and it seems to me to be a very dangerous experiment indeed now to venture upon any course which might strike down or paralyze the local institutions of this country ordained by law for the purpose of taking in charge this very subject of the public health. I think we can afford now to take time to mature a measure in Congress which will meet fully and completely all the requirements of the situation, and I do not believe that there is that urgency for action now which the gentlemen of the committee seem to think exists. The truth is that the very starting point of this legislation is a matter which is involved as yet in doubt throughout the whole medical profession of this country, and throughout the whole scientific corps of this country, and I may say of other civilized countries. The proposition whether or not the yellow fever is an importable disease has not been established to the satisfaction of the medical fraternity, either here or elsewhere. On the contrary it is a severely debated question, and there is as much opinion perhaps on the one side as there is on the other of the question. The whole of this legislation is based upon the idea that unless Congress takes hold of the subject and by some regulation through a board of health at Washington City undertakes to control the importation of yellow fever, there will be yellow fever imported here and it will spread throughout the country. That is the proposition. Of course I could not deny that proposition upon my own judgment or upon my own information, for I have no such knowledge of science or of medicine as would entitle me to speak at all upon a question of that kind, but I can say that many of the very highest authorities in this country and in England differ very widely upon this question. I think that the great mass of opinion in the medical fraternity is that this disease is not importable.

The honorable Senator from New York [Mr. CONKLING] remarked yesterday that he believed there was not a season when there was not to be found yellow fever in the harbor of New York. I dare say that that remark is entirely correct, and I believe it also to be entirely correct in reference to New Orleans and even in reference to Mobile, which is a healthier place, being in a healthier location, than New Orleans. Certainly no season passes when yellow fever is not at Havana, and very few, if any, pass when it is not found at Vera Cruz and perhaps at Tampico. We are legislating here upon the idea that the yellow fever never had its origin in this country. I fear that some of these days the scientists will have to acknowledge that in battling against this enemy they have to battle against an enemy that is born upon our own soil almost to as great a degree as they will have to battle against the same enemy born upon foreign soil and imported into this country.

In 1852 the Parliament of Great Britain organized a committee for the purpose of investigating this very question of the importable or transportable quality of the disease of yellow fever. That was a great committee, and it went to work not only in a diligent but in a most systematic way for the purpose of ascertaining through the best sources of information the whole truth upon this subject. The report was made on the 7th of April, 1852, by Lord Shaftesbury, Mr. Edwin Chadwick, and Mr. T. Southwood Smith. That report embodies a mass of information gathered through surgeons of the British army and surgeons of the British navy, and through scientific physicians sent abroad by the British government, who traversed every coast not only where yellow fever had its origin, but where its ravages had ever been spread. This information was collected from the very highest of all scientific sources. It was embodied in a solemn report to the British Parliament. There was never a subject that was more interesting to the British people than this, because their empire reached around the globe. In all the parts of the earth, in all the latitudes of the earth, the British colonies and the British people were to be found. Their armies and their navies visited almost every shore of civilization and every port in the world. They were subjected, therefore, to greater losses from the ravages of yellow fever than any other country, and they exhibited their interest in the subject by taking more pains to have it fully investigated than any other country has ever done. Now I will read some extracts from that report:

Yellow fever, like cholera, breaks out where there is not the slightest ground for supposing that it is derived from a foreign origin, where the strictest inquiry fails to trace it to an infected source, and often where communication with infected persons or articles is impossible. Take, for example, one of the most recent instances, the outbreak of yellow fever in Brazil in the autumn of 1849, a country in which it is supposed rarely to have occurred; and yet, if the disease be capable of importation as an epidemic, it must have been constantly carried from the west coast of Africa to Brazil by the numerous cargoes of slaves which, it is notorious, were smuggled into the latter country, closely packed together in slave-ships, under circumstances most favorable for preserving the virus of a contagious disease. It is stated by masters of ships that, during the prevalence of the late epidemic, though they came direct from Europe and held communication with no vessel of any kind on their passage, yellow fever made its appearance on board their ships as soon as they approached the coast of Brazil and came within the influence of the land breezes. Here communication with infected persons or articles was impossible, just as in the epidemic cholera of 1848, communication between the first persons attacked in London was proved to have been impossible.

The committee proceed to discuss the subject based upon this testimony, drawn from almost all the different localities of the civilized world, including the coasts of the United States, and after a very elaborate and full consideration they report the following propositions as being ascertained by them, and ascertained with sufficient certainty to enable them to report them to the British Parliament as a basis of action for the British government in reference to all of its possessions in every part of the earth:

From a consideration of the whole or the preceding evidence respecting yellow fever we have arrived at the following conclusions:

1. That yellow-fever epidemics break out simultaneously in different and distant towns, and in different and distant parts of the same town, often under circumstances in which communication with infected persons is impossible.

2. That yellow-fever epidemics are usually preceded by the occurrence of individual or sporadic cases of the disease, which sporadic cases are likewise common in seasons when no epidemic prevails.

3. That yellow-fever epidemics, though occasionally extending over large tracts of country, are more frequently limited as to the space over which they spread, often not involving the whole of a town, and sometimes not even any considerable district of it.

4. That yellow-fever epidemics do not spread from district to district by any rule of gradual progression, but often ravage certain localities, while they spare entirely or visit very lightly others in the immediate neighborhood with which the inhabitants are in constant intercommunication.

5. That yellow-fever epidemics, when they invade a district, do not spread from the houses first infected to the next, and thence to the adjoining, and thus extend as from a center; but, on the contrary, are often strictly confined to particular houses in a street, to particular houses on one side of a street, to particular rooms in the same house, and often even to particular rooms on the same story.

6. That in general, when yellow fever breaks out in a family, only one or two individuals are attacked; commonly the attendants on the sick escape; and when several members of a family are successively attacked, or the attendants on the sick suffer, either the epidemic was general in the locality, or the individuals attacked had gone into an infected district.

7. That when yellow fever is provalent in a locality, the most rigid seclusion in that locality affords no protection from the disease.

8. That, on the other hand, so great is the success attending the removal from an infected locality and the dispersion of the sick in a healthy district, that by this measure alone the further progress of an epidemic is often arrested at once.

9. That such dispersion of the sick is followed by no transmission of the disease, not even when the sick are placed in the wards of a hospital among patients laboring under other maladies.

10. That no one of the preceding facts can be reconciled with any other conclusion than that, whatever may be the exciting cause of yellow fever, it is local or epidemic in its origin; and the evidence of this conclusion is therefore cumulative.

11. That the conditions which influence the localization of yellow fever are known, definite, and, to a great extent, removable; and are substantially the same as the localizing causes of cholera and of all other epidemic diseases.

12. That, as in the case of all other epidemic diseases, in proportion as these localizing causes are removed or diminished yellow fever ceases to appear, or recurs at more distant intervals and in milder forms.

13. That besides the common external localizing causes there is one constitutional predisposing cause of paramount importance, namely, non-acclimatization—that is, the state of the system produced by residence in a cold climate; in other words, European blood exposed to the action of tropical heat; the practical lesson being that the utmost care should be taken to prevent individuals or bodies of men recently arrived within the yellow-fever zone from going into a district in which the disease actually exists or has recently been present.

14. That there is no evidence to prove that yellow fever has ever been imported.

15. That consequently the means of protection from yellow fever are not quarantine restrictions and sanitary cordons, but sanitary works and operations, having for their object the removal and prevention of the several localizing conditions; and, when such permanent works are impracticable, the temporary removal, as far as may be possible, of the population from the infected localities.

We deem it our duty to state, in conclusion, that from the most careful examination which we have been able to make of the mass of evidence submitted to us from which the foregoing conclusions have been deduced, we have not found a single fact or observation clearly ascertained and authentically recorded opposed to the general tenor of such evidence. We have met with no exceptional cases. We have indeed found the opinions of some authorities, for whom we entertain great respect, not in accordance on some points, but these have reference for the most part to matters of a purely professional and scientific nature. On the great practical question, whether, whatever be the nature and mode of propagation of yellow fever, quarantine and sanitary cordons can afford any real protection against its introduction and spread, we believe there is now a very general unanimity of opinion, in accordance with the evidence we have submitted, that they cannot. We believe there is the like general agreement in this further practical conclusion that the substitution of sanitary or hygienic measures for quarantine isolation and restriction would afford more certain and effectual protection.

I have perhaps wearied the Senate by reading so long a report as that, and it may appear to be entirely unnecessary that I should have referred to the report at all or that I should undertake to discuss this great question; but as I have stated before, the bill which is now so urgently pressed upon the attention of Congress is based upon the assumption that by quarantine regulations we can shut out the yellow fever from access to this continent, and that if it is shut out from access to this continent in that way we shall never have any yellow fever, because there is none of it indigenous to this climate and soil.

It will be seen that both these propositions are extremely debatable and that the very highest authority that can be quoted levels its opinion directly against the assumption that by quarantine restrictions we can shut out the importation of yellow fever from this continent. Therefore I argue in harmony with the proposition which was submitted by the Senator from New York yesterday, that there is perhaps no necessity for passing these laws in any haste; at all events we are not quite sure that after we have adopted the system which is presented to our consideration to-day we shall have taken a single step in the direction of shutting out the yellow fever; and yet, on the other hand, we have very lively apprehensions that if by doing this we shall restrain any local authority or interfere with any authority of the different States and ports of the country in the exercise of their full powers of sanitary and quarantine regulations, we may inflict very serious harm upon this country. When we come to balance these considerations, the one against the other, it seems to me that we shall be entirely justified in making some pause about this matter and in taking it into very serious and into very deliberate consideration.

The committee, no more than myself, have been under the impression that there was such a demand in public opinion for some action to be taken by Congress that we should find ourselves required by a prevailing public sentiment to do at least something in this direction. No one perhaps is more impressed with the necessity and urgency of this matter than myself. The board of health of my State, which had a recent session, has this morning communicated to me a most urgent appeal that I should assist in the passage of this bill, referring to the particular measure which has been prepared by the committee in conference with the National Board of Health. I therefore feel the greatest reluctance possible and the greatest amount of responsibility in venturing to make any question about the provisions of this bill or the general laws or principles upon which it is founded, yet I cannot believe, in the face of such evidence as I have just presented to the Senate, that the board of health of my State, which I acknowledge to be a set of gentlemen of ability and great probity, have arrived at conclusions which are more satisfactory or which more command my belief than those that I have just read from the report of this great committee to the houses of Parliament. In the reading which I have done in reference to this subject, as every man has read about it, of course I have continually come in view of statements made exactly in harmony with this British committee by the most eminent of American surgeons and physicians, among others Dr. Chapin, of New Orleans, who addressed a letter to the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GORDON] during the last session of Congress, in which the doctor very urgently declaimed against the passage of such laws by Congress, and said that whatever can be done with the view of controlling yellow fever or of shutting it out can be done and ought to be done by local authority.

The honorable Senator from Maine [Mr. HAMLIN] has made a motion to recommit this bill. Two members of the committee, the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] and the Senator from Arkansas, [Mr. GARLAND,] have intimated or very decidedly stated an opinion that the recommittal of the bill would answer no good purpose; that the committee have gone as far as they could go in the maturing of a bill. I believe they have gone as far as they can go in the maturing of that bill which is presented to us here now; but I must beg to say that I think they have proceeded upon a wrong principle. I believe that that committee could quite easily frame a bill which would be acceptable to Congress in the event that we could agree in advance about the principle upon which the bill was to be based.

The question that lies at the bottom of all this—the law question, and also the question of the sanitary power—is whether or not the quarantine power is one that ought to be exercised primarily and rightfully by the States, or whether it is one that primarily and rightfully belongs to Congress. It is attempted to deduce the power of Congress to regulate sanitary measures, as well as quarantine measures, from that provision of the Constitution which authorizes Congress to regulate commerce among the States. It is very clear that unless the power can be deraigned from that provision of the Constitution it is not to be found anywhere in the Constitution; but it has not been clear to my mind, I have not been able to see it, that because Congress may regulate commerce between the States and with foreign countries, it has the power to proceed further than is necessary for the regulation of commerce, that is to say, trade, traffic, merchandise, commercial intercourse between the States and between the people of the United States and foreign countries.

I admit, of course, that the line of demarkation is one that is very difficult to be drawn, and we shall never get rid of this difficulty; I believe it cannot be cured by legislation. It certainly has not as yet been cured or settled by legal definition, for the Supreme Court has frequently had this subject under consideration, and it admits its inability to define in decision the line of distinction between the powers of the States and the powers of Congress touching this subject or subjects that are cognate to it.

But there is in this case, as in every other, great virtue in a proper start. If in framing our laws on this subject we start upon the proper basis, we shall find that more harmony will enter into the management of all these different apparently conflicting interests than if we undertake to start from an improper basis. The power of Congress to regulate commerce between the States is not yet a hundred years old. The power of Congress to regulate commerce between the States was derived from the people of this country. At the time that power was thus derived and thus conferred upon Congress, the authority to regulate commerce between the States resided in the States themselves. That power which resided in the States themselves was taken up and transferred wholly and entirely to Congress. I say wholly and entirely. Perhaps that is too broad a remark; because there are some decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States which have affirmed that the States, notwithstanding this conferring of power upon the Congress of the United States, still have the power to regulate some matters that are quite essential to commerce. The Supreme Court of the United States have denied that the States, in the granting of what was apparently an exclusive power on the part of Congress, have indeed given up all power over the subject; but there are some remnants of power yet remaining in the hands of the States which have been recognized by the Supreme Court of the United States as being essential to the regulation of commerce and at the same time essential to the regulation of local affairs. They have been preserved in the hands of the States and within their local jurisdiction, because it appeared that the regulation of local affairs under such provisions was of more importance to the States than to the United States. But I concede, for the sake of the argument, that plenary and exclusive power to regulate commerce has been conferred upon Congress in the Constitution of the United States. Was it the understanding, when that power was thus transferred to Congress, that the different States of this country then existing and hereafter to exist transferred at the same time to Congress in this hidden way, this way which certainly was not plain and openly marked and defined and proclaimed, the power to regulate the sanitary condition of the States or ports thereof, the power to regulate the health of the people of a State, the power to protect those people according to the laws of the State against the introduction of disease and immorality and vice and villainy of every kind?

I think that the argument cannot be at all sustained, that the people of the different States in conferring the authority upon Congress to regulate commerce in or between the States and with the Indian tribes ever designed to yield up the power of protecting their own people against the encroachments of disease or vice either from abroad or from a neighboring State.

The two propositions stand together entirely reconcilable with each other, completely in harmony with each other. There is no danger that the Government of the United States can ever be injured by leaving the exercise of this power in the hands of the States themselves, because the very moment that the law of a State trenches in the slightest degree upon the power of Congress to regulate commerce between the States or with foreign countries, we have nothing to do but to test it in the courts; the Supreme Court or whatever other court comes along passes its decision, the State law falls, the purpose of it is lost and gone, it disappears, so that there can be no difficulty and no danger of a State, in virtue of its power to regulate the sanitary condition of its own people and protect them against disease, ever making any encroachment upon the power of Congress.

But transfer the subject, if you please, to the other side, and view it in that light. See what may be done; see what is done here to-day; see what this honorable and wise committee have found themselves compelled to do in order to exercise this new power, and through their ingenuity and under the pressure of this great weight of public opinion which is driving us into hasty legislation to find now that the Government has been mistaken from 1799 down to the present time in the construction of these respective powers of the States and of the Federal Government.

The act to which I referred yesterday was enacted on the 28th day of February, 1799, within about ten years after the adoption of the Federal Constitution. Then it was understood by the framers of that instrument, many of whom were in that very Congress, whose opinions were then fresh before the country; I suppose it was then quite as well understood as it is now what they conceived to be the true boundaries of power between the Federal Government and the States, and so they enacted in effect that all the officers of the Government of the United States who might have any opportunity should lend their assistance to the execution of the laws of any State respecting the subject of quarantine and sanitary regulations. That was the interpretation which was then put upon the Constitution, and it has been held from that day to this, and as I stated the other day, and the statement has not been contradicted at all, it has never been attempted to be reversed by the Congress of the United States. That principle thus established is the one I would invoke as the basis of whatever is to be done in the way of congressional legislation upon this subject.

I have been pleased, indeed, sir, I have been touched, with the free magnanimity of Senators on this floor who happen not to reside in the district which has been afflicted with this great calamity in coming forward here to express their entire willingness to do whatever can be done lawfully and constitutionally and with propriety to shut out and prevent hereafter this disease from getting into the country or from spreading over the country; but I do respect their scruples in regard to the exercise of a power which they do not feel that we possess, and which I cannot feel that we possess, although in the exercise of that power there might come great salvation, I may call it, to the people of the Southern States. I do not feel that we have the power to repeal the legislation of the States upon this subject. Thirty-eight States have legislated upon it, a large number of different municipalities under the authority of those States have further legislated upon it, until I dare say there is not now upon any one subject of public legislation so large a collection of laws to be found anywhere in the United States as there is with reference to this very subject of sanitary regulations and health and quarantine.

More than that, we are met here with the argument that there is a necessity for having uniform all legislation upon sanitary measures and quarantine. I grant that if you derive your power to legislate on this subject from the Constitution of the United States and from that part of it which relates to the regulation of commerce, you must make it uniform. You are compelled to make it absolutely uniform in order to comply with that feature of the Constitution which forbids that there shall be any discrimination in favor of one port or place against another; then we come to the uniformity of the measure. I should like to inquire as a matter of practical common sense whether the quarantine and sanitary regulations that apply to the port of Boston, or to any port upon the New England coast, are the same and ought to be entirely uniform with those that apply to Mobile, to Pensacola, to New Orleans, and to Galveston? Shall we undertake here to establish a uniform system of rules and regulations that shall operate perforce equally and exactly alike in all the different harbors and ports and places of the United States which are liable to the access of infectious or contagious diseases?

If one were to come forward as a member of a board of health and to tell me that he believed he could fix up a set of laws and regulations which would perfectly regulate the health of all these different ports and shores and all these different latitudes I would say to him, "Will you permit me and the rest of my colleagues in Congress, the President, and all the people of this country, to yield into your omniscient hands the whole regulation of all the affairs of this country, for if you can do that there is nothing that you cannot do." I should think that that was one of the most impossible of all the enterprises the human mind could enter upon. A man or any five or ten men who could promise the success in sitting down in Washington City to regulate the health of this entire country by rules and regulations to be adopted here and promulgated from hence, I should think would do more than any set of men that the mercy of God has ever yet permitted to be incorporated into the body of society.

I think, on the contrary, the very requirement that these rules and regulations shall be uniform is one of the strongest arguments why we should not undertake to adopt them, for the reason that in doing so we should dispense with all practical wisdom and all practical experience gathered on the spot at all the different places in the United States. I am not willing to throw that away. I would rather utilize it, and I would rather utilize it in the hands of the men who have had long experience and knowledge in reference to the subject. I do not know anything that I would more deplore than to see what I conceive to be a wonderful system of scientific regulation that prevails in the harbor of New York through its health boards dissipated and driven out by a set of rules and regulations that might be attempted to be adopted in Washington City by a national board of health. That is, therefore, an argument to my mind directly against the propriety of this legislation. I do not want to localize the power over the health and sanitary condition of this country in the hands of a board in Washington City or anywhere else, no matter how distinguished the gentlemen may be and no matter where they may have come from. I think it is a dangerous experiment and ought not to be indulged.

It has been suggested, and I think with great force too, that the third section of the bill, in conferring jurisdiction or power upon this board, substitutes the board for the law-making power of the United States. The justification of this part of the proceeding is twofold: first, that without such regulations the board can do no good. If this board can do no good without having transferred to it the law-making power of the United States we had better not have it, for it may do more harm in the enactment of laws than it will ever do good in the restraint upon disease. The second proposition is that the Board of Health, in legislating upon this subject and in providing rules and regulations attended with penal if not criminal consequences, finds a precedent in some of the laws which give to the Secretary of the Treasury the power to make some regulations of commerce or regulations in regard to the sailing, or the unloading, or the anchorage perhaps, of ships. There is no analogy between the two cases at all; but granting, for the sake of the argument, that there might be one supposed, I do not understand that the Secretary of the Treasury or any other Secretary of the United States has the right to prescribe penal regulations and compel a court of the United States to recognize those regulations and convict a man of crime denounced against him simply by a rule of one man in this country.

If we had a regulation which imposed upon a citizen of this country or any individual in it criminal penalties and criminal punishment for its violation, and that regulation is to be enforced through a court of justice, I should say that that regulation was necessarily unconstitutional, for I think that no man can be deprived of his life, liberty, or property in this country without due course of law, as well as due process of law. It must be done in obedience to law; and law in this country, when enforced by a court or by anybody else, is that which is enacted, so far as Congress is concerned, by the tribunals named in the Constitution and in the manner prescribed to those tribunals to regulate and control their action.

Unquestionably the third section of the bill does confer, if it confers anything at all upon the Board of Health to be assembled in Washington City, full power to enact laws. In all the States of this Union I suppose (I know it is true in my own State, and I think it is true in many others) criminal laws have been enacted for the purpose of enforcing the quarantine and sanitary regulations. These laws of the States are not only to be repealed by this Board of Health, but it is insisted here that this board has the power to substitute those laws by others which will repeal them. Is it possible that the power of punishing people for the violation of quarantine and sanitary regulations, which has existed always in the States and has been exercised by them, shall be broken down, I will not say by an act of Congress, but by an act of a board of health, and substituted by new laws having new and different penalties, and that the courts of this country can be required to enforce those laws? I think not.

The honorable Senator from Maine, in his motion to recommit this bill, has accompanied it with certain features in the nature of instructions to the committee to report a system of rules and regulations such as the committee may prescribe in the bill they are to report, and which the Board of Health may adopt and enforce. If we have time to pass such a bill, or if the Board of Health have time to pass regulations, before the time that the disease is to attack us, and if this matter is of the consequence that Senators seem to think it is, why could it not be provided that the Board of Health shall submit to Congress these regulations, and let us pass upon them seriatim, to see whether or not they suit us and whether or not we shall omit to give the sanction of the law-making power of this country to them?

Mr. President, you can never satisfy the people of this country when you abdicate the duties of legislation and transfer them to a board of health; and nobody is going to be content with such laws. They will positively have no effect in the United States, because they will have no acceptance in popular opinion. The whole judgment of the country would be against such legislation, and we should be considered as having gone away from our duty in not having given the sanction of Congress to the laws and regulations of a penal and criminal character to which we required the obedience of the people of this country. There is no occasion, I think, for this new departure from the ordinary methods of legislation, and no occasion to tear up, root and branch, the whole of this vast, intricate, and wise system which has been adopted in the different States, suited to different localities and peculiarly adapted to the diseases which enter there and which may have their spread from those places.

I desire, in concluding my remarks, to read from the case of the Railroad Company vs. Husen, in 5 Otto, what I conceive to be about as fair a definition of the powers of the States and Congress on this subject as has been given at all:

> We admit—
>
> Say the Supreme Court—
>
> that the deposit in Congress of the power to regulate foreign commerce and commerce among the States was not a surrender of that which may properly be denominated police power.

That is my position. It is not a surrender; it was never a surrender of that which may be denominated as the police power.

> What that power is it is difficult to define with sharp precision. It is generally said to extend to making regulations promotive of domestic order, morals, health, and safety. As was said in Thorp vs. The Rutland and Burlington Railroad Company, 27 Vermont, 149, "it extends to the protection of the lives, limbs, health, comfort, and quiet of all persons, and the protection of all property within the State. According to the maxim, sic utere tuo ut alienum non lædas, which, being of universal application, it must of course be within the range of legislative action to define the mode and manner in which every one may so use his own as not to injure others." It was further said that by the general police power of a State "persons and property are subjected to all kinds of restraints and burdens in order to secure the general comfort, health, and prosperity of the State, of the perfect right of the Legislature to do which no question ever was, or upon acknowledged general principles ever can be, made, so far as natural persons are concerned." It may also be admitted that the police powers of a State justify the adoption of precautionary measures against social evils. Under it a State may legislate to prevent the spread of crime, or pauperism, or disturbance of the peace. It may exclude from its limits convicts, paupers, idiots, and lunatics, and persons likely to become a public charge, as well as persons afflicted by contagious or infectious diseases, a right founded, as intimated in the Passenger cases, 7 Howard, 283, by Mr. Justice Grier, in the sacred law of self-defense. (Vide 3 Sawyer, 283.) The same principle, it may also be conceded, would justify the exclusion of property dangerous to the property of citizens of the State; for example, animals having contagious or infectious diseases. All these exertions of power are in immediate connection with the protection of persons and property against noxious acts of other persons, or such a use of property as is injurious to the property of others. They are self-defensive.

I claim that that power of self-defense, as it is called by the Supreme Court, on the part of communities in the different States was never surrendered when we yielded to Congress the power to regulate commerce; and, as I have observed, the two can stand together without any difficulty.

Mr. President, I regret very much indeed that other Senators than those who are upon this committee had not thought proper sooner to present their views in the form of bills or resolutions, to draw the attention of Senators on the committee to the diversity of opinion which might exist here, and also to what I have conceived the better methods of arriving at these conclusions that seem so very desirable, if not so very necessary. I think that a bill framed upon an idea like this in the first section would be a bill that would meet with general acceptance on the part of Congress and be exactly in harmony with the whole course of our legislation since 1799:

> That the sum of $650,000 is hereby appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be expended as hereinafter provided, to aid in the execution of such quarantine and health laws of any State respecting any vessel arriving in, or bound to, any port or district thereof, or respecting any person or thing bound to, or arriving in, any place in the United States from any foreign state or country.

I have no doubt at all that whenever a great calamity like this visits any part of the United States, whether it visits its people, or whether it visits its property, or animals useful for human food or human service, it is entirely within the purview of Congress to render assistance to the local laws and the local agencies for the purpose of resisting such a calamity. We would do so to prevent the destruction of property by the grasshopper; we would do so to prevent the destruction of property by the cotton-worm. Many examples exist in our legislation of this character; and I have no hesitancy in committing myself thoroughly to the principle that whenever a great national emergency of this sort arises it is the duty of Congress to give such assistance to the local authorities as it may deem wise and just in the resisting or dispelling of the infection and the invasion, of whatever kind it may be. So I should have no difficulty at all now in appropriating money to any part of the United States where it might be expected either that the disease called yellow fever would be imported or where it might be expected to spring up from natural causes, either to prevent its coming or to prevent its spreading after it did come, or to assist in the cure of it after it had made its terrible invasion; and I hope that Congress will always feel willing to give its assistance to the local authorities in carrying such measures into effect.

Are we to suppose that any set of people in the world who have the means are going to sit still and allow diseases to invade their communities in the way the yellow fever came into the Southern States last year, without making any effort, or without making whatever efforts their means will allow? I have no doubt that if there be a city in the United States whose community is unable, from poverty or from other cause, to resort to proper preventive and precautionary measures to keep out the disease, we should assist those people with money, and they would readily go forward and make every possible preparation in advance against the appearance of such a disease; they would do it upon the principle of self-preservation; and Congress and all other parts of the United States can rely with absolute confidence not only upon the disposition of those people to protect themselves, but also, I think, upon their intelligence in doing so.

I will vote for the motion to recommit the bill in the hope that the honorable committee will find in the expression of opinions here some way of arriving at a conclusion in the report they next make satisfactory to Congress. If the bill is not recommitted, I shall try to amend it; if it is not amended, I cannot vote for it unless the difference between the honorable Senator from Tennessee and the honorable Senator from Arkansas can be reconciled; for the Senator from Tennessee tells us that he does not believe that it is at all necessary to put any restriction in this bill or any qualification upon its operation and effect, so as to prevent it from coming into direct hostile collision with the laws of the States; but I understood the honorable Senator from Arkansas to say that the amendment which I proposed to offer went to the core of the whole subject, and that if that amendment was adopted it was useless for the committee to undertake to further perfect this bill upon the theory contained in the amendment. Therefore it seems clear that there is a radical difference of opinion in the outset of this businesss, and I should like to see that difference of opinion reconciled and harmonized, and I should be glad to know that the gentlemen would give their assistance to the very same line that Congress has so long pursued of aiding the local authorities rather than tearing them up, throwing them aside, and substituting in place of them a new authority, an untried authority, and, as I think, a very dangerous authority.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. COCKRELL in the chair.) The question is on the motion of the Senator from Maine [Mr. HAMLIN] to recommit the bill with instructions to the committee.

Mr. JONAS. Mr. President, I had not intended to take any part in this debate; but being a member of the committee which prepared the bill, I perhaps am expected to say something in answer to the honorable Senator who has just taken his seat.

The honorable Senator, in order to show that it is the opinion of scientists that the yellow fever is not imported into this country but originates here, read from the report of a committee appointed in Great Britain in 1852, just twenty-seven years ago. Why, Mr. President, at that time yellow fever and its treatment was hardly known either by the British people or by the people of this country. The most terrible epidemic which has ever devastated those portions of the country where yellow fever goes, and particularly that city where I reside, occurred in 1853. It was followed by an epidemic in 1854 and by another in 1855, these being the only exceptions in modern times when epidemics have followed each other in succeeding years. Then there was no epidemic until 1858, and again until 1867, and again until last year, 1878.

I may say that in every one of those epidemics the medical profession and scientists of this country have been enlightened or have learned something or have changed their views in relation to the treatment of yellow fever; and I may state it as a fact which cannot be contradicted that in the city where I reside, where the epidemics of yellow fever have been more frequent than in the other cities of the Union, and where more attention has been paid to its treatment and where its cure has been more successful than anywhere else, the opinion of nine-tenths of the medical profession and the gentlemen entitled to be leaders in that profession is that the disease is an imported disease which does not originate either in that city or in any city of the United States, and that it can be kept out by a careful and rigid system of quarantine. That is the opinion of the board of health of my city, presided over by one of the most eminent physicians and surgeons in this country, Dr. Chopin, and it is moreover his opinion, and the opinion of his board, that State quarantine associations, with the limited aid which States are able to afford to those quarantine associations either in respect of money or in respect of adequate power to carry out those regulations which are necessary to make them effective, cannot be efficient enough for the purpose, and that national quarantine laws should be passed; and they are willing, if necessary, to abdicate some portion of that power, which the honorable Senator says should be so carefully guarded, to the National Government if the National Government is prepared through a proper quarantine board and proper quarantine laws and regulations to take charge of this important duty of preserving the health of the country from the importation of epidemic diseases.

Mr. President, I say that a State organization cannot be thoroughly effective for this purpose, and it is plainly enough demonstrated by the fact that no State quarantine can have control and no State can give control to its quarantine or health authorities beyond the lines and limits of the State. Although there was a terrible epidemic last year there was also a terrible panic, a panic unexampled in the history of epidemics. Though I and every other Senator, probably, representing a State where there have been epidemics of yellow fever, remember many epidemics, most of them equally fatal and equally general with the one of last year, it is generally admitted that the epidemic of last year was imported into this country. That is the opinion of a large majority of the medical profession and scientists of the South—imported through imperfect quarantine regulations.

Mr. MORGAN. I wish to ask the Senator this question: Has he ever known a year in Louisiana when there was not some yellow fever in New Orleans?

Mr. JONAS. I will answer that. I have known many years when there was not a single case of yellow fever in New Orleans, and many more years when there was no epidemic in New Orleans. There was no yellow fever in New Orleans from 1858 to 1866. There were a few sporadic cases in 1866, and there was an epidemic in 1867. There was no yellow fever from 1867 to 1878, except a few sporadic cases in 1873, 1874, and 1875. There was none in 1868; there was none in 1869; there was none in 1870.

Mr. MORGAN. What were the sporadic cases?

Mr. JONAS. They were cases of disease which could be treated and restrained. If it was yellow fever at all it was that character of yellow fever which did not spread and which was easily treated. The climatic conditions were the same, the condition of the city was the same, the city was in no different condition last year than in previous years. If it was not drained, if its sanitary condition was not good, if it was dirty, it has been so unfortunately from the lack of means to make it otherwise, for many years, and there was no difference and no more reason why there should be a terrible epidemic last year than there has been in the ten or fifteen years last past. The disease was imported, it is believed on the best authority. It passed the guard of the State quarantine because that State quarantine was not sufficiently rigid; and the terrible consequences are realized by everybody.

Mr. MAXEY. I can furnish the Senator from Louisiana with the fact that the exclusion of yellow fever from Texas was the result of the most rigid quarantine.

Mr. JONAS. And other places in the State of Louisiana, in Mississippi, in Arkansas, in Texas, and in the Senator's own State, Alabama, were similarly protected and kept free from the disease by a thorough and effective quarantine.

Mr. President, I say that this quarantine to be effective must be general, and to be general and thoroughly effective it must be protected by a power that can pass the boundaries of State lines. I say, moreover, that not only must the quarantine thus be protected to be effective, but the great interests of commerce must be protected also from causeless panics which may ensue unless there is such a quarantine as to give satisfaction to the people.

Now we will suppose, for instance, that the quarantine at the mouth of the Mississippi River is thoroughly effective; we will suppose that that quarantine is such that, although vessels may arrive at the mouth of the river with yellow fever on board, it may be kept from getting to New Orleans and from passing up the river. But suppose the quarantine is not national; suppose the quarantine board of Louisiana has not sufficient credit or sufficient authority to make the fact believed throughout the length and breadth of the land that no yellow fever exists; suppose that there is not a single case of yellow fever in Louisiana, but that the citizens on the Gulf coast in the towns of Pass Christian, Pascagoula, and Mississippi City, all on the route between New Orleans and Mobile, forming the great route by which the mails are carried and almost all the commerce transacted between New Orleans and the North, think it does exist; suppose, through a causeless panic and the belief the citizens of any one of these villages should entertain that yellow fever may exist in the city of New Orleans, the village of Pascagoula establishes a quarantine against the city of New Orleans, a quarantine established by ordinance and maintained by an armed force with shot-guns, the result is that the commerce of that entire city and the commerce of the State of Texas is entirely suspended by this village quarantine, which may result from a panic and be without any proper authority or justification whatever. Over that route go the United States mails, and over that route go all the passengers from Louisiana and Texas, through the States of Alabama, Georgia, Tennessee, and Virginia, on their way to the North; and all this commerce, and all this traffic, and all these passengers may be stopped by a quarantine causeless in its nature and unjustifiably enacted by a village in the State of Mississippi or the State of Alabama, or any village in the State of Georgia.

Mr. MORGAN. I wish to say that the suggestion of the Senator from Louisiana indicates that he expects to rely on this law for the purpose of preventing interior municipalities from quarantining against New Orleans. Now, I ask if that is not one of the distinct purposes of this bill in putting the power into the hands of the national board, to prevent the localities and municipalities up the river from New Orleans and on the railroads from preventing the access of people and merchandise to their places and thereby the carrying of yellow fever to their communities? Is not that the very purpose of this bill?

Mr. JONAS. The purpose of this bill is to put this whole matter under the charge of the Federal Government; it is to make it a general and national matter.

Mr. MORGAN. And with it, as I understand the honorable Senator, to confer power on the national board to prohibit the local municipalities in the different States quarantining against New Orleans, or against Mobile, or against Galveston, or Pensacola, or any other place to which the yellow fever may come from abroad.

Mr. JONAS. To prevent their quarantining against any of those ports when no yellow fever exists in those ports, and to permit the national board to judge of the proper mode and manner of quarantining against those cities when yellow fever exists there. It is to place the power in one board and in a board which is capable of enforcing it, so that if there is a necessity for a quarantine to protect the citizens of Mississippi against New Orleans the National Board of Health can enforce that quarantine, so that if there is any necessity to protect the citizens of Mobile and Alabama against New Orleans those ports can be quarantined and protected against New Orleans, and so that the quarantine shall not be in the charge of every irresponsible village community or corporation that shall think proper for purposes of their own, or perhaps from rival trade interests, to quarantine a great metropolis and to interfere with commerce and carrying the mails of the United States.

Mr. President, the honorable Senator says that it is a proper object for Congress to devote money for the purpose of relieving these stricken communities when they are attacked by this pestilence, and that he will vote money for that purpose and will justify its employment for that purpose. We think that an ounce of prevention is better than a pound of cure. We do not want again to rely on the generous communities of the North and the West for assistance in our hour of extremity and need. We wish to guard against this pestilence; we wish to prevent its introduction into the country; we wish to give the quarantine system at least a fair and perfect trial. We wish to have a quarantine at the gates of the country, at the ports of the country, which shall make it impossible that this disease can ever penetrate if imported; and we wish to spend the money of the Government in order to prevent the southern section of the Union being again compelled to depend upon the charities of the people of the country for assistance.

I think that the system of State quarantine which the gentleman praises so highly has proved wholly ineffectual. I admit the splendid character of the quarantine at the city of New York; I admit that there may be effective quarantine in other ports; but I say the experience of the past has demonstrated that it is not generally well managed or effective and that it all requires some general control and some general legislation by the National Government. I think there is nothing in this bill which will interfere needlessly or causelessly with any State regulation. There is nothing in this bill which threatens the efficiency of the quarantine in New Orleans, in Boston, or in New York as managed by the State authorities; but there is this in the bill: it provides that if the State shall be deficient or inefficient in enforcing proper quarantine regulations to keep disease out of the country, the duty shall be performed by the National Government and shall be put in the hands of a board that shall be able to perform it and compel its performance without any difficulty imposed by a conflict between State lines and State authorities.

I sincerely trust, Mr. President, that the bill will not be recommitted and will not longer linger in the hands of a committee when the disease, if it is to appear at all this year, is imminent, and when the State authorities in every State threatened with the importation of this disease will gladly welcome the assistance of the Federal Government in order to enable them to keep it out and keep it from ravaging their country, and, perhaps, the whole Union this year.

SENATOR FROM LOUISIANA.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, I ask leave to make a report at this time. I am instructed by the Committee on Privileges and Elections to report the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Privileges and Elections, to which was referred the memorial of Henry M. Spofford, praying permission to produce evidence relating to the right of Hon. WILLIAM PITT KELLOGG to the seat in the Senate held by him from the State of Louisiana, and in support of the claim of said petitioner thereto, be, and said committee is hereby, instructed to inquire into the matters alleged in said petition, and for that purpose said committee is authorized and empowered to send for persons and papers, administer oaths, and do all such other acts as are necessary and proper for a full and fair investigation in the premises. Said committee may, in its discretion, appoint a subcommittee of its own members to make such investigation in whole or in part; which subcommittee shall have authority to employ a clerk, stenographer, and sergeant-at-arms, and shall have all the powers of the general committee to administer oaths and send for persons and papers, and may make such investigation either in Washington or in the State of Louisiana; and said committee or its subcommittee may sit in vacation.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I object to the present consideration of the resolution.

Mr. CONKLING. That brings up the whole question of reviewing the case, I take it.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Undoubtedly.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let the resolution be printed. We can consider it to-morrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. COCKRELL.) The resolution is objected to and it goes over under the rules, and will be printed.

Mr. HOUSTON. I ask in reference to the resolution reported by the Committee on Privileges and Elections if it is not a privileged question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is the Senator's point that it does not come under the rule which requires all motions to lie over one day when objected to?

Mr. HOUSTON. I understand that a question before the Senate in relation to seating or unseating one of its members is a privileged question, and of course if the direct question is a privileged one, all questions pertinently growing out of it and pertaining to it, in a way that it cannot be progressed with without their adoption by the Senate, are also privileged questions and are not to be postponed because of a single objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair decides that under the rules of the Senate the motion goes over upon one objection.

Mr. HOUSTON. I should like to hear the rule read, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Rule 33:

All resolutions shall lie over one day for consideration, unless by unanimous consent the Senate shall otherwise direct.

Mr. HOUSTON. I noticed at the last session of this body that in a contest growing out of a contested election the then presiding officer, who is not now here, decided that a report from a committee proposing to seat a certain gentleman was a privileged question and took precedence of a question which was then under discussion and which was unfinished business.

Mr. CONKLING. Under what rule was that decision made, will the Senator state?

Mr. HOUSTON. My recollection is that the Chair did not state anything about a rule except that it was a privileged question, and it took its place because it was privileged; and the privilege grew out of the fact, as I think in this case, that it concerned the seating or unseating of one of the members of this body. I shall not appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The present occupant does not recollect the decision referred to. The Chair has decided the question as he thinks the rule requires.

Mr. HOUSTON. I shall not appeal.

Mr. HOAR. The Chair will permit me to state that when the judgment in this very case which it is now sought to reverse——

Mr. HOUSTON. I have not appealed from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. HOAR. Have I not the same right to be heard as the honorable Senator from Alabama had?

Mr. HOUSTON. I was presenting a question of order, and then I had a right to be heard. I have no question of order now before the Senate, having withdrawn it.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator from Alabama addressed the Senate after the decision of the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts has the floor.

Mr. HOUSTON. I addressed the Chair because I was presenting the point of order to get the Chair to change his opinion if I could.

Mr. HOAR. Does the Senator from Alabama object to my proceeding?

Mr. HOUSTON. I do not.

Mr. HOAR. Then I have the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has decided that the Senator from Massachusetts has the floor, and he can proceed if he desires.

Mr. HOAR. I was about to state that in the case to which the honorable Senator from Alabama has referred, to wit, the Kellogg case, at the time it was decided by the Senate, a decision precisely the reverse of what the honorable Senator supposes was made by the Chair. On a motion to proceed with that case, made by the honorable Senator from Ohio, [Mr. THURMAN,] the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] demanded that the motion be reduced to writing. On its being reduced to writing by that Senator and read at the table the Senator from Vermont objected, and it went over one day under the rule.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is so.

Mr. CONKLING. Went over under the fiftieth rule and not under this.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. GARLAND. I understand the health bill is before the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is.

Mr. GARLAND. I wish to take the floor on the pending bill before the Senate unless some Senator who opposes the bill desires to speak upon it.

Mr. WALLACE. Now, with the Senator's permission, I move that the Senate adjourn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania moves that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I hope the Senator will withdraw that motion for a moment.

Mr. WALLACE. Certainly.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to know why we cannot get on with the public business. It is now only three o'clock, and there is an appropriation bill that ought to be reported, and I should like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations at what time we may expect a report on the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill? Congress has been called here for that special purpose, and that committee which is usually so very prompt and diligent in the performance of its duties has had this bill for some days. I should like to know why it is that we cannot have it reported and proceed to act upon it?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I believe that bill came here day before yesterday morning, two days ago. It had to be printed afterward. It is a long bill, perhaps seventy or eighty pages; I do not recollect the number of pages. A subcommittee has been at work on it, and it is probable the main committee may get hold of it to-morrow. When it will get out we cannot tell the Senator, but we are working on it as diligently as we think the public interest requires.

Mr. EDMUNDS. May I not ask the Senator whether it is not the same bill that the two Houses agreed upon at the last session excepting the matters that are extraneous to the appropriations?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. It is practically the same bill, but the Senator knows that there are a number of members of the Appropriations Committee who were not in the previous Congress, and the bill requires, as the committee thought, the same care as if it had not been before a previous Congress. I will say to the Senator, however, that there has been but one day for work upon a bill of sixty or seventy pages.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The bill came here on Monday, I understand.

Mr. WALLACE. I renew my motion that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. CONKLING. I rise to ask a question of the Chair. Has the Senate adopted an order adjourning over to-morrow, or is this a motion to adjourn until to-morrow?

Mr. WALLACE. Until to-morrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate declined this morning to adopt a motion for an adjournment until Monday. If this motion prevails the adjournment will be to twelve o'clock to-morrow. The question is on the motion to adjourn.

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 27, noes 18.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I call for the yeas and nays. ["No! no!"] Senators say "No! no!" We are beaten; we may as well give it up.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator withdraw the call?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (at three o'clock and nine minutes p. m.) The motion is agreed to, and the Senate stands adjourned until twelve o'clock to-morrow.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, May 1, 1879.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. P. HARRISON, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

VOTE ON LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I rise to make a request of the House which I have not made before during a service of ten years. On last Saturday when the vote was taken on the passage of the legislative appropriation bill I was absent, regarding myself as paired with my friend from Connecticut, [Mr. WAIT.] He regarded the pair as having expired and voted on the passage of the bill. I now desire unanimous consent to record my vote in the affirmative on the passage of that bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent to record his vote in the affirmative on the passage of the legislative appropriation bill. Is there objection?

Mr. GARFIELD. The case having been one of misunderstanding, I think the request ought to be granted.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the rule will be vacated, and by unanimous consent the gentleman is allowed to record his vote.

Mr. WHITE. I have no objection, but I know a similar request was refused last session.

The SPEAKER. The rule is against it; it can only be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. WAIT. The statement which my friend from Virginia [Mr. HARRIS] has just made is correct. There was a misunderstanding between us with regard to the limit of the pair. According to my recollection it terminated on the Tuesday before the vote was taken on the legislative bill. He supposed that the pair covered the time of voting on that bill whenever it should occur. Laboring under that misunderstanding Judge HARRIS did not return here to vote on the bill. I sincerely trust that his request to have his vote recorded at the present time will be granted, as I know he acted with entire integrity.

The SPEAKER. This case is different from the case to which the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WHITE] perhaps alludes. This is a case where a member supposed he was paired and there was a misunderstanding, there being no want of good faith in any respect.

Mr. CONGER. This of course we all understand is a case where the recording of a vote would not alter the result at all. If it was such a case as that it would be different.

The SPEAKER. No vote could be received that would alter the result. But the rule is against even this, and unanimous consent is necessary to enable the gentleman to record his vote. The Chair will submit it in that way, that the rule be vacated and that by unanimous consent the House allows the gentleman from Virginia to record his vote. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. CHITTENDEN. I desire to state that I was absent on Saturday by permission of the House, and I supposed I had a pair, but I find no mention of it in the RECORD. I ask the same permission to record my vote as has been granted to the gentleman from Virginia.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks the same permission under the same circumstances to record his vote on the same bill.

Mr. CONGER. I would be very sorry to have a vote received that would change, for example, the vote of yesterday, where there was a tie.

Mr. WHITE. In this case the two gentlemen may be considered as paired.

The names of Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia, and Mr. CHITTENDEN were then called by the Clerk, and Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia, voted "ay" and Mr. CHITTENDEN "no" on the passage of the legislative appropriation bill.

COIN AND BULLION CERTIFICATES.

The SPEAKER. The unfinished business coming over from yesterday is the resolution of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WARNER] that on Saturday next the House will proceed to consider the bill (H. R. No. 564) to amend certain sections of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to coinage and coin and bullion certificates, and for other purposes.

Mr. COX. I ask unanimous consent——

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that consent ought not to be asked in reference to matters extraneous to the business now before the House. The question had been put on ordering the main question, and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] demanded the yeas and nays, and the yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. I would like to have the resolution read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That House bill No. 564, and the amendments thereto, reported from the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, be made the special order for consideration in the House on Saturday next after the morning hour, and from day to day thereafter until disposed of.

Mr. STEPHENS. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. Suppose this resolution is voted down, will not the bill be immediately before the House for consideration?

The SPEAKER. Unless the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WARNER] has a different instruction the bill, if this resolution is voted down, will come immediately before the House because it has been reported.

Mr. ATKINS. The gentleman from Ohio can state whether he has any further instruction from his committee.

Mr. WARNER. I have no other instruction.

Mr. STEPHENS. Well, Mr. Speaker, I am prepared to take the bill up for consideration to-day. If the opposition disagree to postpone the consideration until Saturday I hope the resolution will be voted down.

Mr. GARFIELD. I would remind the gentleman that there is a privileged order set for to-day in regard to the veto message.

The SPEAKER. This comes over as unfinished business and the previous question was seconded.

Mr. GARFIELD. Not on the bill.

The SPEAKER. The previous question was seconded on the resolution.

Mr. GARFIELD. There is nothing before the House but the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The yeas and nays have been ordered on ordering the main question.

Mr. GARFIELD. That is merely on the resolution as to the time when we will consider the bill.

The SPEAKER. It comes over as unfinished business.

Mr. GARFIELD. The resolution is unfinished business, but the bill is not unfinished business.

The SPEAKER. That is all the Chair is stating at present. The Chair, however, will state that in the absence of any other instruction or any other course being suggested to the Chair by the gentleman who reports the bill, the bill having been reported, comes up for consideration under the recent rules. But it may be interfered with by a question of higher privilege, such as the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] has alluded to; but after the disposition of that question of higher privilege it would come up again, because the rule reads in that way.

Mr. CONGER. But, Mr. Speaker, the report of that committee was a resolution.

The SPEAKER. Oh, no! The gentleman is mistaken. The report of the committee was a bill, and then they submitted a further report in the form of a resolution that Saturday next should be fixed for the consideration of the bill. If the House refuses to vote down that resolution, why, then the bill is before the House for consideration.

Mr. CONGER. That would be in the morning hour.

The SPEAKER. Not at all. It would be after the morning hour.

Mr. CONGER. Is not the only matter now before the House the consideration of the resolution?

The SPEAKER. Yes, sir.

Mr. CONGER. But the bill has no standing before the House.

The SPEAKER. It has. The bill is reported from a committee.

Mr. CONGER. But with a resolution to fix a time for its consideration.

The SPEAKER. Yes; but if that resolution fixing the time is voted down, then, unless the committee has taken some different action, the bill will be immediately brought up for consideration, the same as any other report.

Mr. CONGER. It seems to me that is giving to the committee the power to make alternative reports, so as to occupy the time of the House to the exclusion of every other committee.

The SPEAKER. The House has made this rule, and the Chair is bound to conform to it. The House has bound itself by its own action.

Mr. CONGER. But the committee has chosen to rest upon the resolution fixing a day for the consideration of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Well, the resolution goes to this extent: the bill having been reported for consideration, the committee from which the bill is reported, for the convenience of the House and to apprise members, give notice that they would like to have the bill taken up on Saturday. If, however, the House refuses to agree to that, then the bill having been reported from the committee is before the House, and comes up for consideration under the rule.

Mr. CLAFLIN. I desire to state that there was no motion made in the committee to fix Saturday for the consideration of this bill. There was a motion made and agreed to to report the bill to the House, but there was no motion made in committee to fix Saturday as the particular time for considering the bill.

The SPEAKER. Then the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WARNER] is acting without the instructions of his committee, and should withdraw the resolution.

Mr. WARNER. I beg pardon; I was instructed to fix that day.

Mr. CLAFLIN. I have consulted the record of the committee, and no such motion was made, according to that record.

Mr. WARNER. The order was to fix "an early day."

The SPEAKER. That rather confirms the attitude of the Chair, that the bill was reported as the regular order.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 116, nays 108, not voting 61; as follows:

YEAS—116.

Acklen,	Cabell,	Culberson,	Ford,
Aiken,	Caldwell,	Davidson,	Forney,
Armfield,	Carlisle,	Davis, Lowndes H.	Forsythe,
Atherton,	Chalmers,	De La Matyr,	Fort,
Atkins,	Clark, John B., jr.	Dibrell,	Frost,
Beale,	Clymer,	Dickey,	Geddes,
Belford,	Cobb,	Dunn,	Gillette,
Bicknell,	Coffroth,	Elam,	Gunter,
Blackburn,	Colerick,	Ellis,	Hammond, N. J.
Bliss,	Converse,	Evins,	Harris, John T.
Bragg,	Cox,	Ewing,	Henkle,
Bright,	Cravens,	Felton,	Henry,

Herbert,	Martin, Benj. F.	Sawyer,	Tillman,
Herndon,	McKenzie,	Scales,	Townshend, R. W.
Hill,	McMillin,	Shelley,	Turner, Oscar
Hooker,	Mills,	Simonton,	Turner, Thomas
Hostetler,	Muldrow,	Singleton, J. W.	Vance,
House,	Murch,	Singleton, O. R.	Waddill,
Kelley,	Myers,	Slemons,	Warner,
Kimmel,	New,	Smith Hezekiah B.	Weaver,
King,	O'Connor,	Smith, William E.	Wellborn,
Kitchin,	Orth,	Sparks,	Whiteaker,
Klotz,	Persons,	Speer,	Whitthorne,
Knott,	Phister,	Springer,	Williams, Thomas
Ladd,	Richardson, J. S.	Steele,	Willis,
Le Fevre,	Richmond,	Stephens,	Wise,
Lewis,	Robertson,	Stevenson,	Wright,
Lowe,	Rothwell,	Taylor,	Yocum,
Manning,	Samford,	Thompson,	Young, Casey.

NAYS—108.

Aldrich, Nelson W.	Deuster,	Joyce,	Robeson,
Aldrich, William	Dunnell,	Keifer,	Robinson,
Anderson,	Einstein.	Lindsey,	Ross,
Baker,	Errett,	Marsh,	Russell, William A.
Bayne,	Farr,	Mason,	Ryan, Thomas
Beltzhoover,	Ferdon,	McCoid,	Shallenberger,
Bingham,	Field,	McGowan,	Sherwin,
Blake,	Fisher,	McKinley,	Smith, A. Herr
Bowman,	Frye,	McLane,	Talbot,
Boyd,	Garfield,	Miles,	Thomas,
Brewer,	Gibson,	Mitchell,	Townsend, Amos
Briggs,	Hall,	Monroe,	Tyler,
Brigham,	Hammond, John	Morrison,	Updegraff, J. T.
Browne,	Harmer,	Morton,	Updegraff, Thomas
Burrows,	Harris, Benj. W.	Newberry,	Valentine,
Cannon,	Hawk,	Norcross,	Van Aernam,
Carpenter,	Hawley,	O'Brien,	Van Voorhis,
Caswell,	Hazelton,	O'Neill,	Voorhis,
Chittenden,	Heilman,	O'Reilly,	Wait,
Claflin,	Horr,	Overton,	Ward,
Clark, Alvah A.	Houk,	Pierce,	Washburn,
Conger,	Hubbell,	Poehler,	White,
Covert,	Humphrey,	Pound,	Wilber,
Cowgill,	Hurd,	Prescott,	Williams, C. G.
Daggett,	James,	Reed,	Willits,
Davis, George R.	Jones,	Rice,	Wood, Walter A.
Deering,	Jorgensen,	Richardson, D P.	Young, Thomas L.

NOT VOTING—61.

Bachman,	Davis, Joseph J.	Killinger,	Phelps,
Bailey,	Dick,	Lapham,	Price,
Ballou,	Dwight,	Lay,	Reagan,
Barber,	Finley,	Loring,	Russell, Daniel L.
Barlow,	Godshalk,	Lounsbery,	Ryon, John W.
Bland,	Goode,	Martin, Edward L.	Sapp,
Blount,	Haskell,	Martin, Joseph J.	Starin,
Bouck,	Hatch,	McCook,	Stone,
Buckner,	Hayes,	McMahon,	Tucker,
Butterworth,	Henderson,	Miller,	Urner,
Calkins,	Hiscock,	Money,	Wells,
Camp,	Hull,	Morse,	Wilson,
Clardy,	Hunton,	Muller,	Wood, Fernando.
Cook,	Johnston,	Neal,
Crapo,	Kenna,	Nicholls,
Crowley,	Ketcham,	Osmer,

So the main question was ordered.

During the roll-call the following announcements were made:

Mr. SMITH, of Georgia. My colleague, Mr. NICHOLLS, is absent by reason of illness. If present, he would vote "ay."

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. The gentleman from Mississippi, Mr. MONEY, is confined to his room by sickness.

Mr. SCALES. My colleague from North Carolina, Mr. DAVIS, is absent by leave of the House, and is paired with my colleague, Mr. MARTIN.

Mr. BRAGG. My colleague, Mr. BOUCK, is paired with the gentleman from Michigan, Mr. STONE. My colleague, if present, would vote "ay."

Mr. COFFROTH. My colleague, Mr. BACHMAN, who is paired with the gentleman from New York, Mr. DWIGHT, would, if present, vote "ay," and Mr. DWIGHT would vote "no." My colleague, Mr. RYON, of Pennsylvania, is paired with my colleague, Mr. KILLINGER. If present, Mr. RYON would vote "ay" and Mr. KILLINGER "no."

Mr. CABELL. My colleague, Mr. HUNTON, is paired with the gentleman from New York, Mr. HISCOCK, and my colleague, Mr. TUCKER, with the gentleman from New York, Mr. LAPHAM.

Mr. COVERT. My colleague, Mr. FERNANDO WOOD, is unavoidably absent.

Mr. KENNA. I am paired with the gentleman from New York, Mr. CAMP. If he were present, I should vote in the affirmative. My colleague, Mr. WILSON, is still absent on account of serious illness in his family, and is paired.

Mr. REAGAN. I am paired with the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. NEAL. If he were present, I should vote "ay."

Mr. DAVIDSON. My colleague, Mr. HULL, is paired with the gentleman from Iowa, Mr. PRICE.

Mr. LOUNSBERY. I am paired with my colleague, Mr. BAILEY. If he were here, I should vote in the affirmative.

Mr. BLOUNT. I am paired with the gentleman from New York, Mr. MCCOOK. If he were here, I should vote "ay."

Mr. GOODE. I am paired with the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. LORING. If he were present, I should vote in the affirmative.

Mr. WAIT. My colleague, Mr. PHELPS, is absent by leave of the House on account of illness in his family.

Mr. LAPHAM. On all political questions I am paired with the gentleman from Virginia, Mr. TUCKER. If he were here, I should vote "no."

Mr. HISCOCK. I am paired with the gentleman from Virginia, Mr. HUNTON. If he were present, he would vote "ay" and I should vote "no." My colleague, Mr. MILLER, is paired with the gentleman from Delaware, Mr. MARTIN.

Mr. HAWK. My colleague, Mr. HAYES, is paired with the gentleman from Connecticut, Mr. PHELPS. Mr. HAYES, if present, would vote "no." I do not know how Mr. PHELPS would vote.

Mr. CRAPO. I am paired with the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. BUCKNER. If he were present, he would vote "ay" and I should vote "no."

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. My colleague, Mr. BARBER, is paired with the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. HATCH. Mr. BARBER, if present, would vote "no." My colleague, Mr. HENDERSON, is paired with the gentleman from Georgia, Mr. COOK. Mr. HENDERSON, if present, would vote "no."

Mr. CALKINS. I am paired with the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. FINLEY. If he were present, I should vote "no."

Mr. UPDEGRAFF, of Iowa. My colleague, Mr. PRICE, who is absent by order of the House, is paired with the gentleman from Florida, Mr. HULL.

Mr. MARTIN, of North Carolina. I am paired with my colleague, Mr. DAVIS.

Mr. MASON. My colleague, Mr. DWIGHT, is paired with the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. BACHMAN. My colleague, if present, would vote "no."

Mr. FISHER. The gentleman from Iowa, Mr. SAPP, is paired with the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. CLARDY. Mr. SAPP, if present, would vote "no;" Mr. CLARDY, "ay."

Mr. KETCHAM. I am paired with my colleague, Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. If he were present, I should vote "no."

Mr. JOYCE. My colleague, Mr. BARLOW, is paired with the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. MORSE.

Mr. WHITE. My colleague, Mr. DICK, is absent on account of sickness, and is paired with the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. LAY. I am not prepared to say how my colleague would vote on this question, because I do not regard it as a political question.

Mr. WHITEAKER. The gentleman from New York, Mr. MILLER, is paired with the gentleman from Delaware, Mr. MARTIN, on all political questions until Tuesday the 6th instant.

Mr. ALDRICH, of Rhode Island. My colleague, Mr. BALLOU, is paired with the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. MCMAHON.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. My colleague, Mr. MORSE, is paired with the gentleman from Vermont, Mr. BARLOW. Mr. MORSE would vote "no" and Mr. BARLOW "ay."

Mr. SAWYER. My colleague, Mr. CLARDY, who is paired with the gentleman from Iowa, Mr. SAPP, would, if present, vote "ay."

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

Mr. WARNER moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now recurs on the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. STEPHENS. If this resolution be voted down the bill, as I understand, will be before the House for action to-day.

The SPEAKER. If the resolution be voted down, the measure reported from the committee would be before the House.

Mr. STEPHENS. To-day.

The SPEAKER. But it would be liable to interruption by other questions, and it is within the knowledge of the Chair and the House that a question of higher privilege is to be brought up.

Mr. STEPHENS. But would it not take precedence immediately after the question of higher privilege is disposed of?

The SPEAKER. It would come up again, of course.

Mr. CONGER. But the bill has been recommitted.

The SPEAKER. Not at all.

Mr. CONGER. The RECORD says so.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is not advised as to that, but the Journal does not show that that was the case.

Mr. CONGER. It is so printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will please read from the RECORD.

Mr. CONGER. It is as follows:

Mr. WARNER also, from the same committee, reported back, with amendments, a bill (H. R. No. 564) to amend certain sections of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to coinage and coin and bullion certificates, and for other purposes; which were ordered to be printed, and recommitted.

Mr. STEPHENS. There is a further report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. WARNER. I now report from the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, under the privilege granted to that committee, the following resolution, on which I demand the previous question.

The Clerk read as follows:

"Resolved, That House bill No. 564, and the amendments thereto, reported from the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, be made the special order for consideration in the House on Saturday next after the morning hour, and from day to day thereafter until disposed of."

The SPEAKER. The Chair will now cause the Journal to be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. WARNER, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (H. R.

No. 564) to amend certain sections of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to coinage, coin and bullion certificates, and for other purposes, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by the following resolution, to wit:

"Resolved, That House bill No. 564, and the amendments thereto, reported from the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, be made the special order for consideration in the House on Saturday next after the morning hour, and from day to day thereafter until disposed of."

The House having proceeded to their consideration, when Mr. WARNER demanded the previous question on the said resolution, which was seconded.

The question then being on ordering the main question, when—

Mr. GARFIELD demanded the yeas and nays thereon, and the same were ordered.

Mr. CONGER. It is within my recollection distinctly that the bill was ordered to be printed and recommitted. I assumed, of course, that the bill and report were both ordered to be printed.

The SPEAKER. That was a natural assumption, but the Chair understands that the report only was ordered to be printed.

Mr. CONGER. If I have made any mistake it is the fault of the RECORD.

Mr. GARFIELD. Was the report ordered to be printed and not the bill?

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. STEPHENS. I wish to say a word in answer to the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. CONGER.] The bill was first introduced by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. WARNER,] and was reported back with amendments and ordered to be printed and recommitted. The amendments were considered, and then the bill was reported back to the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the bill is properly before the House as a report from a committee.

Mr. CONGER. Then the RECORD ought to be corrected.

The SPEAKER. This debate will go into the RECORD and will show that the original report in the RECORD was wrong.

Mr. CONGER. I ask that the bill may be printed.

Mr. WHITE. Where is the report? Is it not to be printed?

The SPEAKER. The report has been sent to be printed. The bill is here and will be read if the gentleman wishes it.

Mr. WHITE. I have a copy of the bill. This is an important bill, and I will ask how many copies of it have been printed?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is not advised on that subject. The proposition is to consider the bill on Saturday, and everything relating to the subject can be printed by that time.

Mr. WHITE. By unanimous consent could not the bill be printed with all the amendments?

The SPEAKER. There is nothing unusual in this request.

Mr. WHITE. I do not say there is anything unusual, but I would like to have a supply of copies of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will have that before the bill comes up for action.

Mr. KENNA. Has not the main question been ordered?

The SPEAKER. It has, and the question is upon the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. STEPHENS. Owing to the intimation of the Chair that a question of superior privilege may intervene, I shall vote for the consideration of this bill on Saturday, and I shall now vote for the resolution.

The question was taken on Mr. WARNER'S resolution; and it was agreed to.

Mr. WARNER moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. As the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WHITE] desires the bill as perfected printed, the Chair suggests that double the usual number of copies of the bill as amended by the committee be printed.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. ACKLEN. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the morning hour.

Mr. COX. Can I call up the privileged question?

Mr. STEPHENS. I desire to present a report from the Committee on Rules.

VETO OF ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SPARKS. I move, in accordance with the order of yesterday, that the House proceed to take up the message of the President vetoing the bill making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes, and to reconsider the said bill.

Mr. CONGER. I desire to ask the gentleman from Illinois if he proposes to have discussion on this?

Mr. SPARKS. I do not. I demand the previous question.

Mr. CONGER. The House voted yesterday that we would consider the message. The resolution of the House declared we should to-day proceed to consider the message and reconsider the bill.

The SPEAKER. The message can be considered. The message would naturally lie on the table, and the question would be on reconsidering the bill.

Mr. CONGER. I ask the question because I have seen it stated there would be no discussion; and I submit that would be contrary to the resolution adopted yesterday.

Mr. SPARKS. The motion is that the bill be passed notwithstanding the objections of the President. That motion I now make, and on that I move the previous question.

Mr. KENNA. I demand the regular order.

Mr. CONGER. I ask if there was not an order of the House——[Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. CONGER. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. SPARKS. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ATKINS] desires to make a request.

Mr. ATKINS. I ask the privilege of printing some remarks on this bill.

Mr. CONGER objected.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan will ask his parliamentary question.

Mr. CONGER. I desire to ask——[Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER. The regular order is being proceeded with. The gentleman will ask his question.

Mr. CONGER. I will ask the question as soon as these gentlemen are quiet enough. The moment I commence they are vociferous.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will ask the question of the Chair, and the Chair will certainly not interrupt him.

Mr. CONGER. The resolution which was adopted yesterday ordered the consideration to-day of the message and the reconsideration of the bill. I ask if the House, having ordered that the message be considered to-day, has not in effect ordered that it shall be the subject of discussion?

The SPEAKER. The message would lie upon the table; and the question that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPARKS] now presents is what is provided by the Constitution: Will the House upon reconsideration pass the bill? and on that he demands the previous question.

Mr. CONGER. Then I desire to say if gentlemen are all so satisfied ——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has no right to say anything. He has a right to ask a parliamentary question, but not to say anything pending a demand for the previous question.

Mr. CONGER. I think the Chair is unnecessarily excited.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is as calm as a May morning. [Laughter.]

Mr. CONGER. The 1st of May morning.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. SPARKS moved to reconsider the vote by which the main question was ordered; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Will the House on reconsideration agree to pass the bill? Under the Constitution it is required that this vote shall be taken by yeas and nays.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 120, nays 110, not voting 55; as follows:

YEAS—120.

Acklen,	Deuster,	Ladd,	Singleton, O. R.
Aiken,	Dibrell,	Le Fevre,	Slemons,
Armfield,	Dickey,	Lewis,	Smith, Hezekiah B.
Atherton,	Dunn,	Manning,	Smith, William E.
Atkins,	Elam,	Martin, Benj. F.	Sparks,
Beale,	Ellis,	McKenzie,	Speer,
Beltzhoover,	Evins,	McLane,	Springer,
Bicknell,	Ewing,	McMillin,	Steele,
Blackburn,	Felton,	Mills,	Stephens,
Bliss,	Forney,	Morrison,	Stevenson,
Bragg,	Frost,	Muldrow,	Talbott,
Bright,	Geddes,	Myers,	Taylor,
Buckner,	Gibson,	New,	Thompson,
Cabell,	Gunter,	O'Brien,	Tillman,
Caldwell,	Hammond, N. J.	O'Connor,	Townshend, R. W.
Carlisle,	Harris, John T.	O'Reilly,	Turner, Oscar
Chalmers,	Henkle,	Persons,	Turner, Thomas
Clark, Alvah A.	Henry,	Phister,	Vance,
Clark, John B., jr.	Herbert,	Poehler,	Waddill,
Clymer,	Herndon,	Reagan,	Warner,
Cobb,	Hill,	Richardson, J. S.	Wellborn,
Coffroth,	Hooker,	Richmond,	Whiteaker,
Colerick,	Hostetler,	Robertson,	Whitthorne,
Converse,	House,	Ross,	Williams, Thomas
Covert,	Hurd,	Rothwell,	Willis,
Cox,	Johnston,	Samford,	Wise,
Cravens,	Kimmel,	Sawyer,	Wright,
Culberson,	King,	Scales,	Young, Casey.
Davidson,	Kitchin,	Shelley,
Davis, Lowndes H.	Klotz,	Simonton,
De La Matyr,	Knott,	Singleton, J. W.

NAYS—110.

Aldrich, Nelson W.	Cannon,	Field,	Heilman,
Aldrich, William	Carpenter,	Fisher,	Hiscock,
Anderson,	Caswell,	Ford,	Horr,
Baker,	Chittenden,	Forsythe,	Houk,
Bayne,	Claflin,	Fort,	Hubbell,
Belford,	Conger,	Frye,	Humphrey,
Bingham,	Cowgill,	Garfield,	James,
Blake,	Crapo,	Gillette,	Jones,
Bowman,	Daggett,	Hall,	Jorgensen,
Boyd,	Davis, George R.	Hammond, John	Joyce,
Brewer,	Deering,	Harmer,	Keifer,
Briggs,	Dunnell,	Harris, Benj. W.	Kelley,
Brigham,	Einstein,	Haskell,	Lindsey,
Browne,	Errett,	Hawk,	Lowe,
Burrows,	Farr,	Hawley,	Marsh,
Butterworth,	Ferdon,	Hazelton,	Mason,

McCoid,	Pierce,	Smith, A. Herr	Ward,
McGowan,	Pound,	Thomas,	Washburn,
McKinley,	Prescott,	Townsend, Amos	Weaver,
Miles,	Reed,	Tyler,	White,
Mitchell,	Rice,	Updegraff, J. T.	Wilber,
Monroe,	Richardson, D. P.	Updegraff, Thomas	Williams, C. G.
Morton,	Robeson,	Urner,	Willits,
Murch,	Robinson,	Valentine,	Wood, Walter A.
Newberry,	Russell, William A.	Van Aernam,	Yocum,
Norcross,	Ryan, Thomas	Van Voorhis.	Young, Thomas L.
O'Neill,	Shallenberger,	Voorhis,
Overton,	Sherwin,	Wait,

NOT VOTING—55.

Bachman,	Dick,	Lay,	Osmer,
Bailey,	Dwight,	Loring,	Phelps,
Ballou,	Finley,	Lounsbery,	Price,
Barber,	Godshalk,	Martin, Edward L.	Russell, Daniel L.
Barlow,	Goode,	Martin, Joseph J.	Ryon, John W.
Bland,	Hatch,	McCook,	Sapp,
Blount,	Hayes.	McMahon,	Starin,
Bouck,	Henderson,	Miller,	Stone,
Calkins,	Hull,	Money,	Tucker,
Camp,	Hunton,	Morse,	Wells,
Clardy,	Kenna,	Muller,	Wilson,
Cook,	Ketcham,	Neal,	Wood, Fernando.
Crowley,	Killinger,	Nicholls,
Davis, Joseph J.	Lapham,	Orth,

So (two-thirds not voting in favor thereof) the House on reconsideration refused to pass the bill.

During the roll-call the following announcements were made:

Mr. BRAGG. My colleague, Mr. BOUCK, is paired with Mr. STONE. If present, Mr. BOUCK would vote "ay."

Mr. HAWK. Mr. HAYES is paired with Mr. PHELPS. If present, Mr. HAYES would vote "no." I do not know how Mr. PHELPS would vote.

Mr. SCALES. My colleague, Mr. DAVIS, is absent by leave of the House, and is paired with my colleague, Mr. MARTIN. If present, Mr. DAVIS would vote "ay."

Mr. MARTIN, of West Virginia. My colleague, Mr. WILSON, is detained at home by serious illness in his family. If he were present, he would vote "ay."

Mr. COVERT. My colleague, Mr. FERNANDO WOOD, is paired with Mr. KETCHAM. Mr. COOK, of Georgia, is paired with Mr. HENDERSON.

Mr. COFFROTH. My colleague, Mr. RYON, is paired with Mr. KILLINGER. If present, Mr. RYON would vote "ay" and Mr. KILLINGER "no."

Mr. CABELL. My colleague, Mr. TUCKER, is paired with Judge LAPHAM. If present, he would vote "ay."

Mr. KENNA. On this question I am paired with Mr. CAMP. If Mr. CAMP were present, he would vote "no" and I should vote "ay."

Mr. REAGAN. I was paired with Mr. NEAL, of Ohio. By an understanding with members on both sides of the House, it is agreed that Mr. MONEY, of Mississippi, instead of myself, shall be paired with Mr. NEAL.

Mr. DAVIDSON. My colleague, Mr. HULL, is paired with Mr. PRICE, of Iowa. If present, Mr. HULL would vote "ay."

Mr. DICKEY. My colleague, Mr. FINLEY, is paired with Mr. CALKINS.

Mr. BLOUNT. On this question I am paired with Mr. MCCOOK. If Mr. MCCOOK were present, I should vote "ay."

Mr. LOUNSBERY. I am paired with my colleague, Mr. BAILEY.

Mr. GOODE. I am paired with Mr. LORING, of Massachusetts.

Mr. WAITE. My colleague, Mr. PHELPS, is absent by leave of the House, on account of serious illness in his family, and is paired.

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. MILLER, of New York, is paired with Mr. MARTIN, of Delaware. If present, Mr. MILLER would vote "no" and Mr. MARTIN "ay." Mr. CROWLEY is paired with Mr. HUNTON. If present, Mr. CROWLEY would vote "no" and Mr. HUNTON "ay."

Mr. LAPHAM. Upon all political questions I am paired with the gentleman from Virginia, Mr. TUCKER. If he were present, I should vote "no."

Mr. TYLER. My colleague, Mr. BARLOW, is paired with Mr. MORSE, of Massachusetts.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. Mr. BARBER is paired with Mr. HATCH, of Missouri. Mr. HENDERSON is paired with Mr. COOK, of Georgia.

Mr. CALKINS. I am paired on all political questions with Mr. FINLEY. If he were present, I should vote "no."

Mr. WHITE. Mr. OSMER is paired with Mr. NICHOLLS.

Mr. MCGOWAN. Mr. STONE is paired with Mr. BOUCK.

Mr. ORTH. I am paired with Mr. WILSON, of West Virginia. If he were present, I should vote "no."

Mr. BROWNE. I am requested to announce that Mr. SAPP, of Iowa, is paired with Mr. CLARDY, of Missouri. If present, Mr. SAPP would vote "no" and Mr. CLARDY "ay."

Mr. UPDEGRAFF, of Iowa. Mr. PRICE is absent by order of the House, and is paired with Mr. HULL. If present, Mr. PRICE would vote "no" and Mr. HULL "ay."

Mr. MARTIN, of North Carolina. I am paired with my colleague, Mr. DAVIS. Upon this question, Mr. DAVIS would vote "ay" and I should vote "no."

Mr. RUSSELL, of Massachusetts. My colleague, Mr. MORSE, is paired with Mr. BARLOW, of Vermont. If present, Mr. MORSE would vote "ay."

Mr. KETCHAM. I am paired with Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. If he were present, I should vote "no."

Mr. FORD. Mr. RUSSELL, of North Carolina, is paired with Mr. BLAND, of Missouri.

Mr. ALDRICH, of Rhode Island. Mr. BALLOU is paired with Mr. MCMAHON. If present, Mr. BALLOU would vote "no" and Mr. MCMAHON "ay."

Mr. MASON. My colleague, Mr. DWIGHT, of New York, is paired with Mr. BACHMAN, of Pennsylvania. My colleague, if present, would vote "no."

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. BURCH, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. No. 1343) to provide for certain expenses of the present session of Congress and for other purposes; in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. CONGER. I desire to withdraw the objection I made to allowing members to print remarks.

Mr. ATKINS. Then I ask unanimous consent that gentlemen be allowed to print such remarks as they may see fit upon the veto message of the President.

Mr. HAWLEY. Unless there is to be something like a general debate on the subject, I must object.

The SPEAKER. The proposition is to allow gentlemen to print their remarks.

Mr. MCLANE. I object.

Some time subsequently Mr. MCLANE withdrew his objection.

Mr. HUMPHREY renewed the objection and subsequently withdrew it.

Mr. HAWLEY. I renew the objection.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. KITCHIN. I rise to a matter of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. KITCHIN. I find in the RECORD of the 26th of April a speech purporting to have been delivered by my colleague [Mr. RUSSELL] from the third congressional district of North Carolina, in which he prejudges a case now pending before the House. That speech was not brought to my attention, and I did not know that there had been any such speech made or printed until after the debate upon the then pending bill had been closed. He says in that speech:

> It is well known that two democrats, one from Florida and the other from North Carolina, hold seats on this floor, not by the vote of the people, but by the fraudulent mandates of returning boards, some of whom, strange to say, are in the penitentiary.

Now, sir, what I have to say in reply to that is simply this: if the gentleman intended to refer to any district in North Carolina as to the returning board being in the penitentiary, it is simply false and slanderous.

Mr. GARFIELD. I desire to interrupt the gentleman to say that the member of the House to whom he is referring is not now in his seat, and it seems to me that he ought to defer any remarks——

The SPEAKER. The speech was printed by consent of the House.

Mr. GARFIELD. The gentleman who made the speech ought to be here.

Mr. KITCHIN. I am sorry the gentleman is not in his seat, and I will say nothing personal.

Mr. GARFIELD. I simply suggest to the gentleman the propriety of postponing what he wishes to say until his colleague is in his seat.

Mr. WHITE. That is but fair.

Mr. KITCHIN. I am sorry that he is not here; I wish he were here; I would say a great deal more if he were in his seat. But I must say something now, because this statement has gone to my district. Before I knew the speech had been delivered in the House—I was in the House all the time, and have never been absent from my seat during the debate—before I knew that this speech had been delivered or published I received letters from my district condemning me for allowing such a slander to be made upon the people of my district.

I therefore denounce it as infamously slanderous, if intended to refer to my district. No one better than the gentleman himself knew the circumstances under which I was elected. He knew that my seat was contested, and this remark was intended directly for me. I am not surprised that the gentleman should have violated every parliamentary rule and every rule of decency and propriety. Having been a republican judge for six years in the State of North Carolina, and having obtained his seat in this House——

Mr. GARFIELD. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GARFIELD. My point of order is that the remark by the gentleman now upon the floor from North Carolina, that a member of this House has "violated every rule of decency," is not parliamentary language, and I object to it on that score.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that this speech referred to was never delivered in this House, but was printed without being delivered. The Chair does not know how he is to hunt up the improprieties of the two speeches. It seems to the Chair that it is nothing but reasonable that a gentleman who is assailed in a speech printed under a unanimous consent given by the House, ought to have the most immediate time to reply.

Mr. GARFIELD. I make no question about the speech referred to, for I know nothing about the language of the speech which was delivered. What I am speaking of now is the use of unparliamentary language upon the floor at this time.

Mr. KITCHIN. I know very well that the gentleman——

Mr. GARFIELD. I call the gentleman to order, and ask that the words I have objected to be taken down.

The SPEAKER. The rule requires the words to be taken down.

Mr. KITCHIN. I ask the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] if he did not himself make the point that no personal language or remarks should be employed in a speech printed by leave of the House and not delivered in the House?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] in raising this point will proceed in accordance with the rule which the Chair will cause to be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

RULE 62. If a member be called to order for words spoken in debate, the person calling him to order shall repeat the words excepted to, and they shall be taken down in writing at the Clerk's table; and no member shall be held to answer, or be subject to the censure of the House, for words spoken in debate, if any other member has spoken, or other business has intervened, after the words spoken, and before exception to them shall have been taken.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio will be kind enough to repeat the words to which he takes exception; and the Chair will cause them to be taken down.

Mr. GARFIELD. The words which I wish taken down are those that referred to the conduct of a gentleman who is absent as violating every rule of decency. I do not remember the exact language; but I have indicated it sufficiently. I ask that the words referred to be read at the Clerk's desk.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I believe the language was "infamously slanderous."

The SPEAKER. The Chair will cause the words to be read.

Mr. McLANE. I ask that they may be read by the stenographer.

The SPEAKER. They will be read by the Clerk from the notes of the stenographer.

The Clerk read as follows:

I am not surprised that the gentleman should have violated every parliamentary rule and every rule of decency and propriety.

Mr. WEAVER. I understood the gentleman to say that the remarks of his colleague were "infamously slanderous." I want those words also taken down.

Mr. GARFIELD. Those words occur very near the language I have already indicated.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read Rule 61.

The Clerk read as follows:

If any member, in speaking or otherwise, transgress the rules of the House, the Speaker shall, or any member may, call to order; in which case, the member so called to order shall immediately sit down, unless permitted to explain; and the House shall, if appealed to, decide on the case, but without debate; if there be no appeal, the decision of the Chair shall be submitted to. If the decision be in favor of the member called to order, he shall be at liberty to proceed; if otherwise, he shall not be permitted to proceed, in case any member object, without leave of the House; and if the case require it, he shall be liable to the censure of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will also read Rule 57.

The Clerk read as follows:

When any member is about to speak in debate, or deliver any matter to the House, he shall rise from his seat and respectfully address himself to "Mr. Speaker;" and shall confine himself to the question under debate, and avoid personality.

Mr. BAKER. Now let the other words be read.

The SPEAKER. The words of which the gentleman from Ohio complains will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

If the gentleman intended to refer to any district in North Carolina as to the returning board being in the penitentiary, it is simply false and slanderous.

* * * * * * *

I am not surprised that the gentleman should have violated every parliamentary rule, and every rule of decency and propriety.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] will proceed in order.

Mr. GARFIELD. Has the Chair ruled on the language as to whether it is parliamentary or not. I have asked the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. COX. I suppose a motion is necessary, that the gentleman from North Carolina proceed in order. I make that motion.

Mr. REED. How can that motion be made until the Chair has decided whether the language used was in order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that the gentleman from North Carolina has not gone beyond the bounds of parliamentary propriety, having previously stated that he meant nothing personal. [Laughter.]

Mr. KITCHIN. I now ask the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] whether he was not the member who, when a general leave to print was granted, made the suggestion to the Chair that no gentleman should print anything offensive to any other member.

Mr. GARFIELD. Certainly I said that, and I think it should apply to what is spoken as well as what is written and printed.

Mr. REED. That is, unless the member speaking says that he does not intend the language to be personal. [Laughter.]

Mr. KITCHIN. I ask the gentleman whether there is no difference between slipping in insinuations in a speech which is printed without being delivered, and speaking out the language upon the floor?

Mr. GARFIELD. I will say to the gentleman that I do not know whether the speech that he comments upon is personal to him or refers to his district.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman from Ohio is dissatisfied with the ruling of the Chair as to the language of the gentleman from North Carolina, he has his remedy by an appeal to the House.

Mr. GARFIELD. I can stand it, if the Chair can.

Mr. KITCHIN. I will not at present refer to the remainder of my colleague's speech, but will simply say that it is reserved to a native son of North Carolina, adder-like, to bite the bosom that warmed him into life. In refutation and condemnation of the statement of the gentleman (who is one of the judges in the case now pending before this House, and to this I referred when I spoke of his violating decency) I send to the desk to be read an affidavit of my competitor, James E. O'Hara, which affidavit has never been followed up.

The Clerk read as follows:

STATE OF NORTH CAROLINA:

At a court of pleas and quarter sessions begun and held for the county of Wayne, at the court-house in Goldsborough, on the third Monday of November, 1867, before W. K. Lane, chairman, and John C. Slocumb, George W. Collier, justices, James E. O'Hara, a native of Frederickstand, St. Croix, Danish West Indies, at the present time a resident of the county aforesaid, appears before the said court, being a court of record having common-law jurisdiction and a seal and clerk; and the said James E. O'Hara being duly sworn, declares upon oath that it is bona fide his intention to become a citizen of the United States, and to remove forever all allegiance and fidelity to every foreign prince, potentate, or sovereignty, and particularly all allegiance and fidelity to Frederick VII, reigning King of Denmark, of whom he is now a subject. Whereupon it is ordered that the said declaration of the said James E. O'Hara be duly recorded by the clerk of this court.

NORTH CAROLINA, Wayne County:

I, W. T. Yelverton, clerk of the superior court of said county, do hereby certify that the foregoing is a true copy of the record in my office of the declaration of James E. O'Hara.

Given under my hand and official seal the 26th March, 1879.

[SEAL.] W. T. YELVERTON,
Clerk Superior Court.

Mr. KITCHIN. I also send to the desk to be read a circular of the republican executive committee of my district.

The Clerk read as follows:

To the republicans of the second congressional district:

The committee for the above-named district, in order to place their recent action before the people, deem it proper to make a statement in regard to the cause which led them to take such action.

After the convention which was held in Goldsborough, it was brought to the attention of the committee that there was cause existing that rendered Hon. James E. O'Hara ineligible to a seat in Congress, and urgent appeals were made by leading republicans, in all parts of the district, requesting the committee to investigate the charges, &c.

After deliberation the committee was convened and Mr. O'Hara was requested to appear before them, which request was complied with. After the matter had been discussed and Mr. O'Hara's statement received the committee adjourned to meet one week thereafter, requesting him to procure evidence that would remove all doubt as to his being eligible. The committee met pursuant to adjournment, and Mr. O'Hara came before them but refused to furnish the evidence which he said he had; nor were the committee able to procure evidence after due search was made in the records of the court where he positively stated the evidence existed.

The committee being actuated by an earnest desire to place a republican before the people of the district who was eligible to his seat, and not being willing to make a nomination themselves, issued a call in the usual form, giving due notice to the county committees for a district convention to assemble in Kinston, on the 15th day of October, 1878, at which time the convention met and organized in due form, investigated the alleged cause, and decided that they would drop Mr. O'Hara from the ticket, he having failed to appear before the convention.

The convention then proceeded to make a nomination for Congressman, which resulted in the choice of Hon. James H. Harris, which nomination was then made unanimous, and he stands before the republicans of this district as the nominee of the republican party.

We feel it due the people to issue this address, and trust that they will stand by the nomination of Hon. James H. Harris, and thus secure the election of a republican from this district who will be seated, and defeat the democratic candidate whom that party are working hard to elect.

Let every republican remember that a vote given for Mr. O'Hara is in effect a vote for Mr. Kitchin, the democratic candidate.

By order of the committee:

O. HUBBS, Chairman.
E. E. SMITH, Secretary.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, that explains in a measure why I was elected. I will reserve further remarks on this subject until the honorable gentleman from the third congressional district of North Craolina shall be in his seat.

ADMISSION TO THE FLOOR.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I ask by unanimous consent to submit the following resolution:

Resolved, That Hon. George F. Danforth, one of the judges of the court of appeals of the State of New York, be permitted to come upon the floor of the House during the remainder of this week.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks that George F. Danforth, a member of the court of appeals of the State of New York, be allowed during his brief stay in this city to have the privilege of the floor. Yesterday when the request was made it was objected to. The Chair is now informed that the gentleman who then objected withdraws it. Is there further objection?

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. HOOKER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask unanimous consent to have read, for the purpose of being printed as a part of the speech which I made in the House a few days ago, a circular which I send to the Clerk's desk. If there be no objection I will embody the circular in my remarks without asking for its reading.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WHITE. What is it? Let us hear it.

Mr. HOOKER. Very well; let it be read. I did refer to it in my speech, but did not have it in my possession at the time. I desire now to embody it in the speech, but do not wish to do so without having the subject brought to the attention of the House.

Mr. KEIFER. Has the gentleman's speech been printed in the RECORD?

Mr. HOOKER. It has.

Mr. KEIFER. Then I object.

Mr. HOOKER. Then I ask that it be read for the information of the House.

Mr. KEIFER. I object to that.

Mr. HOOKER. The gentleman is very sensitive on the subject, it seems.

AMENDMENT OF RULES.

Mr. GARFIELD, by unanimous consent, submitted the following report from the Committee on Rules:

Resolved, That in calling the roll of the House the Clerk shall call only the surname of members, with the prefix of "Mr.," except where there are two or more of the same surname, in which case the full names of the members shall be called.

The SPEAKER. This resolution was referred to the Committee on Rules, and is reported back favorably. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. CONGER. I demand a division of the House. [Cries of "Oh, no!"] That very process, Mr. Speaker——

Mr. FORT. Is debate in order?

Mr. CONGER. Yes; debate is in order.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Ohio yield to the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. GARFIELD. I yield to the gentleman for five minutes.

Mr. CONGER. Mr. Speaker, this subject has been before Congress on several different occasions, and, however much it may tend to facilitate the calling of the roll or otherwise, yet every one knows, each one for himself, that it is the only weapon which a minority has for delay, no matter whether it is a minority political or otherwise; that it is the only weapon which the minority has for making delays necessary for the purpose of securing further consideration of a question. If the House wishes to have it I have no objection; but this is an innovation upon the practice from the beginning to the present time; and the purpose for which it is used is not merely for political minorities, but for all questions which arise here; and the adoption of this amendment to the rules will take away the only object of calling the roll—that is, to gain time. I do not speak of it as anything of a political character at all, but it is the only weapon which any minority on any question has under the rules for gaining time—that is, the time gained in calling the roll. It is the only way in which the majority here can gain time to get absent members present if they find they have not a majority present. I wish it may be understood what will be the effect of the adoption of such an amendment to the rules. While it will facilitate the calling of the roll, that it will facilitate the general legislation of the House I am yet to be informed.

This practice has been observed from the commencement of the Government until now. I think I have known some seven or eight efforts to change it since I have been a member of Congress. It was resisted by the minority, when our friends on the other side were in the minority, strenuously and continuously. Of course some other measure less objectionable will be resorted to.

Mr. GARFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I wish to say only a word on this subject. There is no possible advantage which can be taken of a minority by this change of the rule. This is the way it is done in the Senate, a smaller body, which can always be called much quicker than this, under the most expeditious manner that can be adopted. This was formerly, I am quite sure, the rule of the House; and now, with a House as full as that we have, however hurried we may be for time, it takes a good forty minutes to call the roll, giving the initials, with the recall after the last name on the roll has been called; and there are hundreds of times that we feel the burden of loss of time in the mere manipulation of calling the roll. Furthermore, it is a hardship upon our clerks to compel them on all ordinary occasions to put their vocal organs through all the polysyllabic names and initials we have on our list. I think it is a saving in every way. If the minority want to filibuster, they can always make the ordinary motions to call the yeas and nays, and they can delay just as much in this way as the other; but if we want to expedite business, this is a way to do it.

Mr. HOOKER. I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry. Can this report be considered against an objection?

The SPEAKER. It is too late to make the objection.

Mr. HOOKER. Did the Chair ask for objections?

The SPEAKER. He did.

Mr. COX. I ask the gentleman from Ohio to yield me three minutes.

Mr. GARFIELD. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. COX. In calling the yeas and nays in most of our State Legislatures only the surnames are called. That is the case in New York, Ohio, Pennsylvania, and in other States, as gentlemen around me say. There is nothing to be gained by filibustering by the tedious and useless calling of the roll in the present way, as claimed by the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. CONGER.] Why should we not shorten this process? We came near shortening it a few years ago. The House came within a vote or so of doing it. There was a refined piece of machinery for instantaneously taking the votes of members. How? From their desks, by electricity; by the touching of a button! Then by the process the record was made at once for all the House at the Clerk's desk! The sense of the House by yeas and nays appears at once! That is the plan now in the German Parliament. I forgot to say that it was my ingenious friend from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] who invented the machine presented here which I attempted to have accepted. He came here several years ago, and perhaps then began that towering ambition which has left his invention to the rear. He tells me that a piece of mechanism similar to his in some respects has been adopted in the French Chamber. Is there any reason in these practical days, when mechanism so utilizes and economizes human thought and action, why an inventive nation like ours should not in this matter save the time of the House and the expense which the waste of time so increases by the adoption of such machinery. Therefore I shall vote for the amendment of the rule as reported by the gentleman from Ohio, because, though it does not shorten our processes of voting so much as machinery, yet tends in the same useful direction.

Mr. GARFIELD. I now call the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the resolution was adopted.

The SPEAKER. The resolution having been adopted, the clerks will hereafter govern themselves accordingly.

Mr. GARFIELD moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

COMMITTEE ON MISSISSIPPI LEVEES.

The SPEAKER. The next resolution will be read.

Mr. HOOKER. I reserve the right to object.

The SPEAKER. The request for unanimous consent was made as to both resolutions. The Clerk had at the time possession of the report which embraces the two resolutions.

Mr. MILLS. Have not the Committee on Rules the right to report at any time?

The SPEAKER. That has been the practice, but it is not by any rule of the House.

Mr. HOUSE. Let the resolution be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Levees and Improvement of the Mississippi River shall be increased from eleven members to thirteen members.

Mr. GARFIELD. The gentleman from Mississippi can object if he pleases. [Laughter.] I demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the resolution was adopted.

Mr. GARFIELD moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS.

Mr. STEPHENS. I ask unanimous consent to report from the Committee on Rules the resolution which I send to the desk.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. CONGER. Let the resolution be read.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be read for information, the right to object being reserved.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Speaker shall appoint from among the Delegates from the Territories one additional member on the Committee on Military Affairs, which Delegate shall have the same privileges on that committee as in the House.

Mr. WRIGHT. I wish to understand how that is to be construed—whether a member of a committee who is a Delegate can vote upon all questions that come before the committee.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will, in answer to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, state that this resolution was sent to the Committee on Rules at the instance of the Delegates, who, as the Chair is informed, believe that their Territories are vitally interested in the military matters of the country, as oftentimes the frontier requires to be protected; and they consider, therefore, they ought to have the privilege of a representative in the Committee on Military Affairs as a witness, who will have no vote, but will be a witness to its proceedings, sitting there with the right to listen and make suggestions.

Mr. WRIGHT. So far as the resolution goes I think it is right.

The SPEAKER. There are Delegates upon other committees.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. STEPHENS moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

RESOLUTIONS OF INQUIRY.

Mr. MILLS. I desire to ask of the Committee on Rules what has become of the resolution I offered, and which was referred to that committee, in reference to calling for information from an Executive Department?

The SPEAKER. The committee have agreed to report by unanimous vote in favor of a change in the existing rules.

Mr. MILLS. When will that report come before the House for action?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it is now in the hands of one of the members of the committee.

Mr. MILLS. I hope it will be reported.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not see now present the member of the committee who has charge of it. The Chair thinks that the action of the committee was that on Monday, during the morning hour for the call of States for bills, resolutions calling for information might be introduced and submitted for reference to appropriate committees respectively, and that the committee to which such resolutions were referred should have the right to report it if they approved the inquiry at any time.

Mr. GARFIELD. That was agreed to and I think the Speaker was himself requested to put it in form perhaps. The form in which it will stand can be as well gathered from what has fallen from the Speaker as in any other way.

Mr. MILLS. What is the necessity for having a resolution calling for information from one of the Executive Departments referred to a committee? What is the use of my offering a resolution of that kind and having it referred to a committee and there buried? If I or my constituents want information and I offer a resolution for that purpose, it is useless to ask it if it has to go to a committee.

Mr. GARFIELD. There are two reasons why the reference should be made. In the first place, there is constant danger of gentlemen upon this floor duplicating calls for information. Some one may want some information and offer a resolution calling for it and it passes by unanimous consent, and the same thing may have been asked already by somebody else and nobody has paid any attention to the fact that the same thing has already been called for, and in that way you duplicate and reduplicate a request for information already furnished. It is thought better, therefore, to say that on Monday morning during the call of the States there may be also admitted and referred to committees requests for executive information and that the committees shall have leave to report at any time. That will give everybody a fair chance to get his call for executive information once a week and also give us some order about the matter, so that we shall not be duplicating our requests but shall put them in proper shape.

It is much better that these requests for information should be referred to the committees, in order that they may not be duplicated so as to put the Departments to the necessity of employing a large number of clerks for a useless purpose.

I would state further that this is the unanimous report of the Committee on Rules.

Mr. MILLS. I have been a member of this House only six or seven years, not as long as the gentleman from Ohio, and I have never yet witnessed any abuse of this privilege of calling for information from the Executive Departments. I have noticed on many occasions that a gentleman will offer a resolution calling for information affecting his district, and one gentleman sitting upon the floor, perhaps a little dyspeptic, has deprived him of the right to call for that information. It is very rare that a member offers a resolution calling for information which is not of local importance to his constituents. I saw a gentleman upon this side offer a resolution calling for information as to the invasion of his district by the Sioux Indians, a thing very pertinent and very important to him and his constituents, and yet one gentleman objected.

I have myself asked for information of the same kind relating to the invasion of the Kiowas and Comanches into my district, and somebody has objected, and therefore I could not get it. I have seen the same thing time and again in this House. I think that ninety-nine times out of a hundred these resolutions are of a local character, and they have been referred to committees, and when such a resolution goes to a committee it is docketed; it may be one hundred on the list and it may be the end of the term before the information is given, when it is too late to serve the purpose for which the party called for it.

Mr. CLYMER took the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) On the part of the Committee on Rules I desire to report that Rule 130 be amended as follows, the words to come in after the first clause of said rule:

> Under this call resolutions for information from the Executive Departments of the Government may be offered for reference to the appropriate committees, such committees to have the right to report at any time.

In explanation of this report from the Committee on Rules, I desire to say that the committee had in view every purpose of facilitating the obtaining of information from the Executive Departments of the Government that might be desired by any member of the House. The object was not to obstruct, but rather to facilitate the obtaining of that information. The committee, however, saw that if each and every member of the House possessed the right to introduce at any time a resolution calling for executive information it might lead to abuse; it might lead really to an obstruction of the public business. A skillful minority might use such a power so as to prevent the views of the majority from being shaped into legislation. It was therefore thought that by amending the rule so as to allow resolutions calling for executive information to be introduced during the morning hour of every Monday, and directing those resolutions to be referred to their appropriate committees, and authorizing such committees to report upon them at any time, every possible item of knowledge or information which the Government possessed and which was needed by the House could thus be obtained.

I hope, therefore, that with this explanation the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS] will be fully satisfied, first, as to the disposition of the Committee on Rules in the direction I have stated; and, second, as to the safe way suggested by that committee, in which the desired information could from time to time be obtained for the use of the House.

Mr. MILLS. I have this further statement to make, this further objection to the report of the Committee on Rules: suppose that the resolution calling for information is of a partisan character; suppose that a member of the minority desires to call for some information in possession of some officer who belongs to the party of the majority of the House, does any gentleman believe that such a resolution would get out of any committee against the vote of a majority of its members, when the design of the resolution was, perhaps, to expose the malfeasance of some officer belonging to the party of the majority? If he does, then he has an amount of credulity that surpasses anything that I have ever witnessed in this House during my seven years' experience here.

Now, I do not want any of these obstructions in the way of obtaining information. I have no fears of any abuse of the right to call for such information. I have never seen anything of the kind here. We simply desire to obtain from the Departments or from the President such information as is needed to enable the House to properly act upon the subject to which that information may relate.

I would ask that the resolution which I offered in the first instance be reported back to the House, in order that the House may vote upon it. My resolution was that the rules should be so amended as to make it in order every morning immediately after the reading of the Journal to submit a call for information to be voted upon without debate.

Mr. CALKINS. A full answer to the suggestion of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. GARFIELD,] that sometimes these resolutions were duplicated, is to be found in this statement: in case any of the Departments have already furnished the information called for to a committee of the House, it would be a full answer to the resolution for such Department to reply that the information had already been given, and the Department would not be required to go over it again. It does seem to me that to place in the hands of a committee of this House the power to pass upon any resolution calling for information, whether local or general in its character, would simply be an obstruction in the way of obtaining the information which the House ought always to have at its command.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) It is very seldom that it is in order for a member to offer a resolution calling for information; that is the difficulty. Any one member at any time may prevent a call for information.

By this report from the Committee on Rules we propose to make it in order during the morning hour of Monday to introduce resolutions calling for executive information, such resolutions to be referred to appropriate committees, and those committees to be authorized to report upon them at any time. The same majority of that committee which would prevent the reporting back of such a resolution, because of any political or other purpose embodied in it, would prevent the resolution being considered in the House, for a single member of that majority could object to it, or if no individual member was disposed to exercise that right, the majority of the House could reject it.

Mr. MILLS. But there would be a record.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) So that it would come right back at any rate to the majority of the House controlling the business of the House.

Mr. BAKER. I would inquire whether or not the proposition reported from the Committee on Rules ought not to be so changed as to require and make it imperative for the committee to report either for or against the resolution, so as to allow the question to come before the House for its determination?

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) I think that is a very good suggestion. It did not occur to the committee. I am myself quite willing that the amendment should be submitted. I have not power to accept it; but it can be voted upon by the House.

Mr. BAKER. I move to amend the proposition reported from the Committee on Rules so as to provide that the committee to which a resolution for executive information may be referred shall report thereon at the earliest practicable time.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) I have not the power to accept that amendment; but I have no objection to its adoption.

Mr. BAKER. I trust it will be adopted, and then it will obviate all difficulties.

Mr. WHITE. That amendment would not amount to anything. I move to amend the amendment by inserting the words "within one week."

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) It is always sufficient instruction to a committee to direct it to report at the earliest practicable time

Mr. BAKER. I have no objection to inserting the words "within one week."

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) I think the Committee on Rules would have no objection to that suggestion, though I am not authorized to accept it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. CLYMER.) The amendment, as modified, will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

And such committees shall report thereon within one week thereafter.

Mr. STEPHENS. One word. As it is proposed now to modify the rule of the House, I think there can be no objection to it, not even by the gentleman from Texas, [Mr. MILLS.] I will state this: when I came into Congress, in 1843, it was just as common every morning to introduce resolutions calling for this kind of information as it was to ask leave to introduce a bill. It was found, however, that in several instances, when such calls had been made upon the Executive Departments for information, it would require nearly six months to comply with the call. Now, it is proper that these calls, which may relate to the tariff, currency, or anything of that kind, should go to some appropriate committee that may examine as to their nature and necessity. I think the resolution, as now proposed to be amended, is exactly right, and that the rule should stand as proposed.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. BAKER, as modified, it was agreed to.

The proposed amendment to the rules, as amended, was then adopted.

Mr. RANDALL (the Speaker) moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

COMMITTEE ON MINES AND MINING.

Mr. BELFORD, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Rules:

Resolved, That the Committee on Mines and Mining be increased from eleven to thirteen members.

ADJOURNMENT OVER.

Mr. HOOKER. I move that the House now adjourn.

Mr. ACKLEN. Pending that motion, I move that when the House adjourns to-day it be to meet on Saturday next. [Cries of "Oh, no!"]

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. ACKLEN, it was not agreed to; there being ayes 15, noes not counted.

Mr. WHITE. I desire to offer a resolution.

Mr. HOOKER. I renew my motion to adjourn.

COMMITTEE APPOINTMENTS.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to announce that the gentleman from Montana, Mr. MAGINNIS, is by consent transferred from the Committee on the Territories to the Committee on Military Affairs; and the gentleman from Utah, Mr. CANNON, is appointed to fill the vacancy on the former committee. The Chair also announces the appointment of Mr. RANDALL L. GIBSON, of Louisiana, and Mr. BENJAMIN W. HARRIS, of Massachusetts, as additional members of the Committee on Mississippi Levees, appointed in pursuance of the action of the House to-day.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HOOKER. Before renewing my motion to adjourn, I ask leave to present from the Committee on Epidemic Diseases a bill to be printed and recommitted.

Mr. WHITE. Before deciding whether I shall object, I wish to know if the gentleman is going to object to my resolution?

Mr. SPARKS. I am.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. MARTIN, of North Carolina, until Wednesday next;

To Mr. GARFIELD, until Tuesday next;

To Mr. KENNA, until Tuesday next;

To Mr. BRIGHAM, until Monday next;

To Mr. UPDEGRAFF, of Ohio, until Tuesday next, on account of important business;

To Mr. BOYD, until Tuesday next;

To Mr. SIMONTON, for ten days; and

To Mr. CLARK, of New Jersey, until Wednesday next.

FLORIDA CENTRAL RAILROAD.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, relative to the detention of certain goods of the United States by the Florida Central Railroad Company; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

VINEGAR FACTORIES.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the acting Secretary of the Treasury, recommending that the internal-revenue laws relative to the establishment of vinegar factories in connection with distilleries be amended as suggested by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue; which was referred to the Committee of Ways and Means.

WORK AT SOUTH PASS, MISSISSIPPI RIVER.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting report of progress of work at South Pass, Mississippi River; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. HOOKER. I withdraw the motion to adjourn.

Mr. BRAGG. I renew it.

ADJOURNMENT OVER.

Mr. McLANE. Is it not in order for me to move that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Saturday next?

The SPEAKER. That motion has been voted down; but as there has been intervening business it is in order for the gentleman to renew the motion.

Mr. McLANE. I make that motion.

Mr. STEPHENS. Is not to-morrow private bill day?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. STEPHENS. I trust that the motion will not be agreed to.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 107, noes 38.

Mr. LOWE and Mr. JONES called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered, only 14 voting therefor.

So the motion of Mr. McLANE was agreed to.

Mr. McLANE moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The motion of Mr. BRAGG, that the House adjourn, was then agreed to; and accordingly (at two o'clock and forty minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Saturday next.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions, &c., were presented at the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as stated:

By Mr. ACKLEN: Papers relating to the claim of Alphonse Desmare, of Louisiana, for the recovery of the proceeds of three hundred and seventy-five bales of cotton, which he alleges were seized and sold by the United States—to the Committee of Claims.

By Mr. ANDERSON: The petition for the establishment of a mail-route from Bow Creek, Kansas, to Huston, Kansas—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. BAKER: The petition of S. K. Randall and 50 others, citizens of Indiana, against the extension of the Birdsell clover-huller patent—to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. BRIGGS: The memorial of 343 citizens of Manchester, New Hampshire, officers and members of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, and others, against any change in the law that will promote the interests of dealers in spirituous liquors—to the Committee of Ways and Means.

By Mr. CALKINS: The petition of R. H. Cain, for expenses of contesting election in the second congressional district of South Carolina—to the Committee of Elections.

By Mr. CASWELL: The petition of D. Buchanan and 36 others, citizens of Columbia County, Wisconsin, against the extension of the Birdsell clover-huller patent—to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. COX: Papers relating to tonnage dues paid by certain steamship companies—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Also, a memorial of citizens of the seventh congressional district of New York, asking that Hon. EDWIN EINSTEIN may be declared not entitled to a seat in Congress from that district—to the Committee of Elections.

By Mr. DEUSTER: The petition of E. J. & W. Lindsey, H. M. Olin, and 5 others, citizens of Milwaukee, Wisconsin, against the extension of the Birdsell clover-huller patent—to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. DICKEY: The petition of Franklin Grange, No. 446, of Brown County, Ohio, for the passage of the Reagan interstate-commerce bill—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. GARFIELD: The memorial of Mrs. J. C. Batcham and 110 others, citizens of Painsville, Ohio, against any change in the revenue law that will promote the interests of dealers in spirituous liquors—to the Committee of Ways and Means.

By Mr. GUNTER: Papers relating to the correction of boundaries of certain lands in San Mateo County, California—to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

Also, a paper relating to the claim of the trustees of Cave Hill College, Arkansas, for compensation for buildings destroyed by United States troops—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, papers relating to the claim of Pryor N. Lea, of Washington County, Arkansas, for rescuing United States soldiers from a sand bar in the Mississippi River in 1864—to the same committee.

Also, papers relating to the claim of Elias B. Moore, ex-postmaster at Fayetteville, Arkansas, for postage-stamps taken by United States forces in 1862—to the same committee.

Also, a paper relating to the claim of William H. Engles for losses sustained during the late war—to the same committee.

Also, papers relating to the claim of Jacob L. Shinn for cotton, horses, and forage taken by United States forces in 1864—to the same committee.

Also, papers relating to the claim for pay and emoluments of G. W. Jobe, late second lieutenant of Company F, Forty-sixth Missouri Infantry Volunteers—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. HERNDON: Petition of the Medical Association of the State of Alabama, favoring the passage of the bill to increase the efficiency of the National Board of Health, and to prevent the introduction and spread of contagious and infectious diseases—to the Committee on the Origin, Introduction and Prevention of Epidemic Diseases in the United States.

By Mr. MARTIN, of West Virginia: Papers relating to the claim of A. H. Herr for compensation and use of property by United States forces—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. McKINLEY: The petition of 34 persons of Portage County, Ohio, against any change in the revenue law that will promote the interests of dealers in spirituous liquors—to the Committee of Ways and Means.

By Mr. MITCHELL: The petition of D. B. Lane and L. B. Sheive and others, citizens of Pennsylvania, against the extension of the Birdsell clover-huller patent—to the Committee on Patents.

Also, the petition of G. W. Ferguson and others, citizens of Pennsylvania, against the extension of the Birdsell clover-huller patent—to the same committee.

By Mr. MULDROW: Papers relating to the claim of Captain J. H. Estes for mail service—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. O'NEILL: A paper relating to the claim of William S. Hansell & Sons, of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, for royalty alleged to have been improperly collected from them—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. RICHARDSON, of New York: The petition of A. W. Miner and 46 others, citizens of Allegany County, New York, against the extension of the Birdsell clover-huller patent—to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. SPARKS: A joint resolution of the Legislature of Illinois, in relation to swamp-land indemnity—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. WEAVER: The petition of Blair Stevenson and 39 others, citizens of Appanoose County, Iowa, and William Sayres and 37 others, citizens of the same county and State, against the extension of the Birdsell clover-huller patent—to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. WILLITS: The petition of George Marritt and 42 others, citizens of Hillsdale County, Michigan, against the extension of the Birdsell clover-huller patent—to the same committee.

By Mr. YOCUM: Petition of citizens of Clinton County, Pennsylvania, against any change in the revenue laws that will promote the interests of dealers in spirituous liquors—to the Committee of Ways and Means.

IN SENATE.

FRIDAY, May 2, 1879.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. J. BULLOCK, D. D.

THE JOURNAL.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to inquire whether in making up the Journal it is not the custom to have the business of the Senate recorded in the order in which it was actually transacted. I notice that the resolution offered by the Senator from Delaware, [Mr. SAULSBURY,] which was the last business, I think, in order yesterday in the Senate, is recorded on the Journal as having been offered early in the day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is the inquiry of the Senator touching a resolution to adjourn over until Monday submitted by the Senator from Delaware, [Mr. BAYARD?]

Mr. HOAR. No, sir; touching the resolution to authorize the Committee on Privileges and Elections to make a certain investigation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That came in as the report of a committee, and the Secretary informs the Chair that it has been usual to put all reports of committees in their proper place in the Journal.

Mr. HOAR. I understand that, in regard to mere petitions, that has been the custom, and it is a very proper one; but when a matter comes up of business actually transacted or proposed, it is exceedingly important that the Journal should show at what time and should show the order in which that business came in. The question whether a particular Senator was present may be very important, whether he appears to have been present at the next preceding vote, and I certainly should object for one to a method of making up the Journal, which does not show the exact truth in that particular.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would observe to the Senator from Massachusetts that nothing is more common than to introduce bills, for instance, sometimes fifteen or twenty, after the morning hour has expired, and they have always been, as the Chair is informed by the Secretary, placed under the execution of the rule that the introduction of bills and joint resolutions shall be in order after reports of committees. The Chair can see the difficulty of the objection the Senator states. If the Senator moves to amend the Journal, the Chair will of course entertain the motion.

Mr. HOAR. I move to amend the Journal in that particular. The resolution was not introduced under the morning call, but was introduced by special leave after the bill pending in Committee of the Whole had been laid aside, and it was the last act of the Senate during the day.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Does the Senator make a motion?

Mr. HOAR. Yes.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I should be glad to hear what the motion is.

Mr. HOAR. I move that the Journal be amended according to the truth. The Journal as read shows, I repeat, that the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY] offered from the Committee on Privileges and Elections the order which he proposed as among the first business of yesterday, but it was in fact the last business of yesterday.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I believe not only in this body but in the other end of the Capitol and in all other legislative bodies the different orders are ranged together and do not appear as they may have been presented. If the latter course should be pursued there would be great confusion and constant confusion in the Journal. I take it the RECORD will note and show exactly what was done and the time when it was done. If the Senator desires it he can refer to that. But as to making up the Journal, as I understand it, it has been the usage not only here but everywhere to put the business in its proper order. As the Chair well said, a dozen bills sometimes are presented just at the adjournment, but they are all placed together in the Journal in proper order.

Mr. HOAR. This is not an ordinary bill; it is a grave question affecting a seat in the Senate; and although it is a motion made by authority of the committee, it is not a report of the committee. It is an important order introduced by a particular Senator.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I took especial care to state when I introduced the resolution that I was instructed by the Committee on Privileges and Elections to offer it.

Mr. HOAR. Certainly.

Mr. SAULSBURY. It is, therefore, a report from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, and not my report. Matters of that kind, as I understand, are usually placed among the morning business, because they are a part of the morning business. Although I did not actually present the resolution within the morning hour, it is well known that a great deal of morning business is presented out of order and is placed in the RECORD and in the Journal in the order of morning business.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Before the Senator from Alabama proceeds, the Chair will call the attention of the Senator from Massachusetts to the fact that this resolution on its face purports to be from the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. HOAR. There is no doubt of that, Mr. President; I so stated.

Mr. HOUSTON. I suppose this report from the Committee on Privileges and Elections presents a question of privilege that overrides all the other rules of the Senate. If it does not, then it is not a privileged question. The fact that it is called a privileged question, as I remarked yesterday, grows out of the effort to seat or unseat a member; it grows out of an effort to complete the organization of the legislative body. As I ventured to say yesterday, and I repeat to-day, although Rule 33, which was read, provides that "all resolutions" shall go over, if objected to, upon one objection, I have no idea that the proper construction of that rule is that it applies to privileged questions, because a privileged question, if it is in truth one of privilege, overrides those rules that apply to the ordinary resolutions of a legislative body. If I understand the question now before the Senate it is whether this report of the committee, this resolution, can be considered in the morning hour——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending question is on the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts to amend the Journal.

Mr. HOUSTON. In what particular? We cannot hear what is going on in this part of the Chamber.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state that the motion is to amend the Journal by transposing from the place in which it now occurs the statement of the report of the Committee on Privileges and Elections and placing it in another portion of the Journal. The Senator from Massachusetts has not yet designated where he proposes to put it, but evidently at some later period of the proceedings of the day.

Mr. HOUSTON. I think it came in pretty late in the day. I could not hear across the Chamber, but I thought the Senator from Massachusetts was making a point as to the power of the resolution from the Committee on Privileges and Elections to bring itself up in spite of other matters before the Senate. I was speaking from that point of view, and I ask pardon if I misunderstood the question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. To what portion of the Journal does the Senator from Massachusetts move to transpose the resolution?

Mr. HOAR. To the last place before the adjournment.

Mr. WHYTE. Mr. President, if the proposition of the Senator from Massachusetts prevails, it will establish a precedent which in my judgment will produce endless confusion hereafter in making up the Journal. The Journal and the RECORD are entirely different, and nearly every morning present in the order of procedure a different condition of things. The Senator from Massachusetts will find in the RECORD that this resolution was introduced toward the close of the day yesterday, and some debate proceeded thereon; but in making up the Journal the rules of the Senate provide that the Journal shall be made up in brief, collecting the different orders of business together, and putting them so that in looking at the Journal you can be directed at once to that branch of business for which you are making inquiry.

Mr. EDMUNDS. To which rule does the Senator refer?

Mr. WHYTE. To Rule 5 I refer first, and then to Rule 8 to show the order of business. Rule 5 is in these words:

> The proceedings of the Senate shall, briefly and accurately, be stated on the Journal. Messages of the President, in full; titles of bills and joint resolutions, and such parts as shall be affected by proposed amendments; every vote, and a brief statement of the contents of each petition, memorial, or paper presented to the Senate, shall be entered.

That is the direction to the Secretary of the Senate. He is to make a brief, accurate statement of each paper that is presented, of the title of a report, the title of a bill, the title of a joint resolution; and no more. The RECORD contains all the other information requisite. The Secretary shall state that, of course, in such order as to make it convenient to be found whenever inquiry is made for it. Then the order of business to which his attention is directed is comprised in the eighth rule, and that says distinctly that the order of business shall be in this wise: "The presentation of petitions and memorials" first. Therefore all petitions and memorials should be succinctly stated together, so that when you look in the Journal for the character of memorials or petitions presented the day before, you may find them together one after the other, and you have no difficulty, instead of running through the whole Journal and probably making some mistake in your investigation. Next come reports of the standing committees, and then of select committees; then "the introduction of bills and joint resolutions;" then "concurrent and other resolutions."

If the rules were strictly applied there could possibly be no difficulty whatever in making up the Journal and putting every bill or resolution or petition or memorial in the exact position to which it is entitled in the proceedings of the day; but by unanimous consent we constantly, almost daily, give a Senator who may be out of the Chamber at the proper moment when the petition or memorial that he is about to present or the report he is about to make would be strictly in order, the opportunity at any hour of the day of presenting the paper that he wishes to present to the Senate. But the Secretary is bound to deal with a case where the unanimous consent is given precisely in the same manner as if it came in its regular order. Therefore, when we take the Journal up in the morning and hear it read, we find that the petitions are together, the memorials are together, the resolutions are together, the bills are together, the reports of committees are together; and it is the proper and orderly procedure for a legislative body.

If you do not do that, Mr. President, if you change this rule of practice which has guided the Secretary of the Senate heretofore, you will find your Journal a perfect harlequin, with all sorts of heterogeneous measures scattered all over it, instead of finding it when you take it up in the morning orderly and regularly arranged so that any Senator by looking at that part of it or listening to the reading of that part of it which contains the resolutions, or the memorials, or the petitions can ascertain whether a certain paper was properly presented and properly referred. I hope that the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts will not prevail.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is the Senate ready for the question?

Mr. HOAR. I withdraw the motion. I think the time when the report appeared is sufficiently indicated now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is withdrawn, and the Journal is approved.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. MAXEY presented the petition of John Walter Sheriff and others, citizens of Gillespie County, Texas, praying for the establishment of a post-route from Fredericksburgh to Junction City, in that State; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. RANDOLPH presented the petition of D. S. Williams and others, citizens of Egg Harbor, New Jersey; the petition of Peter Fisher, jr., and others, citizens of Red Bank and Long Branch, New Jersey; and the petition of Thomas R. Woolley and others, citizens of Red Bank and Long Branch, New Jersey, praying for an amendment of the statutes in relation to the registration of vessels so as to authorize the owners or managing owners of vessels to hail them from the place nearest their residence and the customs district in which such vessels may be owned by having the same painted on the stern in two lines; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. HOUSTON presented the petition of Samuel Elliot and others, citizens of Alabama, praying for the passage of a law authorizing a change of the military record of William B. Guthrey, late private Company I, First Regiment Alabama Volunteers, and the granting of an honorable discharge to him; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. BAYARD, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the petition of Mrs. G. W. Green and 79 other women of the State of Michigan for the passage of a law prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors in the District of Columbia, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia; which was agreed to.

AMENDMENT TO APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ANTHONY. I offer an amendment intended to be proposed to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill. I move that it be referred first to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

The motion was agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. BAYARD asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 539) in relation to gifts, devises, and bequests to the United States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. ALLISON asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 540) granting a pension to John S. Corlett; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BAILEY asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 541) for the relief of Perez Dickinson, the surviving partner of James Cowan, deceased, heretofore trading and doing business under the firm name and style of Cowan & Dickinson, of Knoxville, East Tennessee; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. KELLOGG asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 542) for the relief of Benjamin C. Bampton; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 543) for the relief of Jabez Burchard; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. HAMLIN (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 545) granting a pension to Elizabeth H. Pierce; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. McDONALD asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 546) for the relief of John C. Birdsell; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Patents.

Mr. WHYTE asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 547) for the better protection of life during marine disasters; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

TEXAS PACIFIC RAILROAD.

Mr. JOHNSTON asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 544) to provide for the construction of a railway from the Mississippi waters to the Pacific Ocean, and amendatory of and supplementary to the act entitled "An act to incorporate the Texas Pacific Railway Company, and to aid in the construction of its road, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1871, and the several acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto; which was read the first time by its title.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to hear the bill read, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In full?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes, sir, the second reading. I do not want anything about the Pacific railroads to be done that I do not know what is going on in the time of it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read the second time in full.

The bill was read the second time at length.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I suppose the question is on the reference of the bill to the Committee on Railroads?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is the question.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think public attention in some way ought to be drawn, as well as the attention of the committee, to the gravity of the propositions contained in this bill. It appears, as Senators who have listened to it will have noticed, to be not only a general grant of power to the Texas Pacific Railroad Company by name to build a railway from some place in Texas westward, and I do not know but eastward, but it also appears to contain several (I do not know but four or five) separate grants of power to State corporations in the States of Texas and Louisiana and, perhaps, Arkansas, to build lines of railway within those respective States entirely from one point in a State to another point in the same State, and to a State corporation describing it as the creature and creation of the State.

That of course involves a very serious constitutional question. It may perhaps be thought to go even a little further than the questions about the public health that are now occupying the attention of the Senate. It seems to be supposed by some, and perhaps correctly, (I am not now up to discuss that point,) that it is within the competence of Congress to provide for the public health of all the citizens of the United States and of the several States, in whichever capacity the citizen happens to appear, if he is in danger of a contagious disease, by restraining him of his personal liberty and otherwise regulating his conduct, his movement, &c.

But now this proposition appears to extend that a good deal. You are not only to interfere with the rights of the States in respect of the national welfare of health, but you are to actually take possession of State corporations, railway corporations, and by your national authority authorize them not to build a line of railway over several States on the theory of regulating commerce, but to build several separate lines of railway within several States respectively each for itself.

I hope the committee will very carefully consider any such proposition before they give the weight of their influence to a favorable report upon such a bill.

Then I should like to call attention, as far as I may, to the fact that the bill appears to contain a very large subsidy, not merely of lands but of money, bonds upon bonds, $15,000 a mile, I believe, to all the various railway companies and railways that are contemplated in this proposed act, running up I do not know to how many millions and scores of millions of dollars, for which the faith and credit of the United States and the toil of the tax-payer are to be called upon to respond.

I had the impression that all men, of all parties, without respect to what their political opinions were, but in support of what they say their political opinions are, had decided over and over again by protestation, by appealing to public confidence, by promises of good behavior in that respect, that there should be no more subsidies granted to railway corporations or any other corporations within the United States. Yet there appears here in this time of what is said to be public distress, certainly in this time of a called session of Congress for a particular purpose, a scheme (supported evidently by the honorable Senator from Virginia who gives the weight of his commanding influence to this bill) to saddle upon the Treasury of the United States untold and I do not know but unmeasured liabilities.

Well, sir, if this Government is in a condition and is instituted for such purposes, I am far from saying that the particular region of country over which this net-work of railways is to be laid is not as deserving of it as any, and that it cannot furnish as much freight; I dare say that is all true. It is not to the benefit of the people of Texas and Arkansas and Louisiana and the Territories that I object; it is to the national interference with State affairs, in the first place, and to the call upon the Treasury of the United States, in the second place, for large grants of aid for such purposes in whatever section of the country that may be.

Mr. ANTHONY. The subsidy would more than build the road.

Mr. EDMUNDS. And my honorable friend from Rhode Island suggests that the subsidy would more than build the road in those regions. How that is, I do not know. But I felt it to be a duty, Mr. President, in the outset of this bill, just as in old times the merit of a bill always used to be discussed at its outset, and I think it is a pretty good way, to call attention to the great importance of the principles involved in this bill, and to the great practical draught that it proposes to make upon the Treasury of the United States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there is no objection the bill will be referred to the Committee on Railroads.

AMENDMENT TO AN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. DAWES. I ask leave to report from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds an amendment to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill proposed by the Senator from Rhode Island, [Mr. ANTHONY.] It is in relation to the statue of General Greene. I move that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and printed.

The motion was agreed to.

ACCOUNTS OF THOMAS WORTHINGTON.

Mr. PENDLETON (by request) submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, directed to inform the Senate upon what evidence two items in the account of Colonel Thomas Worthington for Army supplies in 1861 were reported on the 20th of March, 1876, as having been paid in full by the Third Auditor, which same items had been previously by the same officer, to wit, on Februrary 21, 1876, reported as not considered for want of jurisdiction.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 29th of April approved and signed the act (S. No. 218) changing the name of the National Bank of Commerce of Cincinnati, Ohio, to the National La Fayette and Bank of Commerce of Cincinnati, Ohio.

SENATOR FROM LOUISIANA.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The business before the Senate is the resolution from the Committee on Privileges and Elections reported yesterday by its chairman.

Mr. HOAR. Let it be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution reported yesterday by Mr. SAULSBURY, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Privileges and Elections, to which was referred the memorial of Henry M. Spofford, praying permission to produce evidence relating to the right of Hon. William Pitt Kellogg to the seat in the Senate held by him from the State of Louisiana and in support of the claim of said petitioner thereto, be, and said committee is hereby, instructed to inquire into the matters alleged in said petition; and for that purpose said committee is authorized and empowered to send for persons and papers, administer oaths, and do all such other acts as are necessary and proper for a full and fair investigation in the premises. Said committee may, in its discretion, appoint a subcommittee of its own members to make such investigation in whole or in part; which subcommittee shall have authority to employ a clerk, stenographer, and sergeant-at-arms, and shall have all the powers of the general committee to administer oaths and send for persons and papers, and may make such investigation either in Washington or in the State of Louisiana, and said committee or its subcommittee may sit in vacation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of this resolution.

Mr. HOAR. I move the following substitute for the resolution:

Whereas, on the 25th day of October, 1877, the Senate unanimously adopted the following resolution:

"Resolved, That the Committee on Privileges and Elections on the contested cases of William Pitt Kellogg and Henry M. Spofford, claiming seats as Senators from the State of Louisiana, and whose credentials have been referred to such committee, be authorized to send for persons and papers, and administer oaths, with a view of enabling said committee to determine and report upon the title, respectively, on the merits, of each of said contestants to a seat in the Senate."

And whereas, on the 26th day of November, 1877, said committee reported the following resolutions:

"Resolved, That William Pitt Kellogg is, upon the merits of the case, entitled to a seat in the Senate of the United States from the State of Louisiana for the term of six years commencing on the 4th day of March, 1877, and that he be admitted thereto upon taking the proper oath.

"Resolved, That Henry M. Spofford is not entitled to a seat in the Senate of the United States."

And on the 30th day of November, 1877, the Senate adopted said resolution, and thereafter on the same day said Kellogg was duly admitted to take the oath and took his seat as a Senator from said State for said term:

Resolved, That said proceedings are final and conclusive upon the right of said Kellogg and the claim of such Spofford to said seat for said term.

Mr. McDONALD. I ask for the yeas and nays on the substitute.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Mr. President, the matters involved in this resolution and in the substitute are matters of great public importance. The effect of the adoption of the resolution will be to reopen the Kellogg-Spofford case in all its length and breadth. Quite a number of Senators on this side of the Chamber desire to be heard upon the resolution before it is finally acted upon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning hour has expired, and the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business of yesterday, unless this is pressed as a matter of privilege. If it is, it overrides everything——

Mr. EDMUNDS. Not under the rules.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to have the substitute printed at the suggestion of the Senator from Delaware, [Mr. BAYARD,] before the matter passes away.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I submit to the Chair (although I do not care which way it is only that we should do the same thing twice) that it was determined when this matter was up before that the unfinished business of the preceding day, under our rules, takes its place. It is within the pleasure of the Senate of course to lay that aside and go on with this if it wants to do so; but this being in the morning hour, under the express provision of the rule it is displaced when the unfinished business comes up, although it is a question of privilege.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The rule to which the Chair would call the attention of Senators is Rule 7:

The presentation of the credentials of Senators-elect and other questions of privilege shall always be in order, except during the reading and correction of the Journal, while a question of order or a motion to adjourn is pending, or while the Senate is dividing; and all questions and motions arising or made upon the presentation of such credentials shall be proceeded with until disposed of by the Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes, sir, that being the state of the law, it was held by the Vice-President at the session when we had the difficulty in agreeing about the Louisiana and the South Carolina cases, that this provision of privilege related to the presentation of the credentials and to the presentation of any other question of privilege; that any Senator had a right to rise to it at any time with the exceptions named and present it, and then the Senate would dispose of it. In this instance this question of privilege was the petition of Mr. Spofford which was considered by the Senate and referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. They have made a report upon the subject, asking for instructions as to how to proceed. That report was presented yesterday and laid over until to-day, and was taken up under the resolution clause of our proceedings and proceeded with until we reached the unfinished business; so that according to the decision of the Senate on the previous occasion and according to the rule which gives a privilege in relation to the presentation of the question and not in respect of its being perpetually before the body in the sense of a right to have it now before the body, has been exhausted, and the unfinished business in my judgment is legally before the Senate. Of course it is perfectly competent for the Senate to postpone the unfinished business and take this up this morning.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I desire before passing from the matter to have an order, of which I have been reminded by the honorable Senator from Delaware, to print the substitute which I have offered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order will be entered. If the point is not pressed now, the Chair will lay before the Senate——

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. What has become of the resolution?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is not pressed. The Chair inquired whether the Senator from Delaware insisted that this was a question of privilege which must be continued. The Chair heard no response.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I will say to the Chair that I did not hear his remark. I am inclined to think that this is a privileged question, and such is the view of some of the members of the committee that reported this resolution. But I will say that inasmuch as there is now a bill pending before the Senate undisposed of, and I shall have to leave here myself for my home in the course of ten minutes, I will, with the consent of the Senators associated with me on the committee, agree that this matter shall go over until Tuesday morning, when I shall be back.

Mr. HOUSTON. I do not desire as far as I am concerned to press this report of the committee this morning if the chairman does not propose to do so. I am willing to defer to his wishes. I do not, however, want to seem to acquiesce in that which I do not believe to be a proper construction of the rules. I did not so well understand, for I could not hear very well the honorable Senator from Vermont, but I understood him to say that the question of privilege related or attached simply to the presentation of the petition which was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, and that now it is not a privileged question before the Senate. Did I understand the Senator correctly?

Mr. EDMUNDS. There is so much confusion that, although I was paying attention until a moment ago, I was not able to understand the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. HOUSTON. I regret that we cannot hear across the Chamber. Where I sit we cannot hear several gentlemen on the other side, especially when they speak low. I understood the Senator from Vermont that the question of privilege attached to the presentation of this case for instance, and that now having been before a committee, and the report of the committee being before the Senate, its privileges were not as when it was presented.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I did not intend to say that, and I think I did not say it. The point I was addressing myself to was that even in the case of a privileged question—about which in respect to this point I express no opinion—the letter and the spirit of the rule as it has been heretofore interpreted and acted upon is that the over-riding nature of the question relates to its first presentation,—the presentation of credentials and other questions of privilege. That is, any Senator has a right to get up at any time, with the exceptions named in the rule, as when the Senate is dividing, and present the credentials of a Senator-elect, or to present any question of privilege, such as the misconduct of some brother Senator, or some libel upon the Senate, some breach of its rights, or whatever it may be. That is his right, although something else is before the Senate; he has a right to bring it in for consideration; but it having been brought in for consideration and gone over, then I say that on the true interpretation of the rule, both literally and in its spirit and in the practice under it, when it comes up in the morning hour of the next day and there is unfinished business of whatever character, when one o'clock comes it does not set aside the unfinished business by its own force, but it requires a vote of the Senate to do it. That was my point and all my point.

Mr. HOUSTON. Substantially I understood the Senator from Vermont then, and I would like to know of the honorable Senator of what value is privilege in behalf of a question unless it pertains to and secures its consideration? The privilege that belongs to a question, as he admits does to this merely for its presentation, it seems to me would be of very little value if after its introduction it is to be overridden by any other question at all. It would give the other question a higher privilege, if a higher privilege there could be. It is true that unfinished business is the first business in order when the Senate arrives at that stage of its proceedings, unless there is a question of privilege that overrides that and every other thing that stands in its way for consideration.

Now, the reason of the law sustains the view I have presented. Why is this a privileged question? Because it pertains to the seat of a member; it relates to the organization of the body, and therefore, relating to its organization, it is the first thing that has to be done or can be done if the friends of the proposition do not agree to its postponement.

I have no doubt about this being a privileged question; and I am now going to make a remark in opposition to a ruling made yesterday, when I say I have no idea that that rule of the Senate which speaks of "all resolutions" was intended to include a proposition of this sort, for if a question is one of privilege it must have its privilege from beginning to ending, and the purpose and object of privilege is that it shall come in whenever a Senator proposes it, and that it shall be considered whenever a Senator insists upon its consideration.

Mr. EDMUNDS. May I ask the Senator if he means in that connection to maintain that it would not be competent now, if this question were before the Senate, for a majority of the Senate to vote to postpone it until to-morrow or until next December?

Mr. HOUSTON. No, sir; if it is insisted on, the question is one of privilege that cannot be got away as long as the friends of it insist upon its consideration.

Mr. FERRY. I should like to ask the Senator whether it would not be competent, if the case were now pending, for a majority of the Senate to adjourn?

Mr. HOUSTON. An adjournment is always in order. If the gentleman refers to the rules he will find that expressly stated. That is an answer.

Mr. FERRY. So the rule says that a question of privilege is always in order with the exceptions named in the rule.

Mr. HOUSTON. Yes, a motion to adjourn is a question of higher privilege, and overrules and overrides everything. I have no desire to insist upon the consideration of this resolution now. I leave it in the hands of the chairman of the committee, and whatever course he takes I have no objection to.

Mr. FERRY. Yet the Senator from Alabama places the Senate in the attitude of being compelled to remain here until the question of privilege is disposed of. In answer to the question made by the Senator from Vermont, whether if the question was pending it would not be in order to postpone it to a future day, the Senator from Alabama replied that that was not in order, that the question of privilege should be finally disposed of. If that be the case it covers every other question.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I desire to state that after conference with members of the committee I will consent that the question may go over until Tuesday next.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair does not hear the Senator.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I say that with the concurrence of my brethren of the committee I consent that this question may go over until Tuesday next. I desire, however, to state now that it is not the purpose of the committee in proposing this resolution to the Senate to commit any member of this body to any question involved in the investigation before the commitee or any member of the committee. We do not wish to be understood as expressing any opinion upon any question that may be involved in the inquiry we propose to make. The committee has simply found itself in the possession of a memorial by the direction of the Senate that upon consideration it believes demands some investigation, and it has come here to ask authority for that investigation, without intending by that resolution either to express any opinion on behalf of the committee or to seek any expression of opinion on the part of any Senator in reference to any question which may be involved in the inquiry. We simply desire that authority to enable us to present the case intelligently to the Senate, so that the Senate when they pass upon any question involved in it, may have the whole case properly before it. That was the only reason of this resolution, and it was not for the purpose of committing either the members of the committee or any member of the Senate to an expression of opinion on any question which may be supposed to be involved in the inquiry that is proposed.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution is not pressed now.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I desire to say further that the committee——

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I will not occupy half a minute.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Further debate is perhaps hardly in order, as the consideration of the resolution is not pressed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I rise to a question of order. I want to know whether under the decision of the Chair this resolution is before the Senate or not?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has not decided that question at all. The Chair stated at one o'clock that the unfinished business of yesterday, the yellow-fever bill as it is familiarly called, would be laid before the Senate unless it were insisted that the pending resolution was a matter of privilege, and before the Chair could make any decision upon that, the learned Senators who are acquainted with the rules and decisions took the floor, and the Chair was quiescent, and the debate has run on ever since.

Mr. CONKLING. May I inquire as to what question the honorable Senator from Delaware was speaking to?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair cannot inform the Senator.

Mr. CONKLING. Then may I change the question, and inquire how it was in order for the honorable Senator from Delaware to address the Senate, and is yet not in order when he sits down for the Senator from Wisconsin to address the Senate on the same topic?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair does not decide that any of the Senators were in order after one o'clock, or that they were not in order; but the resolution not being pressed any longer as a matter of privilege, the Chair supposes it is the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate the regular order, which is the unfinished business, the yellow-fever bill; but undoubtedly the Chair will hear with pleasure the Senator from Wisconsin if he desires to speak.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Mr. President, I shall occupy but a moment. The Senator from Delaware stated what the intention of the Committee on Privileges and Elections was in introducing the resolution which he presented yesterday afternoon, or rather he stated what their intention was not. All I have to say is that if the intention of the Committee on Privileges and Elections was what the Senator from Delaware says it was, he was very unfortunate in drawing the resolution, because the resolution expresses a very different intention.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. Mr. President, I desire to say emphatically that I think any discussion of the merits of the controversy is unnecessary now to take place under the resolution as proposed by the committee. It is utterly premature, and cannot be even relevant unless it be made so by the substitute that is offered by the Senator from Massachusetts. The only object in this world of the Committee on Privileges and Elections was to take testimony relevant to this case and relevant to any issue that may be presented, and without which the Senate cannot even intelligently determine the question of res adjudicata itself and whether that is applicable in this case. We do not have any desire to precipitate this discussion. If the gentlemen on the other side intend to precipitate it, they of course can do so by the substitute which they have offered. That will perhaps bring up one partial view of this question; but I say now that the proposition of this resolution to take testimony as presented by the committee settles nothing except that it authorizes the committee to take testimony; and when the testimony is taken, in the light of that testimony and the record in the case the Senate will then be enabled to determine, and determine intelligently, whether this case has been passed upon or not in the manner suggested by the substitute offered by the Senator from Massachusetts.

We have no desire to precipitate this discussion nor to prejudge the case nor commit any gentleman. All we ask is this: after looking at the case the Committee on Privileges and Elections believe that in any view which can be taken it is indispensable to take testimony; of course, legal testimony; and of course the committee must be the judge of competent testimony and legal testimony. But we say that in any view that can be taken of this question it is important that under certain allegations in this memorial testimony shall be taken, and we think of all men in the Senate the sitting member is the one who ought to demand that that testimony be taken. All we ask is the authority to take testimony, committing no gentleman to any question on the merits in any view of the case. We wish that distinctly understood. We do not expect any gentleman to be committed upon the merits until the question shall be fully discussed; but we do say that in our judgment it is impossible for any intelligent discussion or any intelligent decision of any question to be made in this case until the testimony is taken, and all we ask is authority to take that testimony.

Mr. McDONALD. I call for the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This debate is going on by unanimous consent.

Mr. HOAR. I appeal to the Senator from Indiana to allow me to utter one sentence in reply to the long speech which he has listened to without objection on his side of the Chamber.

Mr. McDONALD. If it is not long I will listen.

Mr. HOAR. I simply desire to say that on the question whether by a resolution declaring the Senator from Louisiana entitled to his seat on the merits, that question is or is not finally determined by the Senate, the majority of the committee propose to take testimony of witnesses in Louisiana. The minority of the committee propose to look at the Senate journals and records. That is the difference between them.

Mr. McDONALD. Now, I ask for the regular order.

PREVENTION OF EPIDEMIC DISEASES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business of yesterday, being the bill (S. No. 108) to prevent the introduction and spread of contagious or infectious diseases into the United States, the pending question being on the motion of the Senator from Maine [Mr. HAMLIN] to recommit the bill with instructions. Upon this question the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. GARLAND] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. GARLAND. Mr. President——

Mr. MORGAN. Will the Senator from Arkansas allow me a moment?

Mr. GARLAND. Certainly.

Mr. MORGAN. In the discussion which occurred upon this bill yesterday a statement was made by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. JONAS] as well as by myself in relation to the opinions of Dr. Choppin, a very eminent physician at the city of New Orleans. I stated this:

> In the reading which I have done in reference to this subject, as every man has read about it, of course I have continually come in view of statements made exactly in harmony with this British committee by the most eminent of American surgeons and physicians, among others Dr. Choppin, of New Orleans, who addressed a letter to the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GORDON] during the last session of Congress, in which the doctor very urgently declaimed against the passage of such laws by Congress, and said that whatever can be done with the view of controlling yellow fever or of shutting it out can be done and ought to be done by local authority.

The Senator from Louisiana, [Mr. JONAS,] in speaking of the same eminent physician, said this:

> That is the opinion of the board of health of my city, presided over by one of the most eminent physicians and surgeons in this country, Dr. Choppin, and it is moreover his opinion, and the opinion of his board, that State quarantine associations, with the limited aid which States are able to afford to those quarantine associations either in respect of money or in respect of adequate power to carry out those regulations which are necessary to make them effective, cannot be efficient enough for the purpose, and that national quarantine laws should be passed; and they are willing, if necessary, to abdicate some portion of that power, which the honorable Senator says should be so carefully guarded, to the National Government if the National Government is prepared through a proper quarantine board and proper quarantine laws and regulations to take charge of this important duty of preserving the health of the country from the importation of epidemic diseases.

There appears to be some conflict in reference to the presentation of the opinions of Dr. Choppin between the Senator from Louisiana and myself. It is, however, more apparent than real. I beg leave now to state the authority on which I made the statement I did make yesterday. On the 9th of April, 1878, Dr. Choppin addressed Hon. James T. Jones, Member of Congress from Alabama, inclosing to him, in answer to some questions, a copy of a letter dated 27th March, 1878, addressed to Senator GORDON, of Georgia, which I will read as the authority upon which I made my statement:

> NEW ORLEANS, March 27, 1878.
>
> DEAR SIR: I observe that a bill has quite recently been introduced into the House of Representatives by Hon. Mr. Hartridge, and into the Senate by yourself, "to prevent the introduction of contagious or infectious diseases into the United States." On this subject I would take the liberty to offer some observations and suggestions.
>
> The bill aims to establish a national system of quarantine, and subjects all State and local quarantine authorities to the control of the Surgeon-General of the Marine Hospital Service, who is authorized to "frame all needful rules and regulations, which rules and regulations, with the approval of the President, shall have the force and effect of law." Now, it is apparent that rules and regulations which would be appropriate to a given locality might be found very ill adapted to the conditions of a different locality, and it would be probably impracticable to carry out a uniform plan along the whole extent of our exposed coast line. I am therefore strongly impressed with the belief that the established authorities at all exposed points should not be governed nor trammeled by any higher authority at a distant point. Aside from the probability that the local authorities would best understand the needs of their people, it is evident that emergencies might arise requiring summary action in a manner not provided for in the general regulations, or even in contravention thereto, so that conflict of authority and subsequent trouble would surely result.
>
> One feature in this bill meets my hearty approval, that providing for weekly reports from our consular agents at foreign ports of the public health there, and requiring immediate notice to be forwarded of the existence of infectious diseases at such ports and of the departure of vessels therefrom for any ports in our country. I would suggest, as an improvement, that this intelligence should be transmitted directly from the foreign ports to the quarantine authorities at our ports, in order to save time.
>
> You are probably aware of a bill recently introduced by Senator Eustis, of this State, empowering State Legislatures to impose a tax on tonnage for the purpose of maintaining a quarantine system. In this connection I would suggest that his bill, amended by the addition of the intelligence feature just mentioned, might very properly be offered as a substitute for the one offered by yourself and Mr. Hartridge. Such a law would supply a great desideratum at this port, where the collection of quarantine fees cannot be enforced, and would greatly facilitate our gaining speedy and correct information about the existence of yellow fever at tropical ports.
>
> Hoping that the above views will meet your approbation, and that you will support Senator Eustis's bill, with the suggested amendment,
>
> I remain, very truly and respectfully, yours,
>
> SAM. CHOPPIN, M. D.,
> President Board of Health.
>
> Hon. J. B. GORDON,
> Senator in Congress, Washington, D. C.
>
> P. S. I have the honor to transmit to you a copy of our last annual report, and also of the quarantine acts under which we are now working.

The bill of Mr. Eustis which I hold in my hand is entitled "A bill to authorize the States to impose a tonnage tax on vessels to maintain quarantine." I think the statement made by the Senator from Louisiana is not at all in conflict with what Dr. Choppin has stated here. His statement, as I understand it, is to the effect that quarantine regulations are very serviceable if not absolutely necessary for the purpose of controlling the importation of yellow fever from abroad. I dare say that he is correct about that; for whether yellow fever is epidemic or whether it is not, whether it is local or whether it is not, or whether it is transportable or whether it is not, I think there is no doubt that there is a public apprehension on this subject—I might call it an alarm, or even a panic—which would require us to take some sanitary and active measures in the right direction for the purpose of satisfying the public mind, if nothing else, that we have done all that is within the reach of human agencies to prevent the importation of this disease.

I desired to make this correction in order that there might be no conflict between the Senator from Louisiana and myself.

Mr. JONAS. After listening to what my friend from Alabama has said I have only to say that the letter of Dr. Choppin was written last spring, before the last epidemic, and before the establishment of the National Board of Health. Since the act establishing the National Board of Health many of the statements made by Dr. Choppin would not, in my opinion, be applicable to the bill now under consideration; and I am satisfied the board of health of New Orleans concur in the statement I made yesterday.

Mr. GARLAND. Mr. President, the motion of the Senator from Maine [Mr. HAMLIN] to recommit the bill with instructions brings up the whole question of the merits of the bill, and I suppose the motion was made in part with that view. The question presented is one of very great importance in itself, and as it affects the country directly or indirectly, it is one of the utmost gravity arising under the Constitution of the United States. There are reasons for this measure which, to my own mind, are very clear and very emphatic; but I am free to say that the question involved is not entirely clear of doubt, and it is that kind of question upon which gentlemen may very well differ. I have arrived at the conclusion I have reached by an analysis of all the cases, as far as there are any cases decided in the Supreme Court of the United States on the sections of the Constitution which have a bearing on this matter; and I believe that when those cases are properly examined and compared, according to the fair and legitimate construction of the Constitution, the power invoked in this bill is competent and legitimate under the Constitution.

The question presented comes into the Senate in the most favorable light possible, because even the Senators who oppose the measure express as strong a desire as myself and my colleagues on the committee to do something in this direction to meet the exigencies of the occasion when it shall come; and it is fortunate for the country that the legal aspect of the case can be presented free of all feeling except one to accomplish, if it be possible, the end to which this measure is directed.

Two points, then, present themselves for argument before the Senate; first, is this measure in its length and breadth constitutional? second, if it is constitutional is it politic or expedient that the power invoked should be exercised? Those are the questions, in discussing which I shall give the reasons for the conclusions I have reached.

As far back as 1799 an act of Congress, passed on the 27th of February of that year, in reference to vessels collecting the revenue of the United States, made it obligatory on them to obey and comply with the quarantine laws of the different States, the ports of which they should enter. The question naturally suggests itself right there, if Congress has nothing to do with this subject, as it is termed here, of police regulation in the different States, why did Congress ever pass that act? If the States have plenary power over this whole matter and can do all that is necessary to be done or should be done, exclusive of the United States, why should the United States have said anything about sanitary regulations? If the States are omnipotent in this sphere, the statute of the United States was a piece of supererogation when it said these vessels should comply with the State quarantine regulations.

In 1878 another law was passed a little broader than this, both of them for the purpose of promoting and preserving the public health. In fact the statute of 1799 is headed in the book of statutes as on the subject of the public health. What has Congress to do with the subject of the public health if the States can control that matter entirely?

Under the Constitution Congress can provide for punishing the crime of counterfeiting the public securities; the States can do that also. If instead of adopting any rules on this subject Congress should say, "We will subject every man that counterfeits the public securities to the punishment inflicted by the State statutes," that would simply be saying by Congress, "Although we have this constitutional power we do not see proper to exercise it, but we leave it to the States to exercise." Congress under the Constitution has the authority to pass a uniform bankrupt act. Suppose Congress says instead of passing the act which it did pass a few years since, "We will pass no act of this sort, but we will adopt the State insolvent laws?" Very well, there is a constitutional power which Congress can exercise or not. So there is nothing gained in the argument by saying that Congress heretofore has adopted or sanctioned the State sanitary regulations. It did that simply because it did not see proper to exercise the power itself, and for reasons in the past which do not now exist and cannot exist any more in this country.

It is not worth while now to speak about the statute of 1799, made about the time Mr. Jefferson forded rivers and creeks on horseback to get here to be inaugurated, and crossed on a log over Tiber Creek when he came to be sworn in in this Capitol or some other, as applying to the commerce of this day and time and to the intercourse between the States as contemplated by the Constitution. It would be as well to talk about clothing a man of thirty-five or forty years of age with a suit of clothes that were made for him when he was but fifteen. The changes from time to time, the exigencies of this day which did not exist then, bring into requisition this power under the Constitution if it is as broad as I shall be able to show before I conclude, and the exercise of many other powers which in the Constitution have hitherto lain dormant.

Then, instead of its being an answer to this proposition that Congress has heretofore taken the State laws, meager and unsatisfactory as they are, and conformed to them down to this day and time, it is an argument that Congress has the power but has not seen proper to put it in exercise in the States heretofore. I have referred to the acts of 1799 and 1878. Then, there is the last act, the act passed at the conclusion of the last session, "An act to prevent the introduction of infectious or contagious diseases into the United States, and to establish a National Board of Health." If this act had not mentioned in its title "to prevent the introduction of infectious or contagious diseases," no living man could have found out from reading it that it had any pertinence to that subject, because it simply organizes a National Board of Health to sit here and discuss these questions and correspond with other organizations over the country, possibly to learn the fact whether it is best to throw a man into fits when he has the yellow fever, or whether it is best to bleed him to death, or what else should be done. But as for any measures contemplated by this act to be taken to prevent infectious or contagious diseases being imported into the country, there is not a word.

Now we have the three different acts; two relating by their title to the public health, and the third an act to prevent the introduction of contagious or infectious diseases, but really in the body of the last act there is nothing whatever in reference to actual service in that direction. That is the legislation on this subject by the Congress of the United States. Now where does Congress get its power? What right had the wise men of that day or the wise men of this day to legislate about it at all, unless under the Constitution? As I stated incidentally the other day, and as it has been stated since by the chairman of the committee, the power is derived from the clause in the Constitution giving authority to Congress to regulate commerce with foreign nations and between the States. When Senators are told of the sanitary laws and the quarantine laws of the States, it may be a matter of curiosity with them to inquire how many of these laws exist upon the statute-books of the States. There are only seventeen of them in the United States, and several of them have been completely broken down by the Supreme Court of the United States, because they are in conflict with the very provision of the Constitution to which we refer. This is a point for Senators to reflect upon. We are asked to turn the public health over to the States, only seventeen of which have these regulations.

Mr. MORGAN. I suppose the honorable Senator refers to quarantine regulations proper, not to sanitary laws.

Mr. GARLAND. That is what I have reference to.

Mr. MORGAN. Both sanitary laws and quarantine regulations are provided for in this bill.

Mr. GARLAND. I spoke or intended to speak of quarantine regulations and sanitary regulations connected with quarantine.

Let us begin with the State of Alabama. She has a quarantine law. The State of Arkansas has none. California has quite a complex one, the main feature of which was taken from it by the Supreme Court of the United States in the Chi-Lung case. That was read yesterday by the Senator from Tennessee, [Mr. HARRIS,] and I shall not read that decision again. Delaware has quite an extensive code. Let me call the attention of the Senate to some of its provisions, and it would not take forty-five of the best Philadelphia lawyers to show that they could not stand the test before the Supreme Court of the United States. Section 5 of the Delaware law imposes a penalty for boarding a vessel without license; and by section 6 vessels are not permitted to bring in more than one passenger for each two tons and are required to be well supplied with stores under a penalty of $600. If that is not a clear interference with the commerce of the country, there never has been any yet.

So you may take all these acts, and on account of that very difficulty in framing a law in the States we say the power does exist somewhere to steer clear of these objections and protect the health of the country, if in the opinion of the law-makers it is worth protection.

Texas has a quarantine law, and the very provision for enforcing that law and keeping up its expenses was tested by a gentleman by the name of Morgan who had vessels, and when it came to the Supreme Court they decided that it was not constitutional and must fall. Here is the case of Peete vs. Morgan, 19 Wallace, where the opinion was delivered by Judge DAVIS:

> It is evident that the power to establish quarantine regulations cannot be executed without the State possesses the means to raise a revenue for their enforcement, but it is equally evident that the means used for this purpose must be of such a character as the restrictions imposed by the Federal Constitution upon the taxing power of the States authorize. We are not called upon in this case to go into the general subject of the limitations imposed by these restrictions, because the tax in question is manifestly outside the jurisdiction of the State to impose, as it is a "duty of tonnage," within the meaning of the Constitution.
>
> This duty was doubtless imposed to raise revenue, but Chief-Justice Marshall, in commenting on this subject in Gibbons vs. Ogden, says: "It is true that duties may often be, and in fact often are, imposed or tonnage, with a view to the regulation of commerce; but they may be also imposed with a view to revenue; and it was, therefore, a prudent precaution to prohibit the States from exercising this power."
>
> It is, however, not necessary to discuss this subject, as it has been recently fully considered by this court in the State tonnage-tax cases, reported in 12 Wallace. In these cases the law of Alabama levied a tax at so much per ton on all steamboats. The boats on which the tax was levied were owned by citizens of the State, and were employed exclusively in the internal commerce of the State, over which Congress has no control. This court, while conceding the full power of the State to tax the property of its citizens, held that the inhibition in the Federal Constitution prevented the State from taxing in this mode. Much more does this inhibition apply when the vessels are owned by citizens of another State, and are engaged in commerce between the States, over which Congress has control.

Now, I state not what I know personally but what I learn from information, that the State of Texas, in order to have a quarantine law after this decision by which this act was completely struck down by the Supreme Court of the United States, so as to be perfectly safe, committed the power to the hands of the governor to make proclamation and prescribe rules whenever he saw proper. That several of the States on the list I have here have done. That was the result of that experiment by one State; we have seen also what it was in the case of California. New York enacted a very intricate and complex system and it met the same fate in the case of Henderson vs. the Mayor, a case referred to yesterday by the Senator from Tennessee, [Mr. HARRIS.]

If the States have this difficulty in enacting these acts, where does the difficulty arise? The court says every time it is infringing upon the regulation of commerce, which belongs to the Congress of the United States to regulate.

Now understand me, I would be among the last men in the world to claim that because the States do not do this, therefore Congress has a right to do it. I say in the first place Congress has the right to do it, and for the best reason in the world it should do it when the States fail, and necessarily fail to make laws that can stand the test of the highest tribunal in the United States under the Constitution. But why was the matter left in 1799 to the States? There was the best reason in the world for that legislation. When the act of 1799 was passed we had but few ports. Our commerce at that time amounted, comparatively speaking, to nothing. When one spoke of commerce at that day and time he meant almost exclusively commerce that came in through the different ports from foreign countries; but as time went on and the Government enlarged and the country increased, intercommunication came up between the different States; and at this time, when nearly every State is checkered with railroads, the interstate commerce has become as important if not more important than the foreign commerce. Hence a mere quarantine on your ocean ports contemplated by the statute of 1799 has now in most instances no application. The statute on the writ of habeas corpus would have as much application in most cases when you come to speak of the commerce between the States.

Further, if but seventeen States have quarantine regulations, it is a little too late at least for this coming season for us to expect that the other States will have quarantine regulations in time to do any good between this and next winter. So, whether on the law or on the facts of the case, in view of the exigencies of the time and the occasion, that argument amounts to nothing.

A case was not long since decided in the Supreme Court of the United States in regard to which a number of distinguished gentlemen believed that the Supreme Court traveled a little fast, to use the ordinary expression; I refer to the case of the Pensacola Telegraph Company vs. The Western Union Telegraph Company. I wish to call the attention of the Senate now to the language of the court in that case. This went off on the question of commerce mainly, but also on the power to establish post-offices and post-roads. The court said:

The powers thus granted are not confined to the instrumentalities of commerce or the postal service known or in use when the Constitution was adopted, but they keep pace with the progress of the country, and adapt themselves to the new developments of time and circumstances. They extend from the horse with its rider to the stage-coach, from the sailing-vessel to the steamboat, from the coach and the steamboat to the railroad, and from the railroad to the telegraph, as these new agencies are successively brought into use to meet the demands of increasing population and wealth. They were intended for the government of the business to which they relate, at all times and under all circumstances. As they were intrusted to the General Government for the good of the nation, it is not only the right, but the duty, of Congress to see to it that intercourse among the States and the transmission of intelligence are not obstructed or unnecessarily encumbered by State legislation.—6 Otto, page 9.

Mr. President, under this decision and some that go before it every railroad in the United States is a part of the postal arrangement of the country. When your quarantine is established at Indianapolis or Little Rock, and it reaches out its hand to stop the train that carries the mails on to Texas, does it not interfere with the postal instrumentalities of the nation over which the nation has exclusive, direct, and positive control? So turn this question in any direction you please and you cannot escape the fact that when you cross State lines you are in a different jurisdiction.

But I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the dissenting opinion in this case by Judge Field, and we all know who read the Supreme Court reports that what Judge Field will not save and hoard up for the rights of the States would not make a very large legal almanac. On page 22 of the same volume he says:

The power vested in Congress to regulate commerce "among the several States" does not authorize any interference with the commerce which is carried on entirely within a State. "Comprehensive as the word 'among' is," says Chief-Justice Marshall, "it may very properly be restricted to that commerce which concerns more States than one;" and "the completely internal commerce of a State, then, may be considered as reserved for the State itself."

That is taken from Gibbons vs. Ogden. That is the doctrine this bill maintains, that as to the internal commerce of a State the State has perfect, entire, and exclusive control of that, but she has not any more than that. The State of Illinois is content with that for Illinois, but she cannot cross the Wabash and attend to it in Indiana; and when we give a State rights we must not give any more than the rights of that particular State. That is the distinction of Mr. Justice Field, quoting from Gibbons vs. Ogden. All religions nowadays go back to the Bible and profess to stand upon it. All these theories of the State power in this respect go back to Gibbons vs. Ogden, 9 Wheaton, 194–5. We have got that far along in the progress. See now what the court did say in that case in 9 Wheaton:

The enumeration presupposes something not enumerated;—

Referring to the section of the Constitution giving power to regulate commerce among the several States—and that something, if we regard the language or the subject of the sentence, must be the exclusively internal commerce of a State. The genius and character of the whole Government seem to be that its action is to be applied to all the external concerns of the nation and to those internal concerns which affect the States generally;—

That is all we claim in this bill—

but not to those which are completely within a particular State, which do not affect other States, and with which it is not necessary to interfere for the purpose of executing some of the general powers of the Government. The completely internal commerce of a State, then, may be considered as reserved for the State itself.

Unquestionably, and nobody does dispute or ever has disputed it; nor does this bill. That now is the groundwork of this bill. We have said from the beginning that when the State of Arkansas or the State of Illinois or any other State prescribes a quarantine law, it does control as to the people and goods within that State; but when it interferes with those not strictly within that territory (as we have opinion upon opinion of the Supreme Court on this subject) it is a different question, and must belong to some other interest.

I will not read the two cases read yesterday by the Senator from Tennessee, but I wish to refer especially to the cattle quarantine that was established in Missouri, the case of The Railroad Company vs. Husen, in 5 Otto, where the court say:

We are thus brought to the question whether the Missouri statute is a lawful exercise of the police power of the State. We admit that the deposit in Congress of the power to regulate foreign commerce and commerce among the States was not a surrender of that which may properly be denominated police power. What that power is it is difficult to define with sharp precision.

Yes, Mr. President, I confess the line is a dim and shadowy one, but the difficulty of ascertaining it and pursuing it must not stop us from making the effort.

It is generally said to extend to making regulations promotive of domestic order, morals, health, and safety.

That is the order, health, morals, and safety pertaining to and upon the territory of that particular State, and no other, and to that extent the State quarantine regulations are absolutely binding; no power of the United States can interfere with them.

As was said in Thorp vs. The Rutland and Burlington Railroad Company, 27 Vermont, 149, "it extends to the protection of the lives, limbs, health, comfort, and quiet of all persons, and the protection of all property within the State."

No person disputes that; no one can successfully dispute it. Then the court refer to the Passenger cases and to Henderson et al. vs. The Mayor of the city of New York, and go back then to review the case of Gibbons vs. Ogden, and the Chi-Lung vs. Freeman case, and add:

While we unhesitatingly admit that a State may pass sanitary laws, and laws for the protection of life, liberty, health, or property within its borders; while it may prevent persons and animals suffering under contagious or infectious diseases, or convicts, &c., from entering the State; while for the purpose of self-protection it may establish quarantine and reasonable inspection laws, it may not interfere with transportation into or through the State, beyond what is absolutely necessary for its self-protection.

I wish the Senate to bear in mind this language as to inspection laws, on which I shall have something to say after a while, so that I shall not have to refer back to it; they must be "reasonable inspection laws." In the same volume, in the very next case which came from Louisiana, Hall vs. De Cuir, the Chief-Justice delivered the opinion, and said:

But we think it may safely be said that State legislation which seeks to impose a direct burden upon interstate commerce, or to interfere directly with its freedom, does encroach upon the exclusive power of Congress. The statute now under consideration, in our opinion, occupies that position. It does not act upon the business through the local instruments to be employed after coming within the State, but directly upon the business as it comes into the State from without or goes out from within. While it purports only to control the carrier when engaged within the State, it must necessarily influence his conduct to some extent in the management of his business throughout his entire voyage. His disposition of passengers taken up and put down within the State, or taken up within to be carried without, cannot but affect in a greater or less degree those taken up without and brought within and sometimes those taken up and put down without.

That is this very question. If the court had been attempting to decide something in anticipation of human events it could not have more completely settled this proposition than it has in this case.

A passenger in the cabin set apart for the use of whites without the State must, when the boat comes within, share the accommodations of that cabin with such colored persons as may come on board afterward if the law is enforced.

It was to meet just such a case that the commercial clause in the Constitution was adopted. The river Mississippi passes through or along the borders of ten different States, and its tributaries reach many more. The commerce upon these waters is immense, and its regulation clearly a matter of national concern. If each State was at liberty to regulate the conduct of carriers while within its jurisdiction the confusion likely to follow could not but be productive of great inconvenience and unnecessary hardship. Each State could provide for its own passengers and regulate the transportation of its own freight, regardless of the interests of others. Nay, more, it could prescribe rules by which the carrier must be governed within the State in respect to passengers and property brought from without. On one side of the river or its tributaries he might be required to observe one set of rules, and on the other another. Commerce cannot flourish in the midst of such embarrassments.

There is a great deal more in this opinion which it is unnecessary to read. Mr. Justice Clifford concurred in the judgment, and delivered a much more lengthy opinion than the Chief-Justice, but not varying the breadth of a hair from what the Chief-Justice said, but simply enlarging upon the ideas and the authorities that he had quoted.

I do not see, Mr. President, that there is anything left of this question. I cannot see that from the decisions of the highest courts there is anything left to dispute about. The point comes back every time to the proposition—it may be stated again and again so that it shall not be forgotten—that within the lines of a State the State can do these things, but when you go beyond the lines of the State the national power commences. We have it as to passengers in two cases, one from New York and the other from California. We have it as to animals for trade and traffic in the case that came from Missouri. What other species do we now propose to reach by this legislation?

In the case of Gibbons vs. Ogden the argument was pressed upon the court that "commerce" in the Constitution meant "traffic," and nothing else. The Chief-Justice, after dissecting that word and holding it up in many lights, said it would not answer the purpose; commerce meant intercourse between the States as well as mere trade or mere traffic. There is not a train of cars that goes from this city or from the city of New York north or south or west that is not filled with hundreds and hundreds of human beings crossing State lines here, there, and everywhere, some upon business, some upon pleasure, some for one thing, some for another; but you cannot by any, the most ultra, construction say that the States can pass regulations to take care of them or to run them off from their confines, with this construction of the Constitution before you as repeatedly announced by the Supreme Court.

In the latest edition of Judge Cooley's work on Constitutional Limitations, vide page 586, the proposition is thus summarized:

The line of distinction between that which constitutes an interference with commerce and that which is a mere police regulation is sometimes exceedingly dim and shadowy, and it is not to be wondered at that learned jurists differ when endeavoring to classify the cases which arise. It is not doubted that Congress has the power to go beyond the general regulations of commerce which it is accustomed to establish, and to descend to the most minute directions, if it shall be deemed advisable, and that to whatever extent ground shall be covered by those directions, the exercise of State power is excluded. Congress may establish police regulations, as well as the States, confining their operation to the subjects over which it is given control by the Constitution.

What other subject is it given as complete or more entire authority over than the regulation of foreign and interstate commerce? None.

But as the general police power can better be exercised under the supervision of the local authority, and mischiefs are not likely to spring therefrom so long as the power to arrest collision resides in the national courts, the regulations which are made by Congress do not often exclude the establishment of others by the State covering very many particulars.

Most indisputablyit does not often do that, but that is a confession that it can do it when the exigency arises. There are a number of things, as I believe I stated before, that the States may do. They may have certain laws regulating the navigation of their rivers, but they must be confined strictly to subjects-matter within their control, and even they are permissive by Congress. They may to a certain extent have commercial regulations, but that is permissive by Congress not excluding them by other legislation. Ever since the decision in the case of the Genesee Chief, where it was determined by the Supreme Court that its admiralty jurisdiction ran into all the rivers and lakes where there was any commerce between the States, there has never been any question on this proposition. It is true it was held in that case, and followed repeatedly since, that this was not by virtue of the commercial clause, but by virtue of the admiralty jurisdiction; and yet look at the anomaly! The United States has jurisdiction to libel boats in these little rivers and lakes in the States; and if so, has it not the unlimited control of their commerce? Unquestionably it has. In the Trevor case from Louisiana, which I believe is in 4 Wallace, the court followed that doctrine up, and now the United States has the control to this extent of the rivers and harbors, the small rivers, the lakes on which any commerce between the States is borne; and yet do you say it cannot establish quarantine regulations to protect passengers, to protect seamen, or to protect the people that go there for trade and for intercourse? I read further from Judge Cooley's work:

Moreover, the regulations of commerce are usually, and in some cases must be—general and uniform for the whole country; while in some localities State and local policy will demand peculiar regulations with reference to special and peculiar circumstances.

Mark this—

That is, as we say in this bill, these regulations must be general, must be fixed, and must be certain to reach the whole country; but as for mere local matters, the States know their wants and shall not be deprived of the power of making them.

Mr. MORGAN. I ask the honorable Senator from Arkansas whether it is not his construction of this bill if it shall pass and become a law that it would authorize the Board of Health to prohibit all States, all counties, all cities, all municipalities in the interior of the country from making quarantine laws to prevent the access of epidemic diseases from places like New Orleans, Galveston, Mobile, Pensacola, Charleston, and so on?

Mr. GARLAND. I will answer that question in another part of my remarks if the Senators will bear with me until I get to that point. It comes in in another place, I think, more properly than just here.

A case from Illinois was decided not long since in the Supreme Court, in 4 Otto's Reports, the Munn case, about which the country was in alarm at the time, and I think there was a dissenting opinion in that. I shall not read the case, but that permitted the State of Illinois to prescribe rules and regulations as to the use of certain warehouse property that was there to be used. The court held that that could be done, but at the same time it did that it said if Congress chose to interfere with this by other regulations it could do so, but you have permissive authority, if I may use that expression, to do this until Congress does otherwise. So that State law was upheld purely upon that ground.

So, Mr. President, take it and turn it as you please, you cannot escape from it, there is no power in earthly man to do these things legitimately, if these decisions mean anything, unless by authority of Congress; and all the power on this subject heretofore exercised by the States has been by the permission of Congress on account of its non-action, on account of Congress not acting upon the same subject-matter.

I wish now to call the attention of the Senate to another provision in article 1 of the Constitution, section 10, paragraph 2:

No State shall, without the consent of the Congress, lay any imposts or duties on imports or exports, except what may be absolutely necessary for executing its inspection laws: and the net produce of all duties and imposts, laid by any State on imports or exports, shall be for the use of the Treasury of the United States; and all such laws shall be subject to the revision and control of the Congress.

The last case that I read from the decisions of the Supreme Court and also Judge Cooley say that the States may pass "reasonable inspection laws;" yet in all the cases from that in 9 Wheaton in which the language is used at all, or reference is made to it, the court speak of inspection laws and police laws as being within the authority of the States; but here this section says: "All such laws"—what laws? as a matter of course none other than the "inspection laws," for those are all that are referred to in the previous part of the paragraph—"shall be subject to the revision and control of the Congress." That is the fair, legitimate, interpretation, and when the court say the States can pass reasonable inspection laws, who is to judge of their reasonableness but Congress? The twenty-second number of the Federalist says that these inspection laws of the States are subject to the revision of Congress. Judge Story in his comments on this section of the Constitution says the same thing.

So whether you take it upon the matter of the inspection laws, the jurisdiction is in Congress; whether you take it upon the matter of controlling and regulating commerce, the jurisdiction is in Congress, and we are remitted back to the question, is it expedient? I confess with my colleagues of the committee that this is a strong exertion of authority, but is it not expedient under existing circumstances that a measure like this should be enacted by Congress? This question I propose now briefly to discuss. This to some extent has been argued with the constitutional question.

In the first place its expediency is shown because of the lack of the proper authority in the States to do this thing as it should be done. Three of the largest States have attempted it and failed on the most important items of the measures they adopted for the purpose of protecting themselves by quarantine regulations; other States have none at all.

Mr. MAXEY. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question? The exertion of this power is put under that clause of the Constitution which gives Congress power to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States. Now, suppose the thing claimed is not that but a police regulation, have the States surrendered their police powers to the Government of the United States?

Mr. GARLAND. They have not, and the Supreme Court has said that they cannot do it. I will go further in answer to the question and say that if the Senator by any kind of logic or any kind of law can resolve this question into its original elements and show that this is a mere police regulation in the face of what Judge Cooley has laid down as taken from an analysis of the authorities, of course his objection would weigh something, but it is a long and a tedious and a crooked road to do that. That I can assure any Senator who undertakes it. The Senator from Tennessee yesterday said that we make no war on the local sanitary regulations adopted for the health and comfort of the citizens within the State. We have nothing to do with them and do not seek to have anything to do with them. But when Missouri attempted to quarantine Texas cattle the Supreme Court said she could not do it. So when California attempted to quarantine the Chinese the Supreme Court said she could not do it. So in New York in the case of Henderson vs. the Mayor, she could not do what was attempted. Why? Because the power belongs to the Congress of the United States.

Mr. President, during the terrible epidemic of last season the steamer Porter traveled thousands of miles, and traveled until, as we would say of an individual, she ran out of breath and could not travel any further, turning from one side of the Mississippi to the other, a tramp on one of the nation's highways. We witnessed the spectacle of that vessel with the great suffering on her compelled to keep up the river, men standing on the banks on both sides with shot-guns to make her keep in the center of the river until she could not go any further, and she finally landed at Gallipolis, on the Ohio. That is the kind of quarantine we are asked to lay our bill aside to and submit our country and our people to. The little town of Gallipolis was absolutely more than decimated, and the State of Ohio has no quarantine laws according to the list to which I have referred.

Twenty-odd years ago the man who said there would ever be a case of yellow fever at Gallipolis or in the little town of Hickman, Kentucky, which was also scourged last year, would be considered an apt scholar for a lunatic asylum. I remember myself the first case I ever heard of when I was quite a small boy. We consoled ourselves then that it could not possibly get above Vicksburgh; and learned men in the science as some call it, but as some moderns say, the art, of medicine said the same thing. We were consoled by another reflection—I was at least—that children did not have it. There was also an idea that colored people could not die with it.

In the last scourge the children and the colored people died all over the country, and in Missssippi and certain other portions of the country the plantations were absolutely deserted, with as fine crops growing on them as ever grew under the sun. Who would ever have thought the little town of Grenada would have been afflicted as she was?

So it comes back at last, turn it as you will, that the internal interstate commerce is now the overriding idea in this country. It is not limited to the great ports of New York, Mobile, and New Orleans. When those celebrated gentlemen in 1852 made the report to the British Parliament which the Senator from Alabama read yesterday, the Senator from Louisiana said very aptly that everything that is known of the yellow fever has been discovered since that time. The changes in living, the changes of climate, the changes of food, all enter into these calculations that have left those gentlemen away behind in the dim vista upon this subject. Whether the theory be correct or not that yellow fever was not imported as they said, we have the overwhelming weight of testimony here printed that it is an imported disease. It is true there is some testimony that it is not, but that it originates in this country.

Now, admit both to be true, that we have it imported and that it also originates here, let us prevent it as far as we can. If the flames originate in your own house you may be able to subdue them; but if your neighbor comes across the street with a torch in his hand and puts fire to the rear of your house while you are fighting it in front, there is no hope for you. Let us see if we cannot keep off the neighbor with the torch in his hand; and if we are to be subjected to the calamity within our borders we must try to do the best we can with it. Try this plan of quarantine. I admit it is an experiment; but it is a grand experiment, and it is an experiment that is worthy the consideration of the Senate and the country, and worthy the expenditure we seek to put upon it.

I say it is expedient, then, because there is no other protection; the country is hopeless without it; and meaning no disrespect, it is idle, it is talking to the winds to speak of the States protecting us in this respect. We had in Little Rock what we called a shot-gun quarantine last season; it was effectual. The judge of the United States court there—and a very excellent judge he is—stood guard with a shot-gun in his hand night after night, and he turned back men, women, and children, and would have turned back anybody else that came. But we do not wish to be subjected to that any more. We believe that there is a reasonable and legal and fair and proper way out of it, and in the clashing of State authorities something as bad—I will not say worse than bad—might be brought about if there is not some central authority that may point out the true road.

Now, Mr. President, I come to the question propounded just now by the Senator from Alabama. I say the bill we are now discussing gives the board power, if they see proper, to supplant the quarantine laws of the States as affecting passengers and traffic as between the States, but not to supplant them as affecting people and property strictly within the territory of a State. But there is an erroneous idea out as to this board. Both the Senators from New York spoke of the complete health organization they had in the city of New York. We do not tell this board of commissioners in this bill to do away with that organization. Suppose they say "that is good; we approve it; let it stand." They are not commanded to supplant that system; and we must presume that whoever they may be they will be reasonable persons and they will be disposed to let well enough alone. They would have the authority to do it, but they are not told to do it; and we must presume they will exercise their authority properly and legitimately.

As to the power being given to this particular board, it must be given somewhere. What better place can be fixed than at the capital of the country? This place is as accessible as any; there are as many avenues of information accessible here as elsewhere, and probably more than at any other place. It is not to be presumed, however, that these gentlemen are going to act purely on their information received here. Either they will go in person or they will send some one to look into this matter for them at the different portions of the country.

Let me ask Senators older here than I am, older in all that pertains to the science and theory of government, how many measures are there upon the statute-books that give authority equal to this in respect to other matters? There is a statute upon our books that allows the Secretary of the Treasury to make his own rules and regulations to identify adulterated drugs. Nobody has ever yet asked the question, "Suppose he does that wrongfully, what is the remedy of the party?" There is no man who can go in any land office now in this country and enter forty acres of land who does not have to comply with certain rules and regulations affecting his very right, that have been prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior or some officer under him. There is no Department of the Government that can be carried on without such rules and regulations, and they become, as has often been decided by the highest courts of the States and by the Supreme Court of the United States, the law of the case, and the parties transacting business with those Departments must take notice of them as well as of the law itself.

Therefore, there is nothing novel in what is proposed in this regard. I repeat what I stated the other day, that Congress is not competent to enter into the details of this matter. When you passed the great bankrupt law a few years ago, did you not tell the Supreme Court to make its rules and regulations? Congress did not sit here and prescribe rules and regulations for carrying that law into effect, and the Supreme Court delegated that authority again to a sub-committee of its own members, three in number, and they made the rules and regulations, which became as much a part of the bankrupt law as if they had been enacted by Congress.

This complaint has no foundation. Here is an authority that must go to some person. I am perfectly willing to guard it three times over; to submit the rules and regulations to the Chief-Justice of the Supreme Court, to submit them to the Attorney-General, to submit them to the Secretary of the Treasury and the President besides, for their approval. In that respect the bill is not singular; in that regard it is not a novelty. That the power is great I cannot doubt; I have no disposition to doubt it. That it should be great everybody must know. Unless it be great it amounts to nothing.

If this be a proper exercise of a constitutional power, and if it be expedient that it should be done, it is not to be compared with the little commerce that we had seventy, eighty, and a hundred years ago. It is not to be compared with that day when we traveled, as the Chief-Justice of the Supreme Court said, upon trucks, and wagons, and coaches, and all that. But you must have an active law, a powerful machine, to control this matter and to afford remedies to the citizen and to the property of the country as it passes through the States and from State to State.

I am thus earnest on this question, because I have been at great labor upon this proposition. I have packages of letters and papers here calling for something to be done. I have the testimony of the experts; I have analyzed as far as I am able all the quarantine laws of the different States, and I have shown I think tolerably well how incomplete and unsatisfactory they are for this purpose. But if the Senate thinks this bill will not do, let it perfect it. Let us do something, let us do the best we can; but do not remit the bill back to the committee, for we have done all that we know how to do.

I say to the Senate that something strong and something great must be done. It is no ordinary calamity with which you have to deal. I tell the Senate that while in the portion of the country that was stricken last season with this calamity there is nothing said particularly now about it, and no evidence is adduced showing it, yet it will be twenty years before that country rallies from the stroke it then received, and another such will prostrate it for the rest of the lives of all who have the honor to be here now. Let us do something that is worth while; let us do a big work, and do not let us indulge ourselves in swapping a shoe-string against a tan-yard.

Mr. MORGAN. I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Arkansas to the fact that he has not yet answered the question I asked him.

Mr. GARLAND. Yes, I did.

Mr. MORGAN. I did not understand the Senator to do so.

Mr. GARLAND. I will answer it again. I say that the authority conferred upon this board does empower them to set aside and supplant the State quarantine laws, if they see proper to do so, so far as they apply to persons outside and property outside, but not as affecting the strictly internal commerce of a State.

Mr. MORGAN. I will state what I mean by the question. My question perhaps is not as distinct as it ought to be. Take the city of Vicksburgh, or Baton Rouge, or Memphis, or Cincinnati, or any other city up the Ohio River, and I ask the question whether or not either of those cities after this proposed law has gone into operation would, against the consent of this board, have the power to quarantine the city against the access of persons and property coming from New Orleans when that city might be infected with epidemic yellow fever?

Mr. GARLAND. I have no difficulty in making an answer to that question. They would have the authority to do it until this board did, to use the language I used before, supplant what they had done.

Mr. PLUMB. Is an amendment to the bill now in order?

Mr. CONKLING. Oh, no; a motion is pending to recommit.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. WALLACE in the chair.) The motion pending is one to recommit the bill to the select committee with instructions. Is the Senate ready for the question?

Mr. CONKLING. We had better have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President, I rise not to make a remark about the merits of the bill, but rather upon the fitness of taking a decisive vote upon it now. It is an important matter. As the Chair sees, and as Senators see, the Senate is very thin. There may be a quorum here, perhaps there is; but scarcely more than half the Senate. I suggest to the Senator from Tennessee, for the convenience of all, that it might be well to fix a time to take the vote upon this motion or to give notice that at some later hour to-day or when he will, he will have a vote upon it. I suppose that it can hardly be that Senators could have indulged themselves in being absent, as many Senators as are absent, had they anticipated a vote now, and especially a vote upon the pending question, the motion to recommit, which as it has been treated by the Senator from Tennessee himself, and by the Senator from Arkansas, and I think very properly, involves in a large degree the chief question presented by the bill.

Mr. HARRIS. I certainly have no desire to force a vote when the Senate is so thin as now. I greatly prefer a full Senate in order to obtain the judgment of the entire body upon the merits of the proposition; but I doubt whether we shall have more Senators present at any time to day than are now present.

Mr. CONKLING. So do I.

Mr. HARRIS. If it be agreeable to other Senators I would be perfectly willing to agree that the vote shall be taken at any hour that may be named to-morrow which may suit Senators. I do not desire to press it to a vote now.

Mr. CONKLING. Is it the purpose of the Senate, as far as the Senator can declare it, to hold a session to-morrow, to-morrow being Saturday?

Mr. HARRIS. It is not my purpose to ask the Senate to subject itself to any inconvenience, personally. I should like exceedingly to get through with the consideration of this bill as early as is possible and convenient, but I would not ask any Senator to subject himself to personal inconvenience to gratify that wish of mine.

Mr. RANSOM. Is it in order to move that when the Senate adjourn it adjourns to meet on Monday?

Mr. CONKLING. Not only that is in order, but it is in order to move that the Senate do now adjourn until Monday.

Mr. RANSOM. I move, with the consent of the Senator from Tennessee, that the Senate now adjourn until Monday.

Mr. GARLAND. Let us fix a time to vote.

Mr. HARRIS. Will the Senator from North Carolina withdraw the motion for one moment?

Mr. RANSOM. Certainly I will. I said I would make the motion with the consent of the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. HARRIS. If it meets the approbation of the Senate I should like to have it understood that at some hour, and the earliest that may meet the approbation of the Senate on Monday, we proceed to take the vote upon the pending question.

Mr. CONKLING. That is right.

Mr. HARRIS. Then I will say that I desire to have a vote immediately at the expiration of the morning hour on Monday, unless there is some Senator who desires to be heard upon the merits of the proposition.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the vote be taken on Monday at one o'clock.

Mr. CONKLING. The Senator from Tennessee, if the Chair will indulge me, does not ask that particularly. He says he will expect a vote at that time unless there be some Senator ready to make a suggestion. I know of none, but on a measure of this sort I think the Senator is quite right to leave it that way.

Mr. HARRIS. If I should have the unanimous consent of the Senate to take the vote at that time, and any Senator then desired to be heard on the merits of the proposition, he should certainly be heard so far as I was concerned.

Mr. CONKLING. That is understanding enough.

Mr. MORGAN and Mr. PLUMB submitted amendments intended to be proposed by them, respectively, to the bill; which were ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. RANSOM. I renew my motion that the Senate adjourn until Monday.

Mr. ANTHONY. Will the Senator from North Carolina change his motion to a motion to proceed to the consideration of executive business?

Mr. RANSOM. Certainly; but I move first that when the Senate adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. RANSOM. Now the Senator from Rhode Island may submit the motion he desires.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. ANTHONY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After twelve minutes spent in executive session, the doors were reopened, and (at two o'clock and fifty-two minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, May 3, 1879.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. P. HARRISON, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

CORRECTION OF THE JOURNAL.

Mr. DIBRELL. I rise to a correction of the Journal. The Journal as read does not show my colleague, Mr. SIMONTON, as voting on the passage of the Army appropriation bill, notwithstanding the objections of the President. He was present and did vote.

The SPEAKER. He is recorded as voting in the affirmative on the demand for the previous question.

Mr. DIBRELL. The RECORD shows that he did not vote on the passage of the Army bill, notwithstanding the objections of the President.

The SPEAKER. The name of Mr. SIMONTON is not recorded upon that vote in the Journal.

Mr. DIBRELL. He voted in the affirmative. I know that he voted, and the Journal should be corrected.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. My colleague, Mr. SIMONTON, did vote, because it was a matter of discussion whether at that moment of time a pair should commence or not. I know he decided it and determined to vote.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. He was here, and had no pair at that time.

The SPEAKER. The Journal will be corrected accordingly.

ADMISSION TO THE FLOOR.

Mr. BROWNE moved, by unanimous consent, that General Ben. Harrison, of Indiana, be allowed the privilege of the floor during the day.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. THOMAS, by unanimous consent, asked that during the next three days D. W. Lusk, a citizen of Illinois, be allowed the privilege of the floor.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. DAVIDSON. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of personal privilege. In the wonderful speech of the gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. RUSSELL,] which was not delivered in this House, but which was printed in the RECORD of the 26th of April—wonderful, I say, because of its many errors and because of the hate and venom which it manifests toward democrats, and particularly southern democrats—there appears the following language:

> It is well known that two democrats, one from Florida and the other from North Carolina, hold seats on this floor not by the votes of the people but by the fraudulent mandates of returning boards, some of whom, strange to say, are in the penitentiary.

Mr. Speaker, I presume this language was intended to apply to my colleague who represents the second district of Florida, and who for several days past has been absent from this House, and will probably be absent two or three weeks longer; and I also presume that it was further intended to apply to the gentlemen who compose the State board of canvassers of the State of Florida. In justice to those gentlemen, in justice to my absent colleague, and in justice to the good name of my State, I here assert that though I do not know upon what authority the gentleman from North Carolina made his offensive statement, yet I do know that it is, and I pronounce it to be, wholly and absolutely untrue.

It is not known, sir, that a democrat from Florida holds his seat on this floor by the fraudulent mandate of the returning board of that State; and it is not known that a member of that board is in the penitentiary. The members of the board of State canvassers of Florida are gentlemen of undoubted ability and of unquestioned honor and integrity; and the statement of the gentleman from North Carolina, whether purposely made or not, slanders not only those gentlemen but also the people of the State which I have the honor in part to represent. Feeling thus, sir, I have conceived it to be my duty to make these remarks on this floor, and to add that in my judgment the flippant manner in which some members in this House charge fraud upon others is altogether unbecoming the station which they occupy.

Mr. REED, (in his seat.) That's so!

Mr. FRYE. Will the gentleman from Florida allow me to state that the gentleman from North Carolina to whom he has alluded is not present?

Mr. DAVIDSON. I regret it, and for that reason postponed saying anything on this subject two days since, when it was alluded to by the gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. KITCHIN,] hoping that on to-day the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. RUSSELL] would be in his seat.

LAFAYETTE H. FITZHUGH.

Mr. COX, by unanimous consent, offered the following resolution; which was read, and referred to the Committee of Accounts:

> Resolved, That the Clerk of the House be authorized and required to pay to Lafayette H. Fitzhugh, late Doorkeeper of this House, out of the contingent fund of the House, his salary as such officer from the date of his discharge to the day of adjournment of the second session of the Forty-fourth Congress, the 4th day of March, 1877.

REPORT ON PRISONS.

Mr. COX. I offer the resolution which I send to the desk asking for information about the prisons in the different States and move its adoption.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be directed to transmit to this House the report of Colonel J. L. Browne, United States Marine Corps, in reference to the prisons of the several States.

The SPEAKER. Under the new rule that resolution could be offered on Monday for reference to a committee.

Mr. COX. I ask unanimous consent that it may be considered at this time.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection, and the resolution was agreed to.

ADMISSION TO THE FLOOR.

Mr. BELFORD. I ask unanimous consent that General Hughes, of the State of Colorado, be permitted to come upon the floor of the House for the next two or three days.

Mr. STEELE. Is this gentleman the governor of the State, or does he occupy some other high official position?

The SPEAKER. The governor of a State is permitted by the rule to come upon the floor. For those not embraced within the rule there is no way by which members can secure this privilege for distinguished citizens of their States except by unanimous vote of the House.

Mr. STEELE. I shall not object.

Mr. KELLEY. I rise to object, on the ground that we have either to admit everybody or act most invidiously, and when we have already excluded judges of the courts and members of the Legislatures I think we should adhere strictly to the rule.

Mr. ATKINS. Why did the gentleman not object to the request made by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BROWNE] a moment ago?

Mr. KELLEY. I did not know that that was to be a precedent for agreeing to every request that should be made. That was the case of a distinguished son of a late President of the United States.

Mr. ATKINS. And this is a distinguished citizen of Colorado.

Mr. SPARKS. I suggest to the gentleman from Pennsylvania to let this day pass without making objection to requests of this character.

Mr. KELLEY. Very well, I will do so.

The SPEAKER. Then the Chair will understand that this is an instruction to him not to recognize after to-day any member to make a request of this kind.

Mr. KELLEY. I withdraw the objection for to-day.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no further objection, and the request is allowed.

The Chair will state that when any member desires for a citizen of his district or State a comfortable and eligible seat, if he will apply to him personally the Chair will see that he gets a seat on the bench in the gallery which the House has been kind enough to allow to the Speaker.

THE NATCHITOCHES VINDICATOR.

Mr. ELAM. I desire to have read a letter which I send to the desk. It is in relation to some remarks which were understood by the editor of the Natchitoches Vindicator to have been made as to his paper; that his paper had sustained the course indicated by the Okolona States. And he wrote me a letter and asked me to bring the matter before the House.

The SPEAKER. This is not in the nature of a personal explanation. The gentleman from Louisiana asks unanimous consent that the letter which he has sent to the desk be read.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. I object to the Okolona States being again brought before the House for discussion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Louisiana asks unanimous consent that the letter be read.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. I object.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. ATKINS. I ask unanimous consent that the joint resolution of the House, No. 1, returned from the Senate with amendments, to repeal certain clauses in the sundry civil appropriation act approved March 3, 1879, be taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

EXPENSES OF CONGRESS.

Mr. ATKINS. I also ask that House bill No. 1343, returned from the Senate with amendments, to provide for certain expenses of the present session of Congress, and for other purposes, be taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

INTEREST DUE OSAGE INDIANS.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, inclosing estimate of an appropriation for interest due to the Osage Indians; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

SEATON HOUSE, WASHINGTON.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, relative to the lease of the property known as the Seaton House for that Department in 1871; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour now begins at twenty-eight minutes past twelve o'clock. The first business in order during the morning hour of to-day is the call of committees for reports of a public nature.

DOCUMENTS FOR COMMITTEE ON MINES AND MINING.

Mr. WARNER, from the Committee on Mines and Mining, reported the following resolution; which was read, and referred to the Committee on the Library:

Resolved, That the Librarian, under instructions of the Committee on the Library, be directed to furnish for the library of the Committee on Mines and Mining a copy of all reports relating to mines and mining, also of all geological surveys, maps, &c., published by authority of Congress.

METRIC WEIGHTS AND MEASURES.

Mr. STEPHENS, from the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 409) to enable importers to use the metric weights and measures.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the ad quantum duties upon all articles imported from foreign countries which are invoiced according to the weights and measures of the metric system shall be levied, collected, and paid at rates appropriate to the weights and measures of said system, that is to say:

The rate per gram shall be 3.5 per cent. of the rate per ounce avoirdupois, or 3.2 per cent. of the rate per ounce troy.

The rate per kilogram shall be two and two-tenths times the rate per pound.

The rate per metric ton shall be twenty-two times the rate per hundred pounds, or nineteen and six-tenths times the rate per hundred and twelve pounds, or 98 per cent. of the rate per two thousand two hundred and forty pounds.

The rate per lineal meter shall be 109 per cent. of the rate per lineal yard.

The rate per square meter shall be 119 per cent. of the rate per square yard, or ten and seven-tenths times the rate per square foot.

The rate per hundred square meters shall be 107 per cent. of the rate per thousand square feet.

The rate per liter shall be 26 per cent. of the rate per gallon.

The rate per hectoliter shall be two and eight-tenths times the rate per bushel.

The rate per cubic meter shall be one and three-tenth times the rate per cubic yard, or thirty-five times the rate per cubic foot: Provided, That when by any provision of law the duties which are to be levied, collected, and paid shall be more or less than the duties and rates imposed in the statutory schedule, such provision of law shall be applied in the calculation of the rate to be imposed on the metric denomination: And provided further, That when the calculated rate exceeds $1, the fraction of a cent, if any, shall be rejected; when it exceeds ten cents, the fraction of a mill, if any, shall be rejected; and in all cases a fraction of less than one-tenth of a mill shall be rejected.

SEC. 2. That the quantity of weight, gauge, or measure stated in the return of any weigher, gauger, or measurer employed in the service of the customs revenue may be stated in metric denominations; and, if not so stated, shall be reducible to such denominations according to the equivalents set forth in section 3570 of the Revised Statutes.

Mr. STEPHENS. I would like to have this bill put upon its passage at this time, if no gentleman wishes to discuss it.

Mr. CONGER. Before the gentleman calls the previous question, I desire to make an inquiry of him.

Mr. STEPHENS. Very well.

Mr. CONGER. It is whether this bill ought not to go to the Committee of Ways and Means, being connected entirely with the question of duties and of percentages, and proposing to change the system now in use.

Mr. STEPHENS. I think not. It affects in a slight degree the question of duties, but it is only incidentally connected with that subject.

Mr. CONGER. I think it should go to the Committee of Ways and Means, in order that they may ascertain, as a matter of economy or propriety, whether it would be enforced in all our collection districts and by all our appraisers. I would ask the gentleman to let it go to the Committee of Ways and Means, so that they might examine it. I cannot myself say whether there is any objection to it or not.

Mr. FRYE. Does the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. STEPHENS] propose to press the bill to a vote this morning? It has not been printed, has it?

The SPEAKER. It is House bill No. 409, and members can obtain it by sending for it to the document-room.

Mr. FRYE. I confess I do not understand it all.

Mr. STEPHENS. I intended to make a few remarks in explanation of the bill, and then leave it to the House. I do not intend to call the previous question. I have no objection to its going to the Ways and Means if it is desired by that committee that it should take that direction; it may slightly affect the receipts of revenue.

Mr. CONGER. I supposed the gentleman intended to call the previous question, and I desired to make a suggestion before that was done.

Mr. STEPHENS. I only wanted to make a statement to the House about the bill. I believe it has not been printed this session. It was printed during the last Congress, and was unanimously reported from the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. STEPHENS] is mistaken; this bill was ordered to be printed this session, April 21, 1879.

Mr. FRYE. And it has been reported back from the committee.

The SPEAKER. It has; and the Chair is advised that it is reported in the exact shape in which it was introduced.

Mr. STEPHENS. During the last session of Congress the bill was reported unanimously from the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, and it has likewise passed that committee unanimously at this session. I did not know that it had been printed again this session.

One word in reply to the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. CONGER.] This subject-matter certainly belongs exclusively to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures so far as it embraces the establishment of a new system of invoice. That committee has a right to report on any matters relating to these subjects. The establishment of the metric system in our commercial relations and invoices is a very important subject. In the Revised Statutes the metric system has been legalized, and three or four tables established in relation to linear measure, superficial measure, and weights. The system, therefore, is now legalized, to be used at the option of the importer. This bill was prepared by a business man, and I believe has undergone the revision of the most intelligent commercial men in the country and has received their sanction. I ask the Clerk to read the letter of the one who prepared the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

68 WILLIAM STREET, NEW YORK,
January 28, 1878.

DEAR SIR: I have been informed that you favor the use of the metric weights and measures, and therefore I take the liberty of inclosing to you the draught of a bill to enable importers to use them.

I suppose it would be next to impossible to get rates appropriate to metric denominations inserted in the tariff bill. The next best thing is to have some general provision for the calculation of such rates, so as to avoid the unwieldy fractions which would result from using the table of equivalents set forth in the Revised Statutes.

The inclosed bill keeps as close to the exact equivalents as avoidance of awkward fractions will permit, the slight difference being in favor of the importer—this being necessary, as you will readily perceive.

Of course, if still greater differences could be made in favor of the importer, the inducement to have goods invoiced metrically would be all the greater; and such figures could be used as to make the proviso at the end of the first section unnecessary. The first proviso concerns such enactments as section 2503 of the Revised Statutes.

The following table shows the true equivalents, carried to three or four decimals, side by side with the approximate equivalents of the bill.

I am, dear sir, yours, very respectfully,

JAMES M. McKINLAY.

Hon. ALEX. H. STEPHENS,
Chairman of Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

Metric denomination.		Approximate equivalent.	True equivalent.
Gram	ounce avordupois	.035	.03527
Do	ounce troy	.032	.03215
Kilogram	pounds	2.2	2.2046
Metric ton	times 100 pounds	22	22.046
Do	times 112 pounds	19.6	19.684
Do	times 2,240 pounds	.98	.9842
Meter	yard	1.09	1.0936
Square meter	square yard	1.19	1.196
Do	square feet	10.7	10.764
100 square meters	M square feet	1.07	1.0764
Liter	gallon	.26	.26417
Hectoliter	bushels	2.8	2.8375
Cubic meter	cubic yard	1.3	1.308
Do	cubic feet	35	35.316

Mr. STEPHENS. The House will perceive that there is nothing compulsory at all in this bill. It simply leaves importers to adopt or not, as they please, the system proposed. In the rates named in the bill the fractions existing in the legally established metric system are left out, thus giving a slight advantage and inducement to importers, so that this system may gradually come into use voluntarily in this country. The inducement held out is a very small one; but in large importations merchants will avail themselves of a very small percentage of profit. I do not see that there can be any serious objection to the bill, and if not, I would like to have it disposed of at once.

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Speaker, the statement just made by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. STEPHENS] brings me to the conclusion that the suggestion of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] was a proper one—that this bill had better go to the Committee of Ways and Means so that it may be ascertained how important those fractions proposed to be omitted may be. Oftentimes the quarter, the eighth, or the sixteenth of a cent on the unit of weight or measurement—say pounds in the matter of sugar or yards in the matter of certain grades of cotton or woolen cloth—determines the question between profit and loss on a year's business. Hence what may on its face appear a very small inducement to importers might have a very important effect upon some of our own industries.

Again, I am thoroughly in favor of making the acceptance of the metric system voluntary. I can see that its adoption would conduce greatly to the convenience of those of our merchants or citizens who deal with nations using no other system of weights and measures. But there are difficulties connected with that system. It is not in harmony with our unit of value. You cannot adjust any of our coins to it without leaving an interminable fraction.

When I had the honor to be chairman of the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures I endeavored to induce the adoption of preliminary measures to make our dollar and the French five-franc piece absolutely alike in weight and value. The French were the first to adopt the metric system; and it enters into all their business. But it does not enter into their coinage; and it was found that while a change of $\frac{2}{10}$ of 1 per cent. would make our gold dollar absolutely metric and in harmony with the French system of weights, it would require a change of $3\frac{1}{10}$ per cent. to bring the French coin into harmony with the metric system. The new German gold coin is almost metric. But the British government will not entertain the idea of a change of the existing system. Hence I think it would be well to consider the confusion that might result from the adoption of this system to a great extent, even voluntarily, so that a citizen could make it the law of the customs division of the Treasury Department. I repeat the point with which I began, that the concession of the fractions to the importer might have a very essential effect upon duties, and hence upon the income of the Government. Therefore, I think, the bill should go to the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. STEPHENS. The view presented by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. KELLEY,] as well as what I have stated, shows that perhaps this bill ought properly go to the Committee of Ways and Means, as it might interfere with the amount of duties collected. I can, however, assure the gentleman that, in my opinion, when that committee shall look into the bill they will find it will not make such a change as ought to impede the speedy passage of the measure. It does make a slight change in the rates of duty, barely enough to be an inducement to the merchant to resort to this system.

Mr. KELLEY. The gentleman will allow me to suggest that I do not desire the bill to go to the Committee of Ways and Means for the purpose of delay or embarrassment, but simply that it may be ascertained through the Treasury Department what its effect upon the revenues may be.

Mr. STEPHENS. That is what I supposed; and I was about to say that I shall not oppose the reference if it be understood that the committee will speedily report upon the subject, for I am very anxious, and I think that the importers of the country are generally desirous, that the metric system shall be voluntarily introduced.

One other remark I intended to make about our having no metric coins. It is true the metric system has never been authorized by law with reference to our coinage, because of the difficulty in this country as well as in France and other countries in solving a very vexed problem. But the great principle heretofore unsolved with reference to this question has recently been solved. We have now before our committee a bill (which I hope will be reported at an early day) providing for the coinage of the goloid dollar, which is perfectly metric; nay, more, a bill for the coinage of the metric gold double eagle, eagle, half eagle, and quarter eagle. This problem, heretofore unsolved in our coinage, like the squaring of the circle in mathematics, has been recently solved and reduced to a perfect system; I mean the problem as to metric coinage. The essential principle and ratio by which the matter is to be regulated has been established. A bill such as I have indicated has been referred to our committee, and although not yet acted on, I trust it will be speedily reported. That bill authorizes an American coinage perfectly metric with a preservation of the standard values of our metals. The honor of the solution of this heretofore unsolved problem belongs to American genius. It will be for the House hereafter to decide whether it will adopt this new system of metric coinage. I trust that it will. If Congress shall pass the bills now before the committee we shall have two coins perfectly in accordance with the French metric system, a matter so long desired by all the nations and countries which have adopted this system of weights and measures.

In conclusion I will say that I am willing for the reason stated by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] and the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. FRYE,] as well as the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. KELLEY,] that the bill shall be referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, who I trust will at an early day report for or against it.

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Speaker, thanking the gentleman for his concession in this matter, I desire to say that the metric system has been applied to one of our coins—a very minor coin it is true——

Mr. STEPHENS. All our fractional silver is now metric.

Mr. KELLEY. It was first introduced into our system in the five-cent nickel piece while the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures was presided over by the honorable gentleman from Iowa, Mr. Kasson, and before I became chairman of that committee. So the subject has been under the consideration of that committee for ten or perhaps twelve years.

Mr. STEPHENS. Yes, sir; and all our present fractional silver currency is on the metric system. I have no objection, as stated, to the reference of the bill as proposed.

Mr. CONGER. Do I understand the gentleman from Georgia is willing to have the bill referred to the Committee of Ways and Means?

Mr. STEPHENS. Perfectly willing; and I hope that committee will at once investigate what influence it will have upon the revenues and will report back at the earliest possible day. I have looked into the subject myself and I do not think it will materially affect the amount of revenues to be collected.

Mr. CONGER. Then I move that the bill be referred to the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. STEPHENS. I have no objection.

The bill was referred to the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. CONGER. I move to reconsider the vote just taken, and also that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Committee of Ways and Means has the right to report back at any time.

The motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

WILLIAM WHEELER HUBBELL.

Mr. HENRY. I am directed by the Committee of Accounts to move that committee be discharged from the further consideration of the petition of William Wheeler Hubbell, for compensation, and that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. BLOUNT. Does the Committee of Accounts make any recommendation in regard to it?

Mr. HENRY. They recommend that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. BLOUNT. But nothing as to the merits of the petition?

Mr. HENRY. Nothing.

Mr. BLOUNT. Then it should be referred to some other committee, say the Committee of Claims. As a claim, has it been examined by the Committee of Accounts?

Mr. HENRY. It has not.

Mr. BLOUNT. Has it been audited anywhere?

Mr. HENRY. Not that I am aware of.

Mr. BLOUNT. Then I submit it is not a proper reference to send it to the Committee on Appropriations, for that committee has nothing to do with claims. I hope the gentleman will let it go to the Committee of Claims.

Mr. HENRY. I have no objection.

The Committee of Accounts was discharged from the further consideration of the petition and it was referred to the Committee of Claims.

CONTESTED ELECTIONS.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee of Elections to make the following report:

The Committee of Elections, to whom was referred House bill No. 879 relating to contested elections, having had the same under consideration, have directed me to report the same back with sundry amendments and recommend the passage of the bill as amended. The proposed amendments are as follows.

The SPEAKER. Is it in the nature of a substitute?

Mr. SPRINGER. No, sir.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read and then the substitute.

Mr. SPRINGER. No, the amendments to the bill had better be read first.

Mr. CONGER. Let all points of order be reserved on that bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That section 127 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be so amended as to read as follows:

All officers taking testimony, to be used in a contested-election case, whether by deposition or otherwise, shall, when the taking of the same is completed, and without unnecessary delay, certify and carefully seal, and immediately forward the same, by mail or by express, addressed to the Clerk of the House of Representatives of the United States, Washington, District of Columbia; and shall also indorse upon the envelope containing such deposition or testimony the name of the case in which it is taken, together with the name of the party in whose behalf it is taken, and shall subscribe such indorsement.

The Clerk of the House of Representatives, upon the receipt of such deposition or testimony, shall file the same with the clerk of the Committee of Elections. As soon as all the testimony relating to any case is received by the clerk of the Committee of Elections, he shall notify the contestant and contestee, by registered letter through the mails, to appear at the committee-room at the Capitol, in person or by attorney, at a reasonable time to be named, not exceeding thirty days from the mailing of such letter, for the purpose of being present at the opening of the sealed packages of testimony, and of agreeing upon the parts thereof to be printed. Upon the day appointed for such meeting, the clerk of the committee shall proceed to open all the packages of testimony in the case, in the presence of the parties or their attorneys, and such portions of the testimony as either party may require to have printed shall be printed by the Public Printer, under the direction of the clerk of the committee; and the said clerk shall prepare a suitable index to be printed with the record.

Should either party to the contest forward a written authority to the clerk of the Committee of Elections to open the packages in his absence, and indicate the portions of his testimony which he requires to be printed, or should either party, after having been duly notified, fail to attend by himself or by an attorney or fail to send any authority to the clerk to open the packages in his absence, the clerk of the committee shall proceed to open the packages, and shall cause such portions of the testimony as he shall be of opinion are material to the issue to be printed.

He shall carefully seal up and preserve the portions of the testimony not printed, as well as the printed portions when returned from the Public Printer, and lay the same before the Committee of Elections when appointed or at their next meeting. As soon as the testimony in any case is printed, the clerk of the Committee of Elections shall forward by mail, if desired, two copies thereof to the contestant and the same number to the contestee, and shall notify the contestant to file with the clerk of the committee within sixty days a brief of the facts and the authorities relied on to establish his case, with references to the pages of the record for all facts deemed material. The clerk of the committee shall forward by mail two copies of the contestant's brief to the contestee with like notice.

Upon receipt of contestee's brief, the clerk shall forward two copies thereof to the contestant, who may, if he desires, reply to new matter in the contestee's brief within like time. All briefs shall be printed at the expense of the parties respectively, and shall be of like folio as the printed record, and sixty copies thereof shall be filed with the clerk of the committee.

The clerk shall, as soon as possible, cause fifty copies of the briefs and records in each case to be bound together in one volume for the use of the Committee of Elections.

SEC. 2. The clerk of the Committee of Elections shall be appointed by the committee, and he shall hold his office until his successor is appointed and qualified. He shall receive for his services $2,500 per annum; and he shall prepare, when directed by the committee, for publication, a digest of election cases, but shall not be entitled to additional compensation therefor. The Committee of Elections may appoint an assistant clerk, who shall also act as messenger, and shall receive a compensation of $1,200 per annum.

The SPEAKER. The amendments proposed by the Committee of Elections will now be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The proposed amendments are as follows:

In section 1, line 12, after the word "envelope," insert the words "or package."

In line 33, after the word "committee," insert the words "unless the committee shall otherwise direct."

Strike out all of section 1, from the beginning of line 36 to the end of line 39, and insert the following:

Should either party to the contest forward a written authority to the clerk of the Committee of Elections to open the packages in his absence, and indicate the portions of the testimony which he requires to be printed, the clerk shall cause such portions to be printed; and should either party, after having been duly notified, fail to attend by himself or by an attorney and fail to indicate as aforesaid the portions of the testimony which he requires to be printed, the clerk of the committee shall proceed to open the packages and shall cause the depositions and such portions of the other evidence as he shall be of opinion are material to the issue to be printed, and the clerk shall in all cases make a minute of his action on the journal of the committee.

He shall carefully seal up and preserve the portions of the evidence not printed, as well as the printed portions, when returned from the Public Printer, and lay the same before the Committee of Elections at their next meeting, but the committee in all cases may order to be printed any evidence not printed as aforesaid. As soon as the evidence in any case is printed the clerk of the Committee of Elections shall forward by mail or deliver two copies thereof to the contestant and the same number to the contestee, and shall notify the contestant to file with the clerk of the committee within sixty days a brief of the facts and authorities relied on to establish his case, with reference to the pages of the record for all facts deemed material. The clerk of the committee shall forward by mail or deliver two copies of the contestant's brief to the contestee with like notice.

In line 60, after the word "forward," insert the words "or deliver."

In line 67, strike out the word "fifty" and insert the words "one hundred."

In line 68, strike out the word "records" and insert the word "record."

In lines 68 and 69 strike out the words "together in one volume."

At the end of section 1 insert the following: "When a committee of elections has been appointed, the time for filing briefs and printing records and the hearing of cases shall be under its control."

In section 2, line 5, after the word "prepare," strike out the words "when directed by" and insert in lieu thereof the words "under the direction of."

At the end of section 2 add the words "or at that rate for the time he shall be ployed by order of the committee."

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to explain briefly the provisions of this bill.

Mr. FRYE. The point of order was reserved by the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. CONGER.]

Mr. SPRINGER. I hope the gentleman will not make the point of order. This bill has been considered by the Committee of Elections and unanimously agreed to; and I hope members of the House who are not members of the committee will allow the committee the opportunity of having it considered by the House.

Mr. FRYE. I withhold the point of order for the present.

The SPEAKER. If the discussion of the bill is entered upon the point of order must be considered as waived.

Mr. FRYE. I will withhold the point of order merely while I ask the gentleman from Illinois a question. This bill has not been printed at all, as I understand.

Mr. SPRINGER. Oh, yes; it has been printed.

Mr. KEIFER. The bill has been printed, but the amendments have not been printed.

Mr. SPRINGER. I can explain the amendments in one moment.

Mr. FRYE. And this has been unanimously agreed upon by the committee?

Mr. SPRINGER. Yes, sir.

Mr. FRYE. Then I do not make the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan who reserved the point of order is not now in his seat. The Chair will consider that no point of order is made.

Mr. SPRINGER. I will explain, then, that the only object of this bill is to enable the clerk of the Committee of Elections, if Congress does not meet until December for its regular session, to prepare in the mean time the records and cause the briefs of attorneys to be filed and have them bound and ready to be presented to the committee when the committee is organized at the opening of the session of Congress. The object is to facilitate the hearing of contested-election cases, and instead of waiting hereafter at the session beginning in December for all these voluminous records to be printed and briefs to be prepared and printed with reference to the printed pages of the record, all that will be accomplished in the vacation, so that when Congress meets in December and the committee is appointed everything will be in readiness for the committee to take hold of the cases and dispose of them at once.

The bill has been carefully prepared by the Committee of Elections, and I have been instructed unanimously by them to report it in the shape in which it now is. I therefore move the previous question, unless some gentleman desires to make any remarks upon the bill.

Mr. BUCKNER. Does this increase the number of clerks of the Committee of Elections?

Mr. SPRINGER. The bill allows the committee to employ an assistant clerk for such time as the committee may deem necessary, at the rate of $100 a month for such time as he may be employed.

I will state it is the duty of the clerk of this committee under this bill to have in the vacation all these records printed and indexed, and the printing is done under his supervision. It is also the duty of the clerk to prepare a digest of cases for publication and for the use of the committee; and while that is being done and the cases are being heard before the committee it is impossible for the committee to transact the business properly with only one person acting as clerk.

Mr. SPARKS. What difference is made in the standing of the clerk?

Mr. SPRINGER. He is made an annual clerk instead of a sessional clerk as heretofore, for the reason that he is required to perform these duties before Congress meets in December.

Mr. SPARKS. What is to be the amount of his salary?

Mr. SPRINGER. The salary is not materially changed from what the clerk had heretofore, from the fact that under this bill he will not be allowed to receive anything for making a digest of the cases, for which purpose an allowance was heretofore made.

Mr. SPARKS. What is he to receive under the bill?

Mr. SPRINGER. Two thousand five hundred dollars a year.

Mr. SPARKS. And there is to be an assistant clerk at $1,200?

Mr. SPRINGER. Yes, sir.

Mr. SPARKS. That makes $3,700 for clerks.

Mr. SPRINGER. The assistant clerk will receive $100 a month only for such time as he is employed.

Mr. FRYE. I desire to ask the gentleman from Illinois a question. The bill was quite long and I did not understand it exactly as it was read. Does it affect in any way any of the provisions of title 2 of the Revised Statutes except section 127?

Mr. SPRINGER. That is all.

Mr. FRYE. And the amendments which were read were not amendments to sections of the Revised Statutes, but amendments to the bill itself which was referred to the committee?

Mr. SPRINGER. The amendments are only to the section the gentleman has mentioned. I will state that the number of contested-election cases, as every gentleman knows, has vastly increased of late years, and so great was their number during the last Congress that it was impossible for the committee to report on them during that Congress.

If this bill shall be passed I think the Committee of Elections will be enabled to have all the contested-election cases before them disposed of within a reasonable time; at least be relieved from the implication of neglecting that important branch of our business.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I would like to have the bill read again.

Mr. KEIFER. Let the bill be read with the amendments.

Mr. FRYE. It is quite a lengthy bill, and I did not understand it.

The SPEAKER. It is rather difficult to read the bill as proposed to be amended; but so far as the Clerk can do so he will read it, as recommended by the committee.

Mr. KEIFER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] can assist the Clerk in reading the bill as agreed upon in the committee.

The SPEAKER. It is not indicated on the printed bill where the proposed amendments are to come in.

Mr. KEIFER It is very difficult for members around me to understand the bill. I am myself satisfied with it, but I think it is important that it should be read as proposed to be passed by the committee.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks so too.

The bill as proposed to be amended was then read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That section 127 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be so amended as to read as follows:

All officers taking testimony to be used in a contested-election case, whether by deposition or otherwise, shall, when the taking of the same is completed and without unnecessary delay, certify and carefully seal and immediately forward the same by mail or by express, addressed to the Clerk of the House of Representatives of the United States, Washington, District of Columbia; and shall also indorse upon the envelope or packages containing such deposition or testimony the name of the case in which it is taken, together with the name of the party in whose behalf it is taken, and shall subscribe such indorsement.

The Clerk of the House of Representatives upon the receipt of such deposition or testimony shall file the same with the clerk of the Committee of Elections. As soon as all the testimony relating to any case is received by the clerk of the Committee of Elections he shall notify the contestant and contestee, by registered letter through the mails, to appear at the committee-room at the Capitol, in person or by attorney, at a reasonable time to be named, not exceeding thirty days from the mailing of such letter, for the purpose of being present at the opening of the sealed packages of testimony, and of agreeing upon the parts thereof to be printed. Upon the day appointed for such meeting, the clerk of the committee shall proceed to open all the packages of testimony in the case, in the presence of the parties or their attorneys, and such portions of the testimony as either party may require to have printed shall be printed by the Public Printer, under the direction of the clerk of the committee, unless the committee shall otherwise direct; and the said clerk shall prepare a suitable index to be printed with the record.

Should either party to the contest forward a written authority to the clerk of the Committee of Elections to open the packages in his absence, and indicate the portions of his testimony which he requires to be printed, the clerk shall cause such portions to be printed, and should either party, after having been duly notified, fail to attend by himself or by an attorney and fail to indicate as aforesaid the portions of the testimony which he requires to be printed, the clerk of the committee shall proceed to open the packages, and shall cause the depositions and such portions of the testimony as he shall be of opinion are material to the issue to be printed. And the clerk shall in all cases make a minute of his action upon the Journal of the committee He shall carefully seal up and preserve the portions of the evidence not printed, as well as the printed portions when returned from the Public Printer, and lay the same before the Committee of Elections when appointed or at their next meeting. But the committee in all cases may order to be printed any evidence not printed as aforesaid. As soon as the evidence in any case is printed, the clerk of the Committee of Elections shall forward by mail or deliver two copies thereof to the contestant and the same number to the contestee, and shall notify the contestant to file with the clerk of the committee within sixty days a brief of the facts and the authorities relied on to establish his case, with references to the pages of the record for all facts deemed material. The clerk of the committee shall forward by mail or deliver two copies of the contestant's brief to the contestee with like notice.

Upon receipt of contestee's brief, the clerk shall forward or deliver two copies thereof to the contestant, who may, if he desires, reply to new matter in the contestee's brief within like time. All briefs shall be printed at the expense of the parties respectively, and shall be of like folio as the printed record, and one hundred copies thereof shall be filed with the clerk of the committee.

The clerk shall, as soon as possible, cause one hundred copies of the briefs and record in each case to be bound for the use of the Committee of Elections. When a Committee of Elections has been appointed the time for filing briefs, and printing records, and the hearing of cases shall be under its control.

SEC. 2. The clerk of the Committee of Elections shall be appointed by the committee, and he shall hold his office until his successor is appointed and qualified. He shall receive for his services $2,500 per annum; and he shall prepare, under the direction of the committee, for publication, a digest of election cases, but shall not be entitled to additional compensation therefor. The Committee of Elections may appoint an assistant clerk, who shall also act as messenger, and shall receive a compensation of $1,200 per annum, or at that rate for the time he shall be employed by order of the committee.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. If in order, I would like to be heard upon this bill, for I think it ought not to pass. One great objection to it is that it gives power to a ministerial officer of this House to break the seals of envelopes of records touching the rights of members here to their seats, the most sacred right known to the House itself. It is proposed that in the absence of the Committee of Elections the clerk of that committee shall be engaged in breaking the seals of these important papers and preparing portions of them for publication.

Now, we all know how liable such papers as these are to be tampered with under any circumstances. While I had the honor of presiding over that committee there were various misunderstandings for the time being in regard to what had become of the records after they had come into the possession of our committee, whether they had been tampered with or not by interested parties.

Let the bill become a law, and you will find this to be the case: the sitting member will never attend if he can avoid it; and the consequence will be that the clerk with the contestant by his side will be engaged in an ex parte examination of the testimony, and there will be no one present to represent the other side. The effect will be to produce interminable confusion, and to advance no case whatever. This bill provides that after the Committee of Elections shall have met they may publish such additional testimony as they may deem proper. Therefore the cases will not be ready for a hearing when Congress meets, even in the theory of this bill. Moreover, it is well known, from an examination of the cases heretofore brought to our notice, that if the committee had left it to the interested parties they would have had printed more trash, if I may be allowed to so term it, than could have been read by the committee in one entire session of Congress.

In the contested-election cases from Missouri and California the parties wanted to have printed all the proceedings of the various courts touching their cases before they came here, which would have made scores of volumes. By this bill the Government is to be subjected to the cost of publishing all this irrelevant matter, wholly immaterial and without the oversight and inspection of the committee whose duty it is to examine and determine whether or not it shall be published.

Now it is wrong in principle that any committee clerk of this House shall be authorized to break the seal of any paper or document which ought to pass through the House. As it is now, the Committee of Elections cannot itself cut open a paper unless it has been referred to them by the House of Representatives. By this bill it is proposed to take away from the House the right to determine the question of referring papers to the committee, and they are to be referred by the Clerk of the House to the clerk of the Committee of Elections, and that committee clerk is to open the packages, and with the aid of the contestant, an interested party, determine what shall be printed.

Mr. BLOUNT. Is there any great loss of time in waiting until Congress assembles and the Committee of Elections determine what shall be printed?

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. None at all. Indeed, it would be economy of time for the committee to be left in charge of this matter. One reason why I advocated the increase of the number of the Committee of Elections was that promptly on the assembling of Congress all the cases could be "subbed," as it is termed, and the various sub-committees could then proceed to act upon the cases and report them back to the general committee. I was in favor of giving the clerk of the Committee of Elections an annual salary, because I thought the dignity of that committee was equal to that of other committees which had annual salary clerks and his labors were as arduous. The last Committee of Elections instructed me to report a resolution asking that the clerk of that committee be made an annual clerk and allowed an annual salary of $2,000, and to prepare a digest of election cases on the plan of Bartlett & Smith, as contemplated by this bill.

I thought then and I think now that the employment of an assistant for thirty days, as was done in the last Congress, while the cases were being prepared for publication, would be important. But after the first thirty or sixty days an assistant to that committee would be of no more service than a fifth wheel to a wagon. After the cases are printed and brought before the committee he has little or nothing to do. But we know, Mr. Speaker, that when we leave it discretionary with a committee to employ a clerk, that means the employment of a clerk during the whole Congress. I think that this bill is wrong in principle; that it will entail increased expense on the Government; that it will retard the progress of election cases. Hence, I think it ought not to pass.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Speaker, I would have been very much pleased if the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HARRIS] had told us how the work of the Committee of Elections progressed during the Forty-fifth Congress, when he was chairman of that committee. My recollection is that when the Congress closed a large number of cases before the committee had never been even reported to the House.

Now, this bill is in the nature of a practice act, the central idea of which is to forward all these election cases in the interest not alone of the contestant but also of the contestee. The design is to have these records printed not alone under the eye of the Clerk but under the eye of the parties; and who better than the parties are able to judge what is material to be printed?

My recollection is that the committee in the last Congress printed substantially everything that came in, excepting perhaps the ballots. I think the guards embraced in this bill are such as to obviate the necessity of printing a very large quantity of matter coming here in connection with these cases. We have now in the committee-room almost a cart load of documents relating to a single case; and if we wait until the committee can in the ordinary course of business go over these documents, consider them, and decide what shall be printed, the probability is that this will not be done before the close of the Congress. In the great majority of cases, however—nearly all—everything is printed; and properly. The object is to have the papers material to the decision of the cases laid early before the committee and the House, so as to keep contestants from thronging around us here in the lobbies. It is very unjust to them to delay their cases unnecessarily. I saw contestants here on the first day of the Forty-fifth Congress; and I also saw the same men walking up and down outside of the bar, in the last hours of that Congress, their cases never having been reported upon by the committee.

If this bill will operate so as to get cases in print——

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. KEIFER. Certainly.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. When the Committee of Elections reported the South Carolina cases and others in the last Congress, did not the gentleman vote against taking them up and considering them?

Mr. KEIFER. I voted against taking up one case, I believe——

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. You voted against taking up two; and you have no right to complain of cases not being disposed of.

Mr. KEIFER. My negative vote was, I believe, on a motion made by the gentleman about two days and a half before the close of the Forty-fifth Congress. I thought it rather late at that time to take up so important a case and undertake to consider it with the solemnity with which it ought to be considered.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. Speaker, when does the morning hour expire?

The SPEAKER. The morning hour has expired. This bill will go over till next Tuesday.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask unanimous consent that the bill as proposed to be amended be printed.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

CLAIMS AGAINST NICARAGUA.

Mr. ACKLEN. I ask unanimous consent that a resolution which was left pending in the morning hour may be considered at present. It is a matter which in the last Congress received the unanimous approval of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and is a subject with which a great many gentlemen of the House are thoroughly acquainted. I ask that the resolution be considered at present, as there is half an hour remaining before the time fixed for taking up the silver bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ACKLEN] asks unanimous consent that a resolution pending as unfinished business in the morning hour, and which can only be reached again in the morning hour when all the committees shall have been called through, may be taken up at this time out of the morning hour for consideration.

Mr. WAIT. We would like to understand the subject of the resolution which the gentleman proposes to bring up.

Mr. ACKLEN. The resolution, Mr. Speaker, was unanimously authorized to be reported by the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the Forty-fifth Congress just before the final adjournment. I was authorized to make the report, but unfortunately fell sick and was unable to do so. A similar resolution has been unanimously reported by the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate. I will ask in a moment that the resolution be read.

Mr. BLOUNT. I do not wish to be understood as assenting to bringing up the resolution, but simply that the gentleman may state the nature of the proposition.

Mr. ACKLEN. The resolution relates to the claims of citizens of the United States against the government of Nicaragua. These claims have been pending in the Department of State for fifteen or eighteen years.

Mr. WARNER. I must object to the consideration of these claims now.

Mr. ACKLEN. I object to being interrupted.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is only on the floor by consent of every member of this House.

Mr. ACKLEN. I am aware that the gentleman can shut me off by objecting to the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio states that he does object.

Mr. ACKLEN. Your case does not come up till two o'clock. This will not take ten minutes, if you will allow me to get through.

Mr. BLOUNT. I object. I do not see why these claims should have preference over other claims.

Mr. ACKLEN. If the gentleman will permit me to finish my statement he will not insist on his objection. Unless this is considered at the present time it will not be considered during the extra session. The Senate have appointed their committee and are waiting to have the House appoint a like committee to take into consideration the papers now on file in the State Department.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BLOUNT. Yes; I object.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. ALDRICH, of Rhode Island. Mr. Speaker, I ask by unanimous consent to submit at this time three reports from the Committee for the District of Columbia, in order that the bills may be printed and recommitted.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the printing and recommitment of the bills, not to be brought back by a motion to reconsider?

There was no objection.

ARREARAGES OF GENERAL TAXES.

Mr. ALDRICH, of Rhode Island, from the Committee for the District of Columbia, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 1160, a bill (H. R. No. 1379) fixing the rate of interest upon arrearages of general taxes and assessments for special improvements now due to the District of Columbia, and for a revision of assessments for special improvements; which was read a first and second time, ordered to be printed, and recommitted.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA BONDS.

Mr. ALDRICH, of Rhode Island, also, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 1380) authorizing the commissioners of the District of Columbia to issue twenty-year 5 per cent. bonds of the District of Columbia to redeem certain funded indebtedness of said District; which was read a first and second time, ordered to be printed, and recommitted.

BRIDGE ACROSS POTOMAC RIVER.

Mr. ALDRICH, of Rhode Island, also, from the same committee, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 320, a bill (H. R. No. 1381) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Potomac River at or near Georgetown, in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, ordered to be printed, and recommitted.

COINAGE CERTIFICATES, ETC.

Mr. WARNER. I now call up the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER. The regular order of business is the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 564) to amend certain sections of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to coinage and coin and bullion certificates, and for other purposes; reported from the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, with amendments.

Mr. WARNER. I send to the Clerk's desk to be read an amendment to section 9.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 21, page 6, after the word "banks," insert the following:

Provided that gold or silver bullion which shall become the property of the Government by the return of certificates to the Treasury in payment of dues thereto shall be coined and paid out the same as other money.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. Speaker, I wish first to call the attention of the House to the changes which it is proposed to make in the several sections of the Revised Statutes designated in this bill.

Section 1 proposes to strike out from section 3511 of the Revised Statutes the words "which at the standard weight of 25.8 grains shall be the unit of value," and in lieu thereof to insert "or unit." That is the only change which is made by the bill in this section.

Section 2 proposes to strike out the word "trade-dollar" where it occurs in section 3513, and the words "four hundred and twenty grains," thus dropping this coin altogether, and to substitute the words "dollar or unit" and "four hundred and twelve and one-half grains." Also, to add to this section the provisions of section 3512 relating to the abrasion of coins, changing the words only to make the provision applicable to silver, and making the limit 1 per cent. instead of $\frac{1}{2}$ per cent., which is the limit of abrasion for gold pieces.

Section 3 proposes to strike out of section 3520 of the Revised Statutes the word "twenty" before "grains," which refers to the trade-dollar, and the words "designated in this title as trade-dollars," and to substitute the word "standard" before "dollars," and "12½" instead of "20" before the word "grains;" and to add the words "for his benefit," which is the language of the act of 1837, and the language of section 3519 of the Revised Statutes, as applied to gold. Also to strike out the part of the section which, when the change in the first part is made, will be unnecessary, and to re-enact the provision of the law of 1837 providing "that it shall be lawful to refuse at the Mint any deposit of bullion of less value than $100, or any bullion so base as to be unsuitable for the operations of the Mint."

By section 4 it is proposed to strike out of section 3524 the part relating to trade-dollars. The provision in this section making the charge for converting standard gold bullion into coin $\frac{1}{2}$ of 1 per cent. was repealed by the act of January 14, 1875, and is no longer a part of the law and is accordingly stricken out in this bill. Gold is now admitted to free as well as unlimited coinage. No other change is proposed in that section of the law.

By section 5 it is proposed to strike out from section 3527 of the Revised Statutes the words "other than the trade-dollar;" and to provide that fractional silver coins may be paid out to the extent they may be required in exchange for either gold coins or standard silver dollars or United States notes at par, in sums not less than $50.

This section also provides that—

Silver coins of less denominations than $1, when presented at the Treasury or any sub-treasury or depository of the United States, in sums not less than $20, shall be received in exchange for money of full legal tender; which corresponds with the provisions of the bill which passed this House a few days ago. A part of section 3527 has already expired by limitation, and the bill simply drops it from the statutes.

By section 6 it is proposed to amend section 3585 by adding the words "and standard silver dollars;" so that it will read:

The gold coins of the United States and standard silver dollars shall be a legal tender, &c.

By section 7 it is proposed to amend section 3586 so as to correspond with the act which has already passed the House.

It is also proposed to amend section 254 of the Revised Statutes by inserting the words "and required" after the word "authorized," and adding the words "or silver" before the word "coin" and the words "gold or silver" before the word "bullion;" so as to place silver upon the same basis exactly with gold; and also to make the certificates receivable for all dues to the United States, including duties on imports. These are the only changes that are proposed to be made in that section of the statutes.

The provision contained in section 9 of the bill, "that from and after the passage of this act only coins of smaller denominations than $1 shall be fabricated on Government account," becomes necessary if this bill becomes a law; that is, if silver is admitted to unlimited coinage, then, of course, the Government should cease to coin dollars on its own account. It then opens the mints to the public for the coinage of silver the same as gold, as they always were in this country until the act of 1873 closed them against silver. The closing of the mints of this and other countries against silver was a new departure that is fast subverting proprietary rights throughout the world.

Until the act of February 28, 1878, was passed our Government never purchased bullion of either gold or silver for the purpose of making money of full legal tender on Government account. The amendment I have just offered proposes that when certificates issued under section 254, as here amended, shall be returned to the Treasury in payment of dues, so that the Government becomes the owner of any gold or silver bullion, then such bullion shall be coined and paid out as other money is paid out of the Treasury. In brief, Mr. Speaker, no changes are made by this bill in any of the sections except to replace silver by the side of gold in respect to coinage exactly as it was under the law of 1792 and all subsequent coinage laws down to the act of 1873; and in respect to certificates to put silver on the same basis with gold under section 254 of the Revised Statutes.

I propose next, Mr. Speaker, to call attention to the change made in the monetary law of the United States by the insertion in the act of 1873 of the provision withdrawing the unit of value from silver and placing it upon gold alone. This is the provision:

Which at the standard weight of 25.8 grains shall be the unit of value.

The words "or unit" which it is proposed to restore to this section of the statutes is the language of the law of 1792, and the language of every act providing for or regulating the coinage of dollars of either metal from that date to 1873, when the ill-considered change in the money unit was made.

When the question of the establishment of a mint was under consideration by the founders of the Government, Mr. Hamilton, in his communication to the House of Representatives, January 28, 1791, said:

Upon the whole, it seems to be most advisable, as has been observed, not to attach the unit exclusively to either of the metals, because this cannot be done effectually without destroying the office and character of one of them as money and reducing it to the situation of a mere merchandise.

* * * * * * *

To annul the use of either of the metals as money is to abridge the quantity of circulating medium, and is liable to all the objections which arise from a comparison of the benefits of a full with the evils of a scanty circulation.

Jefferson, in his letter to Hamilton returning the report, said:

I return you the report on the mint. I concur with you that the unit must stand on both metals.

Mr. Webster, referring to the constitutional power of the Government over money, said:

I am certainly of the opinion, then, that gold and silver, at rates fixed by Congress, constitute the legal standard of value in this country, and that neither Congress nor any State has authority to establish any other standard or to displace this.

* * * * * * *

The legal tender, therefore, the constitutional standard of value, is established, and cannot be overthrown. To overthrow it would shake the whole system.

As a constitutional proposition I think it must go unquestioned that if Congress may demonetize silver, it may gold; and if it may demonetize either of the metals it may both of them, and if it may demonetize both gold and silver, then it may monetize any other metal, or make money of anything else. I think no one will dispute the fact either, that in the opinion of the founders of the Constitution there was no right vested in Congress to demonetize either of the metals. Congress may fix the ratio between them; it may "regulate" the value of our own and of foreign coins. By the word "value," however, as used in the Constitution, is meant only the ratio between the two metals, and the relative value of foreign coins as compared with or expressed in our own standard coins.

Mr. Speaker, by the provisions of the act of 1873, striking silver from its place as a money metal and restricting the unit of value to gold alone, a monetary revolution was inaugurated which has and will, if allowed to stand, cost this country more than all its wars have cost it. This sweeping change is contained in eighteen words, now a part of section 3511 of the Revised Statutes. This is the root of the evil. These words must be repealed before bi-metalism can be re-established. The unit must be restored to both metals; without this the coinage of silver is but a make-shift and a delusion.

I wish, however, before proceeding further in this line, to refer to the origin of this innovation and the way it got into the statutes. It is manifestly a foreign importation. I do not believe it had its origin on this side of the Atlantic. It was doubtless partly the product of that ill-advised convention which assembled in Paris in 1867, and which had for its principal object the unification of the coins of the world, and partly a deep-laid scheme to increase the value of money.

Apparently inspired by the action of this convention, Mr. Sherman, in January, 1868, being then chairman of the Committee on Finance in the Senate, introduced a bill to change the gold coins of the United States so as to make them correspond with the French twenty-five-franc piece, and to make the silver half dollar correspond in weight to two and a half silver francs, and dropping the dollar entirely.

The bill introduced in the House by Mr. Hooper, of Massachusetts, by which the change in our law was effected, however, originally contained a dollar piece, but changed in weight to correspond to five silver francs.

This piece, however, was afterward dropped and the trade-dollar substituted. The words now incorporated in section 3511 making the gold dollar the sole unit of value were embraced in the bill as introduced by Mr. Hooper. Who suggested this provision, or whose hand framed it, does not appear, and no one has had the courage to own it. Suffice it to say no heavier hand was ever lifted against this country.

While the bill was under consideration in the House, except a mere allusion by Mr. Hooper and Mr. Potter, there is not one single word in the discussion that took place, then or afterward, in the House or in the Senate, indicating that anybody understood that a change was to be made in the standard of value in the United States, or that this was part of a concerted movement to drop silver from the money of the world. From the discussion that took place, which pertained altogether to other matters, such as minor coins and whether the eagle should be retained on certain fractional silver pieces or not, it was evident that nobody contemplated any such thing or knew that a provision was in the bill making such a change in our monetary standard.

If further evidence of these facts were needed we have it in the vote taken in this House in April, 1874—more than a year after the passage of Mr. Hooper's bill—on a resolution by a distinguished member from Massachusetts, (Mr. Hoar,) which resolution was as follows:

That from and after the 1st day of September, 1874, nothing but gold and silver coin of the United States shall be a legal tender in the payment of any debt thereafter contracted.

This resolution was concurred in by nearly all the republicans in the House. Even Mr. Hooper voted for it.

In the Senate, April 25, 1876, the present Secretary of the Treasury declared:

The act of 1873 did not in the slightest degree demonetize silver. * * * The right to coin the silver dollar, which is now proposed to be authorized again, has always existed in this country; has never been taken away.

Not an intimation was given to the country by the public press anywhere that such a change was contemplated. You will search in vain the journals of the country to find anywhere a hint of such a thing. Doubtless there were those who understood it. The money-dealers of Wall street, of Lombard street, of the Bourse of Paris, and of Hamburg understood it. They know Ricardo by heart; they know the history of such changes in other times, and they know the history of resumption in England, and they knew very well what would be the effect of such an alteration in the standard with national debts aggregating $25,000,000,000. The cunning knavery concealed under the impenetrable disguise thrown around the bill at the time of its passage has come finally to be the most marked feature of the whole measure. I repeat that the bill passed through the Senate without even being read through and without one single word in the debate upon it there to indicate any change in the metallic standard. But we have evidence from another source that no such thing was in the minds of the chief officers of the Government. The President who signed the bill evidently was not aware of the effect of the provisions it contained.

Mr. KELLEY. Will the gentleman yield to me for a minute for the statement of a pertinent fact?

Mr. WARNER. Certainly.

Mr. KELLEY. So little was this matter understood that I for years pleaded guilty to having presented, as its chairman and organ, from the Committee on Coinage the bill which demonetized the standard dollar. I did not know that I had not done so until the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FORT] investigated the matter and found that the bill of the committee which I had reported did not demonetize the standard dollar, and that a section had been stricken out and one demonetizing that dollar inserted in the Senate.

Mr. WARNER. That was done in the committee of conference, I think. The provision which dropped entirely the dollar piece, leaving the trade-dollar in its place, was adopted upon the report of a committee of conference, and was not read in either House.

I say that the President of the United States who signed the bill was evidently not aware of its scope or the change that was made by it. In proof of this we have his letter to Mr. Cowdrey, written in October of the same year, in which he recommended an increased coinage of silver, and wondered why silver dollars did not come into circulation.

Mr. CLAFLIN. I do not desire to interrupt the gentleman in making his speech——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Ohio yield?

Mr. WARNER. I will yield for a moment.

Mr. CLAFLIN. I simply wish to say that I deny some of the statements in regard to the passage of the bill, especially as to the action taken in the Senate.

Mr. WARNER. I have the record before me, and speak from it.

Mr. CLAFLIN. I simply wish to call attention to the matter at this time. I do not wish the gentleman's statements to go without correction.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CLAFLIN] will be recognized in due time.

Mr. WARNER. I incorporate in my remarks the letter of the President to which I have just referred, dated October 6, 1873, and which reads as follows:

I wonder that silver is not already coming into the market to supply the deficiency in the circulating medium. * * * Experience has proved that it takes about $40,000,000 of fractional currency to make the small change necessary for the transaction of the business of the country. Silver will gradually take the place of this currency, and, further, will become the standard of values, which will be hoarded in a small way. I estimate that this will consume from $200,000,000 to $300,000,000 in time of this species of our circulating medium. * * * I confess to a desire to see a limited hoarding of money. It insures a firm foundation in time of need. But I want to see the hoarding of something that has a standard value the world over. Silver has this.

Not only was the President of the United States not aware of the change the bill which he had signed made in the unit of value, but it is fair to presume that his Cabinet also were unadvised that silver had been dropped from our monetary system two years after the bill had become a law. This is evidenced by the special message which the President sent to the Senate January 14, 1875, approving the resumption act, in which he used this language:

With the present facilities for coinage, it would take a period probably beyond that fixed by law for final specie resumption to coin the silver necessary to transact the business of the country.

The suggestion of Mr. Groesbeck at the recent conference at Paris, that silver was inadvertently dropped from the coinage of the United States, was a clever way of putting it, but still we can hardly wonder that other countries should express surprise at such an admission. It is a fact, however, that this change affected the country very little then, which sufficiently accounts for the absence of public concern, but when the specie-resumption act which followed began to take effect, changing all prices from a paper to a metallic valuation, then the country awoke to find that the metallic level of prices had also been changed; that the metallic measure itself had been changed from $8,000,000,000 of both gold and silver for the world to $4,000,000,000 or $4,500,000,000 of the one metal, gold, or that it was finally to come to this. Then the fact was brought to light that a law had been passed which coming into force changed the terms of every contract and every obligation then existing in the United States.

It changed the relation of every bushel of wheat, of every acre of land, of every piece of property, and of every day's labor in the United States to debts and obligations theretofore contracted. It set up a new standard, an enlarged one, a standard of one metal of forty-five hundred millions of money for the world, instead of a valuation based upon eight thousand millions.

Mr. Speaker, the old way of changing the value of money was to increase the metal in the coins. In every capital of the world time and again that has been tried. It was tried in England in the reign of Edward VI, when the metal in coins was increased threefold. It was renewed by Queen Elizabeth, and entailed the poor laws upon that country. It was tried in France under Philippe le Bel, when at the instance of the clergy and the barons coins were doubled in weight, but an insurrection among the peasantry compelled the King to abandon his unjust demands. It was tried two thousand years ago in ancient Rome, when Heliogabalus, to increase his revenues, by an underhand trick increased the gold in the aureus. No country, perhaps, has escaped such attempts at robbing the tax-paying people for the benefit of a receiving class. And it is really the "honest" way of changing the value of money. (I use the word "honest" in this connection as I take it to be used by our "honest-money" friends.) It has the merit of being a fraud clear and above-board, a fraud that all can understand.

Double the quantity of metal in the coins and require the same number of pieces to be given in discharge of an obligation, and of course the debt is doubled.

Now, I submit this plain proposition: If there is metal enough in the world applicable to monetary uses to make eight thousand millions of units of valuation in the proportion of 25.8 grains of gold and 412½ grains of silver to a dollar or unit, and you double the quantity of metal in coins, then only half that number of coins can be made, and you have doubled the value of the coins and doubled the measure or standard. Now there can be no difference in effect between doubling the metal in coins and by that means doubling their value, and that of reducing the quantity of the metal from which coins can be made one-half. If you have a given number of tons of metal applicable to use as money, enough say to make $8,000,000,000, and you destroy half of it, you have changed the value of money, you have changed the measure, precisely the same and to the same extent as though you had doubled the quantity of metal in the coins. But this is the way in these times that "honest" money is made. No doubt there was prating in the streets of Rome two thousand years ago of "honest" money, and no doubt there were men then who thanked the gods that they were enabled by such means—by an increase in the standard by which debts were measured and paid—to appropriate to themselves property that rightfully belonged to others.

The same thing, Mr. Speaker has been undertaken and in part accomplished in this country. This is not communism asking for a division of the accumulated wealth of the world; it is not socialism asking to be secured the poor privilege of earning bread. It is another class, the bond-holding, the tax-receiving class, coming into the halls of this Capitol and asking and receiving the aid of the state to enable them, by an increase in the value of money, to lay avaricious, ay, felonious, hands, not only upon portions of wealth representing past accumulations, to which they have no just right, but to reach forward into the future, how far no one can foresee, and to appropriate the earnings of future years—wealth yet uncreated—beyond the share to which they can lay rightful claim. That is exactly the effect of the change made in our monetary unit by the provisions of the law of 1873 which it is now proposed to repeal.

CHANGE FROM A PAPER VALUATION TO THE METALLIC VALUATION.

It was supposed by the people when the resumption act was passed that it was proposed to return to the old standard, to restore values to the old level of bi-metallic money—silver and gold conjointly. But instead of that we find a new standard set up, that of gold alone—a very different level, indeed, from which we departed in the issue of paper money during the war.

I wish to take this occasion, however, Mr. Speaker, to condemn all changes by legislation in the value of money, whether to increase it or to decrease it. There can be no real gain to any country by such measures. I do not believe there was a necessity for departing from existing valuations, even in the darkest hours of the war. We really gained nothing by it; but on the other hand the war debt was greatly augmented in consequence of it. When prices were doubled it took $2 to do the work $1 did before. But having departed from the metallic valuation and established a paper valuation, I contend that it was wrong, that it was unjust to return to the former standard without adequate compensation. But when it was proposed not to stop at the old metallic level of both the precious metals, but to establish a new level, to set up a new and higher standard, and undertake to bring all values in the country to that, it became more than a blunder—it became a crime, a crime that this Congress should not adjourn without wiping from the statute-books. [Applause.]

Mr. FORT. I understand the gentleman to say that he proposes, and I suppose this bill proposes, to set up a new standard.

Mr. WARNER. No; I say that a new standard has been set up by the demonetization of silver and placing the unit of value on gold alone; and of that I propose to give the proof very soon.

Mr. FORT. The gentleman will bear in mind that silver was remonetized two years ago.

Mr. WARNER. Oh, no; silver has not been remonetized, although we do make some money out of silver, and I say that the law which I have been discussing set up a new and a different standard—a higher one.

Mr. FORT. But we have traveled over all that road and have remonetized silver a long time ago. I wish to know what the gentleman refers to when he proposes to set up a new standard.

Mr. WARNER. It is not proposed to set up a new standard by this bill, but to rest upon the old one of both gold and silver. I say that the provision in the section of the Revised Statutes it is proposed to amend set up a new standard. The Bland bill, which restored to silver dollars the legal-tender quality, did not, as finally passed, provide for its unlimited coinage. It did not therefore restore the bi-metallic standard—far from it—it simply supplemented the gold standard by as much silver as may be coined from month to month, in the same way precisely as the greenback and the national-bank notes supplement gold. I grant that. But I wish to show that we have made a double change in this country, first a change from a paper valuation to a valuation of both gold and silver, and a second change from a valuation of both metals to gold alone. The fall in prices as the consequence of the first change, taking the general run of property, including real estate, mines, factories, &c., as well as commodities and labor, has been from 35 to 40 per cent. The change from the bi-metallic valuation to gold, so far as it has already gone, adds from 18 to 20 per cent. to this. This change began and has continued from the time our paper currency was at par with silver.

Now, as to the proof of this change and the consequences both in this country and in Europe. I hope I have succeeded in making clear my point that the value of gold—the value of a gold dollar, or a gold sovereign, or an ounce of gold, if you please—is one thing under the law as it stood before the act of 1873, and before the German law of 1872 and 1873 was passed, and a very different thing now under those laws. The gold dollar, which gentlemen seem to consider as fixed in value like a yard-stick or a pound weight, has, in fact, become a very different measure under these laws from what it was before they were passed.

On this point I desire to give the opinions of a few men of acknowledged weight as authorities. No one, I will say, who considered the subject at all eight years ago seemed to look for any other result from the partial demonetization of silver even, than a fall in prices or a rise in the value of gold.

Mr. Ernest Seyd, an authority too well known to require comment from me, said in 1872:

> The demonetization of silver, abstracting say 40 per cent. from mediums of exchange, or rather the violation of the contract basis upon which these relations now rest, will be tantamount to a gratuitous addition to the power of invested capital and fixed incomes, while labor and property will fall in value. Whether this result takes place suddenly, or gradually, (as the advocates of the gold valuation put in for an excuse,) the principle involved remains the same, the wrong remains paramount. Thus the value of all state debts (in themselves immoral) would increase greatly, the burden of taxation would become the heavier in proportion, and labor would become more enslaved than ever. There are persons who allege that the additional supply of gold might soon make up the difference. The folly of this assertion equals that of a man who wantonly scuttles his ship in the hope and expectation that he might get another to replace it.

Again, he says:

> The definite adoption of the gold valuation by the majority of the civilized states must involve its extension over all the other nations with which they stand in commercial intercourse.

This is the opinion of an English economist, mindful that the debts of the world have increased in ten or fifteen years to $25,000,000,000; and it is indeed worthy of remark that at this time, when national indebtedness has so increased, it should be proposed to change the standard by which that indebtedness must some time in the future be liquidated.

Wolowski, the distinguished French economist, said:

> The suppression of silver would bring on a veritable revolution. Gold would augment in value with a rapid and constant progress, which would break the faith of contracts, and aggravate the situation of all debtors, including the nation. It would add at one stroke of the pen at least three milliards to the twelve milliards of the public debt.

And further:

> To adopt one metal, gold, to the exclusion of the other, it is not merely as if they closed all existing mines of silver, but as if they suppressed in this regard the labor of all past ages. If by a stroke of the pen they suppress one of these metals in the monetary service, they double the demand for the other metal to the ruin of all debtors.

Disraeli said in a speech at Glasgow in 1873:

> I attribute the great monetary disturbance that has occurred to the great changes which the governments in Europe are making with reference to their standard of value.

Now, has there been such a change in the value of gold and in prices as was predicted? Let us see. First let us examine the transition from the paper valuation to the bi-metallic level, and then from the bi-metallic to the mono-metallic level as far as it has already gone. Take if you please the productions of the United States. The value of our wheat crop in 1869, which was only 300,000,000 of bushels, was $375,000,000. The crop of 1877, 365,000,000 bushels, was worth $394,000,000, while the value of the crop in 1878, of 422,000,000 bushels, was only $329,000,000. The value of our corn crop in 1869, 900,000,000 bushels, was $450,000,000, while the value of 1,371,000,000 bushels, the production last year, was only $433,000,000. The value of the cotton crop of 1869, 2,700,000 bales, was $303,000,000. The crop of 1877, 4,750,000 bales, was worth $240,000,000, while the value of the entire crop of 1878, 5,200,000 bales, was only $194,000,000. Taking the population of the States engaged in the raising of cotton at ten millions, and the entire cotton crop will afford but about $20 per capita.

I have heard complaint here and elsewhere that the colored population of the South was not duly rewarded. Why, if $20 per capita is the value of their whole product, that is all there is to divide; if one gets more than $20 another must take less; and if the value of all the other products of these States be taken at one-half that of the cotton crop, then all there is to be divided does not amount to $30 apiece, and out of that the people must be supported and the taxes and interest and all other dues paid. Tennessee has been assailed on the floor of this House as trying to repudiate a part of her debt. Let me say on behalf of that State—while I am the apologist of no man or State that proposes repudiation or seeks to escape any just obligation—yet the State of Tennessee could not have foreseen when she contracted her debt of $20,000,000 that the dollar was to be increased in value by the demonetization of silver, so that while at the price of cotton in 1869, 175,000 bales would have paid it, and in 1873, 285,000 bales, it now takes 536,000 to balance it. I do not mean that the change in the price of cotton is due entirely to a change in money. But I do mean that the change in the value of money is a principal element. I mean that the gold dollar now is a different dollar, with silver demonetized, from the dollar of gold before the demonetization.

Mr. FISHER. Is the gentleman's valuation of cotton in 1869 based on currency or on gold?

Mr. WARNER. The value I have given is based on Liverpool prices. But let us pass to other products. The value of the potato crop of 1869, 150,000,000 bushels, was $90,000,000. In 1878 the crop was 125,000,000 bushels, being 25,000,000 less than in 1869; but the value was but $73,000,000. The tobacco crop of 1869, 225,000,000 pounds, was $37,125,000. The crop of 1878 was 393,000,000 pounds, but its value was only $22,000,000.

Take pig-iron. The value of the pig-iron produced in 1869 was $62,000,000, the product being 1,725,000 tons. In 1873 the production was 2,868,000 tons, and the value was $120,000,000. Its value in silver bullion was then very much greater than its value now; but I will revert again to that point if I have time. In 1877 the production of pig-iron was 2,314,000 tons, a less quantity, therefore, than in 1873; so that it was not the quantity that affected the price, but the value of the total product of that year (1877) was only $41,000,000.

But we have a better test than that. The expenses of the Government of the United States in 1873 were $293,000,000. What do you suppose was the equivalent of that expenditure in labor—in days' labor—in this country? Why, the equivalent of it in days' labor was about one hundred and ninety-five million days, or the product of so many days' labor. In 1878 the expenditures had been reduced so that they were but $236,000,000. But to pay the $236,000,000 of expenses in 1878 required two hundred and sixty-two millions of days' labor, or the product of so many millions of days' labor. There was, then, no decrease in the expenditures when measured by that which measures all values, human sacrifices, but on the other hand a decided increase.

The total taxes collected in the United States, according to the statistics of Mr. David A. Wells, given in his report as special commissioner of the revenue in 1869, was $750,000,000. The labor equivalent of these taxes in that year (1869) was five hundred millions of days' labor. In that year I say that five hundred million days' labor was the equivalent of all the taxes raised in the United States. What is the equivalent of the same taxes now in labor, for, remember, the number of dollars required in taxes is not less than in 1869? It is not less than eight hundred and thirty million days' labor, or three hundred and thirty million days more than was required to make up the equivalent in 1869 and 1870!

Take the interest on the public debt. We are told over and over again—it has been a thousand times repeated—that the Government has reduced the interest. True, the interest has been reduced in the number of dollars paid, but as a burden I affirm, and I think statistics amply bear me out in the assertion, that the interest on the public debt, as a burden to be borne and discharged by sacrifices through labor or its products, has been increased every month and every year from the close of the war down to this day. In 1873 the interest was $104,000,000, the labor equivalent of which was sixty-nine million three hundred thousand days. In 1878 the interest was $95,000,000, in round numbers; the equivalent of that in days' labor was about one hundred and five millions of days. I take for the basis of my calculations the most reliable labor statistics available in the different States. The interest paid in 1878, therefore, as measured in days' labor, was thirty-six million more days' labor than in 1873. It required so much more sacrifice, so many more of the products of every kind on the average, than was required at the time the interest was highest. To pay, then, a hundred millions of debt, how much more cotton, tobacco, petroleum, everything exported, is required than five years ago? The London Economist of January 18, 1879, in summing up the results of British trade for 1878, says:

> Altogether we have received rather more in quantity than in 1877, and have paid some 8½ per cent. less money; which shows that the fall in prices of imports into England is still going on, and that in the payment of interest and debt to England we pay every year more commodities.

So far as this is a result of general causes, and especially so far as it is caused from cheapened processes of manufacture, there can be no ground of complaint; but in so far as it is due to a direct alteration in the value of money we have a right to complain, and to make emphatic our demand that the alteration in the just measure shall go no further, but, on the other hand, that the rightful standard shall be restored. We have heard often, and gentlemen here will doubtless say the change is in the property, that property hass hrunk; shorter have shrunk. But I ask, have acres grown smaller or miles shorter? Have houses shrunk? Do bushels contain less or are pounds not as heavy? Are there not as many acres of land, as many houses, as many mills, factories, furnaces, as much property of all kinds, in quantity, in the United States now as there was five or ten years ago? No; the change is not in the commodities, but in the measure, in the valuator—money.

John Locke, two hundred years ago, gave the true philosophy. He said:

> Money, while the same quantity of it is passing up and down the kingdom in trade, is really a standing measure of the falling and rising value of other things, in reference to one another, and the alteration of price is truly in them only. But if you increase or lessen the quantity of money current in traffic in any place, then the alteration of value is in the money; and if at the same time wheat keep its proportion of vent to quantity, money, to speak truly, alters its worth, and wheat does not, though it sell for a greater or less price than it did before.

No one would claim, if he found a given piece of cloth showing at one time a given number of yards and the same quantity of cloth to measure at another time a less number of yards, that the cloth had shrunk. He would conclude that the change was not in the goods, but in the measure; and that is exactly the case with the property and all the wealth of the United States. Five or six or eight years ago a man on the western prairies bought a farm, agreeing to pay $5,000 for it. He paid $2,500 down. The yearly products of his farm were worth, we will say, $500. He counted upon being able, out of his own industry and the product of his farm, to pay the balance in a given time, and obligated himself to do it and mortgaged his property. In the mean time this great Government, that should look to the equal protection of the rights of all the people, changes the measure, changes the value of the money he agreed to pay. It tells him, in the first place, that the commodities which he produces shall be worth only $250 instead of $500, or, in other words, that he shall give twice as much of what he produces for a dollar; and in the second place, tells him that, notwithstanding, he shall pay the same number of dollars in the discharge of his mortgage. The plain effect of this is that the Government steps in after a fair contract has been made and breaks it; alters entirely its terms; permits, on the one side, and compels on the other, the violation of the faith pledged between man and man, and takes the property from one—takes from him at least what he had paid—which may represent his life earnings and savings; takes it under this robbing act changing the value of money, for robbing in effect it is, and, so far as concerns the loser, it leaves him no better off than if pirates had come from some foreign coast and dispossessed him of what was his.

This is not an exceptional case. The country is filled with men dispossessed of their property, their earnings and their savings, under the monetary legislation of the last ten years. But continue the increase of the money standard, and it must result in the dispossession of the great body of the people of their property and bar them from any share in future accumulations. It in effect decrees pauperism to half and more than half the people of this country. Mr. Speaker, these views may be thought extreme, but they are the facts of economic science as I understand that science. They are, I believe, in accordance with the teachings of the ablest thinkers and writers on this subject, from Locke and Hume down. The effect of a shrinking value of money on prices and on production has been often told. In the language of Sir Robert Peel—

> There is no contract, public or private, no engagement, national or individual, which is unaffected by it; the enterprises of commerce, the profits of trade, the arrangements made in all the domestic relations of society, are all affected by it.

No, the sweeping change which has taken place in this country in the relation between property and commodities is a change mainly in the money itself. Of course, I do not ignore changes which come from natural causes under the laws of supply and demand, nor has anybody the right to complain of changes that take place through improved methods of production. Such changes do not involve sacrifices by any class. But there cannot be a general fall or a general rise in prices except it come by a change in the value of money, that is in the measure or valuator. I repeat, the old way to swindle was to increase the metal in the coins, the new way is to reduce the quantity of metal out of which money can be made. I submit to the consciences of the apologists of this method whether the one process is any more honest than the other.

Mr. CHITTENDEN. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. WARNER. I will.

Mr. CHITTENDEN. I would like to ask the gentleman what would become of his argument and what would become of the quotations he has made from the writings of distinguished men, if he admits that the legal-tender debt of the United States was a forced loan and that it was never money?

Mr. WARNER. I do not admit any such thing. It was money as absolutely as though made of coin; but that I am not now arguing.

Mr. CHITTENDEN. I have got my answer. [Laughter.]

Mr. WARNER. I pass now to the consideration of the question whether or not as a fact (which, if true, is a vital element in this problem) gold has increased in value in the last five years and is likely still further to increase. Do statistics show it? Is it an admitted fact by statisticians? The coinage of silver has been suspended in every state in Europe; in Germany and in the Scandinavian states silver has been demonetized and gold called for to take its place; in the United States silver coinage is under restriction.

The only conclusion that can be logically drawn from this state of facts is that, unless there is an increase in the production of gold to correspond to the increased demand, gold must continue to appreciate in value.

Now what is the annual production of gold? Somewhere from eighty to ninety millions of dollars for the whole world. That is from seven to eight cents per capita for the entire population of the globe. That is scarcely more, one would think, than is required in these times for teeth-filling. Is this eighty or ninety millions of gold enough to make up for the abrasion and loss of this metal, and the requirements of it for the arts, and its use for plate ornaments, &c., and, besides, to take the place of silver for money in Europe and this country.

Here is what Mr. Newmarch, a high authority on this subject, said in an address before the London Statistical Society in May, 1878:

There is now no question that for about twenty years prior to 1848 the annual supplies of gold had been insufficient to meet the wear and tear of the coins in use, the requirements of the arts, and the needs of enlarging industry, commerce, and population. There had been a slow but steady and progressive tendency toward lower prices, and therefore toward a discouragement of enterprise.

W. L. Fawcett, in his letter to the monetary commission, dated November 24, 1876, says:

The stock of gold in the commercial world in the shape of coin and bullion has, in my opinion, been greatly overestimated, because the consumption of gold in the arts has been greatly underestimated. I have reason to believe, as I propose to show in my forthcoming volume now in the printers' hands, that the annual consumption of gold in the arts, together with the losses by casualties and the additions to the stock of jewelry and ornaments, reaches $100,000,000 per annum, being more than the annual production at the present time; and that the world's stock of gold coin and bullion used as money is diminishing.

As a more definite statement of the gold production, I give the following estimate of the production of gold for periods of five years from 1852, as taken from Mr. Giffen's address before the London Statistical Society in January last, and reduced to dollars at the rate of $5 to the pound sterling:

GOLD PRODUCTION.

From 1852 to 1856, $750,000,000, or $150,000,000 a year.

From 1857 to 1861, $615,000,000, or $123,000,000 per annum.

From 1862 to 1866, $615,000,000, or $123,000,000 a year, or about the same as from 1857 to 1861.

From 1867 to 1871, $540,000,000, or $108,000,000 per annum.

From 1871 to 1875 the production was $380,000,000, or $95,000,000 a year.

Thus in the twenty years from 1852 to 1871 the annual production had fallen off over $40,000,000, and is now $60,000,000 less per annum than from 1852 to 1856.

Mr. Giffen estimates that Germany and the United States alone, in seven years, as the result of changes in their monetary systems, have absorbed $350,000,000.

The Financial Chronicle estimates that the production of both gold and silver in the United States last year fell $17,000,000 below the production of the year before, and it is estimated by Wells, Fargo & Co. that it will fall off $10,000,000 more this year. This would leave the production of gold for the world at from $80,000,000 to $90,000,000 and the production of silver at about $65,000,000. As to the consequences of this decrease in the production of the precious metals, the Banker's Magazine for April, 1879, says:

The falling off in the production of gold and silver in the United States in 1878, as compared with 1877, and the opinion of Wells, Fargo & Co., that an additional falling off, equal to $10,000,000, is probable in 1879, are attracting great attention. While the volume of metallic money is not the sole factor in determining the metallic prices of commodities, it is certainly true that such prices depend wholly upon the volume of metallic money, when other things are equal. Of course, the stock of the precious metals is a very different thing from the annual supply of them by new production, and is so large as compared with the annual supply that it is only slowly effected by changes in the yield of the mines. Still, in the present depressed condition of metallic prices throughout the world it is not wonderful that any circumstances tending still further to depress them is viewed with apprehension and anxiety.

Mr. Giffen, in the address already referred to, says:

There can be no doubt whatever that a serious influence on prices has been exerted of late years by the appreciation in the value of gold. While the gold supply has been falling off from year to year, the demand for that metal has increased, not only with the volume of the trade of the world, but because countries which had previously required little now base their entire coinage on gold.

And again:

A sovereign will be more and more valuable as time goes on.

Yes; the gold dollar is to become more and more valuable as time goes on. A fine prospect indeed for a nation so weighted with debt as we are, for a people so overwhelmed with debts and burdened with taxes as our people are, to know that the standard of payment is to be increased against them "as time goes on."

The London Economist of December 28 last says:

It is a fact which will scarcely be disputed that the purchasing power of gold is now considerably greater than it was in the three years 1872, 1873, 1874. This assertion may readily be corroborated by an appeal to the market prices of commodities then and now; and the result, which yields an average fall probably exceeding 20 per cent.

In the same number of the Economist is given a table of prices, taken from the Commercial History and Review, showing that on twenty-two leading articles the prices had fallen 38 per cent. below the prices of 1866, and over 22 per cent. below the prices of 1873, and to within 4 per cent. of the prices of 1845, or before the gold discoveries of California and Australia.

The Bankers' Magazine for April, 1879, in this connection says:

Nothing is more certain than that the general tendency of metallic prices has been downward since about 1865, since which date the aggregate production of the precious metals has been stationary, while the needs for them have been increasing.

The same journal adds:

The British journalists and financial writers seem now to be well agreed that there has been an important rise throughout the commercial world in the value of gold, indicated and measured by an important fall in the general range of the gold prices of commodities.

Comparing the prices of British exports for different years, Mr. Giffen finds that a fall of 27 per cent. took place from 1873 to 1878, and a fall in 1878 alone of 22 per cent. On this point the London Times, as quoted in the Bankers' Magazine for May, 1879, says:

On the export side every important article of home manufacture shows a serious reduction in both quantity and price. Cotton piece-goods have shrunk 11½ per cent. in quantity and 15½ in price, iron and steel 12½ per cent. in quantity and 22 per cent. in price, and woolen and worsted cloths 10½ per cent. in quantity and 12½ per cent. in price. So it is, more or less, throughout the list. Making all allowances for the unfavorable character of the season, everything indicates intensification of business stagnation and an increase in trade losses. In some articles and on both sides of the account these losses continue to be gigantic, and must cause further serious embarrassments if the tide does not soon begin to turn.

In order to call attention further, Mr. Speaker, to the double change in this country, first from a paper valuation to a bi-metallic valuation of gold and silver, and then from this level to mono-metalism, I wish to present some facts showing the relative value of silver metal to certain commodities six years ago and now.

SILVER BULLION COMPARED WITH COTTON.

In 1873, 685 pounds of cotton was equal to 100 ounces of silver. In 1879 100 ounces of silver will buy 1,087 pounds of cotton, nearly 60 per cent. more.

The cotton crop of the United States of 1878 was equivalent to about 200,000,000 ounces of silver. But the same crop at the prices of cotton in 1873 would be worth $366,000,000 or 314,000,000 ounces of silver by weight, being 114,000,000 ounces more than at present.

SILVER BULLION COMPARED WITH WHEAT.

In 1873, one bushel of wheat was equal to 1.20 ounce of silver.

In 1879, .80 of an ounce of silver will buy one bushel of wheat.

The value of the total wheat crop of the United States in 1878, $329,000,000, was equivalent to 336,400,000 ounces of silver. At the price of wheat in 1873 the same crop would be worth $590,000,000, which is equivalent to 506,000,000 ounces of silver, or 170,000,000 ounces more than its present equivalent.

SILVER BULLION COMPARED WITH CORN.

In 1873 one bushel of corn was equal to .44 of an ounce of silver. In 1879 .33 of an ounce of silver will buy one bushel of corn.

The value of the total corn crop of 1878 ($436,000,000) was equivalent to 445,000,000 ounces of silver. The same crop at the price of corn in 1873 would be worth $685,000,000, which is equivalent to 590,000,000 ounces of silver, or 145,000,000 ounces more than the silver equivalent of the crop now.

SILVER BULLION COMPARED WITH ANTHRACITE COAL.

In 1873, 23 tons of anthracite coal was equal to 100 ounces of silver. In 1879, 100 ounces of silver will buy 32.6 tons of anthracite coal, or nearly one-third more.

SILVER BULLION COMPARED WITH BAR-IRON.

In 1873, 1.45 tons of bar-iron were equal to 100 ounces of silver. In 1879, 100 ounces of silver will buy 2½ tons of bar-iron, or over 70 per cent. more.

SILVER BULLION COMPARED WITH IRON RAILS.

In 1873, 1.66 tons of iron rails were equal to 100 ounces of silver. In 1879, 100 ounces of silver will buy 3 tons of iron rails.

SILVER BULLION COMPARED WITH PIG-IRON.

In 1873, 2.77 tons of pig-iron were equal to 100 ounces of silver. In 1879, 100 ounces of silver will buy 5.48 tons of pig-iron, nearly 100 per cent. more.

The equivalent of the total product of pig-iron in 1873 (2,868,278 tons) in silver was 102,600,000 ounces. The value of the same product at the price in 1878 would be but 53,000,000 ounces. The value of the product of pig-iron in 1878 (2,314,585 tons) in silver is 41,000,000 ounces.

SILVER BULLION COMPARED WITH LABOR.

Taking common labor at $1.60 currency, or $1.40 gold per day, in 1873, we find one day's labor equaled 1.20 ounces of silver; in 1879, one day's labor equals .91 of an ounce of silver. Taking the gold price of common labor now at ninety cents, we have a difference of more than 31 per cent.

On the supposition, then, that from this time on the expenditures of the Government, interest on the public debt, all taxes, were to be paid in silver, it would require from 25 to 30 per cent. (and when all kinds of property are taken into account the difference would probably be greater still) more labor or more of the products of labor to procure the silver to pay taxes, interest, and debts with now than was required in 1873. This may be shown in another way.

Taking the value of the total products of the United States in 1873 at $6,000,000,000, the same products would be worth now less than $4,000,000,000, measured by our present money; or, giving equivalents in silver, the products of 1873 were equivalent to 5,152,000,000 ounces, while the same products now would purchase not more than 4,000,000,000 ounces. So that more commodities and more property of all kinds must go to buy the silver that would now be required to discharge obligations in silver at 412½ grains to the dollar than would have been required in 1873.

(In these calculations silver is taken at its bullion value on the 1st day of May for this year, and at its par value in gold in 1873.)

Or, stated briefly, an ounce of silver will buy in western markets three and a half to four bushels of corn, one and a half bushels of wheat, thirty to thirty-five pounds of pork, thirty-five to forty pounds of beef. In the South it will buy fourteen pounds of cotton or twenty pounds of tobacco. In the East it will buy twenty yards of calico or sixteen to eighteen yards of sheetings; and everywhere it will pay more rents and buy more real estate, and everywhere pay for more labor and more of the products of labor on the average by 30 per cent. than it would in 1873. This is due mainly to the change from the paper valuation to the bi-metallic level; and it would be greater but for the movement of silver toward paper, in consequence of its demonetization.

On the other hand, while the silver production of the United States for 1878 was about $39,000,000, this year it will probably not exceed $28,000,000 or $30,000,000.

In the early part of the century the proportion of silver to gold in production was 3 of silver to 1 of gold. Now the production of gold is one-third more than that of silver, while the use of silver in the arts alone takes—

For Europe	$10,000,000
The United States	4,000,000
For the rest of the world, at least	10,000,000
Total	24,000,000

The question, then, for us is, shall this country adhere to a standard that is certain to increase from year to year as silver demonetization goes on?

And, in this connection let me say for the benefit of gentlemen on the other side, that there is one way, and one way only, by which gold resumption can be maintained in the United States. Restrict all other currency, and if gold continues to appreciate, as it is shown it must under existing monetary laws in Europe and the United States, then you can maintain the gold standard only by reducing the volume of our other currency. You must stop issuing silver as now issued under the present law, or hoard it in the Treasury as fast as coined, as the Secretary of the Treasury is now doing, and you must also stop national banks from issuing more paper. You cannot increase the volume of paper and silver as now issued—which in so far as it operates on gold acts as so much additional paper would—and keep it all at the gold level and retain the gold also. When our currency becomes excessive as compared with the gold currency of other countries, if it is convertible into gold or any part of it convertible, then the gold will leave us. Hence if gold undergoes appreciation from any cause, to keep our currency anchored to it the volume must be reduced absolutely by contraction or by locking it up, as is now being done. The result of such a policy must be, of course, lower prices.

"But," say my friends, "we must wait until other countries return to bi-metalism."

On this point I offer the opinion of Mr. Hamilton, who said in his mint report:

> Nor can it require argument to prove that a nation ought not to suffer the value of the property of its citizens to fluctuate with the fluctuations of a foreign mint, and to change with the changes in the regulations of a foreign sovereign.

The following expressive language on this point is used by Mr. George M. Weston in his valuable book entitled "The Silver Question:"

> Reckless beyond all power of language would be that folly which would cut us loose from the moorings of our fathers, and turn over the money price of every man's possessions, and the real effect of every man's contracts in America, to the arbitrament of each successive prime minister of England.

The author of "Common Sense," written in 1775, used these words:

> A greater absurdity cannot be conceived of than three millions of people running to their sea-coast every time a ship arrived from London to know what portion of liberty they should enjoy.

Much more absurd, I imagine, he would think it to see the fifty millions of people now in the United States waiting on the pleasure of Bismarck or Disraeli to know whether there should be further reduction in the value of their property, whether the countries these ministers represent should be permitted to exact by a further change in the measure—a change inaugurated by themselves—more of our wealth in the discharge of our debts to them. No, it is not possible to conceive a greater absurdity than the proposition to make our currency subject to the legislation of foreign states, to put into the hands of foreign potentates or legislative bodies the value of every man's property in this country.

Then, is it true, Mr. Speaker, that we have reached here the limit of hard times? Are we at the end of this trouble, or are there yet before us years of struggle, of darkness, of depreciation of property, of unemployed labor, of falling prices, if we continue the present policy? Are we to begin a new course of prosperity, or, like Italy, in the language of Garabaldi, become more "wretched and despondent?"

In the April number of the Contemporary Review, an English writer, well known as the author of a number of able essays on economic subjects, says:

> England has entered upon the sixth year of commercial and manufacturing distress and decadence. There is as yet not a single ray of light shooting up through the dark mercantile horizon. A crisis without parallel in the experience of the present generation not only rests upon us but intensifies as time rolls on.
>
> * * * * * * *
>
> The practical cutting off of silver from the world's money has been at the root of much of our distress during late years, and is now one of the chief hinderances to the return of prosperity.
>
> * * * * * * *
>
> The world, acting under the legal injunctions of the leading monetary powers, has divorced from its monetary system that silver which from time immemorial has conjointly with gold formed its money. Widespread suffering has been the inevitable result of its folly.

Mr. COX. Who is the author?

Mr. WARNER. This is the language of Mr. Williamson. Another writer in the same journal, and who takes a similar view, is Mr. R. H. Patterson, author of the "Science of Finance" and the "Economy of Capital."

Now, is it possible that there can be a permanent improvement in the trade and business of the country, if the value of our money is to continue to increase, or, which is the same thing, prices continue to go down? Every manufacturer in the country knows that this is impossible. Physically commodities are transferred by means of railways and water-ways, by steam-power; but proprietarily wealth is transferred through the agency of money; and if the value of money is constantly being increased, then it is easy to see that all relations between property, between commodities, labor, and money must continue unsettled and industry suffer further paralysis. Money is the wheel of commerce.

We cannot do without it, nor make its procurement difficult without suffering loss. We might as well propose to take away railways, to dispense with steamships, to stop the locomotive, and then expect the exchange of commodities to go on all the same, as to take money away from the channels of trade and then expect business to prosper. Money is the vital air of commerce. It is to production, trade, and business what oxygen is to the air we breathe. It is at once the most subtle and the most potent of all human agencies; to lessen it is to stifle all industry; to change its value is to inflict endless and incurable wrongs upon society. The gold discoveries of California and Australia put new life into the commerce of the world. The industries of all civilized nations became, under this new influence, what they never were before. Production, commerce, wealth, all increased in a quarter of a century as never before. Now we have set out upon a policy which looks to the reversal of all this. In whose interest, I ask, is it done? In the interest of the whole people? No; only a small receiving class; they who hold money and funds that necessarily partake of the enhancement of money. The great mass of the capital of the country is depreciated and much of it is ruined. Capital applied to production; capital necessary for the employment of labor; that capital which must bear all the burdens of government and upon which our whole population depends for support, capital represented in cultivated fields, in workshops, factories, machinery, and labor itself, shares no part of money's gains; but on the other hand must, in the end, contribute that which others gain.

In this connection I wish to submit another thought, in which possibly I may differ with most gentlemen on this floor, though I trust not. We have all read and heard much about the wonderful achievement of the Secretary of the Treasury in placing the 4 per cent. loan; we have heard the boast of a subscription of $150,000,000 in a single day. But, Mr. Speaker, that to me is the saddest commentary that could possibly be made upon the condition of our country. What does it prove? It proves one thing, and one thing only. It proves that there is little or no profit in all this country on capital used productively; that our industries no more than sustain our population; that the American people, with their skilled hands and educated brain, with all their industrial equipment, are making no profits, are saving nothing, are making little or no additions to their wealth. In 1869, according to Mr. David A. Wells, the net earnings of the United States, that is, the profits on its industrial capital, were about $550,000,000, while the total annual increase of wealth was $920,000,000, and had been at about that rate from the close of the war, and continued up to 1873.

Now, in every country interest in the run of years is determined by one thing, and that is profits on capital productively employed. There is no other fund out of which interest can anywhere long be paid. If you go beyond this, you must draw from past accumulations; you then take what was produced last year to pay interest on what you owe this year. The rate of interest, I say, is governed by profit on capital; and the fact that $150,000,000 were offered in a single day for investment in Government securities, and that all over the country crowds jostle one another to get 4 per cent. certificates, is proof that in this great country with its boundless resources there is no profit, at least not 4 per cent. profit, on capital used in production.

The net earnings on capital given by Mr. Wells for 1869 of $550,000,000 would be 8 per cent. interest on nearly seven thousand millions of productive capital. In other words, $7,000,000,000 of capital, if that sum was actually so employed, yielded a profit of $550,000,000. This sum was an actual addition to national wealth, and constituted the fund out of which interest was paid.

There was no other fund. Suppose two thousand millions out of the seven thousand millions was borrowed capital, then the country earned 8 per cent. on it, and if the borrower obtained it for less he made the difference. But now, when capital abounds that may be had at 4 per cent., why it is proof that profits do not warrant a higher rate. It is proof that there are no net earnings of $500,000,000 or $600,000,000, as in 1869 and 1870, for interest. You could not have borrowed, this Government could not have borrowed, no one and no government could have borrowed in 1869 or 1870 in our market capital at 4 per cent. interest. It could not have been borrowed at that rate if every dollar borrowed had been backed up with a dollar in gold with the stipulation that it should be put under lock and key to be held until the principal was paid. Why? Because the owner could easily, safely, and surely have derived a greater profit. The earnings of the country permitted it. The credit of the Government is not a whit better now than in 1870. That is not what has controlled the interest it has to pay. I do not see why it pays as much even as 4 per cent., and doubtless it could borrow on short time for less, probably 2 per cent.; for 2 per cent. I believe to be more than capital productively employed in this country now makes. This great feat of our Secretary of which we hear so much boasting may be summed up in this way:

First, legislate so as to increase the value of money and depress everything else, making it unprofitable to use money or capital productively, and then give 4 per cent. for it and exempt it from taxation. Shades of Hamilton and Gallatin, is this statesmanship to boast of? Only the one who holds money or bonds is making money under this new order of things. If a million dollars had been buried in the earth five years ago and now dug up, what would the owner find? He may have drawn no interest, yet when compared with other property will it not exchange for twice as much? Or if a million of dollars in Government bonds had been buried in some vault five years ago and were now taken out, not only would there be the interest upon them, but it would be found that the principal sum of the bonds had been doubled in value as compared with real estate or other property.

This is the operation, sir, of these wicked, if not wickedly devised, measures. And, Mr. Speaker, if I could have my way, the light of another day should not fade from the sky until every vestige of this vicious monetary law was stricken from the statute-book. [Long-continued applause.]

Mr. CLAFLIN rose.

Mr. COX. I hope, Mr. Speaker, by unanimous consent the time of the gentleman from Ohio will be extended.

Mr. KELLEY. Yes, I hope that will be done.

Mr. BELFORD. I wish to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. KELLEY. Let the time of the gentleman from Ohio be extended and then the gentleman from Colorado can ask his question.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the extension of the time of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection and the time was extended.

Mr. BELFORD. I see there is some misapprehension on the other side of the House as to the meaning of the ninth section of the bill.

Mr. WARNER. I should like to explain it.

Mr. BELFORD. I am going to vote for the bill and I hope the gentleman will explain it. Section 9 provides that from and after the passage of this act only coins of the smaller denominations shall be fabricated on Government account.

Mr. WARNER. I will explain that. The word "only" of course modifies "dollars," not fabricate. That is as it should be. The money that the Government coins on its own account should be only the subsidiary silver pieces. The Government would have no reason for coining full legal-tender dollars on its own account after the passage of this bill.

Mr. BELFORD. I should like to have the section fully explained.

Mr. WARNER. I will explain it fully to the gentleman from Colorado and to the House. This bill does not change the coinage of subsidiary or fractional coins at all. It leaves them right where they are now.

The fractional coins, as all know, are not of full weight as compared with the dollar piece. Hence, to open the mints to the public and permit everybody to have silver coined into fractional pieces would result in bringing the silver standard at once down to 385 grains instead of 412½. The reason for making fractional coins under weight is to prevent their exportation. In the first place, it costs more to coin dimes and quarters than larger pieces, but if these pieces are of full weight it is as profitable to export dimes as it is bullion in bars. Now, it is very desirable to prevent that part of the currency which circulates among the people, and especially in retail trade, from being drawn upon for export. Hence these coins have been reduced in weight. This is a question that has been much discussed, and was made the subject of a convention called at Paris by Napoleon III, which led to the adoption of this plan in France and afterward by the Latin union.

The committee thought it best to leave the law relating to subsidiary coins as it is. I certainly think it best; and of course if the Government opens the mints to the public for the unlimited coinage of silver dollars, then it should not continue to buy bullion on its own account to convert into coins. There would be no occasion for doing so. With the mints opened to the public the control over the whole question of metallic money is in their hands. The Government never coined a dollar either of gold or silver of full legal tender on its own account until the act of February, 1878, was passed. The Government coined simply what gold and silver was brought to it and no more. The ninth section of this bill simply returns to this practice—to the practice of the Government from its foundation to 1873, when this departure was made—and puts gold and silver on the same basis. And in this connection I would like to say a few words with reference to the section of the bill which opens the mints to unlimited coinage. I have been met on every side with this objection: why you are giving a profit to the bullion dealer. Not at all. There is no profit to any bullion dealer under this bill not shared in by everybody. An ounce of silver, as Locke said, is equal to any other ounce. An ounce of silver in the form of coin, when it costs nothing to give it the form of coin will be worth no more than in the form of bullion. One hundred ounces of silver bullion will make one hundred and sixteen dollar pieces. Now, if it costs nothing to change a bar of one hundred ounces into the form of coins, and there is no restriction on the amount that may be coined, then there is no change of value. Any one may take a hundred ounces or any other quantity of silver to the mints of the United States and obtain for it one hundred and sixteen dollars and a fraction. And if all can do that no one will give more of anything for one hundred ounces of silver in the shape of coins than as bullion. Hence no profit is given to any bullion dealer. If a hundred bushels of wheat are worth a hundred ounces of silver bullion it will still be worth the same weight of silver in the form of coins and no more.

There is therefore no benefit which is not shared in by every one. To the extent that coining silver and making it money increases the use of silver to that extent it increases its value, and tends to raise silver up and bring the other metal (gold) down. Thus is restored a principle of compensation which lies at the base of the bi-metallic system, and operating always to maintain the equivalency of the two metals. In other words, Mr. Speaker, in the contemplation of this bill silver is again made a money metal—the metal is monetized. Take a hundred ounces of gold, put it into any shape, it is still equal in value to eighteen hundred and sixty gold dollar pieces, because at the mints everywhere the owner has the right to have it coined, free of cost, into eighteen hundred and sixty pieces of a dollar each. For the same reason, if you take eighteen hundred and sixty one-dollar gold coins and cut them up or melt them into any shape, if only all the gold is saved, it is still worth as much as the same weight in coins, because it may be given the form of coins without restriction and free of cost. The gold miner digs money. Restore silver to its old place as a money metal and the same will be true of silver. The metal itself becomes potentially money. This is as it should be. Silver must be put back upon this ground or we must give up metallic money. The metal itself must be given the power to become money. Then the stamp of the Government is merely a certification by the Government of weight and fineness. Locke says:

> That money differs from uncoined silver only in this, that the quantity of silver in each piece of money is ascertained by the stamp it bears, which is set there to be a public voucher of its weight and fineness.

Now, sir, the proposition that has been made to simply increase the coinage of silver instead of opening the mints to the public for unlimited coinage is no cure. Until 1872 or 1873 we never heard of such a thing in this country as the Government limiting the quantity of gold or silver money, or buying silver to make money of, taking to-day a little and to-morrow a little more. That was a new departure. The world never heard of that way of providing money until 1872-'73.

Mr. HASKELL. Will the gentleman allow me to make a suggestion?

Mr. WARNER. Certainly.

Mr. HASKELL. If the gentleman wants a reason why the Government never bought silver to coin until the time he speaks of, I will tell him. Prior to the war for twenty-five years the bullion necessary to make a silver dollar of the United States was worth one hundred and three cents in gold; and if the Government had bought it to put into coin it would have paid one hundred and three cents gold for what would be worth one hundred cents as coin. That was a very good reason why the Government did not buy silver to make money of.

Mr. WARNER. Do you say that was the reason?

Mr. HASKELL. That is a sufficient reason to my mind.

Mr. WARNER. Was it lawful for the Government to buy silver and coin money out of it on Government account? Was it ever lawful to do that until 1873?

Mr. HASKELL. I have not claimed that it was. I simply wanted to show the reason why it was not wise then for the Government to do this.

Mr. WARNER. I wish to advert to another point. As the gentleman from Kansas the other day spoke of the trade-dollar, I desire to say a word or two on that subject. The trade-dollar has been happily designated, I think, the "trick" dollar, for it manifestly was a trick dollar.

Mr. KELLEY. Before my friend proceeds to speak of the trade-dollar will he permit me to make a suggestion to the gentleman from Kansas? I wish to ask him whether the Government bought gold for coining when a gold dollar was worth three cents less than a silver one?

Mr. WARNER. A very pertinent question.

Mr. KELLEY. Or did it buy silver prior to 1834 when the silver dollar was of less value than the gold one?

Mr. HASKELL. I am not making any fight on the repeal of the law for the purchase of bullion by the Government. I care nothing about that. But now you come with a proposition that allows every holder of a greenback in the United States to take it to the Treasury and get gold for it, and then to go out and buy what will produce the silver dollar at eighty cents in the dollar.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio is entitled to the floor.

Mr. KELLEY. I understood the gentleman from Ohio to yield to me for a moment on this point. Why, sir, until after 1834 you never saw, nor did any other gentleman now here, American gold coin in circulation. Subsequently thereto you did not see standard silver money in circulation. Why? Because before the change in the ratio between the metals was made the gold dollar was worth 3 per cent. more than the silver one, and after the change had been made, it having been made on a false and arbitrary basis, that of 16 to 1, the silver dollar was withdrawn. Had the prevalent ratio of 15½ to 1 been adopted the metals would have circulated concurrently and the silver one remained at home with gold ones.

Mr. WARNER. The bill demonetizing silver or stopping the coinage of silver, as it finally passed the Senate, dropped out somewhere in the conference committees the old dollar and left in the trade-dollar. Now the object of adopting the trade or "trick" dollar, which I have said is a fit description of it, is thus stated by the Director of the Mint. I regret to refer now to acts of the late Director of the Mint, but the acts were public and concerned the public. Here is the language he used in his report in 1872:

> The silver dollar being a useless coin, both as respects circulation and commerce, should be abolished, and we should inquire whether some new medium may not be substituted, approximating in general character and value, which will meet certain commercial requirements, becoming daily more pressing, without giving rise to any of those perplexing questions or complications resulting from the varying values of the precious metals under a double standard, and at the same time afford some relief to our mining industries from the serious decline and further apparent depreciation in the value of silver.

That same year, during the two or three months before the coinage of the silver dollar was suspended, there were 997,000 of the old dollars minted; and the year before that there were over a million coined for the public. But I wish to call attention to the language and the reasons offered by the Director of the Mint for substituting the trade-dollar. He says, in the report referred to, that there was no longer any use in trade for the old standard dollar, a dollar longer known and more widely used than any other coin in the world. Its prototype was the first coin to go around the world—the old Spanish dollar, which had been from the time of Charles V a commercial unit of value on the other side of the Atlantic, and which was adopted by Hamilton as our unit. Nor has the weight of pure metal in this unit ever been changed. There was no longer any use for that dollar in commerce, we were told; but there was for a new piece—a piece unlike any other coin in the world, being a little more valuable than the Mexican dollar, and a little more valuable, too, than the Japanese yen!

The theory upon which this new coin was put out is that if you divide one hundred ounces of silver into one hundred and fourteen pieces instead of one hundred and sixteen pieces you can get more per ounce for the silver. That is, the miner would get more per ounce for the silver which he digs if it were divided into pieces of 420 grains than if it were divided into pieces of 412½ grains. On that principle a farmer who should send his wheat to market in sacks of two and one-half bushels each instead of two bushels ought to get more per bushel for his wheat; or if the planter should increase the bale of cotton to four hundred and sixty pounds instead of four hundred and fifty pounds he would get more per pound for his cotton. Now, I cannot believe that the Director of the Mint thought that. The Secretary of the Treasury says that there is no longer any advantage in making coins weigh 420 grains instead of 412½ grains, and advises that the coinage of these pieces be stopped. What, then, was the necessity or the excuse for the trade-dollar? This and this only: there was a movement on foot to get rid of the double standard, as it was called, but we could not get along in our trade with the world very well without a silver coin of some kind. It was therefore proposed to make such a coin, but to make it unlike any other coin in the world, and to increase the weight, so that the ratio to gold would be neither 15½ nor 16. But pass this bill, and all the trade-dollars in circulation in this country will go to the mints for recoinage, as they should.

I say from the earliest accounts of the use of silver as money down to these recent acts of our own and other countries, the only limitation to either silver or gold money was the natural limitation of the material of which it was made; its control was beyond the reach of legislatures and congresses. Its value depended not upon any one man or any one body of legislators; it was beyond their reach. It rested upon the metal itself and was automatic in its regulation. And when you remove metallic money from that basis, and instead of automatic regulation submit it to the will of legislators or of a Secretary of the Treasury to control, you reduce it at once to the grade of inconvertible paper money. The character of the silver dollar in this country now is that of inconvertible paper. Silver dollars now are but silver greenbacks, as greenbacks were before they were redeemable in gold, if they are so redeemed. We have taken a costly metal to make money of and then regulated its value upon the same principle exactly and in the same way that inconvertible paper money is regulated. The Secretary of the Treasury has it in his power to make our money two millions per month more or two millions per month less; a power that no other finance minister in the world possesses or would be allowed to possess in any other country in the world; a power, I insist, which should not be left to the discretion of any man.

It is placing in his hands to an unsafe degree a control over the value of every man's property. It is placing it in his power to change the terms of every contract in the land by varying the value of money as it would not vary if left to automatic regulation through the metal itself. Unless, therefore, we restore silver to its old status of unlimited coinage, leaving the value of coins to rest upon the metal to be automatically regulated, then we should get rid of it altogether and substitute paper in its place.

Cernuschi, in his pamphlet entitled "Monetary Diplomacy in 1878," says:

> Yes; and here is the capital fact, if French interests are considered, the five-franc silver pieces have the metallic ring, but they are more of the nature of paper money than of sound, just, and real money.

Upon what principle can superiority be claimed for metallic money over inconvertible paper money, except that of automatic regulation? A greater value is now given to silver coin than warranted by the metal, by limiting the quantity of the coins. But on the same principle equal value could be given to coins of half the weight or made of any other metal or to paper. Can you not limit the quantity of paper, or ivory, or any other kind of money quite as well as you can silver money? Mr. Jevons even admits that an inconvertible paper can be maintained at the level of gold by simply limiting its quantity. We are not wise if we continue to make dollars of so costly a material as silver and then regulate their value by putting a limit on the number of pieces as we do with inconvertible paper. If the object be to make a profit, then it will be wiser to take paper or something cheap, for, as I have said, the quantity of one kind can be limited as well as another. Instead of saving 85 per cent., therefore, in all conscience let us save 99½ per cent. If a profit is what we are after, let the Government go into the manufacturing business in some other way; in some way that will not be playing fast and loose with values in the manner we have been doing.

No, gentlemen, the question is between unlimited coinage, with automatic regulation through the natural limitation of the metals themselves, or no metallic money. There is no middle ground. There is no science, no common sense in any other theory of metallic money. The abridgment of hard money is a new thing in the world. It was never heard of in this country, I repeat, until 1873.

Let us go back to the sound doctrine of the founders of the Government; will not our New York friends go back to the teachings of Alexander Hamilton and Silas Wright; will not our Pennsylvania friends learn from Albert Gallatin—the only peer and rival of Hamilton in his time—of Robert Morris and Coody Raguet?

Was there ever a democrat from the beginning of the Government till 1873 who proposed to limit the quantity of metallic money? No, it never was heard of. This doctrine of the abridgment of metallic money is a dangerous innovation, menacing to the rights of property and changing the distribution not only of present, but of all future wealth. It was inaugurated in the interest of a bondholding class and against the interests of the great producing classes of our people. Every consideration of duty and right demands that we shall stand by the standard of both metals. The tenure of property with thousands of people depends upon it. Give back to the people their just rights. Let them gather up again the threads of prosperity they have lost. The greatest wealth of a civilized people, after all, lies in their power to create, in their enterprise, their skill, in the range and extent of their industries. Sweep clean the earth of all past accumulations, but save the educated brain, the acquired skill, and the equipment these have created, and permit unrestrained activity, and in a generation all would be re-created.

But of all the instrumentalities for the creation and distribution of wealth, the "great instrument of exchange"—money—is at once the most delicate and important. It is the spring that moves and regulates all the machinery of production and trade. Stability, unchangeability, to the fullest extent possible in money is the thing of all others most to be desired; and only by standing to both the metals, with unlimited coinage for both, can that be secured to a metal currency. [Applause.]

Mr. CLAFLIN obtained the floor.

Mr. STEPHENS. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CLAFLIN] yield for a motion to adjourn?

Mr. CLAFLIN. At the suggestion of gentlemen on both sides who desire to hear this question discussed at an earlier period of the day, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at three o'clock p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions, &c., were presented at the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as stated:

By Mr. ACKLEN: Papers relating to the war claim of Lizzie Rogers, of Saint Mary's Parish, Louisiana—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. CARLISLE: The petition of Eliza A. Scott, widow of Captain Joseph Scott, deceased, for a pension—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, the petition of Calvin Bronson, of Toledo, Ohio, for the refunding of internal-revenue taxes alleged to have been illegally collected from him—to the Committee of Ways and Means.

By Mr. CLARK, of Missouri: The memorial of the Legislature of Missouri, for the repeal of certain statutes and the modification of existing laws relating to the "removal of causes" from the State courts to the circuit courts of the United States—to the Committee on the Revision of the Laws.

By Mr. GOODE: Papers relating to the war claim of Anna Perry—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. HENRY: The petition of citizens of Queen Anne, Talbot, and Caroline Counties, Maryland, for an appropriation for the improvement of Tuckahoe Creek—to the Committee on Commerce.

Also, the petition of citizens of Caroline County, Maryland, for an appropriation for the improvement of the Great Choptank River near Greensborough—to the same committee.

By Mr. MANNING: The petition of Frank L. Donnelly, for additional compensation for services as a page of the House of Representatives—to the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service.

By Mr. MURCH: The petition of 178 workingmen, of Quincy, Massachusetts, for the enforcement and observance of the eight-hour law—to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Also, the petition of 90 workingmen of Salem, Massachusetts, of similar import—to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 38 workingmen of New York and New Jersey, of similar import—to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 43 workingmen of Clark's Island, Maine, of similar import—to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 81 workingmen of Westerby, Rhode Island, of similar import—to the same committee.

Also, a petition of the inhabitants of Saco, Maine, for the enactment of a law authorizing a new issue of full legal-tender paper money, and instructing the Secretary of the Treasury to buy and cancel United States bonds with the same—to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Also, the petition of the Greenback Club, of Newark, New Jersey, for the enactment of a law expanding the currency—to the same committee.

By Mr. O'NEILL: Papers relating to the pension claim of Annie Gibson Yates—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, the petition of Margaret Dickson, for a pension—to the same committee.

Also, the petition and affidavit of Thomas Toomey, formerly a private of Company A, Sixty-Ninth Regiment Tennessee Volunteers, for a removal of the record of desertion—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, papers relating to the claim for bounty of Robert M. Barr, father of William B. Barr, deceased, late a private of Company E, Seventy-Third Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers—to the same committee.

By Mr. RANDALL: The petition of J. C. Pemberton, of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, (accompanied by draught of bill,) for the removal of his political disabilities—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. RYAN, of Kansas: The petition of citizens of Kansas, for a mail-route from Hill Grove to Dodge City, in that State—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. SPRINGER: The petition of T. E. Chambliss, for expenses of contesting a seat in Congress from the fourth congressional district of Virginia—to the Committee of Elections.

By Mr. WRIGHT: The petition of Adelaide Koons and 81 other women of the twelfth congressional district of Pennsylvania, of the Woman's National Christian Temperance Union, against any change in the revenue laws that will promote the interests of dealers in spirituous liquors—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

IN SENATE.

MONDAY, May 5, 1879.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. J. BULLOCK, D. D.

THE JOURNAL.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday last was read.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I should like to hear that part of the Journal read again, which refers to the resolution about the Spofford case, as to the action on the resolution, not the resolution and the amendment, but what the order of the Senate was; I did not hear it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That portion of the Journal will be again read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

The Senate proceeded to consider the resolution reported yesterday by Mr. SAULSBURY, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, instructing said committee to inquire into the matter alleged in the petition of Henry M. Spofford, relating to the right of Hon. WILLIAM PITT KELLOGG to a seat in the Senate; and,

On motion by Mr. HOAR, to amend the resolution by striking out all of said resolution——

Mr. EDMUNDS. Pass that and come down to what the Senate finally ordered.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Pending debate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore announced that the morning hour had expired, and called up the unfinished business of the Senate at its adjournment yesterday, viz: The bill (S. No. 108) to prevent the introduction of contagious and infectious diseases into the United States; and the Senate resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the said bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is right, Mr. President; I thought I heard it read that the resolution was made a special order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Journal is approved. Petitions and memorials are now in order.

Mr. HOUSTON. I was endeavoring to get the attention of the Chair in relation to the amendment of the Journal.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No amendment has been moved to the Journal.

Mr. HOUSTON. I should like, then, to hear that part of it read again, if the Chair will gratify me.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The portion of the Journal just read will be again reported.

The Chief Clerk again read the extract from the Journal.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. President, of the facts as they occurred a very important one is not stated in the Journal—that the report of the Committee on Privileges and Elections was postponed by unanimous consent. The way the Journal reads now it would indicate that the Chair ruled that the unfinished business came up because it was in order in advance of the privileged question. Now, the truth is, and I think it ought to appear upon the Journal, that upon the motion of the chairman of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, [Mr. SAULSBURY,] the report from that committee upon that subject was by unanimous consent postponed till Tuesday.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would state to the Senator from Alabama that the Journal is made up in strict pursuance of the facts as the Chair understands them. Of course, if a motion is made to correct the Journal it must be submitted to the Senate. The Chair did not decide that the resolution reported from the Committee on Privileges and Elections took precedence of the business that would come up at the expiration of the morning hour. That was a question upon which the Chair made no ruling at all one way or the other; but after considerable discussion as to whether it was a question of privilege that took precedence, the Senator from Delaware, the chairman of the committee, suggested that he did not wish the resolution pressed until next Tuesday and nothing further was said about it, and the Chair laid before the Senate the unfinished business. The Chair would state to the Senator from Alabama that the resolution is the first business in order after the routine morning business, and by unanimous consent can be laid over until to-morrow, in accordance with the suggestion made by the Senator from Delaware on Friday.

Mr HOUSTON. No sir I do not ask that th resolution be taken up to-day; I do not want to violate the arrangement made by the chairman of the committee with the unanimous consent of the Senate. But the reading of the Journal as it now stands would seem to indicate that that particular course was taken with the business because of the superiority over the privileged question of the unfinished business at the expiration of the morning hour. I make no motion to amend the Journal, but I suggest to the Chair whether it is not the province of the Journal to record the motion of the chairman of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, the Senator from Delaware, to postpone the resolution until Tuesday, and to state that by unanimous consent it was so postponed?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is not aware that any such motion was made. The Chair, as he has said, made no ruling upon the subject. If the Chair had been compelled to rule, he would have felt constrained to rule in accordance with the previous decision of the Vice-President, which he would not assume to overrule unless the Senate so ordered, that precedence was given to the yellow fever bill.

Mr. HOUSTON. The report of the Committee on Privileges and Elections was postponed until Tuesday, to-morrow. There is no doubt about that. Having been postponed until to-morrow, it now stands for to-morrow to be taken up then. The Journal ought to show that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is not aware of any such vote.

Mr. HOUSTON. There was no particular vote, but it was done by unanimous consent.

Mr. CONKLING. Not at all.

Mr. HOUSTON. The chairman of the committee rose and said he was willing the resolution should be postponed until that time, and it was so postponed. There was no vote upon the question, but it was done by unanimous consent.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I think there is no practical difference in regard to the matter. There was no vote; there was simply a general understanding. I do not think as my friend from Alabama does, that it is necessary the action of the Senate should go on the Journal at all; it was simply a sort of acquiescence in the suggestion made by the Chair, that if the resolution was not pressed the unfinished business would be taken up; and there was also an acquiescence in the response of the chairman of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, that he had no objection to the resolution going over until Tuesday. There was a general understanding that the matter should go over until Tuesday; that was all; no vote was taken.

Mr. KERNAN. If the Senator will allow me, I think he will remember that the chairman of the Committee on Privileges and Elections said he had to be away until this evening, and, therefore, there was, as I supposed, unanimous consent, without any motion, that the resolution should not be taken up until to-morrow.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. Is there any wish to bring it up this morning?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Not as the Chair understands, and there is nothing before the Senate unless a motion be made to amend the Journal. No such motion has been made.

Mr. HOAR. I ask the Senator from Georgia if he will yield to me a moment?

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. Certainly.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to make a statement in connection with this matter. I have seen very extensively the statement made in some of the northern newspapers that the majority of the Committee on Privileges and Elections had a meeting in the absence of the republican members and passed upon this question and ordered the resolution to be reported to the Senate. I think it is proper I should state that, so far from that being true, the chairman of the committee, the honorable Senator from Delaware, delayed a meeting on this subject for ten days in consequence of an absence of mine which was rendered necessary by some professional engagements, and that after my return the Senator called on me and consulted me as to the time when it would be convenient to the minority to have a meeting of the committee on this subject; and when the committee acted on it all the members of the committee were present. I think it is just to the honorable chairman to make that statement.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I do not propose to amend the Journal. I will state that I had not seen the statement to which the Senator from Massachusetts refers, but the statement he himself makes is correct, and I am glad that he has made it. The entire committee was present when this matter was passed upon and the resolution was ordered to be reported.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This discussion proceeds by unanimous consent.

Mr. CONKLING. I rise to present a memorial.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Petitions and memorials are in order.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. CONKLING. I present a memorial of the Chamber of Commerce of the State of New York calling attention to the fact that since 1875 a naval training school for boys has been maintained on the frigate Minnesota at the port of New York; that there is danger of the training-school system languishing or perishing for lack of legislation; that a bill adequate to the end indicated passed the last House of Representatives, came to the Senate and failed in the Senate; that the bill is here now; and the Chamber of Commerce indicates a strong judgment that that bill should receive early action. I move the reference of the memorial to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CONKLING. I present also a memorial of the Chamber of Commerce of the State of New York, calling attention to an obstruction, being a bank of sand, located midway between Governor's Island and Brooklyn, in the harbor of New York, and further attention to the fact that considerable disasters have occurred in consequence of this obstruction, and directing the attention of Congress to the necessity of its removal. I move that the memorial be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. FERRY presented the memorial of Mrs. O. R. Hatch and other members of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, remonstrating against the repeal of the amended internal-revenue act relating to spirituous liquors, approved March 1, 1879; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. INGALLS presented the memorial of W. H. Vandewalker and a large number of other citizens of the county of Cowley, Kansas, remonstrating against the passage of any act extending the patent of John C. Birdsell for a combined clover hulling and threshing machine; which was referred to the Committee on Patents.

Mr. KERNAN presented the memorial of George A. Ketchum and between three and four hundred other citizens of New York, remonstrating against the passage of any act extending the patent of John C. Birdsell for a combined clover hulling and threshing machine; which was referred to the Committee on Patents.

He also presented the petition of Martin J. Deponai, late private Company E, Eightieth Regiment New York Volunteers, praying for the passage of a law granting him an increase of pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. McDONALD. The Committee on the Judiciary have directed me to report the bill (S. No. 141) for the removal of the political disabilities of John S. Saunders, of Baltimore, Maryland, and recommend that it pass.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. McDONALD. If there is no objection, as it is simply a bill to remove disabilities, I ask that it be put on its passage.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let it stay on the Calendar, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. VOORHEES asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 548) to amend certain sections of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to coinage and coin and bullion certificates, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia, asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 549) for the relief of Samuel I. Gustin; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. SAUNDERS asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 550) to extend the northern boundary of the State of Nebraska; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Territories.

Mr. COCKRELL asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 551) granting a pension to James O'Connor; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. INGALLS (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 552) granting a pension to Marshall D. Ellis; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. TELLER asked, and by unanimous consented obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 553) for the relief of Elisha Bass; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. WHYTE asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. No. 25) authorizing the Public Printer to bind in cloth two volumes of Sailing Directions for the United States Hydrographic Office; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Printing.

MILITARY INTERFERENCE AT ELECTIONS.

Mr. EATON asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 554) to prohibit military interference at elections; which was read the first time by its title.

Mr. EATON. Let the bill be read at length.

The bill was read the second time at length, as follows:

Whereas the presence of troops at the polls is contrary to the spirit of our institutions and the traditions of our people, and tends to destroy the freedom of elections: Therefore,

Be it enacted, &c., That it shall not be lawful to bring to or employ at any place where a general or special election is being held in a State, any part of the Army or Navy of the United States, unless such force be necessary to repel the armed enemies of the United States, or to enforce section 4, article 4, of the Constitution of the United States, and the laws made in pursuance thereof, upon the application of the Legislature or the executive of the State where such force is to be used; and so much of all laws as is inconsistent herewith is hereby repealed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. INGALLS in the chair.) To what committee does the Senator desire the bill to be referred?

Mr. EATON. The measure is so manifestly just that I was in hopes there would be no objection to the bill being immediately considered, although I agree that that is not the ordinary course pursued. I ask, if there be no objection, that we now take the bill up.

Mr. CONKLING. "Manifestly" what, may I ask the Senator to repeat?

Mr. EATON. "Manifestly just."

Mr. CONKLING. I never supposed that could be the word the Senator employed, and, therefore, I wished him to repeat what he said.

Mr. EATON. If the bill must go to a committee, I move that it go to the Committee on the Judiciary. I would rather have it considered now. ["No!"]

The bill was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

PREVENTION OF EPIDEMIC DISEASES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there are no "concurrent and other resolutions," the next business in order on the Calendar is the resolution reported by Mr. SAULSBURY from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, authorizing an investigation into the matters alleged in the petition of H. M. Spofford, &c.; which the Chair understands by unanimous consent is to go over until to-morrow. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The morning hour will be considered as having expired, and the Senate resumes the consideration of its unfinished business.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 108) to prevent the introduction of contagious or infectious diseases into the United States, the pending question being on the motion of the Senator from Maine, [Mr. HAMLIN,] to recommit the bill to the select committee to investigate and report the best means of preventing the introduction and spread of epidemic diseases, with instructions to report a code of regulations.

Mr. PLUMB. Mr. President, before the question is taken on the motion of the Senator from Maine, and without anticipating what the fate of the bill may be, I desire to say something on the proposition that I submitted on Friday in the form of an amendment for the purpose of having it printed. This matter bearing on an essential part of this bill in my view, I should like to present a few considerations before the motion to recommit is submitted.

Sections 9 and 10 of the bill are designed to cover a subject which is of very great interest to the people of the Western States and I think to the people of the entire country, to wit, what may be called practically a quarantine concerning diseases of cattle, or rather, diseases of all animals. If that subject had not made its appearance in the bill in this shape, I should not have suggested an amendment to give the National Board of Health jurisdiction of that subject, believing as I do that it would be much better to have it made the subject of a separate bill or to give some other department jurisdiction of the question, but it has been inserted here, and as I understand by request of the Committee on Agriculture. The objection that I make, however, is not so much to the fact that the bill embraces any provision upon this subject, as that the provision which it does embrace is absolutely and wholly without any effect; that is to say, it would have no effect upon what I consider to be the real merits of the matter which it is supposed to touch.

The country has been aroused during the past year considerably by investigations which have disclosed the fact that pleuro-pneumonia has existed among the domestic cattle of this country and to a degree which has created very grave and I think well-founded alarm among all producers of cattle and all persons interested in that very large, extensive, and profitable branch of business or interest. The cattle of this country are estimated to be of the value of about $28,000,000; and yet among all the legislation which has been passed and which has been proposed there has been nothing practically which has had the effect to keep out these much-dreaded diseases.

It is a fact well attested in the experience not merely of scientific persons but in the observation of all persons connected with the cattle business, veterinary surgeons and others, that the two diseases which have occasioned very great loss heretofore and which are a subject of a great deal of consideration now all over the country are the result of importation practically; that is to say, the diseases do not originate in this country but come with cattle brought from abroad. The Revised Statutes prohibit the introduction of foreign cattle, but permit the President to afford relief against that prohibition. The only barrier to-day against the introduction of diseased cattle is a consular certificate given by the consul of the United States at the point where the cattle are embarked. That covers, as it necessarily can only cover practically, the condition of the cattle at the time of shipment. Admitting that the consul might be a proper person to give such a certificate, that he might be qualified to determine the question of the existence of disease at that time, it still fails wholly to meet the point, because the period of incubation of a disease of this kind is usually about sixty days, so that the disease may not have developed itself for that period of time after the cattle had left the foreign port and long after they had been deposited on our shores. There is, therefore, absolutely no protection against the introduction of cattle diseases. While the Legislatures of various States and Congress have been seemingly quite diligent in devising measures to stamp out the cattle disease there has been absolutely nothing done to prevent its introduction.

The amendment which I offered on Friday was designed to cover this point. As I said before, I should not have thought of introducing it in this connection if I had not found in the bill a cognate provision, so to speak. Assuming that the National Board of Health is to be clothed with the large powers mentioned in the preceding sections of the bill in regard to matters that concern the public health, and are to have any power whatever in regard to the spread of disease among domestic animals, they ought to have the power conferred by the amendment which I have offered. I do not say that this is the best that can be done, but I do think it would be a step at least in the right direction. When I mentioned the matter to the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] who has the bill in charge, and he told me that the two sections of the bill to which I referred came from the Committee on Agriculture of this body, I was very much surprised that they had so far overlooked the origin of these diseases, and therefore the source of the greatest trouble and danger. It would be of no avail whatever to expend money to stamp out the diseases existing now among the cattle in the country if at the same time every port of the United States is open to the introduction of these diseases without any restriction of any kind or description whatever; and it is to prevent the introduction of these diseases, to give the National Board of Health the jurisdiction which it ought to have for the purpose, that my amendment has been offered.

The organization of this board is not, perhaps, what it had better be for the purpose of taking jurisdiction of the question of cattle diseases. It ought to be so constituted as to include not only the physicians who are already members of the board, but some person who by reason of his qualifications and experience might be supposed to be specially qualified to treat of or to discover and eradicate the imported diseases of cattle. At the proper time, if this question should come again before the Senate, I should be inclined to move a reconstruction of the National Board of Health for that purpose.

I had supposed that as the matter had received some attention elsewhere, in the other branch of Congress, the result would perhaps be a bill which would cover this plan; but I discover that it has not been done, and that following the suggestions that have been made here, the legislation is to be directed solely toward the stamping out of the diseases within the United States and not to the prevention of their introduction. I hope that if the bill shall be recommitted and go again into the hands of the committee, the committee will consider whether or not an amendment similar to the one which I have offered may properly be added to the bill for the purpose of giving to this National Board of Health, the only board now constituted for any such purpose, the authority which will be necessary to prevent the introduction of cattle diseases; and if not, that they may consider the question whether this may not be made the subject of a separate bill embracing the same general purpose and giving either to the Commissioner of Agriculture, or the Secretary of the Treasury, or to some other official the power which now seems to be lacking, or if not lacking has been so far very improperly and improvidently exercised.

I do not mean to anticipate what the fate of the bill will be upon the motion to recommit, but accepting the urgency as expressed by Senators who are within the range of the yellow fever, I should be very much inclined to give to the National Board of Health at this time extraordinary power, trusting to the future to determine what modification, if any, might be necessary; but if they are to have this all-pervading jurisdiction, covering not merely southern ports but northern ports, then I imagine that that jurisdiction may properly be, as it ought to be, exercised for the purpose of preventing the introduction of diseases among cattle which imperil that very large and important interest in this country.

Mr. MAXEY. Mr. President, the bill pending before the Senate is the result of an investigation made by a committee appointed by Congress to consider the best means of preventing the introduction of contagious and infectious diseases into the United States. The report of that committee shows that their entire attention was directed toward that subject, the prevention of the introduction of infectious or contagious diseases among human beings into the United States, and not at all to "an investigation of the contagious or infectious diseases of domestic animals in the United States intended for interstate transportation."

Sections 9 and 10 of the bill relate to diseases of cattle, &c., and have no sort of connection, so far as I am able to perceive, with the subject of prevention of the introduction into or spread within the United States of contagious and infectious diseases among human beings. They relate to diseases among cattle, and direct the National Board of Health to investigate them. That is wholly a separate and distinct subject, in no wise connected with the introduction of yellow fever and cholera into the United States. It would be an extremely remote thing to say that as cattle are food for man an investigation of the diseases of cattle would be germane to the bill now pending before the Senate. The rearing and shipment of cattle are matters of great importance to many States of this Union. The State which I in part represent is the largest cattle growing and shipping State in the Union, raises more and sends more to market than any other State in the Union, and I cannot see that the National Board of Health has anything in the world to do with this great cattle trade. They may be experts on the subjects of yellow fever and of cholera; and if they have been faithful in acquiring the information necessary to become experts in yellow fever and cholera they have had no time to know anything about the diseases of cattle. My judgment is that the testimony of a board of cow doctors, or, perhaps more elegantly, veterinary surgeons, would be far more important in throwing light on this subject than the testimony of the gentlemen organized as a National Board of Health.

I shall, if it be proper at this time, move to strike out sections 9 and 10 of the pending bill as having nothing whatever to do with the subject-matter of the bill and as being more appropriate to come in, if at all, as a separate matter, because when that subject comes up it is of such great importance that it will necessarily be very much discussed, and it ought to be; and those interested in protecting this great cattle interest have a right to know by thorough investigation that there is a necessity for any legislation on that subject. I do not believe any such necessity exists.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. INGALLS in the chair.) The Chair holds that a motion to commit takes precedence of a motion to amend.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, in order to define a little more sharply the scope, objects, and purpose of the bill under consideration, I send to the desk an amendment as an additional section, which I shall offer at the proper time, and ask that it be read for information.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The proposed amendment will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

SEC. 13. That nothing in this act shall be so construed as to supersede or impair the operations of the sanitary or quarantine laws of any State within the territorial limits of such State, the object of this act being to so regulate commerce as to prevent the introduction of contagious or infectious diseases from foreign countries into the United States and from one State into another.

Mr. HARRIS. I give notice that at the proper time if this bill shall not be recommitted I shall offer that as an additional section to the bill. And while I am upon my feet I desire to say that on Friday last what is known as the Sanitary Council of the Valley of the Mississippi, in which were represented the State health associations of Minnesota, Michigan, Illinois, Kentucky, Arkansas, Tennessee, Louisiana, Texas, Mississippi, Wisconsin, and Colorado, adopted just before its adjournment the resolutions which I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolutions referred to will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Sanitary Council of Mississippi Valley heartily indorses the bill now pending before Congress "to increase the efficiency of the National Board of Health, and to prevent the introduction into or spread within the United States of contagious diseases," and would respectfully recommend its speedy passage by Congress, so as to clothe the board with executive as well as advisory powers.

Resolved, That this council is in hearty sympathy with the National Board of Health in its object of securing the restraint of pestilential epidemics in the whole country, and pledges itself to hearty co-operation with the National Board of Health in this noble work.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the State delegations in Congress of each of the States represented in this sanitary council, respectfully requesting their assistance in securing legislation which shall protect our people from foreign pestilence and domestic danger.

Mr. HARRIS. I simply desire to say in reference to the matter discussed by the Senators from Kansas and Texas a few moments since, that the two sections in the bill, 9 and 10, which provide for an investigation and report of cattle diseases, were suggested by a member of the Committee on Agriculture as proper to be incorporated into this bill, the Committee on Epidemic Diseases being satisfied that if the investigation of that subject be necessary and proper to be made the National Board of Health was perhaps as well qualified if not better qualified to conduct that investigation and to make a report of whatever recommendation may be necessary as any other board or any other physicians to whom that power could be delegated; and the National Board of Health being organized and in the work of conducting investigations of a kindred character, can certainly investigate and make its report at very much less expense than a new commission can do.

That much only I desire to say on the subject, and I shall be perfectly content for the Senate to keep those sections in or vote them out of the bill, as they do not affect in one way or the other the main object this bill has in view.

Mr. MAXEY. The main body of this bill is sent here upon evidence taken at large expense to the people of the United States in order to ascertain whether or not a bill ought to pass Congress and whether a bill can be constitutionally passed with a view to prevent the introduction of contagious and infectious diseases into the United States. So far as these sections 9 and 10 are concerned, they assume that a necessity exists for legislation in respect to diseases of cattle, &c., intended for shipment; and that assumption is absolutely without proof, because no proof whatever has been taken by the committee to sustain sections 9 and 10, and I deny the right to assume without investigation and without proof the necessity of such legislation.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I stated the other day very briefly one objection to this bill, which the chairman of the committee who introduced it has not dealt with, which is a very strong one in my mind, and that is, in addition to the general powers over foreign commerce, commerce by vessel and steamboat, the powers which are lodged in this board, if they choose to exercise them, over the communication between places compactly settled which happen to lie upon the boundary line of different States and the power to interfere with and overthrow the existing health regulations at such points.

There is, undoubtedly, a desire on the part of the people and on the part of Congress to do anything which may, within the bounds of a reasonable possibility, tend to prevent a repetition of the scourge from which a portion of our country suffered last year. But I am not in favor of giving these vast powers to this board, constituted as it is, over all contagious or infectious diseases. I think the bill ought to limit the powers of the board at present to cases of yellow fever and cholera, and I think that all that has been stated by the friends of this bill as desirable may be accomplished by a simple bill contained in a single section which I have drawn up and will read:

Whenever in the opinion of the President of the United States there is danger that cholera or yellow fever may be introduced from abroad into any port or place within the United States, or spread from State to State within the same, and in his judgment the existing quarantine or health regulations at such exposed places are insufficient, he may authorize the Board of Health to make further rules and regulations in the premises, which being submitted to and approved by him shall be valid and in force.

That bill, with the addition of the penalties contained in the existing bill on vessels that violate the rules, will in my judgment accomplish all that is necessary. I desire to send that to the Chair and have it printed and go to the committee if the bill shall be committed to them again.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That order will be made. The question recurs on the motion to recommit.

Mr. KERNAN. Before the motion is put I desire to call the attention of the Senate, rather in aid of the motion, to the legislation had at an early day on this subject. I have expressed before my apprehension that, with the best intentions, there will be a serious interference by the proposed law, and a needless interference, with commerce to the great detriment of that interest, and I fear there will not be, certainly in the sea-ports of the North, as much safety against infectious and epidemic diseases as there is now. One feature of the bill seems to supersede and will destroy the regulations established for years in the ports of New York, Boston, and Philadelphia. My wish is to aid in the direction the friends of this bill desire to go. I am solicitous that the Federal Government shall aid in excluding contagious and epidemic diseases; and where there is no quarantine established by a State by law, of course the Federal law should take effect, and there it will not be injurious probably to the State; but to apply this to States where we have tried systems of quarantine which do not needlessly interfere with commerce, but do interfere wherever there is danger of disease, I think will be very injurious.

In 1799 there was an act passed which the committee should examine, and I think they should legislate in accordance with this statute, which is "an act respecting quarantine and health laws," and it is now in the Revised Statutes at page 931. I wish to call attention to it that the Senate may see how wisely the men of that day supplemented the national authority to the State systems and the State authority. The first section provides:

The quarantines and other restraints established by the health laws of any State, respecting any vessels arriving in, or bound to, any port or district thereof, shall be duly observed by the officers of the customs revenue of the United States, by the masters and crews of the several revenue-cutters, and by the military officers commanding in any fort or station upon the sea-coast; and all such officers of the United States shall faithfully aid in the execution of such quarantines and health laws, according to their respective powers and within their respective precincts, and as they shall be directed, from time to time, by the Secretary of the Treasury But nothing in this title shall enable any State to collect a duty of tonnage or impost without the consent of Congress.

The second section is in this language:

Whenever, by the health laws of any State, or by the regulations made pursuant thereto, any vessel arriving within a collection district of such State is prohibited from coming to the port of entry or delivery by law established for such district, and such health laws require or permit the cargo of the vessel to be unladen at some other place within or near to such district, the collector, after due report to him of the whole of such cargo, may grant his warrant or permit for the unlading and discharge thereof, under the care of the surveyor, or of one or more inspectors, at some other place where such health laws permit, and upon the conditions and restrictions which shall be directed by the Secretary of the Treasury, or which such collector may, for the time, deem expedient for the security of the public revenue.

The third section of the act is:

There shall be purchased or erected, under the orders of the President, suitable warehouses, with wharves and inclosures, where merchandise may be unladen and deposited from any vessel which shall be subjected to a quarantine or other restraint, pursuant to the health laws of any State, at such convenient places therein as the safety of the public revenue and the observance of such health laws may require.

It will be observed that the Federal Government here comes in in aid of the local quarantine laws, so that the interest of the Government and the laws of the State shall be carried out without detriment to either. There are other sections of the act guarding the Government from the danger of loss and enforcing the idea which I think is the true one, that the people of a State having established a quarantine, their own lives being dependent on its sufficiency, are not to have those local regulations swept away by any board established by the Federal Government.

These laws, I observe, have remained unchanged and unaltered with a single exception, down to this time. I have never heard complaint that the Federal Government suffered or that the people of the localities where they were subject to epidemics suffered because they had taken the matter in hand and established quarantine laws. I have never heard any complaint on either side, and my apprehension is, and I believe it is what should be done, that the present bill should be framed in the spirit of this law of 1799, which has worked so well and which experience has not led the National Legislature to change. The new bill should be in the same spirit, not superseding and wiping out the State regulations under certain contingencies, but it should be a bill in aid of that which is so important and is likely to be looked to so well by localities like New York, Boston, and other sea-ports that have had long experience of danger and have had great immunity from epidemic diseases by means of the efficiency of their own systems.

It is, therefore, in a spirit wishing to aid in passing a bill particularly to benefit the people in localities where they have not established these regulations that I hope the bill will be recommitted, and that the committee may examine the spirit of the old law, may consult together, and frame a law that shall get rid of all questions of either the State laws being unconstitutional or of their being in antagonism to the national laws, and that we shall in that way get a bill that we can all unite in passing, which shall aid in protecting the public health by the Federal Government, but shall not attempt to do that by sweeping away the quarantine and health laws and regulations which have existed for fifty or seventy-five years, and have been perfected by experience, and have protected wonderfully the cities around our great sea-ports upon the Atlantic in the North. Therefore I shall vote for this motion in a spirit of friendliness to the bill, in a desire to aid the quarantines that are now in existence, and not to destroy them, but to supplement this board's duties to theirs, so that it can act in harmony with them, and leaving it where the States do not act to arrange as it shall believe is best. There is fear that a board sitting here will be likely to needlessly interfere with commerce. While I will protect life against commerce, yet I desire that there shall be no needless interference with the business of the country by an experiment, when it gets along now without complaint and without danger of disease, as experience proves, in ports like New York, under the State systems.

I do not want to discuss the question of how far the State can go to protect its own people from disease and have its action constitutional. I believe the best interest of all is that the Federal Government shall supplement and aid in carrying out the local regulations. It can make even many of its revenue laws bend to that, as it did in the act of 1799, and as the laws have existed ever since. Believing that such a bill can be framed more perfect than this for even the section the committee mainly had in their minds, where none of these regulations have been established, or if any not of any very long continuance; believing that it is as well for them and but just and wise toward the commerce of the North and toward the health of the North, to allow the State systems to continue, I shall vote for the motion to recommit. I do not want any board, I care not how learned or how skillful, to come to New York Harbor, where we have more than a million people subject to infectious disease, and say, "We are wiser than all your regulations which you have matured during years, by experience, which have protected you so well; and we will start a new experiment," which may be a very disastrous experiment not only to our commerce but to the health of our people. Therefore I hope, in friendliness to this effort, the bill will be recommitted, for we cannot perfect very well in the Senate a bill on a subject like this, and that the committee will revise it and see if they cannot make it in harmony with the quarantine and health laws of the States where they exist, in the spirit of the act of 1799 which has stood substantially unchanged to this time, making this legislation auxiliary to the States, under further guards for the protection of the revenue.

Mr. HARRIS. I wish to ask the Senator from New York if the very system he now recommends has not been in force for years, and if the epidemics that have so fearfully scourged the country so recently have not occurred under the operations of the system he asks us now to continue and make the power of the Federal Government auxiliary to a system that has so signally failed in accomplishing the object this bill seeks to accomplish?

Mr. KERNAN. I answer with entire sincerity that I do understand that in certain localities the people have failed to have health laws and quarantine properly established. What I said was that where that was the case, where there had not been local action, we should act, and in other cases supplement what little the localities had done. But this system has not failed in the great port which is in the State where I live. As my colleague said the other day, year after year, without alarm or danger or clamor, yellow fever is in our harbor. As our people go up and down to resorts of recreation and health, they see the flag flying; but it has never spread to the community, and therefore the system has not been a failure in New York. The people I represent write me and urge me to aid in helping those who have no system, but to try to preserve what has been established as an auxiliary to ours, and not as by the seventh section putting in this board the power to wipe it all out, and then if the new system which we have not had experience of shall prove to be less beneficial we shall suffer and they will regret it.

Let us move slowly in this month of May approaching the hot weather, and in New York and places like it where the experiment has never failed in the last forty years, we have changed it and legislated upon it and had health officers of experience there until those whose lives are at stake feel that it is as perfect as it can be, except so far as the Federal Government may further make its laws auxiliary to it and not destructive of it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Maine, [Mr. HAMLIN.]

Mr. HARRIS. Before the vote is taken I desire to say a single word. The motion of the Senator from Maine is to recommit with instructions to the committee to report a code of rules and regulations for the execution and enforcement of this act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would state to the Senator from Tennessee that the only motion under the rules to be entertained is the motion to commit.

Mr. KERNAN. I think a simple motion to recommit is sufficient.

Mr. HARRIS. The motion of the Senator from Maine was exactly as I have stated it. It may not be in order to put the two questions together. I was simply going to say that, in my judgment, the recommittal with these instructions is the defeat of the bill. It will be impossible for the committee to shape rules and regulations such as may from time to time become necessary. It would at this time be impossible for the committee to confer with the National Board of Health so as to obtain its opinion as to the rules and regulations that may be necessary, because of the fact that the National Board of Health is to-day in session at the city of Atlanta, in Georgia, and will remain there in session I do not know how long; but certainly it will be many days, and perhaps weeks, before the committee can avail itself of the means of consulting with the Board of Health.

Mr. KERNAN. I think there is force in the suggestion. I would, if it be necessary, move to strike out the part instructing the committee to report rules and regulations; but the Chair holds the question is on recommittal. I propose to leave it to the committee generally.

Mr. HARRIS. The committee has considered the whole matter just as fully as it is within its power to consider it, and if the bill is recommitted I do not see that it is possible for the committee to make a single change on the facts and considerations that have heretofore controlled the action of the committee. I hope the Senate will not recommit the bill; and if the bill should be defeated, defeat it outright by a direct vote, and not by undertaking to bury it again in committee.

Mr. MORGAN. In some remarks that I made the other day on this bill I indicated that I would vote to recommit it. The Senator from Tennessee this morning has suggested an amendment which removes many of my objections. I wish to say that, not having an opportunity now to vote for any amendment, I shall vote against the motion to recommit, because I am not disposed to criticize the details of the bill captiously.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion to recommit the bill.

Mr. ALLISON. With instructions?

Mr. TELLER. Without instructions.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair by unanimous consent has hitherto entertained the motion to recommit with instructions. The Chair holds that under the rules the only motion which can be made is a motion to commit.

Mr. ALLISON. That is, that it is not in order to instruct a committee?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will read Rule 43.

When a question is pending, no motion shall be received but—
To adjourn,
To adjourn to a day certain, or that, when the Senate adjourn, it shall be to a day certain,
To take a recess,
To proceed to the consideration of executive business,
To lay on the table,
To postpone indefinitely,
To postpone to a day certain,
To commit,
To amend;
which several motions shall have precedence in the order in which they stand arranged.

Mr. ALLISON. I always supposed it was in order to instruct.

Mr. CONKLING. If my honorable friend from Iowa will yield to me for a moment, the ruling of the Chair (which I concede to be a correct one) will not, I suggest to him, interfere with his purpose at all. It has not been, as the Senator remembers, the custom of the Senate to instruct committees. It has been done on occasions; but it is not the custom, as it is in the other House. The view, however, with which a recommittal takes place being indicated, as it has been here by the debate which precedes the recommittal, is always virtually the opinion, or if I may so say, instruction of the Senate to the committee, so that it results in the same thing, being rather a technical difference in the mode of procedure here and elsewhere than any substantial difference.

Mr. BUTLER. May I ask to have the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee reported again?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Clerk will report the proposed amendment of the Senator from Tennessee, [Mr. HARRIS.]

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 13. That nothing in this act shall be so construed as to supersede or impair the operations of the sanitary or quarantine laws of any State within the territorial limits of such State, the object of this act being to so regulate commerce as to prevent the introduction of contagious or infectious diseases from foreign countries into the United States and from one State into another.

Mr. MORRILL. May I ask the Senator from Tennessee whether this would not practically leave the law as it stands in every State where they have any State laws or regulations touching this subject, and whether it would not merely leave the bill operative only upon those States that have no quarantine laws whatever?

Mr. HARRIS. Just so far as the States have sanitary and quarantine laws it would leave them in full operation within the limits of such States. This bill asserts and seeks to exercise the power to so regulate commerce that affects more States than one, interstate commerce, as to prevent the importation of these diseases from one State into another State. It seeks to go no further, while it does leave the sanitary laws of each State in full operation within the territorial limits of such State.

Mr. EATON. It strikes me that that amendment does not cover what I regard as something that is very important to be considered. It would give power at once to this board at Washington to interfere between New Jersey and New York. There are two hundred thousand men doing business in New York that live in New Jersey. They may be called one State, if you please. For all practical purposes, for all commercial purposes, I say New Jersey and New York are to be regarded as one State; but under this amendment this Board of Health here would have entire and perfect control over the sanitary regulations of New York. I am opposed to that. I am in favor of the amendment to a certain extent; but it does not cover the ground, and therefore the necessity of a recommittal of this bill, so that it may be properly considered and properly guarded, and then I shall be ready to support it; but I am not ready now. I never will agree that a board of men sitting here in Washington shall undertake to control the commerce of the North entirely.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President, I must think the committee means the Senate to think that the purpose of this measure is to provide sanitary regulations and establishments where they are needed, and to aid such establishments where they exist. I am not sure that, thus briefly, I have not given a just statement of all the defensible purpose, and probably the whole purpose, of this bill. If I have, meaning certainly no discourtesy to the committee and claiming certainly no special instruction in this regard myself, I cannot see the difficulty of such a measure, not complex but simply and readily drawn, as will authorize the national authority to act as auxiliary to the State authorities where such establishments exist, and to take in whole, where the ground has not been occupied, measures necessary to baffle the approach of cholera, yellow fever, and plague.

The amendment proposed to be offered by the Senator from Tennessee is in the direction in which I now speak; and yet I submit, and I submit with some confidence to that Senator knowing his legal attainments, that it is not the mode to answer objections made to the bill as it stands now. The section would be repugnant to the foregoing sections of the bill. The whole bill, consisting of this section and those now in it, would be a confused piece of legislation. What is it to mean? Twelve sections proceeding upon the theory of paramount national authority and paramount national administration, and then culminating in a thirteenth section which says that nothing herein shall be understood to override State quarantine regulations or to prostrate State quarantine establishments.

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator will allow me to say that the paramount authority that the twelve preceding sections claim is paramount only as to foreign and interstate commerce, one single question, and seeks to be paramount as to nothing else.

Mr. CONKLING. That, Mr. President, makes it necessary to turn to the text of the bill, and turning to the text of the bill compels me to confess that I cannot understand it as it is understood by the honorable Senator from Tennessee. And just here I wish to say that I listened with great pleasure and with great instruction the other day to the remarks on this point which fell from the honorable Senator from Alabama, [Mr. MORGAN.] I did not listen to him without remembering that the port of Mobile is in the State which he represents; and remembering that, I could not forget that it required some independence, perhaps I should not say some courage, for a Senator from Alabama to vindicate, as I thought he did with ability and with clearness, the distinctions which it has been deemed so far in our history important to preserve between national and State authority.

I can adopt in large part the observations of that Senator as expressing my own view in this regard. I will not willingly, I will not knowingly allow any Senator to go further than I will go in voting for any measure whatsoever, discreet and warranted, aimed at the enemy which last year assailed and this year threatens one portion of the country. But nothing is more dangerous than a sentiment. You can argue against a conviction; you can overthrow a statement; but a sentiment is always an awkward force to contend with. We are all apt to be carried away by considerations appealing so strongly to our sympathies and feelings as those belonging to a measure like this; and therefore we are to look and to endeavor at least to see that, in the name of a laudable and humane and most urgent object, we do not overpass and needlessly overpass the barriers of law and the barriers of fact which enround and protect great and enduring interests.

I come back now to the point suggested a moment ago by the honorable Senator from Tennessee. He says this bill, as he understands it, asserts paramount authority in no regard save only touching commerce with foreign nations, and he means I suppose of course touching the vehicles which carry the commerce.

Mr. HARRIS. Foreign and interstate commerce.

Mr. CONKLING. I did not so understand him.

Mr. HARRIS. That is exactly what I did say.

Mr. CONKLING. Then I beg the Senator's pardon; I misapprehended him. I do not deny that he said so. I only confess my own fault in falling short in apprehension. I understood the Senator to say that the paramount authority asserted here was only in respect of foreign commerce. Now the Senator informs me of my error, and I owe him an apology for misunderstanding him.

I was about to read these words in the bill, and I might read many others:

> In respect to all vessels and vehicles engaged in commerce with foreign nations and among the several States, whether by land or water.

That is a drag-net. It covers everything which it would be possible for the invention of man to cover, save and except only such vehicles of commerce and traffic as ply on routes both termini of which are in one and the same State. That exception is too broad; it is untruly broad. Why? Because nearly every such route as I have excepted is operated in connection at either end with extensions which do overpass State lines. The Senator can scarcely show me one of which the remark I now make is not true. Here is a railway in the State of Connecticut; it begins, if you please for illustration, in Connecticut and it ends in Connecticut; but going right on to the North are the same rails on which proceed the same cars, and at an invisible line the track overpasses the boundary of the State of Connecticut. On the South the same thing is true. So in the State of New York. The Erie canal which floats a mighty commerce is not engaged mainly in way business, but in through business. It is the artery through which is poured the product of the wheat-fields of the West. It receives its freight everywhere between the two water-sheds of the continent, the Alleghanies and the Rocky Mountains. Therefore when you come to a practical application of this language it is untrue that it is confined anywhere in a considerable number of instances.

Mr. HARRIS. Will my honorable friend allow me to call his attention to the fact that the language he reads from the bill is verbatim the language of the Federal Constitution that delegates to Congress the power to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States? The language of the bill and the language of the Constitution appears to be word for word the same. The Supreme Court of the United States in a number of decisions, that I will not now undertake to count, has held that that language referred to commerce affecting more States than one.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President, it is quite likely that I should have made the remark now made by the honorable Senator from Tennessee but for the fact that only a day or two ago I dwelt upon it in the hearing of the Senate. It was then that I ventured to call attention to the fact that, proceeding under the commercial clause of the Constitution which the Senator has read, the committee found itself managing an inappropriate power, a power extending everywhere for its purpose, a power by another provision of the Constitution required to be applied share and share alike to all ports when exerted at all, and therefore a power cumbrous, inapplicable, inconvenient for sanitary purposes, exacting as they do provisions depending upon zone, climate, temperature, locality. Now my honorable friend rises, as if I had forgotten that he and his committee have invoked, and invoked in the very broad language of the Constitution designed for commerce, and that alone, the clause of the Constitution pertaining to that subject. I know they have, and the answer I make is that, proceeding under a provision of the Constitution designed for no such purpose but intended to apply to a subject in respect of which regulations should be uniform everywhere, they have undertaken, if I may so say, to square the circle; they have undertaken to do that which it may be questioned, to say the least, whether the Constitution ever intended at all.

When this question was first presented, in a case which has been several times referred to, reported in 9 Wheaton, the case of Gibbons vs. Ogden, the Supreme Court said the commercial clause was designed for commerce, and it was not designed to cover quarantine laws, health laws, inspection laws, laws falling within the domain of the police powers of the States. But I did not mean to get again into that wilderness of argument. I intended to say, and should have concluded saying it, I trust, some moments ago but for these diversions, that the amendment offered or proposed to be offered by the Senator from Tennessee would, it seems to me, make this a bill of checkered and repugnant provisions, the first twelve of the sections proceeding under the commercial clause of the Constitution to assert the primacy and supremacy of national authority, and the thirteenth section, should it be added, resulting in a statement that nothing herein contained is intended to interfere with or impair, if I caught the reading of the amendment aright, the power, the duty, the administration of the States in this regard.

I should like the honorable Senator from Tennessee to put himself for a single moment in the place of some judge called on a month hence, should this measure as he proposes it become a law, to interpret it all together. Here comes a case from the port of New York. The Senator from Connecticut has reminded us how very close and inwrought, how confused together is the commercial and business connection between New Jersey and New York; and he might also have included his own State in the observation. Here comes a question relating to ferry-boats plying between New York and Staten Island on the Jersey shore and taking on freight coming from New Jersey across the narrow strait which runs between Staten Island and the Jersey shore, that freight to go to New York, and from New York to Connecticut, to confine the illustration to this little group of States which lie together, and the quarantine officer, the health officer, and the other police officers (as I may call them legally speaking) of the State of New York have one theory in respect of this and the National Board of Health have another and have made a regulation dissimilar to that made by the State officers of the State of New York. A collision arises between them—I do not mean a violent collision, but I mean a collision of opinion and jurisdiction; and some court is called upon to define and establish the rights of these respective parties, representatives of different jurisdictions under this bill as it would be, how is it to be interpreted by the court? Here it is padded with authority for the national officials to do what they have done; but then it culminates, if I may so say, in a section which says that nothing herein shall be construed to authorize interference with what the State of New York and the State of New Jersey and the State of Connecticut choose to do. Very well, they have interfered with it; here is the express warrant to do it; they have adjudged it was necessary; they have done it elsewhere, made the same regulation where there was no conflicting State authority in operation, and the court is called upon to say whether it is lawful or not, whether a thing is unlawful in one place under the bill which is lawful in another.

I know it has been said in construing a will that the after-coming clauses of the will sometimes govern the opening devises or legacies, and I know that there are other canons of construction which might be invoked to meet a case so peculiar as this; but it seems to me it would leave in great obscurity the question to be presented to the court.

> SEC. 13. That nothing in this act shall be so construed as to supersede or impair the operations of the sanitary or quarantine laws of any State within the territorial limits of such State.

Broad enough in all conscience; not only it shall not impair the laws of the State, but it shall not impair their operations, it shall be neither let nor hinderance, but they shall proceed just as if this statute had not been enacted. That is what it means. How can that be, I ask the Senator, if any validity and force whatever is to be given to these preceding sections and their execution in the State where the question may arise. Now I read the residue of the proposed amendment:

The object of this act being to so regulate commerce as to prevent the introduction of contagious or infectious diseases from foreign countries into the United States and from one State into another.

That is it, that is the gravamen of the act; that is its purpose and genius, to lay the national hand upon these vehicles and prevent the carrying of disease across State lines. That is what it is for. It says so in the title; it says so throughout the bill; it says so in the concluding lines of this amendment; and sandwiched between these concluding lines and the twelfth section is to be a statement that "nothing in this act shall be so construed as to supersede or impair the operations of the sanitary or quarantine laws of any State within the territorial limits of such States." The more I think of that, the more it seems to me it would require great discernment to see in a hundred cases which might be put as all likely to arise under it what it would be the duty of a court to do.

I believe the true way is for the committee availing itself of the suggestions which have been elicited by this bill, some of them I think of some value, none of them likely to darken or becloud the committee, to take this bill and reduce it, simplify it, and make it like the laws now on the statute-book mere auxiliary legislation, clothing, if it be necessary to clothe, the Executive Department or the Board of Health, or both, to proceed where they find unoccupied ground and to give such assistance as they can where they find the ground already occupied, in the attempt to baffle the approach of plague or pestilence. For such a bill we can all vote. For this bill as it stands I cannot vote. As I said the other day, I cannot vote for it looking at the sanitary view of the subject alone, saying nothing about commerce. We appropriated some time ago $250,000 to hire or build a ship and put into it apparatus with which, dealing with gases, to produce ice chemically in a very high temperature. It was said to be an experiment. It was indeed an experiment. Whoever sets up and attempts to adjust so nicely as to make it a success on the firmest ground he can find any apparatus yet known for producing ice in high temperature by chemical means, essays a very difficult and very nice feat of mechanics and of science. He who puts this machinery afloat in any vessel where it is subject to the oscillation and motion of water and produces the effect, will be indeed the hero of a remarkable experiment. However, we voted $250,000 for that. Now this bill proposes to vote $650,000 more for purposes not experimental in the same sense but still experimental. I say nothing grudging of the money, but I do say that it seems to me we ought to go sure-footed, not to tread on the lines of the Constitution, and not needlessly to imperil the commerce of the country, and above all not to overlook ready and palpable modes of giving early and efficient succor during this almost already mid-season, for the sake of contriving a complex, and as I have ventured to say before confused set of provisions which I believe will not work well, which I believe will not be in season for the emergency, and which I think as precedents may be dangerous, to say the least, if they find their way on the statute-book.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On the motion to commit the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, without detaining the Senate I desire simply to give my reason for voting in favor of the recommittal of this bill.

It is, I am sure, the unanimous feeling of the Senate that every step that judiciously can be taken to avert the progress of pestilence in any quarter of this country shall not fail to be taken by those in charge of the National Government; but it is evident that this is for the first time an embarkation upon a sphere of action heretofore occupied wholly by State power. I do not propose to discuss the borderline between the State and the Federal power over this subject of local health or of national health. Suffice it to say that heretofore the ground has been wholly occupied by the agents of the States in preventing the spread of disease. The experiment of framing a law which shall not dislodge all the benefits of experience which local self-government has so far furnished, is very difficult.

Being therefore in favor of doing anything that practically and justly can be done in the line of fending off the very approach of disease from our country, and desiring to see a bill so framed in this body that it shall challenge the acceptance of the other House of Congress as well as a majority of the Senate, I shall vote that this bill in the light of the very intelligent, able, and earnest discussion to which it has been subjected, shall go back to the same committee in order that they may simplify in their expression and in the frame-work of the proposed law the objects and intents which the measure is to accomplish. I merely say this much that my vote may not be misapprehended or misunderstood by those gentlemen who have given so much of earnest attention and ability to the preparation of this measure. I believe they can and will frame this bill more efficiently than it now stands without the probability of collision with the judgment and with the experience of a great many of those who, anxious to further the general principle of the bill, are compelled to object to many of its features.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois, (when his name was called.) On this question I am paired with the Senator from Iowa, [Mr. ALLISON.] He would vote "yea," if he were, and I should vote "nay."

Mr. VANCE, (when Mr. RANSOM'S name was called.) I desire to say that my colleague [Mr. RANSOM] is necessarily absent and is paired on this question.

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. TELLER. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. KIRKWOOD] is paired with the Senator from Maine, [Mr. HAMLIN.]

The result was announced—yeas 30, nays 19; as follows:

YEAS—30.

Anthony,	Chandler,	Grover,	Morrill,
Bayard,	Coke,	Hampton,	Pendleton,
Bell,	Conkling,	Hoar,	Rollins,
Booth,	Davis of W. Va.,	Ingalls,	Saunders,
Burnside,	Dawes,	Kernan,	Slater,
Butler,	Eaton,	Logan,	Teller.
Cameron of Wis.,	Farley,	McDonald,
Carpenter,	Ferry,	Maxey,

NAYS—19.

Bailey,	Garland,	Jonas,	Vance,
Beck,	Groome,	Kellogg,	Voorhees,
Bruce,	Harris,	Lamar,	Walker,
Call,	Hill of Georgia,	Morgan,	Williams.
Cameron of Pa.,	Houston,	Plumb,

ABSENT—27.

Allison,	Hereford,	McPherson,	Thurman,
Blaine,	Hill of Colorado,	Paddock,	Vest,
Cockrell,	Johnston,	Platt,	Wallace,
Davis of Illinois,	Jones of Florida,	Randolph,	Whyte,
Edmunds,	Jones of Nevada,	Ransom,	Windom,
Gordon,	Kirkwood,	Saulsbury,	Withers.
Hamlin,	McMillan,	Sharon,

So the motion to recommit was agreed to.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. ROLLINS, it was Ordered, That the papers in the case of Sidney P. Luther be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Finance.

On motion of Mr. BUTLER, it was Ordered, That the petition of Samuel Lord, jr., be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Finance.

SPECIAL POSTAL SERVICE.

Mr. MAXEY. I ask consent to take up and put on its passage Senate bill No. 516. The reasons for it are fully set forth in the report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Texas?

Mr. WHYTE. Let the bill be read for information.

Mr. MAXEY. The report of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads is unanimous.

The Chief Clerk read the bill (S. No. 516) to extend the time of special postal service until service can be obtained by advertisement, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That in cases where special service has already been placed on new routes, the Postmaster-General may, in his discretion, extend such service until the time when service can be obtained by advertisement. And whenever an accepted bidder shall fail to enter into contract, or a contractor on any mail-route shall fail or refuse to perform the service on said route according to his contract, or when a new route shall be established or new service required, or when, from any other cause, there shall not be a contractor legally bound or required to perform such service, the Postmaster-General may make a temporary contract for carrying the mail on such route, without advertisement, for such period as may be necessary, not in any case exceeding one year, until the service shall have commenced under a contract made according to law. And any provision of statute in conflict with this provision is hereby repealed.

Mr. MAXEY. This bill simply brings the law back to what it is in the Revised Statutes, and the exigency is fully set forth in the report which is there, and I ask that it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? The Chair hears none. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and the report will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. MAXEY May 1:

The Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was referred S. No. 516 present session, respectfully submit the following report:

The act approved August 11, 1876, volume 19, on page 130, contains the following provision:

"Whenever an accepted bidder shall fail to enter into contract, or a contractor on any mail-route shall fail or refuse to perform the service on said route according to his contract, or when a new route shall be established or new service required, or when, from any other cause, there shall not be a contractor legally bound or required to perform such service, the Postmaster-General may make a temporary contract for carrying the mail on such route without advertisement for such period as may be necessary, not in any case exceeding six months, until the service shall have commenced under a contract made according to law."

The Revised Statutes, section 3951, provides that the Postmaster-General may contract without advertisement for a period not exceeding twelve months in such cases.

The inconvenience resulting from the reduction from twelve to six months was before the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads at the last session, and a section was added to the post-route bill precisely of the import of the bill now reported, but was not considered for want of time.

The committee subjoins the following communication from the Postmaster-General on the subject, showing the necessity for prompt action, namely:

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., April 29, 1879.

SIR: I beg to call the attention of your committee to a paragraph in my last an-nua' report, page 11, relative to "temporary contracts" for carrying the mails, as follows:

"The present law limiting the period for which temporary contracts may be made without advertisement to six months has occasioned much embarrassment to the Department, and rendered it necessary to issue two miscellaneous advertisements each year instead of one as formerly. The expense of establishing service is thereby considerably increased, and much additional labor is imposed upon the Department, with no advantage to the Government or the public. If temporary contracts could be made for one year, as formerly, the service would be benefitted."

The practical workings of this law have been specially inconvenient and expensive during the current year and since the above recommendation. Service of great importance became necessary on the frontier and in the mining districts of the West which could not wait the delay of an advertisement. The short limit of a temporary contract made the service more expensive than it would have been otherwise, and, owing to a delay in the passage of the last post-route bill, the limit of a temporary contract (six months) was reached before service could be obtained under advertisement. As the result the service on several very important routes had to be suspended and to remain so for from three to six months, to the great inconvenience and loss of large communities.

I therefore beg to renew my recommendation that the law of August 11, 1876, be so amended as to permit the making of a temporary contract in the emergencies therein specified for the period of one year or until a contract can be secured by the succeeding advertisement.

Very respectfully,

D. M. KEY,
Postmaster-General.

Hon. S. B. MAXEY,
Chairman Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads,
United States Senate.

The inconvenience proposed to be remedied by the bill needs, in the estimation of the committee, prompt action; wherefore the committee report the bill back without amendment and recommend its passage at the present session.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HOAR. I desire that the amendment to the bill of which I gave notice be referred to the committee with the bill itself.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That order will be made.

THE GREENE STATUE.

Mr. ANTHONY asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 555) to secure the equestrian statue of General Nathaniel Greene upon the pedestal and to improve the square in which it is situated; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. ANTHONY. As a similar bill has passed the Senate once, and as this bill has the unanimous assent of the Committee on Appropriations, and is also reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, I take the liberty to ask for its present consideration.

Mr. COCKRELL. I understand that a similar bill was reported from the committee at a former Congress favorably?

Mr. ANTHONY. It was.

Mr. COCKRELL. I think it is a very bad precedent to set, because a bill shall have been reported favorably, therefore the Senate shall take it up and consider it at a subsequent Congress without further investigation. There have been a great many bills reported from various other committees favorably, and a number of them which passed the Senate at a former Congress have been reintroduced, and the rule has been to refer them. I presume there will be no delay by a reference in this case.

Mr. ANTHONY. This bill was referred as an amendment to the legislative appropriation bill to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and was reported by them and referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and I have the authority of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] to state that the Committee on Appropriations are unanimously in favor of it. It is merely to secure upon the pedestal the equestrian statue of Major-General Greene, which was erected in accordance with a decree of the continental congress. It is put upon a barren spot which is entirely unimproved, and it is so insecure upon its pedestal that it is in danger of being blown off by every gale. I think the Senator from Kentucky will testify to the fact that the bill has received the unanimous approval of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. BECK. I have only this to say: the matter was sent to the Committee on Appropriations, and we, feeling that we had not perhaps entire jurisdiction over it, after hearing the facts in regard to it, were unanimously of the opinion that this bill ought to pass, but that it ought to come from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and therefore I was instructed to refer the matter back to that committee, which I did. Everything seemed to indicate that unless something was done the statue was in great danger of being destroyed, and that it ought to be made secure at once or that perhaps great loss might be sustained; and, therefore, there was no time for delay. Under these circumstances the committee thought such a bill ought to pass at once, but it ought to come from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, with our recommendation, for what it was worth.

Mr. ANTHONY. It was reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds and referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and has received the approbation of both committees.

Mr. BECK. It came from that committee to us, and so far had the approbation of both committees.

Mr. COCKRELL. I understand the Committee on Appropriations referred it back to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. ANTHONY. No, the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds referred it to the Committee on Appropriations, and the Committee on Appropriations unanimously recommend its passage.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Not quite. There is no difference between myself and the Senator from Kentucky; but as I understand the case it was sent as an amendment to the Committee on Appropriations, and when it came up for discussion there they thought it ought to come properly from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and therefore the Senator from Kentucky was asked to send it back to that committee for their action and not for the action of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. ANTHONY. But the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds have approved it.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. That I have nothing to say about.

Mr. ANTHONY. That appears on the records of the Senate. The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds approved it and recommended the amendment and had it referred to the Committee on Appropriations. It has already the approbation of both committees.

Mr. COCKRELL. This matter has been slumbering for ninety-odd years and it will not be hurt by a little delay. I object to its present consideration and move its reference to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

The bill was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. VOORHEES. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After seven minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at two o'clock and ten minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, May 5, 1879.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. P. HARRISON, D. D.

The Journal of Saturday last was read and approved.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour begins at nine minutes past twelve o'clock. This being Monday, the first business in order is the call of States and Territories, commencing with the State of Maine, for the introduction of bills and joint resolutions for reference to appropriate committees, not to be brought back on a motion to reconsider. Under this call joint resolutions and memorials of State and territorial Legislatures are in order. Under this call, also, in accordance with the recent amendment of the rules, resolutions calling upon the Executive Departments for information will be in order for reference to appropriate committees.

Mr. KELLEY. I ask unanimous consent that this call may be continued, without reference to the expiration of the morning hour, until all the States and Territories have been called.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

MILITARY INTERFERENCE AT ELECTIONS.

Mr. LADD introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1382) to prohibit military interfence at elections; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. COX. I call for the reading of the bill in full.

The bill, having been read, was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

BUREAU OF LABOR STATISTICS.

Mr. MURCH introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1383) to establish a bureau of labor statistics; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Education and Labor, and ordered to be printed.

BREAKWATER ON COAST OF MAINE.

Mr. MURCH also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1384) to provide for the construction of a breakwater at Rockland Harbor, in the State of Maine; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

LIGHT-HOUSES ON COAST OF MAINE.

Mr. MURCH also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1385) to provide for the construction of a light-house on Two Bush Island near Muscle Ridge plantation, on the coast of Maine; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MURCH also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1386) to provide for the construction of a light-house on Widow's Island, at the eastern entrance of Fox Island Thoroughfare, on the coast of Maine; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

DUTY ON CRUDE INDIA-RUBBER.

Mr. MURCH also (by request) introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1387) fixing a duty on crude India-rubber; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

GRANITE CONTRACTS.

Mr. MURCH also submitted a resolution requesting information from the Secretary of the Treasury in relation to granite contracts; which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

WASHINGTON MONUMENT.

Mr. MURCH also (by request) introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 32) authorizing the completion of the foundation of the Washington Monument; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM W. THOMAS.

Mr. REED introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1388) for the relief of William W. Thomas; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee of Claims.

JAPANESE INDEMNITY FUND.

Mr. BRIGGS introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1389) in relation to the Japanese indemnity fund; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

LOUISA G. CHANDLER.

Mr. JOYCE introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1390) for the relief of Louisa G. Chandler; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

THOMAS H. HALSEY.

Mr. JOYCE also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1391) for the relief of Thomas H. Halsey, late paymaster United States Army; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee of Claims.

LABOR BUREAU.

Mr. RICE presented a resolution of the Legislature of Massachusetts, concerning the establishment of a national bureau of labor; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor, and ordered to be printed.

HENRY THRESHER.

Mr. CRAPO introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1392) granting a pension to Henry Thresher; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions.

LIEUTENANT FRANK BAKER.

Mr. CRAPO also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1393) for the relief of Lieutenant Frank Baker; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

SHIP-BUILDING MATERIALS.

Mr. CRAPO also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1394) regulating the importation of raw materials to be manufactured in the United States and used in the construction and repairs of vessels employed in the foreign trade; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

FANNY DIMMICK.

Mr. CRAPO also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1395) granting a pension to Fanny Dimmick; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions.

OPHELIA E. SIMMONS.

Mr. CRAPO also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1396) granting a pension to Ophelia E. Simmons; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

SOLDIERS AND SAILORS TOTALLY DISABLED.

Mr. CRAPO also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1397) extending the provisions of the act approved June 18, 1874, increasing the pensions of soldiers and sailors totally disabled; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

COMPULSORY PILOT FEES.

Mr. CRAPO also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1398) to relieve certain ships and vessels from compulsory pilot fees; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

TREATY OF WASHINGTON.

Mr. CRAPO also presented resolves of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts concerning the fishery clauses of the treaty of Washington; which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

SHIPMENT AND DISCHARGE OF SEAMEN.

Mr. CLAFLIN introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1399) to repeal and amend certain acts pertaining to the shipment and discharge of seamen; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

DONATION OF CONDEMNED CANNON.

Mr. CLAFLIN also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1400) donating condemned cannon to each of the towns of Woburn, Winchester, and Wakefield, in the State of Massachusetts; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

JAMES GLANIGAN.

Mr. CLAFLIN also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1401) granting a pension to James Glanigan; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

HENRY L. JAMES.

Mr. NORCROSS introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1402) for the relief of Henry L. James, of Williamsburgh, Massachusetts; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee of Claims.

CAPTAIN JOSEPH IRISH.

Mr. ALDRICH, of Rhode Island, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1403) authorizing Captain Joseph Irish, of the United States marine service, to accept a grand cross of naval merit of the second class from the Spanish government; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

DISTRICT COURT IN CONNECTICUT.

Mr. WAIT introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1404) changing the time of holding the district court in Connecticut; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

PERRY P. WILSON.

Mr. WAIT also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1405) for the relief of Perry P. Wilson, postmaster at Putnam, Connecticut; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee of Claims.

NORWICH AND NEW YORK TRANSPORTATION COMPANY.

Mr. WAIT also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1406) for the relief of the Norwich and New York Transportation Company; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee of Claims.

PROMOTION IN THE ARMY.

Mr. WAIT also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1407) to equalize promotion in the grade of lieutenant in the line of the Army; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM CARRUTHERS.

Mr. WAIT also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1408) for the relief of William Carruthers; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

JAMES A. BATES.

Mr. WAIT also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1409) for the relief of James A. Bates; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

RICHARD F. LOPER.

Mr. WAIT also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1410) for the relief of Richard F. Loper; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Patents.

MARY SHAY.

Mr. WAIT also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1411) granting a pension to Mrs. Mary Shay, mother of Miles Shay, late a private in Company H, Seventh Regiment Connecticut Volunteers; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

NEW LONDON NAVY-YARD.

Mr. WAIT also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1412) making an appropriation for continuing the work on the New London navy-yard, in the State of Connecticut; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

EDWARD EUGENE WILCOX.

Mr. WAIT also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1413) authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Interior to restore to the pension-roll the name of Edward Eugene Wilcox, a demented child of Leonard Wilcox, late a private in Company E, Twenty-first Regiment Connecticut Volunteers; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

GEORGE W. HUBBARD AND WILLIAM E. CONANT.

Mr. WAIT also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1414) for the relief of George W. Hubbard and William E. Conant; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Patents.

EDWARD K. WINSHIP.

Mr. WAIT also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1415) to authorize the settlement of the accounts of Acting Assistant Paymaster Edward K. Winship, United States Navy; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

GEORGE T. MARSHALL.

Mr. WAIT also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1416) for the relief of George T. Marshall, late collector of customs at Stonington, Connecticut; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

SOLDIERS' MONUMENT AT KILLINGLY, CONNECTICUT.

Mr. WAIT also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1417) donating cannon and cannon-balls for the construction of a suitable fence around the soldiers' monument at Killingly, Connecticut; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PUBLIC BUILDING, NORWICH, CONNECTICUT.

Mr. WAIT also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1418) for the erection of a public building at Norwich, Connecticut; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

YERBA BUENA ISLAND.

Mr. WAIT also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1419) to quiet the title to the island of Yerba Buena; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

CENTRAL FREE DISPENSARY, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. WAIT also introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 33) appropriating money to the Central Free Dispensary of the District of Columbia; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

SARAH RIPLEY.

Mr. HAWLEY introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1420) granting a pension to Sarah Ripley, widow of James W. Ripley, late brigadier-general and Chief of Ordnance United States Army; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

HARRIET E. EDWARDS.

Mr. HAWLEY also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1421) granting a pension to Harriet E. Edwards, widow of David S. Edwards, late surgeon in the United States Navy; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

REPORT OF UNITED STATES CENTENNIAL COMMISSION.

Mr. HAWLEY also introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 34) to print 5,000 copies of the final report of the United States centennial commisssion upon the international exhibition and centennial celebration of 1876; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Printing.

ELECTORAL COUNT.

Mr. LOUNSBERY introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1422) to regulate the counting of the votes for President and Vice-President and to prescribe the manner of declaring the result; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the state of the Law respecting Ascertainment and Declaration of Result of Election of President and Vice-President, and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENT OF THE REVISED STATUTES.

Mr. LOUNSBERY also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1423) to repeal sections 3588, 3589, and 3590 of the Revised Statutes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and ordered to be printed.

SCHOONER ISLE OF PINES.

Mr. LOUNSBERY also introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 35) authorizing the name of the schooner Isle of Pines to be changed to George S. Sleight; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

AMENDMENT OF REVISED STATUTES.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1424) to amend section 2874 of the Revised Statutes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

NATIONAL ACADEMY OF SCIENCES.

Mr. COX introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1425) to authorize the National Academy of Sciences to receive and hold trust funds for the promotion of science, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on the Library.

REMOVAL OF POLITICAL DISABILITIES.

Mr. COX also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1426) to remove the disabilities imposed by the third section of the fourteenth article of the amendments to the Constitution of the United States; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

TREATY WITH NORTH GERMAN CONFEDERATION.

Mr. COX also introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 36) as to giving notice to the North German Confederation to terminate the treaty of February 22, 1868; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

TRANSPORTATION OF ANIMALS.

Mr. COVERT introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1427) relative to the transportation of animals; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Agriculture, and ordered to be printed.

STORM AND FLOOD SIGNALS.

Mr. COVERT also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1428) to test a plan of storm and flood signals by the telegraph and cannon for the benefit of commerce and agriculture and to give warning of sudden floods in rapid rivers; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Agriculture, and ordered to be printed.

BENJAMIN WALKER ATKINSON.

Mr. COVERT also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1429) to authorize the President of the United States to appoint Benjamin Walker Atkinson to a cadetship at large in the United States Military Academy; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

SCHOONER-YACHT SEA DRIFT.

Mr. COVERT also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1430) to change the name of the schooner yacht Sea Drift; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

STEAM-VESSELS.

Mr. BLISS introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1431) to amend section 4400 of title 52 of the Revised Statutes of the United States concerning the regulation of steam-vessels; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

CAPTAIN E. M. REYNOLDS.

Mr. BLISS also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1432) to restore Edward McDonald Reynolds to the Marine Corps; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

EXTENSION OF WINDER'S BUILDING.

Mr. BLISS also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1433) to extend Winder's building, for the use of the War Department; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

CLAIM OF JAMES E. KELSEY AND OTHERS.

Mr. BLISS also introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 37) referring to the Court of Claims the claim of James E. Kelsey, John Loughlin, Theron Kelsey, and others, against the United States for damages done to the schooner C. & C. Brooks; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

CHARLES SLAWSON.

Mr. MASON introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1434) to amend an act granting a pension to Charles Slawson; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions.

BENTON C. BARNES.

Mr. MASON also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1435) granting an increase of pension to Benton C. Barnes; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

GEORGE HUGURIN.

Mr. MASON also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1436) granting an increase of pension to George Huguriu; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

LEGISLATION ON APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. VAN AERNAM presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of New York declaring that "the refusal by a partisan majority in Congress to appropriate for the support of the National Government the moneys raised by the people for that purpose except upon condition of the repeal or amendment of existing laws is a dangerous violation of the Constitution, amounting practically to revolution," &c.; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. VAN AERNAM called for the reading of the joint resolution; and it was read.

RECORDS OF SIR JOHN FRANKLIN'S EXPEDITION.

Mr. MORTON (by request of the American Geographical Society) introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1437) authorizing the Secretary of War to detail an officer of the Army to take command of the expedition fitted out by Messrs. Morison & Brown, citizens of New York, to search for the records of Sir John Franklin's expedition, and to issue to such officer Army equipments; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

CANCELING INK FOR POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT.

Mr. MORTON also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1438) to amend a certain section of an act approved June 20, 1878, entitled "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1879, and for other purposes;" which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Post-Office andPost-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

ENGINEER OFFICERS IN THE NAVY.

Mr. MORTON also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1439) to amend section 1484, Revised Statutes, in order to preserve the meaning of the original law from which it was taken with reference to the rank of engineer officers, graduates of the Naval Academy; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

RICHARD CARPENTER.

Mr. FERDON introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1440) granting a pension to Richard Carpenter; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

JOHN HOPPER.

Mr. FERDON introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1441) granting a pension to John Hopper; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

JOHN COUDLIN.

Mr. VOORHIS introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1442) granting arrears of pension to John Coudlin; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

JOHN ROSE.

Mr. SMITH, of New Jersey, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1443) granting a pension to John Rose, of Budd Town, Burlington County, New Jersey; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

WILLIAM HUGHES.

Mr. SMITH, of New Jersey, also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1444) for the relief of William Hughes; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

AGNES FAIRLY.

Mr. ROBESON introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1445) granting a pension to Agnes Fairly, widow of David Fairly; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

GIFTS, DEVISES, AND BEQUESTS TO UNITED STATES.

Mr. CLYMER introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1446) in relation to gifts, devises, and bequests to the United States; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM L. CURRY POST.

Mr. O'NEILL introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1447) donating condemned cannon and cannon balls or field-pieces to the William L. Curry Post, No. 18, Grand Army of the Republic, for their place of burial; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

GEORGE EYSTER.

Mr. O'NEILL also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1448) for the relief of George Eyster, assistant treasurer of the United States at Philadelphia, Pennsylvania; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee of Ways and Means.

COLUMBIA SANITARY COMPANY.

Mr. O'NEILL also (by request) introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1449) to incorporate the Columbia Sanitary Company; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Epidemic Diseases, and ordered to be printed.

STEPHEN W. ALVORD.

Mr. OVERTON introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1450) for the relief of Stephen W. Alvord, late postmaster at Towanda, Pennsylvania; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

RAILWAY CHAIRS.

Mr. OVERTON also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1451) empowering the Commissioner of Patents to extend the letters-patent granted to D. W. Crocker, of Deposit, New York, for railway chairs; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Patents.

JAMES B. FURMAN.

Mr. OVERTON also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1452) for the relief of James B. Furman, of Austinville, Bradford County, Pennsylvania; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

JAMES R. GORDON.

Mr. OVERTON also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1453) for the relief of James R. Gordon, of Columbia Cross Roads, Bradford County, Pennsylvania; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

J. CLINTON DE WITT.

Mr. OVERTON also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1454) for the relief of J. Clinton De Witt, of Canton, Bradford County, Pennsylvania; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

ALBERT O. MILLER.

Mr. OVERTON also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1455) granting a pension to Albert O. Miller, late seaman in the United States Navy; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

ANDREW J. HORTON.

Mr. OVERTON also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1456) granting a pension to Andrew J. Horton; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

FRANCIS O'CLEARY.

Mr. OVERTON also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1457) granting a pension to Francis O'Cleary; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

RETIRING TRADE-DOLLAR.

Mr. KELLEY introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1458) to provide for retiring the trade-dollar and for its recoinage into the standard silver dollar; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, and ordered to be printed.

HEIRS OF WILLIAM A. GRAHAM.

Mr. KELLEY also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1459) to repeal an act for the relief of the heirs of William A. Graham; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Patents.

JAMES P. SAYER.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1460) granting an increase of pension to James P. Sayer; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

MARIAN F. HAYNIE.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER also (by request) introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1461) for the relief of Marian F. Haynie; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

SPANISH-AMERICAN COMMERCIAL COMPANY.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER also (by request) introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1462) to incorporate the Spanish-American Commercial Company; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

EDWARD H. LEIB.

Mr. COFFROTH introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1463) granting a pension to Edward H. Leib; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

EDMUND EASTMAN.

Mr. COFFROTH also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1464) granting a pension to Edmund Eastman, Two hundred and second Regiment of Pennsylvania Volunteers; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

LEVI LEIDAM.

Mr. COFFROTH also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1465) granting a pension to Levi Leidam, Company E, One hundred and twenty-fifth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

MRS. MARY KENNEDY.

Mr. COFFROTH also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1466) granting a pension to Mrs. Mary Kennedy, reinstating her name on the pension-roll; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

MARY A. CASTERWELLER.

Mr. WISE introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1467) granting a pension to Mary A. Casterweller, widow of John Casterweller, a soldier of the late war; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

MRS. GEORGE LOSE.

Mr. WISE also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1468) granting a pension to Mrs. George Lose; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

MARY ANN M'CARROL.

Mr. BAYNE introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1469) granting a pension to Mary Ann McCarrol; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

FRANCIS H. BIRD.

Mr. BAYNE also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1470) granting a pension to Francis H. Bird; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

FABRICATION OF GUNS, ETC.

Mr. BAYNE also introduced a resolution requesting the Secretary of War to furnish information regarding the fabrication, conversion, &c., of guns, &c.; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

H. K. RANDALL AND OTHERS.

Mr. HENKLE (by request) introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1471) for the relief of the estate of H. K. Randall and others; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia.

LABORERS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. HENKLE also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1472) amendatory of the act of June 20, 1878, to pay the laboring-men of the District of Columbia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS, ETC.

Mr. HENKLE also (by request) introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1473) for more effectually protecting the public buildings, property, and records from destruction by fire; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

CAPTAIN ROBERT C. BAMFORD.

Mr. URNER introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1474) granting a pension to Captain Robert C. Bamford; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

LOUIS ERNDE.

Mr. URNER also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1475) for the relief of Louis Ernde, of Washington County, Maryland; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on War Claims.

TRANSCONTINENTAL RAILROADS.

Mr. URNER also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1476) to provide for the construction and completion of certain transcontinental lines of railways, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Pacific Railroad, and ordered to be printed.

HOT SPRINGS, ARKANSAS.

Mr. URNER also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1477) for the erection of a national hospital at Hot Springs, Arkansas, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

POST-OFFICE AT BALTIMORE, MARYLAND.

Mr. KIMMEL introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1478) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to negotiate for the purchase at private sale, or if necessary to procure by condemnation, a site for a post-office in the city of Baltimore and State of Maryland; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

JOSEPH HUMPHRIES.

Mr. HENRY introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1479) for the relief of Joseph Humphries; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

JOSEPH BRADSHAW.

Mr. HENRY also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1480) for the relief of Joseph Bradshaw; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee of Claims.

RICHARD T. BRYAN.

Mr. HENRY also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1481) granting $2,000 to Richard T. Bryan as compensation; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee of Claims.

WILLIAM H. COMEGYS.

Mr. HENRY also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1482) granting a pension to William H. Comegys; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

JACOB J. FLEISCHELL.

Mr. HENRY also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1483) for the relief of Jacob J. Fleischell, of Washington City; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee of Claims.

SOPHIA A. MEELSON.

Mr. HENRY also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1484) granting a pension to Sophia A. Meelson; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

WILLIAM C. SPENCER.

Mr. HENRY also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1485) for the relief of William C. Spencer, late captain in the Army of the United States; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

SCHOONER ADDIE B. BACON.

Mr. HENRY also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1486) referring the claim of the owners of the schooner Addie B. Bacon to the Court of Claims; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee of Claims.

P. P. POWELL.

Mr. HUNTON introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1487) authorizing the appointment of P. P. Powell an officer of the United States Army; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

TOBACCO EXPORT BONDS.

Mr. JORGENSEN introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1488) to provide for the cancellation of export bonds of tobacco manufactured at ports of clearance, &c.; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

QUARANTINE HOSPITAL IN HAMPTON ROADS, VIRGINIA.

Mr. GOODE introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1489) to provide for the establishment of a quarantine hospital in Hampton Roads, Virginia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Origin, Introduction, and Prevention of Epidemic Diseases in the United States, and ordered to be printed.

WALTER M. HALLECK.

Mr. JOHNSTON introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1490) placing the name of Walter M. Halleck upon the retired list of the United States Army; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

JAMES F. HARRISON.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1491) to remove the political disabilities of James F. Harrison, of Virginia; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

AMENDMENT OF REVISED STATUTES.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia, also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1492) to amend section 688 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Revision of the Laws, and ordered to be printed.

SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia, also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1493) defining the duties of the reporter of the Supreme Court of the United States, fixing his compensation, and providing for the publishing and distribution of said reports; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Revision of the Laws, and ordered to be printed.

BOUNTY LAND FOR WAR OF 1812.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia, also introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 38) repealing so much of joint resolution No. 46, approved March 2, 1867, as requires proof of loyalty before soldiers of the war of 1812 or their widows can obtain bounty land under the act of March 3, 1855; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Revision of the Laws, and ordered to be printed.

PENSIONS—WAR OF 1812.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia, also introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 39) construing act of Congress approved March 9, 1878, so as to entitle widows of the soldiers of the war of 1812 to a pension notwithstanding a second marriage, provided they were widows before the said act or at the time of application; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Revision of the Laws, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. VANCE introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 40) to construe the act of March 9, 1878, to include soldiers who served fourteen days in the war of 1812, although a portion of the time occurred after the proclamation of the treaty of peace with Great Britain; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

DANIEL A. GIBBEY.

Mr. VANCE also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1494) granting a pension to Daniel A. Gibbey, a soldier of the Florida war; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions.

HEIRS OF JOHN DEVLIN.

Mr. VANCE also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1495) for the relief of the heirs of John Devlin, of the District of Columbia; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee of Claims.

JOHN D. STREET.

Mr. VANCE also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1496) granting a pension to John D. Street; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

WILLIAM BUCHANAN.

Mr. VANCE also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1497) granting a pension to William Buchanan; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

HARVEY P. BUCKNER.

Mr. VANCE also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1498) to restore Harvey P. Buckner to the pension-roll; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. D. PLEMMONS.

Mr. VANCE also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1499) for the relief of S. D. Plemmons, of North Carolina; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee of Ways and Means.

DANIEL LUCAS.

Mr. VANCE also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1500) granting an increase of pension to Daniel Lucas, Company E, Third United States Infantry; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

R. L. M'CONNAUGHEY.

Mr. VANCE also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1501) for the relief of R. L. McConnaughey, of North Carolina; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee of Claims.

OFFENSES AGAINST REVENUE LAWS.

Mr. ARMFIELD introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1502) to amend and repeal certain sections of the Revised Statutes of the United States and to require all prosecutions for offenses against the revenue laws of the United States to be upon indictment; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

CONSTRUCTION OF AN ARMY APPROPRIATION ACT.

Mr. SCALES introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 41) declaring the construction to be placed upon the fifteenth section of the act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1879, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

JAMES Y. WHITTY.

Mr. SCALES also (for Mr. DAVIS, of North Carolina) introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1503) for the relief of James Y. Whitty, of North Carolina; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee of Claims.

W. & D. C. HALLIBURTON.

Mr. SCALES also (for Mr. DAVIS, of North Carolina) introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1504) for the relief of W. & D. C. Halliburton, of North Carolina; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee of Claims.

PAYMENT OF EMPLOYÉS IN TOBACCO OR CIGARS.

Mr. KITCHIN introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1505) to allow employers to pay their employés in tobacco or cigars without being subject to a license tax as wholesale or retail dealers; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

EMILE LEPAGE.

Mr. MARTIN, of North Carolina, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1506) for the relief of Emile Lepage, of Virginia; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on War Claims.

THOMAS W. KNIGHT.

Mr. MARTIN, of North Carolina, also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1507) for the relief of Thomas W. Knight, administrator of R. B. Knight, of North Carolina; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee of Claims.

JAMES RUFFIN WOOD.

Mr. MARTIN, of North Carolina, also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1508) granting a pension to James Ruffin Wood; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

THOMAS K. FEOGAN.

Mr. MARTIN, of North Carolina, also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1509) for the relief of Thomas K. Feogan, of North Carolina; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on War Claims.

ASSISTANT TREASURER OF THE UNITED STATES, CHARLESTON.

Mr. O'CONNOR introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1510) to re-establish the office of assistant treasurer of the United States, at Charleston, South Carolina; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

MARION ARTILLERY, CHARLESTON, SOUTH CAROLINA.

Mr. O'CONNOR also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1511) to authorize the Secretary of War to deliver to A. B. Rhett, T. Pinckney Lowndes, and others, four Napoleon guns, with caissons and harness, now at Greensborough, North Carolina, for the use of the Marion Artillery, Charleston, South Carolina; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

FOURTH JUDICIAL CIRCUIT.

Mr. O'CONNOR also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1512) to alter and appoint the times for holding the circuit court of the United States for the fourth judicial circuit, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

CLAIMS AGAINST THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. O'CONNOR also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1513) providing for the judicial ascertainment of claims against the United States; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service, and ordered to be printed.

SAMUEL LORD, JR.

Mr. EVINS introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1514) for the delivery to Samuel Lord, jr., receiver, of certain bonds now in the Treasury of the United States; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

EDUCATIONAL FUND.

Mr. RICHARDSON, of South Carolina, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1515) to establish an educational fund and apply a portion of the proceeds of the public lands to public education, and to provide for the more complete endowment and support of national colleges for the advancement of scientific and industrial education; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Education and Labor, and ordered to be printed.

MACON, GEORGIA.

Mr. BLOUNT introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1516) for the relief of Macon, Georgia; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee of Claims.

SECOND GEORGIA BATTALION.

Mr. BLOUNT also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1517) authorizing the Secretary of War to furnish to the Second Georgia Battalion tents, &c.; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

ADDITIONAL JUDICIAL DISTRICT, GEORGIA.

Mr. BLOUNT also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1518) to create an additional judicial district of the State of Georgia, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

INGOTS OF GOLD AND SILVER, ETC.

Mr. STEPHENS introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1519) to authorize the making of ingots of fine gold and ingots of fine silver of the value of $100 each for exportation, manufactures, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of on Coinage, Weights and Measures, and ordered to be printed.

SAMUEL I. GUSTIN.

Mr. STEPHENS also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1520) for the relief of Samuel I. Gustin; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee of Claims.

JAMES BUCHANAN.

Mr. SMITH, of Georgia, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1521) for the relief of James Buchanan, of Georgia; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

SULPHATE OF QUININE.

Mr. SPEER introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1522) to repeal the duty on importation of sulphate of quinine; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

EMILY W. OGDEN.

Mr. HERNDON introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1523) granting a pension to Emily W. Ogden; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

MOBILE AND OHIO RAILROAD COMPANY.

Mr. HERNDON also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1524) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to refund certain internal-revenue taxes erroneously collected from the Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

CHOCTAWHATCHEE AND PEA RIVERS.

Mr. SAMFORD introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1525) for the improvement of the Choctawhatchie and Pea Rivers; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

UNITED STATES TIMBER LANDS.

Mr. HERBERT introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1526) to put into market certain timbered lands of the United States, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

HOMESTEAD SETTLERS.

Mr. HERBERT also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1527) for the relief of homestead settlers; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

JULIA A. NUTT.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1528) for the relief of Julia A. Nutt, widow and executrix of Haller Nutt, deceased; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on War Claims.

A. KARPE.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi, also introduced a bill (H R. No. 1529) for the relief of A. Karpe; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on War Claims.

W. W. WELSH.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi, also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1530) for the relief of W. W. Welsh; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on War Claims.

DRURY BYNUM.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi, also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1531) for the relief of Drury Bynum; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

LOYAL CLAIMANTS.

Mr. MANNING (by request) introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1532) for the relief of certain citizens claiming to be loyal, and whose claims are now pending before Congress; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

DELIVERY AND RETURN OF LETTERS.

Mr. MONEY introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1533) to facilitate the delivery of letters, and the speedy return to the writers thereof of such as are refused or cannot be delivered; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

POSTAL EMPLOYÉS.

Mr. MONEY also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1534) to exempt postal employés from serving upon juries; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

TOMBIGBEE RIVER.

Mr. MULDROW introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1535) making an appropriation for the improvement of the Tombigbee River; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

CORA A. SLOCUMB AND OTHERS.

Mr. ELLIS introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1536) for the relief of Cora A. Slocumb, Ida A. Richardson, and Caroline A. Urquhart; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on War Claims.

GREAT SOUTHERN RAILROAD COMPANY.

Mr. ELLIS also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1537) to aid the Great Southern Railway Company (consolidated) to construct a line of railway in the States of Georgia and Florida; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Pacific Railroads, and ordered to be printed.

MAIL STEAMSHIP SERVICE.

Mr. ROBERTSON (by request) introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1538) to authorize the establishment of mail-steamship service between the United States and Central America; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

IMPROVEMENT OF THE MISSISSIPPI RIVER.

Mr. GIBSON introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1539) to provide for the appointment of a Mississippi River commission for the improvement of said river from the head of the passes near its mouth to its headwaters; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Levees and Improvement of the Mississippi River, and ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC MARINE SCHOOLS.

Mr. GIBSON also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1540) to amend an act entitled "An act to encourage the establishment of public marine schools," approved June 20, 1874, so as to extend it to the ports of Wilmington, Charleston, Savannah, Mobile, New Orleans, and Galveston; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

PORTS FOR UNAPPRAISED MERCHANDISE.

Mr. GIBSON also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1541) to make the ports of Brownsville, Galveston, and Houston, Texas, ports to which unappraised merchandise may be transported; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

CHARLES CLINTON.

Mr. GIBSON also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1542) for the relief of Charles Clinton, of New Orleans, late assistant treasurer at New Orleans; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee of Ways and Means.

TREATY OF COMMERCE WITH FRANCE.

Mr. GIBSON also introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 42) authorizing the appointment of commissioners to ascertain on what terms a mutually beneficial treaty of commerce with France can be arranged; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

COMMERCIAL TREATY WITH MEXICO.

Mr. GIBSON also introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 43) authorizing the appointment of commissioners to ascertain on what terms a mutually beneficial treaty of commerce with Mexico can be arranged; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. GIBSON. I move that this joint resolution be referred to the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. COX. I think it should go to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would suggest that it might be referred to the Committee on Commerce; but the Chair has no wish about it.

Mr. GIBSON. Inasmuch as it relates to duties to be levied upon commodities exported and imported, I think it should go to the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. REAGAN. Let the joint resolution be read.

The joint resolution was read at length.

Mr. REAGAN. Bills in relation to treaties of reciprocity with Canada, and also in relation to the improvement of the commerce of this country with Mexico and the Central American States, have heretofore been referred to the Committee on Commerce. It seems to me that committee should have the control of these subjects.

Mr. COX. I will read the rule in relation to the Committee on Foreign Affairs:

It shall be the duty of the Committee on Foreign Affairs to take into consideration all matters which concern the relations of the United States with foreign nations, and which shall be referred to them by the House, and to report their opinion on the same.

Now, it is rather strange that because a duty is levied under a tariff or a reciprocity treaty, therefore the subject should go to the Committee of Ways and Means. That would be giving the treaty-making power to the Committee of Ways and Means. All domestic matters relating to the imposing of duties or taxes properly go to the Committee of Ways and Means; but there may be hundreds of conditions additional to that of the revenue and relating to foreign affairs which should go to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. REAGAN. Let me read Rule 79:

It shall be the duty of the Committee on Commerce to take into consideration all such petitions and matters or things touching the commerce of the United States as shall be presented, or shall or may come in question, and be referred to them by the House, and to report from time to time their opinion thereon.

Mr. GIBSON. I wish merely to say that this joint resolution does not propose to authorize the President to appoint commmissioners for the establishment of a treaty in the ordinary sense of the word. It proposes to authorize the appointment of commissioners on behalf of Congress, who may recommend a revision of the tariff policy between the government of Mexico and that of the United States. Inasmuch as, therefore, the scope of this joint resolution relates entirely to the question of taxation, I think it should be referred to the committee having charge of that subject.

Mr. REAGAN. Allow me to say one word.

The SPEAKER. The Chair really cannot allow debate, that not being strictly in order. The Chair has allowed the three gentlemen who have manifested an interest in this matter to make a statement.

Mr. REAGAN. Only a single word. The object of this joint resolution is to promote commercial relations and intercourse between Mexico and the United States. It relates entirely to commerce. Because something about the machinery of that commerce is put into the joint resolution, it is proposed to refer it to the Committee of Ways and Means.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON] moves to refer the joint resolution to the Committee of Ways and Means. The gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] moves to amend that motion so as to refer it to the Committee on Foreign Affairs; and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] moves to further amend so as to refer it to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. COX. The Committee on Foreign Affairs already have bills of a similar nature before them.

The question was taken upon the motion of Mr. REAGAN; and it was not agreed to.

The question was then taken upon the motion of Mr. COX; and upon a division there were—ayes 63, noes 23.

No further count being called for, the joint resolution was accordingly referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

COMMERCIAL TREATY WITH BRAZIL.

Mr. GIBSON also introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 44) authorizing the appointment of commissioners to ascertain on what terms a mutually beneficial treaty of commerce with Brazil can be arranged; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

COMMERCIAL TREATY WITH CANADA.

Mr. GIBSON also introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 45) authorizing the appointment of commissioners to ascertain on what terms a mutually beneficial treaty of commerce with Canada can be arranged; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

COMMERCIAL TREATY WITH MEXICO.

Mr. GIBSON also introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 46) authorizing the appointment of commissioners to ascertain on what terms a mutually beneficial treaty of commerce with Mexico can be arranged; which was read a first and second time.

The SPEAKER. The House has just voted to send a similar resolution to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. COX. I think they ought all go to one committee.

The SPEAKER. To be consistent with the action of the House a moment ago, this resolution in reference to a commercial treaty with Mexico should go to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. GIBSON. I have no objection.

The joint resolution was accordingly referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

CONVENTION WITH THE HAWAIIAN ISLANDS.

Mr. GIBSON also introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 47) as to giving notice to terminate the convention of June 3, 1875, with his majesty the King of the Hawaiian Islands; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. GIBSON. I move that that resolution be referred to the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. REAGAN. That should go to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

The SPEAKER. The bill authorizing the convention with the King of the Hawaiian Islands came from the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. REAGAN. I know it did; but I think this had better go to the other committee.

Mr. GIBSON. Bills and joint resolutions involving revenue matter have been invariably referred to the Committee of Ways and Means. And the one to which this relates came from that committee.

The question was taken upon the motion of Mr. REAGAN; and it was not agreed to.

The joint resolution was then referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

GEORGE E. PAYNE.

Mr. GIBSON also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1543) to authorize George E. Payne to bring suit in the Court of Claims; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

INTERNATIONAL EXPOSITION AT CITY OF MEXICO.

Mr. KING introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 48) in relation to the international exposition to be held in the City of Mexico in the year 1880; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

PACIFIC RAILROADS.

Mr. ACKLEN introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1544) in relation to the Union Pacific, Central Pacific, and Kansas Pacific Railroads, and to alter and amend certain acts entitled "An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes," approved July 1, 1862, and an act approved July 2, 1864, amendatory of said act; and finally an act approved May 7, 1878, in amendment of said above-mentioned acts respectively, and to secure the Government of the United States against the results of the frauds perpetrated by the Credit Mobilier; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. ACKLEN. I move the reference of this bill to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. I think this bill ought to go to the Committee on the Pacific Railroad. I move to amend so as to refer it in that way.

Mr. ACKLEN. This bill is very nearly the same as one which was reported from the Committee on the Judiciary in the last Congress, that committee having the subject then under consideration. I think that it should be considered by the same committee in this Congress.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. CLARK, of Missouri, there were—ayes 39, noes 25; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. ACKLEN, and Mr. CLARK of Missouri, were appointed.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. I withdraw the motion to refer the bill to the Committee on the Pacific Railroad.

Mr. CHALMERS. I renew the motion. The bill ought to go to the Committee on the Pacific Railroad. The subject went to that committee in the last Congress.

Mr. ACKLEN. In the last Congress the Committee on the Judiciary of this House reported a bill almost exactly the same as this, and the Committee on the Judiciary of the Senate did the same thing. Why this bill should now be sent to the Committee on the Pacific Railroad to be killed, I do not know.

Mr. CHALMERS. The gentleman is mistaken. The subject went to the Committee on the Pacific Railroad, not to the Committee on the Judiciary, in the last Congress.

Mr. McLANE. This subject is already before the Committee on the Pacific Railroad.

Mr. ACKLEN. It does not properly belong to that committee.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon the motion of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CHALMERS] to refer the bill to the Committee on the Pacific Railroad instead of the Committee on the Judiciary as proposed by the gentleman who introduces the bill.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 88, noes 37.

So the motion of Mr. CHALMERS was agreed to.

The bill was accordingly referred to the Committee on the Pacific Railroad, and was ordered to be printed.

SURVEY OF MIAMI AND ERIE CANAL IN OHIO.

Mr. HILL introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 49) providing for a survey of the Miami and Erie Canal in the State of Ohio, with a view to enlarging the same to the capacity of a ship-canal; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Railways and Canals, and ordered to be printed.

REMOVAL OF REMAINS OF LIEUTENANT JAMES H. BRADLEY.

Mr. HILL also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1545) authorizing the Secretary of War to remove the remains of Lieutenant James H. Bradley from Big Hole Pass, Montana Territory, to Stryker, Williams County, Ohio; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

ACCOUNTS OF POTTAWATOMIE INDIANS.

Mr. HILL also (by request) introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1546) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to adjust the accounts of certain bands of Pottawatomie Indians in the States of Michigan and Indiana, and to pay any arrears of annuities due to them under treaties of the United States; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF CLARENCE KING.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH (for Mr. NEAL) introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 50) providing for the printing of 1,200 copies of the reports of Clarence King; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Printing, and ordered to be printed.

PURITY OF ELECTIONS.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH also (for Mr. NEAL) introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1547) to punish bribery and treating at elections; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH also (for Mr. NEAL) introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1548) to further preserve the purity of elections; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

E. L. HUSTED.

Mr. MONROE introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1549) granting a pension to E. L. Husted; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

ALCOHOLIC LIQUOR TRAFFIC.

Mr. MONROE also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1550) to provide a commission on the subject of the alcoholic liquor traffic; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

SOLDIERS AND SAILORS' HOMESTEAD LAW.

Mr. YOUNG, of Ohio, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1551) to amend the soldiers and sailors' homestead law; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

MEDICAL ADVICE FOR DISCHARGED SOLDIERS, ETC.

Mr. YOUNG, of Ohio, also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1552) to entitle honorably discharged officers, soldiers, and sailors of the Army and Navy of the United States to medical advice and relief from any post station or medical officer of a naval hospital or depot; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

SARAH E. HERRELL.

Mr. YOUNG, of Ohio, also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1553) for the relief of Sarah E. Herrell, widow of the late John Herrell, late captain of Company H, Second Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on War Claims.

CUSTOM-HOUSE AT TOLEDO, OHIO.

Mr. HURD introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1554) authorizing the appropriation of additional land for custom-house at Toledo, Ohio; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

UNITED STATES COURTS, TOLEDO, OHIO.

Mr. HURD also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1555) to amend an act amendatory of an act entitled "An act to provide for circuit and district courts of the United States at Toledo, Ohio;" which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM M'MONDAY.

Mr. LE FEVRE introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1556) granting a pension to William McMonday; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

BENJAMIN FRANKLIN AMOS.

Mr. LE FEVRE also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1557) granting a pension to Benjamin Franklin Amos; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

JOHN B. BROWN.

Mr. ATHERTON introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1558) for the relief of John B. Brown, for bounty and allowances; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

WILLIAM T. MOREHEAD.

Mr. ATHERTON also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1559) for the relief of William T. Morehead, Eighth Iowa Infantry; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

JAMES B. WHITE.

Mr. ATHERTON also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1560) granting a pension to James B. White, of Zanesville, Muskingum County, Ohio; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

THEODORE W. TALLMADGE.

Mr. EWING introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1561) for the relief of Theodore W. Tallmadge; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

JOHN DWYER.

Mr. EWING also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1562) for the relief of John Dwyer, of the city of Washington, District of Columbia; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on War Claims.

ACT INDEMNIFYING STATES.

Mr. THOMPSON introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1563) to declare the intent and meaning of an act approved July 27, 1861, entitled "An act to indemnify the States for expenses incurred by them in defense of the United States;" which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

R. H. MARTIN.

Mr. THOMPSON also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1564) for the benefit of R. H. Martin, of Campbellsville, Kentucky; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

JOHN C. HERNDON.

Mr. PHISTER introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1565) for the benefit of John C. Herndon, formerly of Mason County, Kentucky; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on War Claims.

SALE OF LEAF-TOBACCO.

Mr. KNOTT introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1566) to repeal so much of the sixth clause of section 3244 of the Revised Statutes of the United States as prohibits farmers and planters from selling leaf-tobacco at retail directly to consumers without the payment of a special tax; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

PIUS A. COOMES.

Mr. KNOTT also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1567) granting a pension to Pius A. Coomes; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

CONGRESSIONAL PRINTER.

Mr. KNOTT also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1568) to provide for the election of a Congressional Printer, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Printing and ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM H. WALKER.

Mr. CALDWELL introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1569) granting a pension to William H. Walker, of Fentress County, Tennessee, late of Company C, First Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Cavalry; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

SALE OF TOBACCO.

Mr. OSCAR TURNER introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1570) to permit farmers and planters to sell tobacco of their own production without special tax, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

TAX ON BRANDY.

Mr. OSCAR TURNER also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1571) to abolish all taxes on brandy made of apples and peaches in the United States; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM GREGORY.

Mr. McKENZIE introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1572) restoring the name of William Gregory, of Muhlenburgh County, Kentucky, to the pension roll; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

JOHN GAULT, JR.

Mr. WILLIS introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1573) for the relief of John Gault, jr., late a major of the Twenty-eighth Regiment of Kentucky Volunteer Infantry; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

KATE WILHARLITZ.

Mr. WILLIS also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1574) granting a pension to Kate Wilharlitz; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

JAMES HOPWOOD.

Mr. WILLIS also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1575) for the relief of James Hopwood; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee of Claims

HEIRS OF EDWARD B. CLARK.

Mr. WILLIS also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1576) for the relief of the heirs of Edward B. Clark; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

F. STITZEL & BROTHER.

Mr. WILLIS also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1577) for the relief of F. Stitzel & Brother; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee of Ways and Means.

GILBERT A. PHILLIPS.

Mr. WILLIS also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1578) granting a pension to Gilbert A. Phillips; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

MRS. SALLIE T. WARD.

Mr. WILLIS also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1579) granting a pension to Mrs. Sallie T. Ward; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

MRS. ANN SHEFFIELD.

Mr. WILLIS also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1580) granting a pension to Mrs. Ann Sheffield; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

KETURAH A. COLLINS.

Mr. WILLIS also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1581) granting a pension to Keturah A. Collins; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

JOHN B. MARTIN.

Mr. WILLIS also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1582) granting a pension to John B. Martin, of Louisville, Kentucky; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

FANNY S. CONWAY.

Mr. WILLIS also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1583) for the relief of Mrs. Fanny S. Conway, of Louisville, Kentucky; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

J. R. MIDDLETON.

Mr. WILLIS also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1584) for the relief of J. R. Middleton, of Louisville, of the State of Kentucky; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on War Claims.

WILLIAM GEISSEL.

Mr. WILLIS also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1585) for the relief of William Geissel, late a second lieutenant of the Sixth Regiment of Kentucky Volunteer Infantry; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

RIVERS AND HARBORS.

Mr. THOMAS TURNER introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1586) to amend an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, preservation, and completion of certain works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes," approved March 4, 1879; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

MASONIC LODGE, CYNTHIANA, KENTUCKY.

Mr. CARLISLE introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1587) for the relief of Saint Andrew's Lodge, No. 18, Free and Accepted Masons, Cynthiana, Kentucky; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on War Claims.

ESTATE OF THOMAS V. STIRMAN.

Mr. CARLISLE also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1588) for the relief of the estate of Thomas V. Stirman, deceased, late of Harrison County, Kentucky; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on War Claims.

ISAAC N. WEBB.

Mr. CARLISLE also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1589) for the relief of Isaac N. Webb, of Harrison County, Kentucky; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on War Claims.

THOMAS C. ISGRIG.

Mr. CARLISLE also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1590) for the relief of Thomas C. Isgrig, of Pike County, Missouri; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on War Claims.

WILLIAM W. ANDERSON.

Mr. CARLISLE also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1591) for the relief of William W. Anderson, of Harrison County, Kentucky; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on War Claims.

JAMES S. FRIZELL.

Mr. CARLISLE also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1592) for the relief of James S. Frizell, of Dayton, Ohio, and late of Harrison County, Kentucky; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on War Claims.

MARCUS L. BROADWELL.

Mr. CARLISLE also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1593) for the relief of the estate of Marcus L. Broadwell, deceased, late of Harrison County, Kentucky; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on War Claims.

JOSEPH B. M'CLINTOCK.

Mr. CARLISLE also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1594) for the relief of Joseph B. McClintock, of Harrison County, Kentucky; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on War Claims.

MRS. ANNA J. GUEST.

Mr. WHITTHORNE introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1595) granting a pension to Mrs. Anna J. Guest, widow of Commodore John Guest, late of the United States Navy; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

BERRY H. VAUGHN.

Mr. TAYLOR introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1596) granting a pension to Berry H. Vaughn; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PATSY DAVENPORT.

Mr. TAYLOR also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1597) granting a pension to Patsy Davenport; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

ASSISTANT UNITED STATES DISTRICT ATTORNEYS.

Mr. TAYLOR also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1598) to abolish the office of assistant United States district attorney for the various districts and circuits in the United States; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Revision of the Laws, and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENT OF REVISED STATUTES.

Mr. DIBRELL introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1599) to repeal part of section 643 of the Revised Statutes; also a bill (H. R. No. 1600) to repeal section 3412 of the Revised Statutes; which were read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Revision of the Laws, and ordered to be printed.

COLLECTION OF CUSTOMS.

Mr. DIBRELL also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1601) to reduce the expenses of collecting customs; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

SMALL DISTILLERS.

Mr. DIBRELL also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1602) for the relief of distillers of small capacity; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

PENSION FOR WAR OF 1812.

Mr. DIBRELL also submitted a resolution calling on the Secretary of the Interior for information in relation to pensions withheld from soldiers of the war of 1812; which was referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions.

NATIONAL MEMORIAL ORPHAN ASSOCIATION.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1603) establishing a national memorial orphan association; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Epidemic Diseases, and ordered to be printed.

NATIONAL BOARD OF HEALTH.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee, also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1604) to increase the efficiency of the National Board of Health and to prevent the introduction into or spread within the United States of contagious and infectious diseases; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Origin, Introduction, and Prevention of Epidemic Diseases in the United States, and ordered to be printed.

GEORGE N. BARBER.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee, also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1605) for the relief of the widow and children of George N. Barber, late a pensioner of the United States; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

TEXAS PACIFIC RAILWAY.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee, (by request,) also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1606) to provide for the construction of a railway from the Mississippi waters to the Pacific Ocean, and amendatory of and supplemental to an act entitled "An act to incorporate the Texas Pacific Railroad Company and to aid in the construction of its road, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1871, and the several acts amendatory thereof and supplemental thereto; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Pacific Railroad, and ordered to be printed.

MARINE HOSPITAL, MEMPHIS, TENNESSEE.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee, also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1607) to provide for the construction of a marine hospital in the city of Memphis, Tennessee; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

MRS. MARGARET WOODWORTH.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee, also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1608) for the relief of Mrs. Margaret Woodworth, widow of the late John M. Woodworth, Surgeon-General of the Marine Hospital Service; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee of Claims.

MOLLIE B. WALDO.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee, also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1609) for the relief of Mollie B. Waldo, widow of the late Assistant Surgeon Roswell Waldo, of the Marine Hospital Service; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee of Claims.

GENERAL QUARANTINE LAW.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee, also presented a joint resolution of the General Assembly of the State of Tennessee, requesting the enactment of a general quarantine law; which was referred to the Committee on the Origin, Introduction, and Prevention of Epidemic Diseases in the United States, and ordered to be printed.

DUTY ON QUININE.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee, also presented a joint resolution of the General Assembly of the State of Tennessee, asking the reduction of the duty on quinine; which was referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

MRS. MARY SPEED.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee, also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1610) for the relief of Mrs. Mary Speed, of Memphis, Shelby County, Tennessee; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on War Claims.

LUCINDA M'GUIRE.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee, also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1611) for the relief of Lucinda McGuire, of Memphis, Tennessee; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on War Claims

MRS. SALLIE JARRATT.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee, also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1612) for the relief of Mrs. Sallie Jarratt, executrix of Gregory Jarratt, deceased, late of Hardeman County, Tennessee; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on War Claims.

MARY DONELLON.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee, also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1613) granting a pension to Mary Donellon; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

CESSION OF LAND TO MEMPHIS, TENNESSEE.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee, also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1614) to cede to the city of Memphis, in the State of Tennessee, a certain lot of land situated in said city; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

JOHN ALLEN.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee, also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1615) for the relief of John Allen, of Hardeman County, Tennessee; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on War Claims.

J. D. BOND & BROTHER.

Mr. McMILLIN introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1616) for the relief of J. D. Bond & Brother, of Wilson County, Tennessee; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee of Ways and Means.

NATHANIEL HALBERT.

Mr. McMILLIN also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1617) granting a pension to Nathaniel Halbert; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

IMPROVEMENT OF CANEY FORK RIVER.

Mr. McMILLIN also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1618) making appropriations to improve the Caney Fork River; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

JOHN B. PEYTON.

Mr. McMILLIN also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1619) authorizing the appointment of John B. Peyton to the office of paymaster in the Army; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

IMPROVEMENT OF OBEDS RIVER.

Mr. McMILLIN also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1620) making an appropriation to improve the Obeds River; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

TRIBUTARY STREAMS OF TENNESSEE RIVER.

Mr. HOUK introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1621) making appropriations to improve the navigation of tributary streams of the Tennessee River; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

THOMAS L. DUNCAN.

Mr. HOUK also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1622) for the relief of Thomas L. Duncan, of Anderson County, Tennessee; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

JOHN HENRY.

Mr. HOUK also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1623) for the relief of John Henry, of Jefferson County, Tennessee; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on War Claims.

HARDIE R. BROWN.

Mr. HOUK also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1624) for the relief of Hardie R. Brown, late a second lieutenant of Company G, Sixth Tennessee Volunteer Infantry; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA BUSINESS.

Mr. HUNTON. Mr. Speaker, the hour of two o'clock has arrived, at which time we are entitled to take the floor for the District of Columbia business.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, was not unanimous consent given to complete the call of States for introduction of bills?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state the present situation. The Committee for the District of Columbia was given to-day at two o'clock, with all the privileges granted by Rules 74 and 82. Among those privileges to-day after two o'clock was to be devoted exclusively to the business reported from that committee. At a subsequent period unanimous consent was given that the call of the States should be gone through with to-day under the call provided for in Rule 130. Under such circumstances the Chair thinks that the condition made in favor of the District of Columbia would be operative at two o'clock. He is willing, however, to submit the question to the House so the House may determine which order it shall proceed with at this time.

Mr. COX. Does the District Committee claim it?

The SPEAKER. The chairman of that committee is on the floor claiming it.

Mr. COX. It has been always ruled when the District Committee claimed it nothing could stand in the way of that committee.

The SPEAKER. This is not the regular District of Columbia day—not the regular day granted to that committee under the rule.

Mr. COX. I do not know how it is about such an exceptional case.

Mr. SPARKS. Let the call be proceeded with if there be no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks under strict construction the Committee for the District of Columbia would be entitled to this day after two o'clock.

Mr. HUNTON. I do not wish to be obstinate about this. What is the opinion of the Chair?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it would take half an hour yet to complete the call of States.

Mr. HUNTON. Will it not take more than half an hour?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that it will not take more than a half hour.

Mr. HUNTON. I am perfectly willing to accommodate members around me, and will yield for a half hour with the distinct understanding, however, that at the expiration of that time we shall have the floor for the District business.

GEORGE L. KEY.

Mr. BICKNELL introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1625) for the relief of George L. Key, late first lieutenant of the Twenty-fifth Battery Indiana Volunteers; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

ALABAMA CLAIMS.

Mr. COBB introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1626) for reviving and continuing the court of commissioners of Alabama claims and for the distribution of the unappropriated moneys of the Geneva award; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

BRIDGE ACROSS WABASH RIVER.

Mr. COBB also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1627) to authorize the construction of a railroad bridge across the Wabash River; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

DALTON HINCHMAN.

Mr. NEW introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1628) granting a pension to Dalton Hinchman, late a private in Company G, Second Michigan Cavalry; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

IMPROVEMENT OF MISSISSIPPI RIVER.

Mr. DE LA MATYR (by request) introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1629) for the improvement of the Mississippi and Ohio Rivers; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

FUNDING MUNICIPAL INDEBTEDNESS.

Mr. DE LA MATYR also (by request) introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1630) to provide for funding municipal indebtedness with United States paper money; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and ordered to be printed.

RELIEF OF FINANCIAL DISTRESS.

Mr. DE LA MATYR also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1631) to provide for a greenback currency and to relieve financial distress by granting aid to certain companies incorporated by State authority for works of internal improvements; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and ordered to be printed.

UNITED STATES DEBT.

Mr. DE LA MATYR also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1632) to provide for the payment of the interest on the debt of the United States and for funding said debt in United States paper money; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and ordered to be printed.

WALTER D. PLOWDEN.

Mr. DE LA MATYR also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1633) for the relief of Walter D. Plowden; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on War Claims.

LAW CONCERNING NATIONAL BANKS.

Mr. DE LA MATYR also presented a concurrent resolution of the Legislature of Indiana, asking a change in a law concerning national banks; which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and ordered to be printed.

ARREARAGES OF PENSIONS.

Mr. HOSTETLER introduced a resolution requesting the Secretary of the Treasury to report what further action of Congress is needed to enable him to meet with more promptness than $1,500,000 per month arrearages of pensions; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

CAPTAIN LEWIS STODDARD.

Mr. BROWNE (for Mr. CALKINS) introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1634) for the relief of Captain Lewis Stoddard; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

GEORGE W. LOWE.

Mr. BROWNE also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1635) granting a pension to George W. Lowe, late captain Eighty-third Regiment Indiana Volunteers; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

FRANCIS M. MAY.

Mr. BROWNE also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1636) for the relief of Francis M. May, postmaster at Winchester, Indiana; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee of Claims.

JOHN W. STEVENS.

Mr. BROWNE also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1637) restoring the name of John W. Stevens, a soldier of the Mexican war, to the pension-roll; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

WASHINGTON L. COLGROVE.

Mr. BROWNE also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1638) for the relief of Washington L. Colgrove, of Winchester, Indiana; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee of Claims.

FREDERICK VOGEL.

Mr. BROWNE also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1639) for the relief of Frederick Vogel, of Franklin County, Indiana; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

CHARLES S. HAYES.

Mr. BROWNE also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1640) for the relief of Charles S. Hayes, of Lawrenceburgh, Indiana; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on War Claims.

JAMES L. PEARCE.

Mr. BROWNE also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1641) for the relief of James L. Pearce, postmaster at Williamsburgh, Indiana; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee of Claims.

JAMES L. RIGOR.

Mr. BROWNE also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1642) granting a pension to James L. Rigor, late a private in Company G, Sixty-Ninth Indiana Volunteers; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

FRANCIS C. BUFFINGTON.

Mr. BROWNE also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1643) for the relief of Francis C. Buffington; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on War Claims.

MAJOR JACOB E. BURBANK.

Mr. BROWNE also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1644) for the relief of Major Jacob E. Burbank; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

JAMES CUNNINGHAM.

Mr. SPARKS introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1645) for the relief of James Cunningham, of Centralia, Illinois; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

HATTIE BOWMAN.

Mr. STEVENSON introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1646) granting a pension to Mrs. Hattie Bowman; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

SWAMP AND OVERFLOWED LANDS.

Mr. ALDRICH, of Illinois, presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of Illinois, in favor of a bill to provide for indemnity due the several States under acts of Congress approved March 2, 1855, and March 3, 1857, relating to swamp and overflowed lands; also, in favor of a bill to authorize the Commissioner of the General Land Office to adjust and settle the claims of the State of Illinois and other States for indemnity for swamp lands sold by the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

MRS. MARY WHITTINGTON.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1647) granting a pension to Mrs. Mary Whittington; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PENSIONS FOR MEXICAN WAR.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois, also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1648) granting pensions to the surviving officers and enlisted men, including militia and the volunteers in the military and naval services of the United States, who served in the Mexican and other wars therein named; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

GEORGE W. CHURCH.

Mr. HAWK introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1649) granting a pension to George W. Church; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

EDWARD T. BROWNELL.

Mr. HAWK also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1650) for the relief of Edward T. Brownell; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

CAPTAIN JOHN SLAUGHTER.

Mr. HAWK also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1651) granting a pension to the children (heirs at law) of Captain John Slaughter, late of Company F, Thirty-fourth Illinois Volunteers; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

AARON MILEY.

Mr. FORSYTHE introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1652) for the relief of Aaron Miley; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

FREDERICK WITHNER.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1653) granting a pension to Frederick Withner; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

GEORGE W. WATSON.

Mr. HAYES introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1654) granting a pension to George W. Watson; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

JAMES T. CHRISTIAN.

Mr. THOMAS introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1655) granting a pension to James T. Christian; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

HUGH WORTHINGTON.

Mr. THOMAS introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1656) for the relief of the legal heirs of Hugh Worthington, of Metropolis, Illinois, owners of the steamer Eastport; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on War Claims.

KANKAKEE RIVER.

Mr. FORT introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1657) for an appropriation for the improvement of the navigation of the Kankakee River, in the States of Illinois and Indiana; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

CYRUS THOMAS.

Mr. FORT also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1658) authorizing the Treasury Department to pass the accounts of Cyrus Thomas; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee of Claims.

ALLEN HARPER.

Mr. FORT also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1659) for the relief of Allen Harper, of Illinois; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on War Claims.

STATUE OF CHIEF-JUSTICE MARSHALL.

Mr. FORT also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1660) to authorize the erection of a statue in honor of Chief-Justice Marshall, late of the Supreme Court of the United States; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

W. L. PARVIN AND H. H. GREENE.

Mr. FORT also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1661) for the relief of Washington L. Parvin and Henry H. Greene, late California volunteers; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

CHARLES H. FOX.

Mr. SPRINGER introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1662) granting a pension to Charles H. Fox; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

ALEXANDER WHITLOCK.

Mr. SPRINGER also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1663) granting a pension to Alexander Whitlock; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

HENRY CLINE.

Mr. SPRINGER also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1664) granting a pension to Henry Cline; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

WILLIAM M. J. PATTERSON.

Mr. SPRINGER also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1665) granting a pension to William M. J. Patterson; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

EDWIN S. BURBANK.

Mr. SPRINGER also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1666) granting a pension to Edwin S. Burbank; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

WILLIAM T. M'GOWEN.

Mr. SPRINGER also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1667) granting a pension to William T. McGowen, private Company D, Twenty-sixth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

WILLIAM HEYWOOD.

Mr. SPRINGER also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1668) granting a pension to William Heywood; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

WILLIAM D. COWAN.

Mr. SPRINGER also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1669) granting a pension to William D. Cowan; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

MORRIS C. SEAMAN.

Mr. SPRINGER also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1670) for the relief of Morris C. Seaman, late a private in Company E, Eighty-fifth Illinois Infantry; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

CONSTITUTIONAL PROHIBITION OF SPECIAL LEGISLATION.

Mr. SPRINGER also introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 51) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States prohibiting special legislation; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

DEPOSIT OF UNITED STATES FUNDS.

Mr. SPRINGER also submitted a resolution calling on the Secretary of the Treasury for information as to places of deposit of $448,467,156.81 reported in the Treasury April 30, 1879; which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

EXTENSION OF PATENT OF HENRY VOELTER.

